

AFRICA INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY

RELIGIOUS FUNDAMENTALISM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA: AN EXAMINATION OF THE IMPACT OF MAUDUDI'S POLITICAL
INTERPRETATION OF ISLAM ON THE RISE OF RELIGIOUS CONFLICTS, AND ITS EFFECT ON CHRISTIAN-MUSLIM RELATIONS.

BY
MICHAEL EZRA DIKKI

A Dissertation submitted to the University in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Inter-religious Studies

Approved:

Primary Supervisor:

Prof. Caleb Kim

Associate Supervisor:

Prof. Yusuf Turaki

Internal Examiner

Dr. Josephine Mutuku Sesi

External Examiner

Dr. Fola T. Lateju

July 2017

Student's Declaration

RELIGIOUS FUNDAMENTALISM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA: AN EXAMINATION OF THE IMPACT OF MAUDUDI'S POLITICAL
INTERPRETATION OF ISLAM ON THE RISE OF RELIGIOUS CONFLICTS, AND ITS EFFECT ON CHRISTIAN-MUSLIM RELATIONS.

I declare that this is my original work and has not been submitted to any other College or University for academic credit

The views presented herein are not necessarily those of the Africa International University or the Examiners

(Signed) _____
Michael Ezra Dikki

July, 2017

ABSTRACT

This research examines the role of theological or Islamic interpretation in promoting religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Specifically, this research examines the impact of Maududi's political interpretation of Islam on the rise of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. This research questions the sufficiency of the claim that religious conflicts in northern Nigeria are caused by socio-political and socio-economic factors as postulated by several scholars. Maududi is chosen because of his acknowledged influence, globally and in northern Nigeria specifically, as the father of modern fundamentalism. The research was conducted in the cities of Kano in Kano state and Zaria and Kaduna in Kaduna state of northern Nigeria. These states are considered representational. The research employed the qualitative method and interviewed 159 Muslims assisted by Muslim research assistants. This is in addition to qualitative content analysis of some relevant materials and observations.

The findings support the claim that there is a strong relationship between theology and fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. In essence, there is a strong Maududian influence on fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. It is evident that Maududi's ideology and political interpretation of Islam is a major influence on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria majorly beginning with the Muslim Student Society (MSS) in northern Nigerian universities. His ideology radicalized these young Muslim students. These students moved into the society with these fundamentalist ideology and established groups. These groups played a strong role in the Islamic militancy and religious conflicts being experienced today. In addition, it is discovered that there is a strong influence of Maududian ideology on the initial leaders of Boko Haram. There is also evidently a historical link to Maududian fundamentalist ideology through Sudan, Pakistan and Egypt as well as Saudi Arabia and Iran within the political and religious leadership in northern Nigeria.

The data also reveal that within majority Muslims interviewed, there is a selective adoption of Maududi's ideologies. A theory, therefore, emerges that the clash between fundamentalist and orthodox ideologies trigger cognitive dissonance, which through dissonance resolution process leads to selective adoption. This selective adoption produces diversity of Islamic views with consequences on the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims. The data also supports the theory that fundamentalist ideology creates the propensity for collective violence especially when supported by relational and cultural distance, functional independence and inequality. This happens when an ideology in culture (religion) emphasizes "otherness" and is internalized as an individual or collective system of meaning (Silberman 2005, 535) as well as when it corresponds with the social and psychological needs of a group or people (de la Roche 1996).

The application of Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA) in the research, exposes the ordinariness in Muslims including those holding a fundamentalist idea. It revealed that the way Muslims understand, react to or handle conflicts is mostly not different from how other human beings do. These findings have implications for Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria. In this regard, recommendations are made for the government, Christians and Muslims.

To

The Triune God

My parents:

Late Rev. Baba Ezra and Azumi Dorcas Dikki

My Siblings

All who think they can

All the silent givers

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

It is a fact that a project like this one requires faith and belief. Therefore, I must acknowledge the grace of God who gives faith to all who believe. The PhD journey is impossible without the help of others. There are many known and unknown groups and persons who have contributed greatly to the success of this journey and work. I wish to sincerely thank them all. However, it is difficult not to acknowledge a few of them. I am still eternally grateful to Gen. Arum Bako whose giving ensured I came to Nairobi to study in the first place when all hope seems to have been lost. Without his giving, the dream of a PhD might not have germinated.

This gratitude also extends to Denver Community Church USA for sponsoring this PhD program. Simply put, I would have gone home without their sponsorship. I also appreciate the Missions faculty and AIU for giving me the opportunity to be a student in the first cohort of Inter-religious Studies. Looking back, I still must appreciate College Park, Mustard Seed and Educating Africans for Christ for making it possible to join the PhD program by ensuring that I finished my Masters. I will not forget the moral support and encouragement of all my siblings especially Ben for unsolicited giving at the right moment.

I am also indebted to Prof. Caleb Kim, my Primary Supervisor, for his mentoring skills and pushing us to stretch our limits in the pursuit of excellence. He is a kind professor, mentor and friend. His confidence and belief in me is always uplifting. Thanks to Prof. Yusuf Turaki (Associate supervisor) for meticulously reading this work and giving advice and encouragement. Let me also cease this opportunity to thank Prof. Sam Ango for the onerous task of proof reading this work. I must also appreciate my internal supervisor Dr. Josephine Mutuku Sesi for her advise and counsel. In the same vein I must appreciate my external examiner Dr. Fola T. Lateju for his sound and rewarding examination of this work. I will not forget to appreciate all the staff of Tony Wilmot Memorial library of AIU for the constant help and support during my study and this dissertation. I will not fail to appreciate my colleagues in the IRS program. We weathered the storms together and encouraged one another that it can be done.

I must mention my Kenyan parents Prof. and Mrs. Thairu for making me feel at home in Nairobi and Karen Community Church for allowing me to serve one full year as their Senior Pastor. Finally, I am indebted to all my Research Assistants in all the three locations of this research. Without them it would have been impossible to gather the quality of data collected for this research work. For ethical reasons their names are not mentioned. I pray God to reward all of them for their assistance and faithfulness in data collection. I am forever grateful to them. Ultimately, all glory must return to God the creator of all things and the giver of all wisdom. He made this work possible.

Table of content

ABSTRACT.....	iv
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT	vi
CHAPTER ONE.....	1
INTRODUCTION	1
Brief Historical Background.....	2
Motivation for the Study.....	8
Research Rationale.....	10
Distinguishing Fundamentalism.....	12
Influence of Fundamentalist Islam in Northern Nigeria	13
The Significance of Maududi to the Study	13
The Term Fundamentalism	14
Problem Statement.....	16
Main Research Question	16
Sub-Research Questions.....	16
Purpose and Expectation of the Study	17
Significance of the Study	17
Limitation of the Study	18
Delimitation	19
Research Location.....	20
Assumption	20
Definition of Terms.....	20
CHAPTER TWO	22
ISLAM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA.....	22
Introduction.....	22
Islam in Northern Nigeria: Phases and Changes.....	22
Intra-Religious Conflicts in Northern Nigerian Islam.....	26
Interreligious Conflicts in Northern Nigeria	27
The Boko Haram Movement.....	29

The Dual Influence on Boko Haram	30
The Conversion War Factor	34
Christian-Muslim Relations in Nigeria in the Context of Global History	38
Religion and Conflicts	41
Is Religion Intrinsically Violent?	42
Girard’s Theory of Violence in Religion.....	43
Girard’s Theory of Violence in Religion in Christian Thought	45
Religious Symbols and Violence.....	47
Violence	48
Summary	50
CHAPTER THREE	52
THEOLOGY, LAW, INTERPRETATION AND	52
JIHAD IN ISLAM	52
Introduction.....	52
Theology, Law, and Interpretation in Islam.....	52
Emergence of Schools of Law and Development of Shari’a	55
Interpreting Sharia Is Critical to Muslims	60
Concept of Jihad in the Qur’an	61
War Terms in the Qur’an	62
Jihad in the Qur’an	63
Synoptic Exegesis of Some Key Qur’anic Verses	64
Qital	65
Riddah.....	66
Jihad.....	66
Some Scholarly Opinions on Jihad	67
Offensive Jihad a Later Development	68
Jihad and its Modern Interpretation.....	70
Evolving Use of the Term Jihad	71
Dialectics on Militant Jihad.....	72
Jihad in the Qur’an and It’s Diverse Interpretations.....	74
Umma and Apostasy as Traditional Sources of Violence	77
Jihad as Source of Culture Change	79
Summary	81

CHAPTER FOUR.....	83
ABUL ALA MAUDUDI AND HIS INTERPRETATION OF ISLAM	83
Introduction.....	83
Abul Ala Maududi	84
Why Maududi.....	87
Conditions that Influenced Maududi’s Interpretation of Islam	89
Maududi’s Influence on Global Islam.....	90
Maududi’s Influence on Sayyid Qutb and Muslim	93
Brotherhood of Egypt.....	93
Sampling Maududi’s Ideas in Qutb’s Milestones.....	100
A Comment on the Issue of Continuity.....	104
The Emergence of Maududi’s Ideology in Northern Nigerian Islam	106
Maududi’s Ideology and Its Receptivity in Northern Nigeria.....	109
Maududi’s Political Theory of Islam	111
Maududi’s Principle on the Unity of State and	117
Religion (Din wa Dawla)	117
Basic Principles of Maududi’s Islamic State.....	120
Maududi’s Qur’anic Interpretations of Jihad and Fighting.....	123
Some Fighting Verses	124
Some Jihad Verses	126
Jihad, Fighting and Apostasy in Maududi’s Works.....	128
Views on Jihad and Fighting.....	129
Views on Apostasy.....	132
Summary	133
CHAPTER FIVE	134
RESEARCH METHODOLOGY.....	134
Introduction.....	134
A Methodological/Theoretical Perspective.....	134
Relationship between Religion and Culture.....	135
Religion, Culture and Ideology	136
Ideology and Emotions.....	137
Emotions and Conflicts	138
How Religion, Culture, Ideology and Emotions Relate to Conflicts	139

Methodology	143
Data Collection Method	147
Data Collection Procedure	151
Data Recording Procedure	152
Sources of Data for the Research	153
Data Analysis	154
Coding of Data	155
Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA)	156
Ethical Consideration.....	158
Summary	160
CHAPTER SIX.....	161
CAUSES OF ISLAMIC FUNDAMENTALISM IN.....	161
NORTHERN NIGERIA	161
Introduction.....	161
Coding and Usage	162
Understanding the Terms Islamism, Islamic Revivalism and Militancy	163
Islamism	163
Islamic Revivalism.....	164
Islamic Militancy.....	165
Main Causes of Fundamentalism or Militancy in.....	166
Northern Nigeria	166
Reasons Why More Muslims are Getting Involved in Militancy	167
Proliferation of Islamic Preachers: A Source of Militancy	169
Proliferation of Islamic Preachers: A Source of Interreligious Conflicts	173
External Influence on the Understanding of Jihad:	176
A Source of Fundamentalism.....	176
Qur’anic Provisions: A Source of Fundamentalism.....	180
Reasons for Growing Conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims.....	182
Theological Influence on Fundamentalism in Northern Nigeria	184
Imported Fundamentalist Islamic Teaching: It’s Influence on Muslims	184
Proliferation of Islamic Teachers and Teaching as source.....	188
of Religious Fundamentalism or Interreligious Conflicts	188
Views on Maududi’s Interpretation of Jihad	190

Knowledge about Maududi	190
Contact with Maududi's Works	192
Things Remembered about Maududi	193
Agreement or Disagreement with Maududi	194
Analyzing Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad.....	196
Understanding of Jihad fi Sabilillah.....	196
Physical Fight for Islam: The True Jihad for All Muslims	198
Jihad as Obligatory to all Muslims and Ways of Jihad	199
Instruments of Jihad	200
Necessity of Jihad in Modern Northern Nigeria	200
Jihad: An Instrument to Remove Un-Islamic Government.....	201
Forceful Jihad to Eliminate Corrupt and Un-Islamic Practices.....	202
True Jihad and Multi-religious Freedom.....	203
Jihad as Barrier to Muslim Conversion and	204
a Force for Non-Muslim Submission	204
Jihad for True Shari'a and Shari'a State in Northern Nigeria.....	204
Jihad and Islamic State: A Solution to all Muslim Problems.....	206
Islam and Absolute State Authority:	207
A Requirement for True Shari'a	207
Jihad and Islamic State: A Necessity for the.....	208
Practice of Islam in Northern Nigeria	208
Jihad as a Political Tool and When to Conduct Jihad	210
Colonial Experience and Politicization of jihad.....	212
Islam as a Revolution	214
Summary	215
CHAPTER SEVEN	216
MAUDUDI'S POLITICAL THEORY OF ISLAM AND	216
FUNDAMENTALISM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA.....	216
Introduction.....	216
On Din wa Dawla (Unity of Religion and State).....	216
Inseparability of Islam from Politics	217
Islam as Synonymous with State and Government	219
Relationship between Islam, Politics and State.....	220

Islamic State in Light of Maududi's Claims	221
Scope of an Islamic State	222
Principles of Operating an Islamic State	222
Constituents of an Islamic State	223
The Ruler in an Islamic State	223
Appointment of Leaders in an Islamic State	224
Democracy and Islamic State	225
No Private and Personal Life in an Islamic State	226
Relationship between Islamic Government and Secular State	227
Universal Caliphate and its Operation	228
Meaning of Dar el Islam and Dar el Harb	229
Muslims and State Creation	230
Process of Establishing Islamic Rule	231
Revolutionary Jihad: Instrument of Islamic State Creation	232
Jihad as Instrument of Revolutionary Change	234
Muslims and Secular State	235
Islam within a Secular State	235
Muslim Obedience to Secular Laws	236
Obedience to Secular Laws as Polytheism	237
Obedience to Secular Authority as Worship	239
Obedience to Secular Authority as Following	240
the Din of the Secular Authority	240
Muslim's Quest for Political Office as Contravention of Islam	241
Political Leaders Usurping God's Sovereignty	242
No Election and Electioneering in an Islamic	243
State: No Muslim Votes for Non-Muslims	243
Muslim Reaction without Political Power	245
Muslim Submission to Non-Muslim Leaders as Polytheism	246
Muslims and Implementation of Shari'a in Secular States	247
The Rights of Northern Nigerian Muslim Majority	248
to Impose Shari'a	248
Islamic State as a Requirement to Practice Shari'a	249
Shari'a Implementation and Muslim Obedience to	250

Secular Government	250
Implementation of Shari'a across Nigeria	251
Northern Nigerian Muslims Still Leaving in Jahiliyya	252
Separating Western Culture from Modernization	253
Non-Muslims and Islamic State	254
Non-Muslims' Rejection of Shari'a as Grounds.....	254
to Leave Islamic State	254
Achieving Multi-religious Coexistence in an Islamic State.....	256
Non-Muslim Political Participation in an Islamic State.....	257
Rights of non-Muslims in an Islamic State	258
Treatment of Non-Muslims in an Islamic State	259
Non- Muslim Practice of Faith and Building	259
Worship Places in an Islamic State	259
Muslims Hindering Freedom of Worship and.....	261
Building of Worship Places	261
Repercussions of Islamic Fundamentalism.....	263
General Experience and Reaction to Conflicts	263
Effects of Experienced Religious Conflicts	264
Handling Religious Conflicts	265
Muslim Views on Conflict.....	266
Explaining Conflict	266
Necessity of Conflicts	267
Conflicts with Other Religions Unavoidable	268
Reaction to Tragedy in Religious Conflicts	270
Summary	271
CHAPTER EIGHT	273
CONSEQUENCES OF FUNDAMENTALISM ON.....	273
CHRISTIAN-MUSLIM RELATIONS.....	273
Introduction.....	273
Non-Muslim Religious Propagation within Muslim Territories	273
Operation of Religious Propagation in an Islamic State	276
Current Christian-Muslim Relations.....	278
Factors behind the Current Conflicts between	279

Christians and Muslims	279
Description of Current Christian-Muslim Relations	281
Current Relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims	282
Perpetual Entrenchment of Conflicts between Christians and Muslims	284
Muslim Relations with Christians under Shari'a	286
Challenges to Christian-Muslim Relations	288
Muslim Difficulties in Relating to Christians	288
Obstacles to Interreligious Harmony.....	291
Desire to Convert Muslims as Source of Conflicts	292
Conversion as a Major Source of Interreligious Conflicts.....	294
Religious Interests of Muslims as above Nigeria and other Nigerians	295
Treatment of Muslim Converts to other Religions.....	298
Handling Interreligious Challenges	300
Addressing Interreligious Relationship Difficulties.....	300
Interreligious Harmony: Requirements and Possibility	302
Summary	303
CHAPTER NINE.....	304
ANALYTICAL INTEGRATION AND THEORETICAL SYNTHESIS	304
Introduction.....	304
Two Significant Emerging Themes	305
Contemporary Interpretation or Reinterpretation of Jihad.....	306
Single Leader: Central and Critical in Islam.....	311
Content Analysis: Additional Sources Supporting	314
Maududian Influence in Northern Nigeria.....	314
The Northern Nigeria Penal Code: Seed of Islamic Revivalism.....	314
The Zamfara State Shari'a Model as a Revivalist Benchmark.....	318
Echoes of Maududian Revivalism: Views from a Book	320
Selective Adoption of Madudi's Ideology.....	324
Theology as Source of Fundamentalism.....	325
The Impact of Maududi's Interpretation of Islam on Fundamentalism.....	327
and Interreligious Conflicts in Northern Nigeria	327
The Sudan and Muslim Student Society (MSS) Connection	328
Sudan the Gateway to Maududi's Fundamentalist Ideology.....	328

MSS and the Radicalization of Maududi’s Fundamentalist Ideology	329
The Impact of Maududi’s Political Theory	332
Clash of Fundamentalism and Orthodoxy:.....	335
The Root of Selective Adoption.....	335
Fundamentalist Ideology: The Pathway to Collective Violence.....	338
Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA): The.....	340
Unearthing of Muslim Ordinarity.....	340
Summary	343
CHAPTER TEN.....	344
CONCLUSIONS.....	344
Introduction.....	344
Summary of the Study	345
. The General Implications of this Study	351
Implications of the Study to Christian-Muslim Relations.....	353
Recommendations.....	354
Recommendations for Government	355
Recommendations for Muslims	356
Recommendations for Christians	358
Concluding Submission	361
Areas for Further Studies	362
Reference List	364
APPENDIX 1	390
APPENDIX 2.....	1172
Interview Guide	1172
CURRICULUM VITAE.....	1

List of Tables

Table.....	Page
1: More Muslims Getting Involved in Militancy and Fundamentalism in Northern Nigeria	165
2: Relationship of Proliferation of Islamic Preachers to Fundamentalism or Militancy.....	167
3: Proliferation of Islamic Preachers as Source of Interreligious Conflicts.....	171
4: External Influence as Source of Fundamentalism and Conflicts in Northern Nigeria.....	175
5: Qur’anic provisions as source of Fundamentalism.....	178
6: Summary of Reasons for the Growing Conflicts between Muslims and Non-Muslims.....	181
7: Influence of Imported Teaching on Fundamentalism or Militancy in Northern Nigeria.....	183
8: Proliferation of Teachers and Teaching as Source of Religious Fundamentalism or Interreligious Conflicts	186
9: Knowledge about Maududi.....	189
10: Summary of Themes Reflecting Views on Maududi’s Interpretation of Jihad.....	196

List of Figures

Figure.....	page
1: An Adaptation of Kim’s Synthetic Triangular Approach to Studying Muslims	145
2: Validity Levels Achieved by Triangulation.....	153
3: Diagram Showing Some Significant Reasons behind Fundamentalism or Militancy.....	167
4: Components of Islam in Din wa Dawla	216
5: Researcher’s Extractions of the Major Components of Maududi’s Political Theory of Islam and their Thematic Elements Discussed by Interviewees.....	220

Transliteration of Arabic Words

The transliteration style adopted in this dissertation is in consonance with many scholarly works like Rippin (2001) and Kim (2001). Anglicized Arabic words, common place names, and individual names or proper nouns are spelled like English words. The rest are transliterated and italicized according to the system of transliteration provided in the chart below.

Arabic Letters	Arabic Letter Names	Transliteration
ا	Alif	'
ب	Bā'	b
ت	Tā'	t
ث	Thā'	th
ج	Jīm	j
ح	Hā'	h
خ	Khā'	kh
د	Dāl	d
ذ	Dhāl	dh
ر	Rā'	r
ز	Za' or Zāy	z
س	Sīn	s
ش	Shīn	sh
ص	Sād	ṣ
ض	Dād	ḍ
ط	Tā'	ṭ
ظ	Zā'	ẓ
ع	'ayn	'
غ	Ghayn	gh
ف	Fā'	f
ق	Qāf	q
ك	Kāf	k
ل	Lām	l
م	Mīm	M
ن	nūn	N
ه	Hā'	H
و	Wāw	W
ي	Yā'	y

Vowel Signs
		◌َ
Short Vowels
◌*	Fatha	a
◌◌	Damma	u
◌◌◌	Kasra	i
Long Vowels
	Fatha Alif	ā
	Kasra Wāw	ī
	Damma Yā'	ū

*The dotted cycle used with the vowels is not part of the vowel. It is only used to show the position that the vowels take in relation to their usage with Arabic consonants.

CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION

Conflicts related to religion are arguably a global phenomenon in recent times. This is a major concern all over the world for those who love peace and desire freedom to practice their religion without encumbrances or fear. Conflicts related to religion in Nigeria are fast becoming endemic, especially in northern Nigeria. Nigeria is a state where Christianity and Islam are widely entrenched. Both religions are alleged to have equal populations, but there is no official statistical data to support this assertion. Northern Nigeria has the largest concentration of Muslims in Nigeria, in relation to western Nigeria where Islam is also present. The huge success of Usman Danfodio's jihad accounted for the spread of Islam in northern and western Nigeria. This resulted in the creation of the largest empire, since the fall of Songhai Empire, by the middle of the nineteenth century (Usman Dan Fodio n. d.).

There have been concerted efforts globally to remedy the rise of religious conflicts. Specifically, Nigeria and Nigerians crave for a solution to these religious conflicts that are fast becoming prevalent in northern Nigeria. However, finding ways to mitigate these religious conflicts must begin by identifying the root causes of these conflicts in order to uproot them. This has been the basis for this research. Consequently, this researcher, through the use of qualitative method, examined whether Maududi's political interpretation of Islam has been a contributing factor in the rise of these religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Employing a multiple approach of combining interviews, documentary analysis and observation, the researcher collected data from Kano and Kaduna States of northern Nigeria, specifically Kano, Zaria and Kaduna cities, to address this line of inquiry. The results of the findings are presented in the analysis chapters of this research. However, it is important to establish the historical background, scholarly and textual basis and methodology for the research.

Brief Historical Background

Kanem Bornu Empire on the north east of Lake Chad was the first to be Islamized by Arab trade merchants from North Africa (Alao 6; Yusuf 2007, 238). Ousman dates the history of Islam in Nigeria as far back as the seventh century and considers Islam as part of the country's political, social and cultural heritage (2004, 76), but majority of scholars on history of Islam in northern Nigeria do not report this date. However, it is the Usman Danfodio jihad that is clearly responsible for its extensive spread in northern and western Nigeria.

The Danfodio Empire, commonly referred to as the Sokoto Caliphate, enjoyed relative peace after the jihadist wars. Fulani rulers were imposed over the majority of the conquered territories. Later conquest by the colonial masters did not alter much of the balance of power in northern Nigeria. The colonial masters adopted the policy of indirect rule by retaining the existing structures of the Caliphate. And for as much as the income returns required by the colonialists were collected and remitted by the Caliphate, it continued to be run mostly according to the dictates of the Sultanate.

The colonialists ruled through the emirs with little or no input from peoples of other religions, in spite of the existing religious diversity. The colonialists were comfortable with this arrangement as it provided for easy collection of revenues such as taxes and benefits they desired (Falola 1998, 27). Nonetheless, there was relative peace within the Caliphate, probably because the colonial government backed the emirs to subdue any form of dissent. This semblance of peace continued throughout the colonial period and extended into the period after independence when the country was divided into regions.

Turaki's three works provide a broader understanding of the historical context and background conditions of how colonial rule impacted the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims, especially Christians, in northern Nigeria and the concomitant tensions it fostered between Muslims and non-Muslims. They are The British Colonial Legacy in Northern Nigeria: A Social Ethical Analysis of the Colonial and Post-Colonial Society and Politics in Nigeria (1993), The Theory and Practice of Christian Missions in Africa: A Century of SIM/ECWA History and Legacy in Nigeria, 1893-1993 Vol.1 (1999) and Tainted Legacy: Islam, Colonialism and Slavery in Northern Nigeria (2010).

Turaki, through these books, exposes how the colonial masters assisted the Sokoto Caliphate to continue its subjugation of minority tribes and non-Muslims within its enclave and across the tribes of the Middle Belt, which continued the trend of Islamic colonization before the conquest of the Sokoto caliphate by the British. These works provide deep insight as to how historical Islamic colonialism brought about by jihad wars and British colonialism brought about by the conquest of the Sokoto Caliphate, institutionalized the Hausa-Fulani Islamic hegemony over the non-Muslim tribes within the Caliphate and the smaller tribes of the Middle Belt.

These works postulate that British colonialism affirmed Muslims' claim to superiority over non-Muslims. The colonialists, in spite of the fact that they abolished slave raids and slavery by the Sokoto Islamic Caliphate, institutionalized the dhimmitude of non-Muslims and the superiority of Muslim rulership by adopting the administrative structures of the Caliphate and making them rulers over the non-Muslims. They, hence, helped the caliphate to achieve dominance over the Middle Belt that they could not achieve through jihad. These works clearly helped to expose the historical injustices meted to non-Muslims and Christians by the Sokoto Caliphate in northern Nigeria. Turaki believes these historical injustices sowed the seed for the current conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria. The colonial administration instituted regulations that favored the hegemony of Islam over Christianity and hindered Christian mission activity within the caliphate by adopting the policy of non-interference in religion. This policy excluded Christians from Muslim emirates but allowed Muslims to operate in non-Muslim enclaves (Turaki 1999, 205-252). This policy brought the Christians into confrontation with colonial and Islamic political powers whenever the missionaries entered the emirates (Turaki 1999, 259).

The researcher agrees with Turaki, in the thrust of his book The British Colonial Legacy in Northern Nigeria: A Social Ethical Analysis of the Colonial and Post-Colonial Society and Politics in Nigeria (1993), that to have a proper grasp of the nature of political happenings, trends and configurations in Nigeria today, we must have an understanding of our colonial legacy. This is agreeable because it is the legacy that created the hegemony of Islam over Christianity in northern Nigeria and perhaps provided the platform for the emergence of Islamic fundamentalism. In Tainted Legacy: Islam, Colonialism and Slavery in Northern Nigeria, which seems a synthesis of his arguments in the two other books, Turaki argues that "the Christians' response to the resurgence of Islamic militants in Africa has . . . failed to look at how colonialism and slavery in Islam has affected Africans” (2010, 16). He further argues that “the rise of Islamic terrorism and violence all over the world requires a thorough examination of the historical and religious factors that make Islam in Africa very volatile and explosive” (2010, 21). This is a major concern of this research.

Turaki, thus, summarizes that the internal conflicts between non-Muslims and Muslims as it is presently experienced in northern Nigeria is “a legacy of slavery (and especially of Islamic kafir and slave status) and of British racism and colonialism” (2010, 167). He then concludes more specifically that,

Contemporary Christian-Muslim relations in Northern Nigeria are rooted in the bitter enmity that existed between Muslims and non-Muslims because of the dehumanizing effects of colonialism and slavery. From 1900 to 1960 the British administration kept this historic ethnic and political conflict in check. Then soon after independence Muslims and non-Muslim groups revived this violence, and it has continued unabated from the early 1980s to the present. The legacy of the past continues to put non-Muslims in Northern Nigeria at a disadvantage socially, politically, economically and religiously (2010, 168).

There is no doubt that historical injustices against non-Muslims and Christians has surely contributed towards the tension and conflicts being experienced today in northern Nigeria. However, these historical injustices are not radically different throughout the history of relationship between Christianity and Islam, as would be discussed later, as well as the colonial experiences in other places. If these historical factors were the only causes, there would have been violence and fundamentalism wherever Islam is today. Although Turaki argues eloquently from historical facts, and rightly so, the question of why Islam in northern Nigeria and indeed in some parts of Africa is growing in its volatility and explosiveness still remains unanswered. Turaki’s argument, cited above, that the rise of Islamic terrorism and violence in the world demands a comprehensive examination of historical and religious factors that make Islam in Africa volatile and explosive still begs for answers.

The researcher believes that historical factors have contributed to tensions between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria. However, the treatment of these historical factors often clouds the intrinsic religious factors which this researcher believes helped in creating these historical factors in the first place. In spite of Turaki’s erudite handling of the historical factors that contributed to the conflicts and tensions between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria, he does finger what this researcher believes is at the heart of the problem, which is theology or theological interpretation. The concepts of dhimmi, second class citizen or slavery in Islam, are a product of theology. The perceived superiority of Islam and Muslims are also products of theological interpretation.

Although Turaki uses historical lenses to see the reason behind the present tension and conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria, he acknowledges the primary role of theology by saying that “the root of the problems in Northern Nigeria lies in human imagination and understanding and in how religious dogmas and precepts are understood, interpreted and applied. Herein also lies the root cause of all religious conflict and violence” (2010, 22). The researcher suggests that it is new interpretations within Islam that are at the root of interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Even the slave raids into non-Muslim territories, Turaki acknowledges, were justified on the theological interpretation that they are to try and convert unbelievers to Islam. He states further that “Islamic teachings on jihad, slavery and Dhimmi are rooted in . . . Islamic doctrine of kuffar. All these in turn shape Muslim policies, practices and attitudes towards non-Muslims” (2010, 32, 109).

Turaki further articulates that “it is not acknowledged by scholars today that the leaders of the jihad in Hausa land used theology to justify their war. As a result, many fail to understand the primary role of Islamic theology in shaping the meaning and practice of jihad” (2010, 51). This researcher believes he could not have said it better. He indeed concedes that “the motivating power of the jihad is rooted in Islamic theology and the life of Muhammad, his hijra (migration) from Mecca to Medina, and his conquest of Mecca and Medina” (2010, 51). He further suggests that “until these theological foundations are grasped, our understanding of Islam is distorted” (2010, 51). Nonetheless, on the whole, Turaki’s works establish the fact that historical conditions exist in northern Nigeria that contribute to the emergence of conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria. The researcher acknowledges the multi-causal nature of conflicts below, but believes theology is at the heart of them all. This work examines whether theological interpretation is at the heart of the increasing violent nature of Islam in northern Nigeria.

Notwithstanding this historical context, the northern region continued to be governed by the descendants of the Caliphate, led by Ahmadu Bello, a prince of the Sultanate, as Premier of the northern region after independence. By various administrative techniques, of both carrot and stick, Ahmadu Bello was able to lead the north as a single block, skillfully subduing dissent such as the Tiv agitation in the Benue area, now referred to as the Middle Belt (Elaiwu and Galadima 2003, 128; Kalu 2004, 247). He attempted to integrate a Christian presence in his leadership as part of a grand design to keep the north as one entity. In part, he succeeded until the entrance of the military into political foray with the first military coup that took his life.

The aftermath of the coup brought to the fore both regional and religious sentiments hitherto hidden by political exigency. This led eventually to the Nigerian Civil war. In fairness, the Nigerian civil war, although many now will want to give it a serious religious connotation, was actually more an expression of regional and tribal sentiments. However, this does not mean there were no religious undertones.

These religious undertones, in reality, were not necessarily absent during the time of Ahmadu Bello. For example, in the north, settlements called Sabongari (literally-new town, but meaning strangers' quarters) were created for non-Muslim settlers in major cities of the northern region and were generally inhabited by Christians. This would eventually make them easy prey when interreligious riots erupted in the 1980s. In spite of all the above, there was generally a relatively peaceful co-existence between Muslims and all non-Muslim settlers, especially Christians, in most cities of the northern region before the 1980s. Hence, religious conflicts between Christians and Muslims were generally non-existent during this period. However, intra Muslim conflicts existed long before independence (this will be further discussed in the Chapter Two).

The absence of Christian-Muslim conflicts during this period was probably possible because of the channels of dialogue between the rulers (emirs) of various northern cities. These rulers were predominantly from the Hausa-Fulani stock, having been the conquerors in the jihad war. They appointed rulers for settlers who became intermediaries between the emirs and the people groups they represented.

In spite of the mild dissent from the Tiv in the Middle Belt and civil war later, the northern region still remained or maintained the status of being monolithic. The northern oligarchy, shepherded by the descendants of Usman Danfodio and their protégées, for as long as it benefited their political hegemony, trumpeted this position. This monolithic north, therefore, accorded the north the passage to political dominance in the political equation of the country. Consequently, the north provided the majority of the country's leaders since independence. This situation persisted until religion became a political tool in the political equation, perhaps, because of the rise of Islamic fundamentalism.

Then in the mid 1970s, the north began to experience the growth of Islamic militant clerics who began to agitate for the supremacy of Islam over other religious expressions, especially Christianity. Tensions began to build up. In certain quarters, the opinion that the north was Islamic began to be expressed. This gradual rise in militancy may have found roots in the northern regional government's pressurization of the nation into incorporating Shari'a law through the auspices of the Penal Code and Sharia Court of Appeal in 1960, 1979 and 1999 constitutions (Clarke 1988, 528; Elaigwu and Galadima 2003, 127), despite tribal and religious diversity.

Although Yusuf argues that the Penal Code was an imposition of the colonial masters as a reform to the existing Shari'a law (2007, 239), this appears to be a narrow view of the issue as subsequent agitations revealed. This, then, appears to be the precursor to the clamor for Shari'a implementation in northern states around the late 1990s into the 2000s. Later agitations exposed that it is a demand of the northern Muslims.

Similarly, at almost the same period, Christianity suddenly began to become prominent in northern Nigeria (Elaigwu and Galadima 2003, 128; Kalu 2004, 252). This situation might have agitated the militant clerics as it started becoming obvious that the monolithic north is not as Islamic as the northern Muslims desired it to be seen. Suddenly religious antagonism found gradual expression. Militant Islamic groups began to gain prominence and were antagonistic to Christian manifestations in major cities of the north, especially Kaduna and Kano cities perceived to be symbols of Islamic power and control.

Christians in the north also began to assert their desire for political and religious recognition as northerners. However, the Muslim north felt unrepresented if a Christian was selected to represent the north in political appointments. This became obvious when Obasanjo's civilian regime of 1999 appointed northern Christians into top political positions. The Muslim north protested that they were marginalized.

As a result of this antagonism, frictions began to emerge between the two missionary religions. Osia reports a first religious disturbance by 1980 in Zaria (1993, 42) that is not commonly reported. It is, however, the friction that exploded in Zangon Kataf and the Zaria riots of 1987 that became the benchmarks for future conflicts, which in subsequent years grew in intensity (this will also be discussed further in Chapter Two). Churches were burnt in Zaria town, witnessed by this researcher. This, inevitably, provided the basis for other religious riots in Kaduna, Kano and in several other cities of northern Nigeria (Alaon n.d., 39). This seems to have extended to the present Jos riots and the Boko Haram hegemony in Maiduguri, Borno state. Christian-Muslim conflicts have since remained ever present in the north till this day.

Motivation for the Study

The factors behind these conflicts have been examined by scholars that include the following: Alao (n.d); Arinze (2001); Bala (2006); Abdu (2010); Crisis Group (2010); Falola (1998); Ibrahim (1991); Kalu (2004); Omotosho (2003) and others. This brought to the fore Christian-Muslim relation issues as captured by writers like Griswold (2010); Kilani (2000); Kukah (2007); Westerlund (1997); and Yusuf (2007). The causes of these conflicts have generally been attributed to socio-political, socio-economic and territorial control. In other words, these religious conflicts are caused by poverty, resource allocation, control of political power, land issues and so on, all apparently socio-economic and political.

This researcher questions the sufficiency of this view. Turaki seems to differ a little bit on this also by arguing that the conflicts are rooted in history entrenched in “both the primordial social factors and the activities of the social reformers through many legacies and epochs” (2012, 2). These “social reformers” are in the mould of fundamentalists who see themselves as reformers. It cannot be discountenanced that there is a historical dimension to this phenomenon, largely because of the relationship of history to the development of theology and religious interpretations.

However, this view of Islamic activism as largely nationalist, socialist or even economical, as scholars of the 1970s to the 1990s expressed, is to veil our perception of contemporary trends in Islam. And “to ignore religious motivations and to concentrate only on the economic drives or secularized political motives is to limit unnecessarily the scope of our understanding” (Voll 1994, 4) of the emergence and spread of Islamic fundamentalism and militancy.

This researcher wonders if socio-economic and political factors can be exclusively used to explain the causes of these religious conflicts, and whether they are not symptoms of the real cause of these conflicts because these factors are not peculiar to northern Nigerian Muslims. In essence, northern Nigerian Muslims are not exclusively affected by these socio-political and economic factors. There also appears to be some validity in Turaki's argument above because the theological factors or religious interpretations examined in this work have an anchor in history. But it is also important to note that there are substantial Muslims in other parts of Nigeria, that is central and western Nigeria, who are experiencing similar socio-economic and political conditions and are also not immune to historical factors. Why are such conflicts not prevalent there?

The admission by Falola (1998, 12) that it is difficult to attribute a single factor to these religious conflicts provides the necessary impetus for the examination of theological ideological influence than has been examined previously, especially the fundamentalist ideology. This opinion is shared with Agang when he argues that "missing from all the analysis and commentary on the ethnic, political, and economic causes of such violence was one crucial element: theology" (2012, 48). The difference between Agang and this researcher is that he analyzes his views from the perspective of Christian response to violence, while the researcher examined its role in instigating violence by Muslims. Socio-political and economic factors might only be fodder for theology. In other words, socio-political and economic factors might be secondary factors. It is important to admit the interrelatedness of causal factors early, but even in the interrelatedness of these factors there might just be a root cause that awaits discovery and establishment.

Indeed, Falola increases the necessity for this study when he argues that Nigerian Muslims (both the Ulama and followers) draw only from Islam to find ways of solving the country's problems. He concludes that "they are Muslims first and Nigerians second," and find Islam as the veritable avenue to express dissent and "articulate ideological and political cleavages" (Falola 1998, 16). This appears to suggest that theology might be a major influence, and this agrees with Voll's opinion above. Consequently, although a mono-causal factor is narrow in explaining reasons behind religious conflicts, as factors are interrelated, this does not preclude the centrality of theology or religious interpretation as a core causal factor which necessitates a more careful scrutiny.

Significantly argued also, there is similarity in what is happening in Nigeria to what has happened in countries like Pakistan, Indonesia, Egypt, Sudan and so on, where "Islamic fundamentalism has created ideological themes and networks to build successful political movements” (Falola 1998, 19). And evidently, conflicts accompanied these movements within these countries.

The salient point here is the acknowledgement that the pursuit of peace between religions is noble. The pursuit and enforcement of freedom of worship is an intrinsic part of fundamental human rights. Freedom of worship is inseparably intertwined with freedom of speech, and freedom of speech guarantees the right of all religious people to share their faith freely and allow people to make their choices freely also. This right must be protected by all well meaning people.

Christianity and Islam, and indeed all religions, thrive when such rights exist and are entrenched in all spheres of human existence. There is the need to protect freedom of religion and choice, in spite of our personal preferences. People should not feel threatened because of their religious preferences, and the right to prefer should not be taken away. This is why all factors that cause friction, conflicts and violence between religions must be investigated, discovered and addressed for peaceful co-existence between all religions to be achieved. Herein lies a major part of the motivation for this study.

Research Rationale

A further impetus for this study is the fact that very few people studying Islam today will fail to acknowledge the influence of Islamic fundamentalism across the Islamic world. This makes the need to mitigate any form of religious fundamentalism that finds expression in violence an ever constant necessity.

There are diverse opinions as to the origin of Islamic fundamentalism. A careful scrutiny of opinions will reveal that some see it as embedded in Islamic tradition and history (Voll 1994, 294), while others insist it is a more contemporary phenomenon, depending on how fundamentalism is defined. In more recent times, Islamic fundamentalism’s great proponents are Abul A’la Maududi, Hassan al-Banna, Sayyid Qutb and Ayatolla Khomeini. However, some argue that the line of radical or fundamentalist Islam has always existed in the history of Islam and it is not a new phenomenon. In fact, some scholars like Voll (1983) and Ahmad (1983) see this precedence and continuity in tajdid (renewal) and Islah (reform), and there is also the concept of tajaddud (progressive transformation or modernization), as the roots of fundamentalism.

However, the radical and militant form of contemporary Islam, referred to as fundamentalist Islam in this work, appears to be a modern creation as Esposito seems to rightly capture. He says that al-Banna and Qutb's Muslim Brotherhood and Maududi's Jama'at-i-Islami "are indeed the trailblazers or architects of contemporary Islamic revivalism, men whose ideas and methods have been studied and emulated from Sudan to Indonesia" (Esposito 1999, 129).

One desires that Esposito uses the word fundamentalism rather than revivalism because he states that "most movements of today differ from those of earlier centuries in that they are modern, not traditional, in their leadership, ideology, and organization" (Esposito 1999, 129). Moreover, the title of his chapter five of the same work betrays the militant nature of these modern movements since he titles it "soldiers of God." Furthermore, he uses the word "activism" to refer to the actions of Muslim Brotherhood and Maududi's Jama'at-i-islami. Activism does not preclude militancy, but in fact suggests it.

Esposito admits that the reality of these movements is far more complex than their popular image. However, the fact that he admits they are a threat (Esposito 1999, 128) suggests that they go beyond revivalist movements. His use of the term revivalism appears more diplomatic than the facts of his arguments reveal. For example, he accepts that these Islamic movements are "hostile to westernization" (Esposito 1999, 131). He says that revivalism even in Egypt became more militant and combative in the nineteen fifties and sixties as a result of the Muslim Brotherhood's confrontation with the Egyptian state (Esposito 1999, 135). He even acknowledges that in Pakistan, Maududi's Jama'at-i-islami were militant (Esposito 1999, 139). He finally admits that these Islamic movements have followed diverse patterns influenced by sociopolitical contexts which shape their ideologies, degrees of militancy and the use of violence (Esposito 1999, 138). Indeed, he does accept that most of these modern movements see jihad as the neglected path of establishing Islamic rule in the world (Esposito 1999, 143).

It is this militancy, combativeness and confrontational nature of these modern Islamic movements that make it preferable to use the term "fundamentalism" to describe them rather than revivalism. Nonetheless, we cannot disapprove of his argument since his theme, apparently, is to play down the perceived threat or militant nature of these Islamic movements. This is seen in his argument that fundamentalism is "too laden with Christian presuppositions and western stereotypes, as well as implying a monolithic threat that does not exist” (1999, 6). In addition, it is also objective to acknowledge the challenge in using terminologies to describe these Islamic movements as Esposito does in the conclusion of his chapter five.

It is important to note, at this juncture, that one of the distinctive features of contemporary fundamentalist Islam is the re-opening of the gate of ijtihad,¹ a gate supposedly closed by the codification of Islamic doctrines by the four orthodox imams (Hannafi, Maliki, Shafi‘i, and Hanbali) and the acceptance of taqlid (to imitate or uncritical adoption) as the general mode of analysis or interpretation (Voll 1983, 38). The fundamentalists intrinsically do not want to be bound by historical development of traditional Islam as Voll explains (1994, 295). This signifies a contemporary creation and departure from traditional Islam and provides the likes of Maududi the grounds to reinterpret Islam and jihad differently from traditional Islam. Maududi’s interpretation of Islam, particularly his political theory of Islam, will be a major variable in this study. Maududi interprets jihad to mean world revolution, fighting and destroying non-Islamic governments, and establishing Islamic states in their place (Maududi 1939). The fact that Voll distinguishes them as traditional, yet contemporary radical fundamentalism (1994, 294) reinforces this position and shows that fundamentalism, in some sense, may not necessarily be rooted in tajdid or islah and that there is a modern origin to it.

Distinguishing Fundamentalism

This researcher believes that fundamentalism, as discussed in this work, also needs distinguishing. Voll and Ahmad above see the new Islamic movements as “revivalism” or “resurgence” and as elements of continuity with Islamic tradition and historical experience of Muslims. This seems acceptable for as long as it is stressing the renewal and reform from within Islam as the argument in Voll (1983) and Ahmad (1983) seem to portray, and if we also distinguish Islamic wars of formation and early spread of Islam and later jihadic wars from contemporary fundamentalism. The argument here is that, tajdid and islah focus more on internal transformation of Islamic communities, and not the external expansionist drive of contemporary Islamic fundamentalism, which is targeted against other religions and non-Islamic communities, as well as internal aggression against other differing Islamic views.

¹ See Kamali (2002) for a treatment of what ijtihad means.

Influence of Fundamentalist Islam in Northern Nigeria

In light of the preceding discourse, it will be difficult to discountenance the influence of fundamentalist movements on the Islamic movement in Nigeria. In fact, the movement has been categorized as a Shi'a organization by some scholars. However, Westerlund disagrees with the categorization of Islamic movement in Nigeria as Shi'a. His objection is that it cannot be classified as Shi'a because most members of the movement are “influenced not only by Khomeini, but also by leading Sunni Islamists like Hassan al-Banna, Sayyid Qutb and Maulana Maududi” (Westerlund 1997, 441). This, therefore, acknowledges the influence of the fundamentalist ideology in Nigerian Islam, and of the ideology of Maududi. How this arrived in Nigeria and grew will be discussed further later.

The Significance of Maududi to the Study

This research, as the topic reveals, hopes to examine the influence of Maududi's theological ideology or Islamic interpretation on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, particularly his political theology of Islam.² There is no doubt that Maududi's contribution to contemporary Islamic thought cannot be gainsaid or overlooked. His global influence has been acknowledged by several scholars. In fact, he is referred to as the godfather of Islamism (The Spittoon 2010).

Global Islamic fundamentalism cannot be discussed without the mention of Maududi. His influence on global Islamic resurgence is acknowledged by Hassan (2003, 429). He is seen as the major influence on global fundamentalism across the world. Osman suggests that Maududi's skills at interpreting Islam is what has influenced Sayyid Qutb of Egypt (2003, 48). And it is a known fact that Qutb is the major ideologue of Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt and across the world.

In spite of this, there have been few studies on the influence of Maududi's theological ideology or Islamic interpretation on religious conflicts in Africa and indeed in northern Nigeria specifically. In view of his influence on global fundamentalism, it appears there is a huge lacuna of untapped resources towards understanding influences on religious conflicts, especially from theological perspective. This is why the examination of Maududi's theological ideology or Islamic interpretation is important to this study.

² Although the researcher accepts the presupposition that the fallen nature of man is at the heart of evil in the universe; however, the fallen nature of man is a given condition and this research rather focuses on the phenomenological descriptions to assist in the understanding of how Muslims view their issues from their perspective.

The Term Fundamentalism

It is also important to discuss here why the term Fundamentalism is preferred for this work rather than the terms Islamism, Revivalism or Resurgence. The choice of this term finds support in Voll (1994) who uses the terms fundamentalism, Islamic fundamentalism, traditional and radical fundamentalism, and fundamentalist activism to describe the tendency being examined in this work.³ He refers to the Maududian tendency as "fundamentalist activism" (1994, 237). He differentiates fundamentalism from resurgence (1994, 295). These terms referred to in the opening sentence are used synonymously in many instances, yet scholarly disagreement is strong (Shepard 1998, 14-15). Islamism appears to be quite a modern development, and its definition is still controversial and the concept is still undergoing refinement. Bayat captures the various terms used by scholars in recent times to move away from the use of fundamentalism, and Islamism is one of them (2005).

It is the conviction here that Islamism is more politically inclined, seen as a religious and political movement striving to establish modern states based on the principles of Islamic law (Thurfjell 2007), and geared towards the construction of an Islamic identity (Gunn 2003), or simplified to mean that Islam should guide social, political, as well as personal life of Muslims (Berman 2003). Some even argue that Islamism should be differentiated from real Islam (Van Nieuwenhuijze 1995). To use the term Islamism in this work does not convey the militant nature of Islam being examined in northern Nigeria, even though it does not reject violence completely (Mozaffari 2007).

The terms resurgence and revivalism apparently convey a similar idea. They carry the notion of reviving practices and ideas that are truly Islamic and guided by the Qur'an and Sunnah (Muzaffar 1986). Several terms are used to convey the same idea, such as reassertion, renewal, awakening, etc. This ideology stresses moral conservatism, literalism and an attempt to implement Islamic values in all spheres of life. Nasr says it emphasizes the exoteric dimension of faith and disparages traditional practices (1995). It advocates a renewed commitment in the heart and minds of individuals as a basis for justice and fair communal existence (Lapidus 1997).

³ Refer to pages 22-33, 177-182, 237-239 and 294-313

In essence, the terms revivalism and resurgence tend to emphasize the religious at the expense of the political content (Bayat 2005, 893), or even the militant aspects. And as Voll argues, Islamic revivalism, although it does not exclude violence, is not inherently violent (1986, 169). It appears to focus more on the transformation of Islam from within, emphasizing the religious or spiritual. The use of these terms would appear restrictive and limiting in this work also.

Fundamentalism will thus capture more of the conservative religiosity and combativeness desired to be shown in this work, in spite of its negative connotation and links to Protestantism of the 20th century. Islamic fundamentalism is seen as advocating a return to the fundamentals of Islam: the Qur'an and the Sunna, especially in a more literal form in opposition to western and modern influences, and also its militant stance in achieving a society governed by Islamic values. Voll appears supportive here by arguing that “fundamentalists are unwilling to accept adaptations and are more often critics than defenders of existing conditions” (1994, 22). This, thus, captures both the desire for internal and external transformation of the society towards Islam desired by fundamentalists, not only in northern Nigeria, but globally as well. Fundamentalists accept militancy as a necessary option in achieving the establishment of the rule of Islam in the world.

Fundamentalists see themselves as reformers who challenge the blind following of tradition and Islamic establishment by asserting their right to independent analysis and interpretation of Islam (ijtihad) to reform society (Esposito 1983, 14), as shall be seen in the example of Maududi, especially in his interpretation of jihad. In arguing that fundamentalism is not distinct from Islamism but a subset of it, Fuller suggests that it is “the most conservative among Islamists” (2003, 48), lending additional credence to its choice here.

Although the researcher prefers Voll's choice of the term fundamentalism above because the fundamentalist style has the potential to stream along different paths and “often profoundly revolutionary” (1994, 294-295), it is significant to highlight the three reasons why Esposito rejects the use of the term fundamentalism. They are that those who call for a return to the fundamentals of a religion may be called fundamentalists, it is too influenced by American Protestantism, and it is often equated with isms such as political activism, terrorism, extremism and anti-

Americanism (1999, 5-6); and to emphasize, as argued above, that they are not enough to completely discredit the validity of adopting the term fundamentalism.

There are some that are intolerant and exclusivist, some spiritualist and some political, some autocratic, others democratic, and some pacifists and some violent. Indeed, some show continuity links to medieval fundamentalist movements, and others are contemporary creations. The term fundamentalism is, therefore, more appropriate in capturing the thrust of this study. The working definition of fundamentalism for this study has been included in the section on definition of terms.

Problem Statement

The problem to be addressed in this dissertation is the examination of the influence of Maududi's Islamic interpretation on the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in Kano and Kaduna states of northern Nigeria and how this affects Christian-Muslim relations in the northern region of Nigeria.

Main Research Question

What is the impact of Maududi's political interpretation of Islam in promoting Islamic fundamentalism in Kaduna and Kano States of northern Nigeria?

Sub-Research Questions

1. What do Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano states say is the main cause of Islamic fundamentalism in their areas?
 - 1.1 How is theology influencing fundamentalism in northern Nigeria?
 - 1.2 How do Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano states view Maududi's interpretation of jihad and its contemporary implication for northern Nigerian Islam?
2. What is the impact of Maududi's political theory of Islam on the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in northern Nigeria?
 - 2.1 What are some significant repercussions resulting from the influences of Islamic fundamentalism among Muslims as expressed by Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano states?
 - 2.2 What are the views of Muslim leaders and intellectuals on conflict?

3. How has Islamic fundamentalism and religious conflicts affected Christian-Muslim relations in Kaduna and Kano states?
 - 3.1 How can the existing Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria be described?
 - 3.2 What are the current challenges to Christian-Muslim Relations?

Purpose and Expectation of the Study

The purpose of this study is to examine Maududi's Islamic interpretation. The desire is to establish how this has influenced the rise of fundamentalist Islam in northern Nigeria. This will specifically focus on Kaduna and Kano states since they are considered the origins of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Secondly, it is definitely the desire of all well meaning Christians, sincere Muslims in northern Nigeria, and indeed Nigeria as a whole, that this trend of conflicts between Christians and Muslims should cease. Surely, if peaceful co-existence is to be achieved between the two religions, true entrenchment of freedom of worship must become a reality. The expectation is to establish how far reaching the influence of theology is on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. If it is established that theology has a far reaching influence on these religious conflicts, this understanding will provide a genuine channel for finding ways to eliminate the spate of religious conflicts in that region of Nigeria. It will also provide the right atmosphere for a sustained effort in interreligious communication and dialogue. And this will provide the freedom of sharing among religions.

Above all, this understanding will provide the necessary insight on how Christian-Muslim relations will be improved in northern Nigeria. This will consequently lead to the emergence of ways in which these relationships will be cemented. Ultimately, this will bring a better understanding between Christians and Muslims in that area. The overall outcome is to eliminate religious conflicts, or at least greatly reduce religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Significance of the Study

Academically, this study is significant in providing resource and data base for interreligious studies and dialogue, especially in the field of Christian-Muslim relations. Socio-politically, it provides a basis for developing existential harmony between Christians and Muslims in northern Nigeria as the possibility of violence is diminished, in addition to providing the government of Nigeria with vital information towards solving the perennial occurrence of religious conflicts.

Most importantly, it has benefit to the church and the Muslim Umma by improving Christian understanding of Muslims in northern Nigeria and providing a basis for improved dialogue. This will also assist the Nigerian, African and the global church in identifying the true causes of religious conflicts, especially against Christians, in addition to providing useful materials for training church leaders and laity for effective service and building of genuine relationships with Muslims.

This understanding will also provide necessary insights that will make available ways in which Christian-Muslim relationships in northern Nigeria can be improved and perhaps bring a better understanding between Christians and Muslims globally.

On a more conservative level, this study is significant in promoting a greater and better Christian understanding of Islam. It will facilitate the understanding of the workings of a Muslim mind as it relates to his religious obligations and in his relations with people of other religions in northern Nigeria. This might, in the long run, provide a platform for understanding other Muslims globally.

Finally, this study is significant in discovering the answer to the question of why the majority of Muslim neighbors relating closely with Christians everyday in northern Nigeria have not risen in defense of innocent Christians in time of religious conflicts, as seen commonly in most religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Limitation of the Study

One limitation that this study has had is the ability of the researcher to build confidence in Muslims to provide the required information needed for this study, or the challenge of ensuring that misleading information or data is not collected. To minimize this limitation, the researcher employed the services of trained research assistants among Muslims from each area where data was collected.

Collecting primary data, as this researcher experienced, is very expensive. Research assistants need to be paid and provision for general logistics made. This cost implication placed a limitation on the extensiveness of the research that limited the diversity and spread of the data collected to predominantly three locations, as indicated in the methodology chapter. This limitation is acknowledged here. Another limitation attributed to this study is the fact that it targeted Muslim leaders and intellectuals. This is because it was not practicable to target all Muslims in the two states. This, therefore, places constraint and indeed places the need for caution in making generalizations on the outcome of this study.

Delimitation

This study was limited to the examination of the influence of Maududi's Islamic interpretation on militant Islamic fundamentalism in Kaduna and Kano states, and not northern Nigeria as a whole, although it is considered representational. And it also did not cover all spectrums of other Islamic interpretations. It was also limited to militant Islamic fundamentalism and not all forms of fundamentalism or conflicts between Christians and Muslims in northern Nigeria.

In this regard, this study was only conducted in Kano and Kaduna states, being states where religious conflicts and fundamentalism had their early origins, and was restricted to the study of Maududi's political interpretation of Islam. And within Kaduna and Kano states, only Kano, Kaduna and Zaria cities were the main focus. This is, generally, because northern Nigerian religious conflicts took place in major urban cities, and these cities are considered representational as regards religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. It is within these cities that such religious skirmishes took place at the initial stages of the rise of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Fundamentalism can manifest in all aspects of human existence and relationships. This study did not undertake the examination of all manifestations of fundamentalism in its entire ramification. It is more focused on the militant aspect of the word, the aspect that manifests itself in religious conflicts as seen in northern Nigeria between Christians and Muslims. This narrowed scope is acknowledged here.

It is also acknowledged that conflicts between Christians and Muslim may not in all cases be centered on religion. However, the scope of this study is that it did not focus on all forms of conflicts between Christians and Muslims, but focused more on the conflicts that are perceived to be religious and how theology influences these conflicts.

Nor did this study pay attention to the socio-economic or political factors behind religious conflicts in northern Nigeria: this area is already covered by several scholars. This study did acknowledge that religious conflicts have multi-causal factors, but focused on examining if theology can be treated as one of the major, if not the main, influential factors that underlie the religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Hence the focus is purely on the examination of the influence of Maududi's interpretation of Islam on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Research Location

The rationale behind choosing these locations to focus on in this research was based on some considerations. The first is the ability to get the appropriate population to be interviewed for the study. The next is familiarity with the terrain because the researcher has lived in Kano for over 20 years and experienced most of the conflicts which occurred in this city. The third is that religious conflicts did occur in a few rural areas, but it was more frequent in urban areas where various Islamic sects were prevalent. Finally, the cities and their environs are the first to experience religious conflict in northern Nigeria as earlier mentioned.

Assumption

This research assumes that religious conflicts cut across northern Nigerian Muslims without distinction between different types of Islam, such as official or popular Islam, and regardless of different sects. When religious conflicts occur, no discrimination between these different sects or official or popular Islam seems apparent. Although the issue of ideology or interpretation falls within the realm of official Islam, there is a convergence of both popular and official Islam when conflicts occur.

Definition of Terms

In this dissertation the following terms will be technically used for an operational purpose: fundamentalism, conflict, religious conflicts and influence. Terms such as revivalism, resurgence, and Islamism have already been discussed. Islamic terms such as da'wa, tajdid, islah, and tajaddud, ijma, qiyas, ijtihad, istihsan, istislah, istisdal and *istishab*⁴ will be found in the glossary of key Islamic terms, although meanings are also provided within text where they are used.

⁴ The following sources were helpful in understanding and explaining the Islamic terms: Rahman 2000; Hassan 2011; Mughal n. d.; Istidlal <http://sunnirevivalproject.wordpress.com>; Hallaq 2004; Hourani 1985; Afsaruddin 2006; Shafaat 1984; The Islamic Seminary http://www.theislamicseminary.org/articles/article002_2.html; Ijma and Qiyas Consultancy

The term conflict is preferred to the use of violence, although it cannot be completely avoided. Conflict in this study refers to being in the state of fighting, disharmony, opposition and emotional distress. The ramification of conflict covers more than violence and is, therefore, more relevant in this study. Religious conflicts are, therefore, conflicts of a religious nature. For the term fundamentalism, in view of the discussion on fundamentalism above, it is defined as the non-negotiable, inflexible attempt to impose Islamic principles in both subtle and militant ways by any Muslim sect upon Muslims and non-Muslims alike, leading to conflicts.

The term influence, considering the various opinions about influence, is seen as the ability or the clout of persons or things to move or cause others to act, behave or express opinions in a particular way, either in a peaceful or violent manner. And for theology, it is generally accepted as the study of religions and religious teachings. However, the term theology in this work means the theological interpretations, principles and theories as espoused by Maududi.

CHAPTER TWO

ISLAM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA

Introduction

Northern Nigeria is the context of this study. In order to examine the role of Maududi's Islamic interpretation in the rise of Islamic fundamentalism and religious conflicts, it is vital to discuss Islam in northern Nigeria and why Maududi's ideology could have an influence there. Thus, a slightly enlarged history of the arrival, growth and expansion of Islam in northern Nigeria is necessary. This will disclose how Islam became a dominant presence in northern Nigeria, and establishes the environment in which this study takes place.

Islam in Northern Nigeria: Phases and Changes

The present Muslim population in Nigeria is estimated at 50 percent. In spite of Ousman's suggestion above that Islam in Nigeria dates as far back to the seventh century (2004, 76), majority of scholars think it is between 11th and 12th Centuries and generally accept that Arab traders first introduced Islam to northern Nigeria (Elaigwu and Galadima 2003, 126). Islam, therefore, arrived in Nigeria long before Usman Danfodio's jihad through the trans-Saharan trade. However, as mentioned above, Usman Danfodio's jihad was responsible for its spread in the northern and western Nigeria. Islam came in two phases. Some scholars argue that the first phase came in the 11th Century (cf Yusuf 2007, 238), while some say it is the 12th Century (cf Alao n.d., 6).

Although there is a general consensus that Kanem Bornu Empire on the east of Lake Chad is the first to be Islamized, as mentioned above (Alao n.d., 6; Yusuf 2007, 238), Kane is reported to suggest A. D. 666-67 for the arrival of Islam to the Chad region by a small group of Muslims under the leadership of Uqbah bin Nafi. The Kings of Kanem Bornu only received Islam around the 11th Century (Sanusi 2007, 179). Islam reigned there for a thousand years. It became the official religion after the conversion of the ruler Humme Jilme (1085-1097), through the reigns of Dunam Dabelemi (1221-1251) and Idris Alooma (1570-1602), until the British conquered northern Nigeria (Yusuf 2007, 238; Alao n.d., 6).

More critical to the Islamization of northern Nigeria is the second phase of the 19th Century Usman Danfodio jihad that established the Sokoto Caliphate. Islam had been in Hausa land since the 15th Century, especially in Kano (Yusuf 2007, 238; Hunwick 1992, 145). It is suggested that the cause of the jihad was the mixing of Islamic practices with un-Islamic Hausa customs, although Falola and Heaton believe it was politically and culturally motivated, with consequences on both (2008, 12). Nonetheless, Fwatshak states that the dominant motivation was religion, with economic, social and political factors as secondary motives (2006, 260-261). Perhaps this view supports the researcher's position that economic, social and political factors might be secondary factors in the rise of interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

This desire for reform led to the jihad that, within 50 years, swept through the whole Hausa land (Alao n.d., 7), and extended to cover some former provinces of Bornu, the Jukun and Nupe states and areas once covered by Oyo Empire in western Nigeria (Falola and Heaton 2008, 61, 65; Fwatshak 2006, 261-262; Schacht 1957, 123-129). Although Kalu suggests that nine jihads occurred before the 19th Century (2004, 245), it is accepted that the Danfodio jihad of 1804 accounted for the spread of Islam in Nigeria (Elaigwu and Galadima 2003, 126). Shari'a or Islamic law was then entrenched in northern Nigeria until the coming of colonial rule (Yusuf 2007, 239; Christelow 2002, 187).

Even though the colonialists restricted Shari'a to personal ethics, it had continued to exist by the policy of indirect rule and the restriction of Christian missionaries to the emirates (Kalu 2004, 245; Alao n.d., 7). Islamic administrative structures remained. It is right to suggest Islam only hibernated. What introduced changes in the Islamic movement in northern Nigeria is the emergence of Islamic sects. These sects that existed long before independence accounted for the intra-Muslim conflicts before independence. The discussion of these intra-religious conflicts hopes to provide insights as to why the situation is as it is today. It is possible that these historical sectarian conflicts are major contributors to the present state of affairs as they evolved over time with various sects interpreting Islam. Kalu states that periodization of the history of Islam in Nigeria is crucial because Islam has changed over time (2004, 244).

This history makes the study underline the inadequacy of ethnicity, poverty, illiteracy, media or politics (Ibrahim 1989, 68-69, 76-81) as exclusive causes of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Bala Usman's postulation of economic benefits in Clarke seems inadequate also, as Clarke rightly argues that it will be "misleading, nevertheless, to interpret all recent fundamentalism in Nigeria, or for that matter all recent outbreaks of religious controversy and violence, in this way" (1988, 525). One agrees with Coulon that the religious recomposition we are seeing in Nigeria today is not a mechanical response to political and economic crises (cited in Ibrahim 1991, 115).

The quest for the implementation of Shari'a is not also tenable, although it has contributed, because as Elaigwu and Galadima argue, Shari'a has always existed in northern Nigeria, but it is the nature of Shari'a and its mode of implementation that is the issue (2003, 144). This suggests the possible influence of theological interpretation and ideology. This researcher essentially agrees that "the 'sacred domain' is a vital and integral part of popular political culture that the totalitarian and teleological ambitions of the state cannot destroy" (Ibrahim 1991, 115). This view makes the evaluation of the impact of Maududi's political theory of Islam in northern Nigeria significant.

Bala provides three changing phases of Islam in northern Nigeria that are crucial. These stages include the Usman Danfodio jihad of 1804, the struggles between Qadiriyya sufi order and newly introduced Tijjaniyya order of 1825-1960, and the period that witnessed the introduction of Izala and the unified Qadiriyya and Tijjaniyya sufi orders of 1979 (2006, 82). The first phase between 1804 and later part of the 19th Century was the period of consolidation and intellectual awareness, characterized by preaching, teaching, and writing of literature. The second phase was the period of struggle for supremacy between the two main sects of Qadiriyya and Tijjaniya. The third phase was the period that saw the emergence of several groups laying claim to superiority over the other, a period described as witnessing serious transformation among Muslim intellectual class (Bala 2006, 83-85). This period has persisted until this day and is of interest to this study.

This period also coincides with the period Clarke says Muslims in Nigeria, due to internal and external religious, political and economic developments, were roused to be conspicuously involved in national and international politics.⁵ This period also saw the arrival of missionaries from Pakistan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria, which according to him forged closer ties with “co-religionists” in Asia, Middle East and North Africa. It interests this study that it is at this period that more Nigerian Muslim students were trained in such Islamic universities as Al-Azhar of Cairo (Clarke 1988, 532).

Consequently, the mid-1970s saw an upsurge in Islamic fundamentalism that became intolerant towards non-Muslims. This dimension of fanaticism and intolerance found expression in dramatic ways through the activities of Maitatsine, Izala and Muslim Student Society (MSS) movements (Ibrahim 1987, 70). Led by a mixture of a modern educated contemporary class of intellectuals and orthodox Muslim clerics (Sanusi 2007, 177), Islamic movements in Nigeria accepted jihad and martyrdom as crucial to the establishment of a true Islamic state (Ousman 2004, 77). The concept of establishing an Islamic state through jihad and martyrdom might reflect a strong Maududian inspiration.

Brief History of Religious Conflicts in Northern Nigeria

It is also appropriate to trace the history of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, since it is a major interest of this study. This is necessary in order to situate the research in the historical context of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Religious conflicts in northern Nigeria have two dimensions. They are the intra and interreligious conflicts. The phenomenon of interreligious conflicts is more recent.

Although most Muslims accept that Islam is not a pacifist religion (Omar 2003, 158), this does not suggest that all Muslims are violent. It is realistic to say that both moderate and fundamentalist Muslims will love to see Nigeria become an Islamic state (Clarke 1988, 532). However, interreligious conflicts were virtually non-existent for a long time, in spite of the declared intention of political conquest of southern Nigeria (Alao n.d., 4). It is apparent that something changed to introduce these conflicts. Nevertheless, religious conflicts started with intra-religious conflicts.

⁵ We shall see also later that it coincides with the spread of Maududi’s ideology, which says you can’t be a true Muslim and remain indifferent to political, cultural, social, economic and international politics.

Intra-Religious Conflicts in Northern Nigerian Islam

Northern Nigerian Muslims have faced several intra-religious conflicts for decades (Bala 2006, 79; Crisis Group 2010, 1). Sanusi explains that since the late 1970s northern Nigeria has witnessed several religious riots and conflicts initially restricted within Muslim communities, “between emergent dissident groups who challenged the traditional interpretation and practice of Islam in Nigeria” (2007, 182).⁶ However, these conflicts began with the arrival of Tijjaniyya in Kano around the 1820s. This sparked conflicts with the Qadiriyya based Sokoto Caliphate, especially when Abdullahi Bayero (Emir of Kano) declared himself a Tijjaniyya (Alao n.d., 8). Behind these conflicts were doctrinal and supremacy struggles. In 1949, the Sultan of Sokoto ordered the destruction of a Tijjaniyya mosque, which led to riots. Similar riots occurred in 1956 and 1965 (Alao n.d., 8).

Bala unveils the three major phases of intra-religious conflicts in the history of northern Nigerian Islam which are related to the phases of changes mentioned above. Conflicts during the first phase were limited to matters of jurisprudence, theology and science of Hadith and Qur’anic exegesis. However, these conflicts were restricted to written works. There was some limited violence during the second phase of the Tijjaniyya and Qadiriyya conflicts as seen above. Nonetheless, both groups focused more on producing pamphlets, books and tracts to counter each other’s position. It is the third phase that saw the emergence of the Izala sect, linked to the Wahabi movement of Saudi Arabia that witnessed more hostilities. Bala concludes that “the nature of intra-Muslim conflicts has changed automatically in contemporary Nigeria because of the emergence of Izalatul bid’ah wa-iqamatis Sunna in the 1970s. The discord shifted from intellectual disagreement to incessant hostility” (2006, 83-93).

In spite of these, there were no interreligious conflicts reported. Intra-religious conflicts have continued till this day with newer sects like *Boko Haram*⁷ attacking fellow Muslims adjudged to be compromisers. This ideology also seems to reflect a Maududian influence. This shift from intellectual disagreement to violent conflicts appears to have theological ideology behind it. However, intra-religious conflicts gave way to interreligious conflicts in the 1980s.

⁶ This acknowledges the introduction of new interpretations of Islam and the period also coincides with the return of students and arrival of missionaries from Egypt, Pakistan, Sudan and Saudi Arabia.

⁷ See more discussion on Boko Haram below.

Interreligious Conflicts in Northern Nigeria

As we discuss interreligious conflicts, it is important to note that religious disputes came to the fore in the political realm before religious conflicts emerged in the social sphere. This was evidenced by the constitutional Shari'a debates of 1960, 1979 and 1999. In fact, the Shari'a dispute led to a walkout by the Muslim representatives in the Constituent Assembly in 1979. It took the intervention of the military government by some level of compromise for them to return (Osia 1993, 41).

Nevertheless, the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in northern Nigeria began in the 1970s. This coincided with the influx of missionaries from Pakistan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, and so forth, as well as the return of products of scholarships and schools of Arabic studies that began to take their positions in schools, judicial system, and civil service (Winters 1987, 176), including leadership of Islamic groups. This might have accounted for the ideological shift, possibly, giving rise to two types of Muslim reformers in present day Nigeria: the moderate and the radical or “fundamentalist” as Clarke seems to suggest (1988, 521). It seems as if the Izala sect can be classified as moderate fundamentalists because they have concentrated more on the purification of Islam from within than engaging in violent conflicts with non-Muslims.

This shift to interreligious conflicts became obvious because, prior to 1982, intra-religious conflicts were far more common than interfaith conflicts (Ibrahim 1989). Alao suggests that these conflicts began with the Iranian revolution. One begs to differ. In northern Nigeria, this fundamentalist fervor took roots in the 1970s before the Iranian revolution. However, Alao appears precise in attributing these conflicts to pedagogy (n.d., 16).

The first interfaith conflict of 1982 in Kano gives credence to this position. The students of the School of Arabic Studies decided to burn an Anglican church because it wanted to enlarge its sanctuary, located in the Muslim enclave of the old city, not minding that the church had been on that site for over 40 years. The students went ahead to burn churches in Sabon Gari when security forces prevented the burning of the Anglican Church. The irony here is that the same school provided the focus group in 1959 to test the efficacy of the Hausa translated Bible (Ibrahim 1991, 129).

Significantly, it is the same school that El-Zakzaky attended in the 1970s and graduated 7 years before the incident. A huge change had occurred between 1959 and 1982. In fact, another source accused Muslim Student Society (MSS) members for carrying out the attack that killed 44 people (Crisis Group 2010, 13). There were other limited Muslim-Christian skirmishes in Ilorin and Ibadan in March and May of 1986, respectively. These were an Easter conflict in Ilorin and Muslim students protesting the position of the cross in the Chapel of Resurrection by burning the figure of the risen Christ in University of Ibadan (Osia 1993, 42).

However, the next major interreligious conflict with wider national ramifications followed on March 6, 1987 in Kafanchan (Omotosho 2003, 16). It defined the shape and outlook of other interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria. It snowballed to other cities and laid the pattern for subsequent conflicts all over northern Nigeria, but concentrated in Kano, Kaduna, Katsina, Sokoto, Maiduguri and Jos. Religious conflict hit Jos on the 12th of April, 1994 (Fwatshak 2006, 265) and struck Maiduguri, which is the seat of Boko Haram today, around December of 2002, as we shall see in the brief discussion of Boko Haram below. The Kafanchan conflict has been chronicled in several works such as Ibrahim (1987; 1991), Omotosho (2003), Yusuf (2007), Alao n.d. and Crisis Group Report (2010).

It is also significant to note that the conflict was sparked by MSS students fighting the Fellowship of Christian Students (FCS) at Advanced Teachers College, Kafanchan over alleged misrepresentation of the Qur'an. Maududi's concept of defense of Islam, to be discussed later, comes to mind. It is suggested that this conflict rallied Muslims to close ranks and have a united front (Ibrahim 1991, 123). These conflicts grew in number and increased in intensity by spreading all over the northern region. This researcher witnessed conflicts in 1991, 1997, 2002, 2004 and 2006 in Kano.⁸

Ibrahim is accurate, and significantly too, to assert that these militant reformers were initially united Muslim Students Society, but later split and became composed essentially of educated middle-class elements (1991, 124; Sanusi 2007, 177). The split Ibrahim alludes to appears to have given rise to splinter groups like Boko Haram. This agrees with Murtada's (2012) position below. Sanneh also agrees that there were breakaways from this initial fundamentalist group (2003, 240). This researcher sees a significant presence of Maududian ideology in Boko Haram's philosophy, warranting a brief discussion of the group.

⁸ Crisis Group Report page 31 provides further detailed dates of the various Christian-Muslim conflicts.

The Boko Haram Movement

Scholars have expressed opinions that Boko Haram has links with the 1980 Maitatsine uprising in Kano (Adesoji 2010, 2011; Pham 2012, 1; Isichei 1987). This is probably because both their beliefs are not held by majority of Nigerian Muslims (Pham 2012, 1-2). However, it is tenable to say that there are different opinions about the origin of the group (Olojo 2013, 2-3; Mohammed 2010, 40), and the group is continuously evolving (Mohammed 2014, 10).

The name Boko Haram is a populist one given to the group by people, or as profiled by the media (Mohammed 2010, 27). The actual name of the group is Jama'at Ahl us-Sunnah li'd-Da'wah wa'l Jihad, which in English is "The Group of the People of Sunnah for Preaching and Struggle" (Murtada 2012, 3). This is the more commonly reported name, although another version is reported as "Ahl as-Sunnah wa al-Jama'ah ala Minhaj as-Salaf, which means "People of the Way of the Prophet Muhammad and the Community" (Mohammed 2010, 27).

The term "Boko Haram" is a coinage combining Hausa and Arabic, Boko being a Hausa term for western education to which haram, Arabic term for forbidden, is attached. This can be translated to mean western education is forbidden, in light of the group's opposition to western education among other issues. Murtada provides a more expanded explanation of the term Boko Haram (2012, 4).

There is a sense in which the argument for Maitatsine link to Boko Haram appears persuasive. This is because both groups attack the established Muslim order. There is an external dimension to them. Both use marginalized groups, perpetrate intra-Islamic conflicts and receive alleged government support (Alao n.d. 16), as some governors and political elites are accused of providing financial support to them. However, major differences exist that raise questions to this link. Maitatsine group advocated the use of mystical powers and charms, but the leader of Boko Haram, in an interview, states that Allah condemns sihiri (magic) (Mohammed 2010, 104). Mohammed Marwa, the Maitatsine leader, claimed divine revelation that supersedes that of the prophet (Alao n.d. 16), but Boko Haram acknowledges that only Muhammad had divine revelation and must be followed.

Boko Haram is considered a political organization, in contrast to Maitatsine group. In his abstract, de Montclos argues that Boko Haram "is political because it contests Western values, challenges the secularity of the Nigerian state, and reveals the corruption of a ‘democracy’ that relies on a predatory ruling elite, the so-called ‘godfathers’” (2014, 135, 136).⁹ Moreover, Clarke believes that Maitatsine group is not fundamentalist or a product of Muslims (1988, 525). In fact, Ibrahim discloses that Maitatsine group is considered un-Islamic by Muslim scholars as well (1989, 72). One does not know of any such indictment against Boko Haram other than extremism.

Some argue that Boko Haram is more connected to Al-Qaeda (cf Crisis Group 2010, 19); however, there is no conclusive evidence to that effect. Their link to *Salafi*¹⁰ philosophy through the Muslim Brotherhood of El-Zakzaky by Murtada appears more convincing. Murtada links the founder of Boko Haram, Muhammad Yusuf, to El-Zakzaky’s Muslim Brotherhood. He discloses that it is when the group fractured that Muhammad Yusuf became one of the leaders of a fractured group. This agrees with the “split theory” mentioned above. Muhammad Yusuf then went into association with the Izala group. This group also split and Yusuf went with his group and some students until they independently formed Jama’at Ahl us-Sunnah li’-Da’wah wa’l Jihad, now known as Boko Haram (Murtada 2012, 5-6).

The Dual Influence on Boko Haram

A close examination of the philosophy and ideology of the group seems to reveal a marriage of both traditional and contemporary Salafi ideology of Ibn Taymiyyah and Maududi respectively. Onuoha also acknowledges this Salafi connection (2014, 158-191). The original name of the group appears to be rooted in the exegesis of Taymiyyah on the Ahl as-Sunnah wa al-Jama’ah (The People of the Sunna and the community). According to Ibn Taymiyyah, these are the people the prophet predicted will be one of the seventy three Islamic divisions that will arise after him. They are called Ahl as-Sunnah wa al-Jama’ah because they are the ones who will be saved. The reason is because they have no leader except the prophet and they only obey him in accordance with sura 53:3. This group, he says, will be a small minority. He sums up that “it is clear from this that the people who will be saved are the people of hadith and Sunna, who do not have any leader other than the Prophet” (Ibn Taymiyyah 2000,

⁹ This philosophy again reflects Maududian ideology to be discussed later.

¹⁰ The Salafi philosophy advocates a return to a sharia minded orthodoxy that purifies Islam from unwarranted accretion which relies only on the Qur’an and Hadith.

548-551). This probably suggests the group's abhorrence to traditional Islamic leadership and resistance to main line traditional Islam.

The rejection of secularism and demand for implementation of Shari'a some also trace back to Ibn Taymiyyah (Mohammed 2014, 14). The elevation of jihad above other religious obligations like Hajj, Umrah, Salat and fasting is also connected to his writing.¹¹ Taymiyyah argues that scholars agreed that jihad "is better than hajj and 'umrah, and better than supererogatory salah and fasting, as you find in the Qur'an and the Sunna. The Prophet, to quote a few Ahadith, said, 'The important thing is Islam (submission); its pillar is salah on which it stands, and jihad is its pinnacle'" (2000, 540-542). This probably suggests why the group considers jihad the ultimate path to its objectives.

On the other hand, the rejection of anything considered saturated with western values, western secularism or civilization, as Onuoha reports a clarification by an interim leader of the group in 2009 (2014, 160), is apparently from a different source than Taymiyyah. The agitation for contemporary Islamic state through the use of jihad is not from him as well, even if one argues the jihad link to him. These ideologies seem to exhibit a Maududian influence, as we shall see subsequently.

According to Nasr, Maududi is the first Islamic thinker to develop a "systematic political reading of Islam and a plan for social action to realize his vision" (1996, 3). Scholars also agree he introduced the modern concept of Islamic state.¹² Maududi also introduced the modern concept of din wa dawla (The unity of religion and state), and that the fulfillment of religious dictates demand the organization of a political system as per criteria of religion. It is, therefore, a religious duty to struggle for an Islamic state, just like other religious obligations (Cheema 2013, 52). Nasr further states that "his creation of a coherent Islamic ideology, articulated in terms of the elaborate organization of an Islamic state, constitutes the essential breakthrough that led to the rise of contemporary revivalism" (1996, 3). This idea probably adds impetus to examining the role of Maududi's political theory of Islam on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

The marriage of religion and politics, as we see with Boko Haram, suggests a link to Maududi rather than IbnTaymiyyah. Maududi adamantly insists that "separation of religion from politics had no place in Islam" (Nasr 1996, 39), "making politics sacred was a religious obligation” (Nasr 1996, 81), and “Islamization of politics would have to be implemented, even through coercion” (Nasr 1996, 82). Taymiyyah’s position suggests that politics and religion are interdependent and not inseparable (2000, 506).

¹¹ Maududi holds a similar view.

¹² See Chapter Four on Maududi

The use of jihad to establish Islamic states is Maududi’s ideology (Khalidi 2003, 417), and, therefore, its means of coercion. Maududi states that the aim of jihad is “to eliminate the rule of an un-Islamic system and establish in its stead an Islamic system of state rule” (1980, 22). Islam has no choice but to capture state Authority (1980, 19). The quest by Boko Haram and several Muslims across northern Nigeria to establish an Islamic state through the use of jihad, which employs coercion, appears linked to Maududi. Maududi’s political interpretation of Islam and use of jihad to establish Islamic states will be further explored later.

Furthermore, Maududi, unlike Taymiyyah, enjoins jihad against Muslim leaders who are considered un-Islamic. He states that “it is incumbent upon members of the party of Islam to carry out a revolution in the state system of the countries to which they belong” (1980, 22). Boko Haram seems to be employing this philosophy by attacking fellow Muslims and leaders considered compromisers.¹³ In fact, this confrontation with Muslim leaders and Muslims considered compromisers is a constant feature of Islamic sects across the northern region.

Contrary to the foregoing, Ibn Taymiyyah cautions against rebellion (2000, 511), and says God enjoins obedience to authority (Amir) “even if he is a black slave,” and “even if he be a black African with (hair on the) head like raisins” (2000, 514). Obedience is enjoined even when you are not given your dues. The only exception is if the ruler asks you to do something sinful (2000, 510). Obedience to the ruler is as incumbent as obedience to the pillars of Islam such as prayers, fasting, *Zakat*¹⁴ and pilgrimage (2000, 510). It is the establishment of an Islamic state that Maududi makes as obligatory as the pillars of Islam, even if it means uprooting existing leaders who are Muslims (Cheema 2013, 52).

Furthermore, Taymiyyah says the most heinous treachery is against the ruler (2000, 512) because, as the prophet said, “one who rises up against the ruler (sultan), even to the span of a hand, and dies in that state dies the death of the days of ignorance” (2000, 513). Significantly, the ruler is so crucial that he is the shadow of God on earth and as “the saying goes that sixty years under an unjust ruler is better than one night without a ruler” (2000, 503). The position of Maududi, some fundamentalists and obviously Boko Haram, do not accede to this opinion.

¹³ There are assertions that Boko Haram has killed more Muslims than Christians, but no official statistics exist to support this assertion.

¹⁴ Some refer to Zakat as alms giving, religious tax or obligation. It is an obligatory payment made annually under Islamic law on certain kinds of property or funds held by a Muslim for a period of one year. It is similar to Christian tithe. It is used for charitable and religious purposes.

Additionally, scholars have traced the anti –western rhetoric of extremist Islamic groups to Maududi. Jan argues that Maududi saw the threat to Islam as western thought (2003, 503). Among the five principles that Demant says Maududi developed is anti-Westernism (2006, 98). There is consensus that Maududi had a deep seated suspicion of westernization (Nasr 1996, 20; Khalidi 2003, 417; Moten 2003, 396). And in his 1934 essay as discussed by Wood, Maududi “laments the corrupting influences of secular Western education on Muslim youth. Corrupted secularist Muslims, Mawdudi avers, reconfigure Islam along —Christian lines” (2011, 183). Boko Haram’s dislike for Christians appears similar to Maududi’s.

In a reported interview after his capture, the Boko Haram leader was asked why he uses technological gadgets, and his response was “they are purely technological things not boko . . . and westernization is different” (Mohammed 2010, 105). This resembles what Nasr says about Maududi, that he accepts modernity, but rejects westernization (1996, 50-51), and reiterates that “Maududi wanted to also Islamize modernity” (1996, 53). Cheema concurs that fundamentalists accept modernity, but reject Westernization (2013, 55). The similarity becomes more apparent in the demands by Boko Haram for Christians to leave the north.¹⁵

It must be admitted, however, that antagonism against Christians has not been the exclusive preserve of Boko Haram. Such antagonism involved a wider spectrum of Muslims in several northern cities, even before the emergence of Boko Haram, as far back as the 1970s when radical sects began to emerge. This also coincided with the emergence of massive Christian evangelism. This antagonism increased with the clamor for the implementation of Shari’a in the north by these sects, as well as resentment against Muslim conversions to Christianity.

Fundamentalist Islam, as Maududi’s writings expose, is more opposed to proselytization. And as evident in most religious conflicts since the 1980s, Christians and non-Muslims have been subjected to attacks. Maududi’s interpretation of how non-Muslims should be treated in an Islamic state (1980, 27-28) appears implemented in attacks against Christians and non-Muslims even before the 12 states in northern Nigeria implemented Shari'a law in the 2000s (Mutada 2012, 5; Mohammed 2014, 22). The anti-proselytization war started with radical Islamic students as discussed above, and also as reiterated by Falola (1998, 3). This fundamentalist anti-proselytization war might have contributed to the emergence of conflicts. The researcher shall discuss this conversion war briefly and its possible link to Maududi's ideology.

¹⁵ As we shall see later, Maududi advocates that non-Muslims should leave the Islamic state if they refuse to accept Islam.

The Conversion War Factor

Conversion¹⁶ is grave in Islam, but more so with fundamentalist Islam. The theological and political implication of conversion might have a bearing on religious conflicts, especially in the hands of fundamentalists. The ideology of fundamentalist Islam as represented by Maududi is world Islamization (Maududi 1980, 9, 22; 1964, 64), and hindering of conversion to other religions, particularly Christianity (Maududi 1981, 32, 73). Christianity is a missionary religion too. This might create a conversion war with fundamentalist Islam. This, perhaps is what Kalu refers to as “clash of fundamentalism” (2004, 242).

Before 1982, the conversion drive of Islam was evident. The Sokoto Caliphate established the Jama'atu Nasirul Islam (JNI) – The Party or Group of the Victory of Islam. The resemblance to Maududi's Jama'at-i-islami is a food for thought. Led by Ahmadu Bello, the Premier of Northern Region then, several non-Muslims and northern chiefs were compelled to convert to Islam or lose their seats, in a bid to create a unified Islamic north (Falola (1998, 70). The Zuru Chiefdom in Kebbi state is an example of such conversion. It should also be noted that, although one of his allies said that jihad will not end until the Qur'an is buried in the Atlantic Ocean, interfaith conflicts were absent.

Unfortunately, the arrival of fundamentalist Islam in the 1970s, coinciding with the rise of massive Christian evangelism, aided the radicalization of Islam (Alao n.d., 29). Kalu agrees and states that Christian explosion is partially the explanation of the militancy in contemporary Islam (2004, 252). This Christian explosion worried the Sultan of Sokoto, Sadiq III, who promised to counter the spread of Christianity (Alao n.d., 29). This might have given Islamic fundamentalists a theological ideological push.

¹⁶ Conversion and proselytization are sometimes differentiated in theological and religious discourse. Proselytization can mean the effort to induce adoption of a particular religion, faith or belief while conversion is the actual adoption of a particular religion, faith or believe. However, conversion can be the act or the process of conversion and the term proselytization can also be used in a similar fashion, which means they can also be used interchangeably. This researcher does not deem it necessary to distinctively differentiate them in this research.

Christian evangelism, therefore, spurred reactions from Muslims, especially the youths. They felt something must be done to prevent Muslims, mainly youths, from converting to Christianity. Proselytization was considered as warfare (Falola 1998, 16). Maududi's position that conversion from Islam must be stopped is pertinent (1981, 32, 73). Alao's observation is fundamental that "while exact figures of the cases of carpet-crossing from one religion to the other in Nigeria are not available, it could seem that more Muslims have crossed to Christianity" (n.d. 35). According to Kalu, it is this blatant cross-carpeting of Muslims to Christianity that sparked the Bonnke riots in Kano (2004, 253).

Ibrahim uses Doi's analysis of conversion in Nigeria to give us a clearer perspective to this rate of conversion to Christianity. In Nigeria of 1931, professing Christians represented 6 percent of the population, Muslims 44 percent, and traditional religions 50 percent. By 1963, 35 percent of the population were identified as Christian, while Islam and traditional religions claimed 47 and 18 percent of the population respectively (1987, 78). By 2011, the Pew Research Centre reported that, for the first time, more than half of Nigeria (51%) identifies with the Christian faith. This conversion tilt towards Christianity might have made a Muslim controlled government in 1991 to insist, for the first time, that no data on religious affiliation should be collected in the national census (Hunwick 1992, 146).

Muslims and some Islamic sects have expressed similar Maududian rhetoric and demands concerning Christians and non-Muslims in an Islamic state. For example, Maududi expounds that multi-religious existence should not be allowed in an Islamic state (1981, 73-73), and non-Muslims unwilling to convert to Islam must leave the state (1981, 80-81). Some Muslims and Boko Haram have made demands for Christians to leave the Muslim north. Maududi further demands that non-Islamic ways of life (cultural and social) must be prohibited (1980, 27-28). These cultural and social practices of Christians have been targeted for attacks and have been muted as sources of conflicts with Muslims in northern Nigeria. Non-Muslim businesses and churches have been burnt by Muslims whenever these religious conflicts have occurred.

In addition, Maududi says that non-Islamic propagation and conversion from Islam is not permissible (1981, 32, 73). Earlier we saw Kalu's revelation that it was blatant cross-carpeting of Muslims to Christianity that sparked the Bonnke riots in Kano (2004, 253). Alao appears to finger the problem when he says that the effort to prevent a return to jahiliyya and protestation against profaning the Prophet's name and desecration of the Holy Qur'an are two among the four main causes of religious conflicts (n.d., 36). The contemporary or modern concept of jahiliyya is also traced to Maududi and expounded by Qutb of the Muslim Brotherhood, as we shall see.

Kane, on the other hand, advances three factors: the agitation for the reordering of political equation by educated minority Christians who feel dominated by Muslims, the rise of Christian Association of Nigeria rallying Christians to reject the dominance of Muslims in controlling power, and the fueling of Islamic radicalism by the aggressive proselytization by Pentecostals (2003, 204-205). Kane agrees with both Alao and Kalu on the issue of proselytization, and this researcher believes it might be a major cause of conflicts. The ideas expressed by Alao, Kane and Kalu have theological undertones. The way conversion is viewed is majorly that of interpretation, and in religious parlance is that of theological interpretation.

It is significant to note that Kane did not give socioeconomic deprivation prominence like other scholars, although he mentioned it. However, as mentioned above, this researcher agrees with Sanusi that there is a "complex and dialectical interplay between theological and secular materialist elements in generating religious tension in Nigeria" (2007, 184), but think the weight is on theological indoctrination over socioeconomic factors. Sanusi himself admits that "poverty and deprivation in the north are the lot of both Muslims and Christians" (2007, 183). In essence, there might be a more cogent reason behind these conflicts.

Although Maududi's interpretation and ideology will be treated in greater detail later, one more addition is significant here in exposing how it can create conversion hostility. Maududi argues that enforcement of Shari'a on all mankind is the task of jihad in which force or sword can be used (1980, 7, 9, 16-18). This position portends conflicts with non-Muslims if adopted, especially Christianity that seeks conversion of mankind to its fold also. This researcher reports a situation in Kano where the Hisbah (Shari'a implementation police) stopped a motorcycle carrying a Christian woman dressed in a short skirt as contravening Shari'a. This happened after the implementation of Shari'a in Kano state in 2001. It turned out the lady was the wife of a military officer. Altercation ensued between the military and the Hisbah group. In light of the above, it is necessary to examine the views of northern Muslims on Shari'a, since its implementation has introduced confrontation with non-Muslims.

Northern Nigerian Muslims on Shari'a: It's Relation to Conflicts

As mentioned above, some states in northern Nigeria (twelve states) introduced Shari'a, which started with Zamfara state (Mohammed 2014, 22; Sanusi 2007, 177). Agitation for implementation of Shari'a that came to fruition in the 2000s, Mohammed suggests, accelerated the pace of radicalization of Islam (2014, 22). Sanusi discredits the argument by some people that Shari'a should not be linked to religious conflicts or crises in Nigeria. He says this argument is resting on a “somewhat naïve attempt to ignore, at the very least, evidence of a strong diachronic correlation between the two.” He cites the bitter Shari'a debate that preceded the 1979 election to support his position (2007, 183).

Maududi's ideology on the need to develop an Islamic state as necessary for implementation of Shari'a is also pertinent. He even coined the term “theodemocracy” to mean divine democratic government (2011, 22). Falola attributes the agitation for an Islamic state of Nigeria to some Islamic leaders in Nigeria (1998, 16). He also acknowledges the pressure by many Islamic groups, leaders, and scholars for Nigeria to become an Islamic state. This pressure for imposition of shari'a, according to Falola, began in the late 1970s (1998, 70), again coinciding with the rise of Islamic fundamentalism as we saw above. Therefore, the “demand for Shari'a became a major religious and political issue after the mid – 1970s” (Falola 1998, 40). Interestingly, Falola relates fundamentalism to militancy (1998, 17), probably suggesting a link between Shari'a agitation and these religious conflicts.

Falola discusses the desire of northern Muslims to implement Shari'a, not only in northern states, but in the country as a whole. Muhammad's reign over the whole of pagan Arabia through the umma was probably the historical antecedent (1998, 71) which provoked conflicts with Christians and Jews. Establishing Shari'a in Nigeria is seen as a religious obligation of the northern Islamic umma through jihad. This is similar to what Cheema says Maududi's political theory of Islam has created in the minds of Muslims, which is that the creation of an Islamic state is as obligatory as the religious duty of prayer and fasting (2013, 52).

The Shari'a debate in Nigeria is documented by Christelow (2002, 194-199), Elaigwu and Galadima (2003) and Falola (1998). Muslims in northern Nigeria see Shari'a as their God given, inalienable constitutional right. Consequently, 12 states of northern Nigeria implemented Shari'a in 2001 in disregard to provisions of the constitution that Nigeria is a secular state without a state religion. This also resembles Maududi's statement that the jihadist must seize control of government and make it Islamic (1980, 19). Introduction of Shari'a generated hostility between Christians and Muslims residing in these states because it restricted their rights to freedom of worship, expression, association, eating and dressing. Again, these specific restrictions on non-Muslims when Sharia is established, are found in Maududi's ideology of running an Islamic state (1980, 18, 27-28).

Nmehielle uncovers how this unilateral implementation of Sharia contradicted the secular constitution of Nigeria, and infringed on the constitutional rights of non-Muslims. He refers to the 2002 violence in Kaduna as a result of the hosting of Miss World beauty pageant, considered to be contrary to Shari'a (Nmehielle 2004, 732; Kendhammer 2012, 9). Some Muslims blame the absence of Shari'a for moral decadence and corrupt leadership in Nigeria. Nonetheless, Kendhammer (2012) associates democracy with northern Muslims' ability to fully implement and apply Shari'a.

Conflict arose not by Sharia implementation among Muslims, but the infringement on the secular rights of other religious adherents. This coercive enforcement of Shari'a on non-Muslims is driven by jihad mentality. This enforcement of Shari'a by jihadic force on non-Muslims appears similar to Maududi's ideology (1980, 7, 9, 16-18). But implementation of jihad also results in de-Africanization and de-ethnicization of individuals, as Miles (2003) and Harnischfeger (2006) point out. This often leads to great apprehension and conflicts between people of different religions. How has all these affected Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria?

Christian-Muslim Relations in Nigeria in the Context of Global History

The foregoing discussion does raise the issue of Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria. Historically, there is a sense in which the indirect rule of the colonial system in northern Nigeria has created a lingering gap between two communities of people, a mainly Christian south and a predominantly Muslim north (Westerlund 1997, 440). The south had a more Christian missionary presence and received western education. The Islamic north, on the other hand, retained its Islamic system of education with less western or missionary inputs until much later. This might have contributed to the distrust of western education by a great number of Muslims, expressed by sects like Boko Haram today.

It is a fact that colonialists barred missionaries from entering Muslim emirates (Kalu 2004, 245), perhaps alienating the two communities further. This seemed to ensure the dominance of Islam in the north for a long period. The colonialists were paternalistic to the Muslim north in Nigeria for their administrative, political and economic benefits, and gave Muslim rulers power to control the movement of missionaries within their domains (Falola 1998, 27). Missionaries became frustrated and disillusioned that, when it came to Islamic interest, “pagan rulers were better to deal with than British government” (Walls 2002, 97). This paternalistic attitude of colonialists towards Muslims has also been reported in other parts of Africa (Hassan 2002; Levtzion and Pouwels 2000). Triand argues that this paternalism ensured Islam enjoyed the greatest expansion in French speaking Africa (2000, 169).

The foregoing seems to have laid the foundation for Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria. However, after colonialism, there was relative calm and peace, even if it was calm before the storm. It is tenable to posit that there was mistrust and distrust between the two faiths, based on the circumstances of their historical relationship discussed above. This distrust increased in the 1970s as tensions swelled by the growth of fundamentalism and anti-Christian feelings. Then violence came in the 1980s, which has persisted until the present.

Note that Falola reports some skirmishes earlier than the 1980s. He reports a skirmish between Muslim and Christian students at Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria in 1978. He adds that the origin of this crisis goes much further back than 1978 (1998, 3, 7). However, it is accepted that conflicts with significant ramifications occurred from the 1980s. Griswold (2010), Ludwig (2008), and Kilani (2000) give some helpful ideas and details about Christian-Muslim relations in Nigeria, especially in the north partly discussed above.

Historically, the above situation is not radically different from the fourteen centuries of Christian-Muslim relations globally. It has also been characterized by distrust and mistrust with violence on both sides (Goddard 2000; Thomas 2007).

People have been killed and made fugitives (Grisworld 2010). The relationship was all about enmity, hostility and prejudice, rather than understanding and friendliness (Shahib 2004, 65). The reasons for this are doctrinal, leadership failure to curb jihad or Crusade, and the missionary nature of both religions (Shahib 2004, 66). The missionary nature of both religions has been discussed above. Another factor is the perceived alliance between Christianity and colonialism in the minds of Muslims (Shahib 2004, 67), in spite of the fact that Islam has greatly benefitted from alliance with colonialism, as indicated above.

In Africa, Kukah argues that Christian-Muslim relations have been shaped by two factors: poverty and historical imbalances that existed between the treatments meted on both religious adherents in countries where they are either in the minority or majority (2007). He states that Christian minorities are not treated well in Muslim dominated territories, as against the treatment minority Muslims receive in Christian dominated countries (2007, 157). Notwithstanding the above, there have been attempts at dialogue between the two religions in many countries, with varying results. Works like Goddard (2000), Talal (2000), Shahib (2004), Thomas (2007), Kateregga and Shenk (1985), and Ellingwood (2008) capture these efforts. Overall, the history of relations between these two religions has been tricky, turbulent and sometimes treacherous.¹⁷ It is largely the same situation in northern Nigeria. The entire discussion above raises the fundamental question, why is there violence in religion?

This fundamental question, therefore, raises the need to discuss the relationship between religion and conflict/violence, because northern Nigeria has experienced many conflicts related to religion since the 1980s between Muslims and non-Muslims. Indeed, this is not only a northern Nigerian phenomenon, but it has become a common occurrence globally in recent times. The discussion of the relationship between religion and conflicts is necessary because this research is examining the relationship between Maududi's political interpretation of Islam and these religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

¹⁷ Other significant and helpful works on Christian-Muslim relations in history are Karsh (2007), Ramachandra (1999), Haynes (1996), Reisacher ed. (2012), Woodberry ed. (1989), Armstrong (2006), Armour, Sr. (2002), Jemieson (2006), Braswell (1996), Goddard (2000), Jenkinson (2002), Lewis (2000), O'Shea (2006), Wheatcroft (2003), and Azumah (2001).

Religion and Conflicts

Religious conflicts have attracted the attention of sociologists, psychologists, political scientists and anthropologists today. Decades ago there have been predictions that secularization will relegate religion, separate it from the secular sphere and make it a private affair. This theory has been linked to theorists like Karl Max, John Stuart Mill, Emile Durkheim, Max Weber, and Sigmund Freud (Clarke 2005, 227). As late as the 1960s, social scientists were asked to consider religion as a spent force (Bruce 2005, 5). However, recent developments indicate a global revival of religion as one of the strongest forces. Secularization has not diminished the power of religious ideologies. In most global centers, religion is the agenda of discourse in both society and legislation. The global gay debate is a case in point. Religion appears to have more global influence today than has ever been anticipated.

Most people worry about the relationship between religion and conflicts or violence, especially that most conflicts in the world today are religious or related to religion. Evidently, scholars have extended the link between religion and violence back to the early history of religious practices. The 1915 work of Durkheim, The Elementary Forms of Religious Life (1995), is a classical example. Other works will be referred to below. It is also factual that different religions have symbols of violence: the sword of Islam, the cross of Christianity and the martial art tradition of Taoism and Buddhism to mention but a few. Furthermore, history bequeaths evidence of the trail of blood left behind by various religious traditions, and how religion and violence have been interwoven (Hall 2001, 1).

This is not to say conflicts and violence are the exclusive preserve of religion. Violent conflicts are common occurrences in societies, homes, work places, and nations. Violence pervades all spheres of life. It is even suggested that violence is more common with men (Robbins, Monahan, and Silver 2003, 561), or is social response to difficult or unfavorable conditions (Sanchez R. 2006, 178-182). Some view violence as survival instinct, something that is learned, and might occur as a result of provocation, self defense or denial of rights. Violence uses force, which may include killing (Sajid 2006, 33). In fact, Girard considers violence as a universal feature of the human condition (Girard 1989, 8; Sani 2006, 28). Still, why are religions associated with violence in spite of their moral teachings on peace, and in spite of the fact that religion is a source of peace and reconciliation (Clarke 2005, 233)?

Is Religion Intrinsically Violent?

This question is as complex to answer as defining violence or religious violence (Selengut 2003, 9). There is also controversy over religion in human conflicts (Atran and Ginges 2012, 855). It is a fact of history that sacred or religious texts have been used to justify violence for religious purposes. Thus, past contemporary scholars have made attempts at understanding why violence is connected to religion, yet answers are still elusive to this day. Scholars differ on the connection between violence and religion. Some see religion as the antithesis of violence (Selengut 2003, 1) and brings peace (Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno 2004, 291), while others link violence to religion.¹⁸ No doubt religion has been used to initiate peace and bring social justice. Indeed, sacred texts are found that forbid and condemn violence, and these texts have been undeniably used to broker peace and reconciliation. Nevertheless, frequent and constant involvement of religion in violence raises the question of why religious communities engage in war and violent conflicts in spite of their scriptures demanding the pursuit of peace. Consequently, religion has become the opium that arouses the masses, rather than the opium of the masses that makes them meek.

At this point, it does not appear tenable to claim religion is intrinsically violent, yet its link to violence cannot be denied either. This is the dilemma one encounters in grappling with the relationship between religion and violence. After several studies to see if violence in religion is intrinsic (Hall 2001, 7), some do observe that the link between religion and violence can be established. This alleged link will be the concern in this discourse.

Durkheim postulates the sacralization process of religion in his work of 1915 (1995). His sacralization theory seems to link religion to violence. Durkheim's argument is that the sacred is the essence of religion by defining religion as "a unified system of beliefs and practices relative to sacred things, that is to say, things set apart and forbidden – beliefs and practices which unite into one single moral community called a church, all those who adhere to them" (1995, 44). The term church is merely conveying the idea of collectivity. The sacralization process is one in which a community of believers “affirms both their idealized vision of society and their own social relations through ritual action in relation to positive or negative cults of the sacred” (Hall 2001, 8). A significant term in this statement is “idealized.” The crux of Durkheim’s discourse is that religious faith and commitment are based on the sacred, and central to religious beliefs and practices, which can include violence.

¹⁸ These scholars include Durkheim (1995); Girard (1989); Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno (2004); Geertz (1973); Silberman (2005); Selengut (2003).

Marshall helps us to understand the power of the sacred and what sacredness means and states that Sacredness is conceptualized herein as a perceived property of some object or class of objects. The fact that “[a] rock, a tree, a spring . . . in a word, anything, can be sacred” (Durkheim 1995:35; Eliade 1957) tells us that it is not an inherent or even objective property of the objects perceived to possess it. It is instead a projection, superimposed upon an object by some observer(s), and as such, a property of those observers rather than of the objects themselves (2010, 64).

This means even violence or its symbols in religion can be made sacred since basically “anything” can be sacred. Marshall further states that the observable properties of the sacred objects take up different or new meaning, and contrary to objective reason, exercise influence over behavior. Thus, the sacred becomes an absolute that “demands attention, evokes strong feelings, and occupies a unique place in the perceiver’s thought” (2010, 65). As will be seen, Geertz refers to these sacred objects as sacred symbols, and argues there is a relationship between symbols and meaning. If we further consider Durkheim’s argument of believers idealizing their vision of society and social relations through ritual action in relation to positive or negative cults of the sacred, it suggests that rituals introduce violence in religion. What is not explicit is how ritual actions became part of the sacred.

Girard’s Theory of Violence in Religion

Girard’s theory of acquisitive mimesis in his 1972 work (1989) seems to provide the link as to how actions become part of the sacred. Girard and Durkheim seem to agree about the sacred being the essence of religion, but Girard furthers the argument that “violence is the heart and the secret soul of the sacred” (1989, 31) through discussing the origin of rituals. Girard rejects the mythical origin of rituals for the simple reason that rituals take place in the realm of humans and so we must understand rituals in human terms (1989, 90). This is a plausible argument since human actions need to be understood in human contexts.

Girard's acquisitive mimesis needs to be discussed to understand his origin of ritual and ritual of sacrifice. In spite of the controversy around it, it does make sense in light of noticeable human characteristics and behavior. The theory of acquisitive mimesis suggests that much of human behavior is mimetic (an all encompassing expression of imitation). Imitation is rooted in human desire for acquisition and appropriation, which creates rivalry and then conflicts.

Mimetic desire (a deep rooted tendency in human beings to imitate the desires of others) produces mimetic rivalry and mimetic conflict. When two people desire the same object, it will inevitably lead to conflict. However, this is not limited to competition for finite resources. Even in unlimited resources the desire for a rival's object cannot be satisfied with a perfect equivalent. This is why Girard questions the sufficiency of aggression (conflicts occur as a result of aggression) or scarcity models (conflicts occur as a result of deprivation) as sources of conflicts. He finds support in this research, as this research questions the argument that scarce resources or deprivation is sufficient to cause religious conflicts. The aggression and scarcity models appear sufficient only in bringing out the various types of conflicts experienced in societies.

The thrust of Girard's idea is, since mimetic desire is basic to human beings, mimetic rivalry is inevitable and spreads rapidly where there is no system of restraint. Where restraint is absent, mimetic conflicts multiply until it threatens destruction of the entire society in fits of violence.¹⁹ This triggers a victimizing mechanism, where someone with non-conformist ideas attracts the attention of several others who gang up against him. Then others are drawn to join by the mimesis of their violence, as he argues, that "when unappeased, violence seeks and always finds a surrogate victim" (1989, 2). In essence, protracted violence leads to search for a scapegoat. Thus, originating the concept of rituals. Girard sums up that "all religious rituals spring from the surrogate victim and all the great institutions of mankind, both secular and religious, spring from ritual . . . It could hardly be otherwise, for the working basis of human thought, the process of 'symbolization' is rooted in surrogate victim" (1989, 306). This is Girard's effort to justify his theory of "violence is the heart and secret soul of the sacred" (1989, 31).

¹⁹ Wiktorowicz seems to reason like Girard that the development of the jihadi thought is characterized by the erosion of critical checks used to limit warfare and violence in classical Islam (2005, 94). Is the targeting of Christians by fundamentalists in a way confirming Girard's victimizing Mechanism?

Girard then argues that the ritual of sacrifice is introduced to stem the circle of mimetic conflicts. Sacrifice is the attempt to suppress internal violence of dissensions, rivalries, jealousies, and quarrels within the community, held in check by fixed laws (1989, 8, 9). And one thinks, by extension, there is an outward implication as well. These fixed laws establish rituals and are elevated to the level of sacredness. When these sacred laws are violated, in some cases, violence ensues as a way of appeasement or retribution, especially if violated by an outsider.

Even so, Girard says, sacrifice is introduced to restore community harmony. The objective of ritual is proper reenactment of the surrogate-victim mechanism to exclude community violence (1989, 92, 9, 14). Essentially, this means that religion engages in both positive and negative violence. This is how Girard links violence to religion. This dual role of religion in violence is acknowledged by scholars like Silberman (2005, 530).

Girard's Theory of Violence in Religion in Christian Thought

Harmerton-Kelly accepts Girard's theory of acquisitive mimesis and that violence is the heart and secret soul of religion. He agrees that religion structures the human society and culture by means of violence, and mimetic desire is the starting point. He argues that it is the mimicking of God's desire that made Eve to desire the only prohibited tree in the Genesis story, thereby becoming rivals with God. Since God withheld it, it must be what he desired. This illusion of divine desire infected human desire and made us rivals to our creator, and it introduced chaos.

Chaos continued and is compounded because of its contagious nature until community became impossible to maintain. And at that moment of crisis, "The mimetic system of desire, being self-regulating and self-correcting, automatically threw out a stabilizer, the surrogate victim. The war of all-against-all suddenly became the war of all-against-one" (Harmerton-Kelly 2004, 38). The limitation of Harmerton-Kelly's argument is that it is majorly Christian, and he assumes the position that all religions accept the biblical account of how religion began. Non-Christian scholars might disagree with him.

Notwithstanding the limitation of Harmerton-Kelly's argument, he brings out a sense in which Girard's position is plausible. Desire, imitation, and rivalry are part of human behavior and existence as we experience it. Ritual is also a common feature of human institutions. Even a repetitive ritual of activity is a form of maintaining social and existential harmony. Besides, the process of symbolization is undeniably a human thought process and of religious practice as well. However, the concept of surrogate victim is limited. Surrogate victim might not be identified in all conflicts, and it is not every human rivalry that leads to conflicts.

Nonetheless, there appears to be further justification for aspects of Girard's mimetic theory, especially considering conversion in generating conflicts between religions. The case in northern Nigeria, as discussed above, is a case in point. The conversion war resembles mimetic rivalry, as Islam and Christianity pursue the same object, converts. Simmel observes that competition among religions is a form of conflict, as both parties seek the same prize (1955, 57). Overall, Girard's mimetic desire does not seem to differentiate between rivalry and healthy competition, of which human beings are evidentially capable.

Similarly, the city to city spread of violence when religious conflicts occur and retaliatory violence between Muslims and Christians resembles mimetic conflicts. Again, one may not agree that violence is the heart and secret soul of religion, by the simple fact that several religions generally abhor violence and conflicts, but Girard seems right that there is something in religion that can give birth to both positive and negative violence.

Equally, if we accept Durkheim's model of the sacralization process of religion and that anything can be made sacred (Marshall, 2010, 64), then it is possible for religion to make violence sacred. It will then be easy to accept the argument without necessarily accepting that violence is the heart and secret soul of the sacred. Therefore, if violence is sacred, it becomes a sacred duty in that religion. This duty will then be performed religiously without question as it is seen as absolute. Such will then intertwine violence with religion and make it difficult to separate that religion from violent conflicts.

This potential inseparability of violence from religion might have made Girard see violence as the secret heart and soul of the sacred. Since the sacred is considered as contagious (Harmerton-Kelly 2004, 38; Marshall 2010, 66). Its contagiousness agrees with Girard's acquisitive mimesis. This might give insight as to how and why violence can be embedded in religion. In this context fighting, war and martyrdom can be elevated to the realm of sacred duties. Propagation and defense of one's faith through violence and vengeance assume sacred significance.

Religious Symbols and Violence

The researcher has acknowledged above that religions have symbols and some of these can be violence symbols. These symbols are often imparted sacredness. Religious symbols are often held in awe and revered by followers. Peterson analyzes Geertz that religion through its sacred symbols shape the way life is perceived and motivates action and behavior (2001, 9). Complimenting Marshall's position that the sacred "demands attention, evokes strong feelings, and occupies a unique place in the perceiver's thought" (2010, 65), Geertz reiterates that sacred symbols demand devotion and enforces emotional commitment (1973, 126) because meanings can only be stored in symbols (1973, 127).

Thus, sacred symbols motivate action and behavior because, "it is a cluster of sacred symbols, woven into some sort of ordered whole, which makes up a religious system" (Geertz 1973, 129). Religious systems, through their symbols, influence behavior and actions, including violent behavior, through the meaning they provide. Sanni agrees that "the prospects for violence are not always fuelled by purely legalistic or doctrinal matters, issues relating to ethics and symbolism sometimes do" (2006, 31). However, some might argue that it is the misuse of symbols and their wrong interpretations that lead to violence because, as discussed above, most religions teach the pursuit of peace. But despite the pursuit of peace, these religions use violence symbols, language or actual violence.

Furthermore, if symbols influence behavior and action, it means symbols shape ideas. Therefore, there is a relationship between symbols and ideology. Thus, it will be tenable to say every religious ideology is shaped by its symbols. Logically, a relationship can be established between ideology and violence. Simply, symbols shape ideology; ideology shapes violence if violence symbols are incorporated into the ideology. Equally, it also means symbols shape worldview. If violence symbols inhabit a religious worldview, violence becomes latent in that religious worldview. Consequently, that religion can generate violent behavior, and might become a source of violence.

Moreover, Geertz claims that religious worldview shapes total social behavior (1993, 89-90). Peterson affirms that religion, as orienting worldview through cognitive processes, guides individuals and communities in normative decision making and action (2001, 6). Symbols are cognitive. Hence Silberman's theory is sound that religion facilitates violent activism when internalized, because it can facilitate prejudice through emphasizing the “otherness” of those who belong to other religions (2005, 533). Galtung supports further that religious symbols, such as stars, crosses, and crescents, flags, anthems, and the like, promote and legitimate cultural violence (1990, 291). This suggests he views religion as culture, or embedded in culture.

The beheading of a Christian in Kano for allegedly desecrating the Qur’an (Falola 1998, 4) seems to support Galtung’s argument that symbols promote and legitimate cultural violence, but he cautions that this does not mean that entire cultures are violent. Thus, Hepburn’s caution is pertinent that even in cultures where a quick resort to combat is seen as daring, courage or defense, there is a need to examine the transactions that occur between the participants prior to committing violence (1973, 420). Symbols do not take away human rationality. Violence has been rejected by some, despite religious justification for it. Nonetheless, religion as a unique meaning system (Silberman 2005, 530) functions as a lens through which reality is perceived and interpreted (McIntosh 1995). Sometimes reality is interpreted in violent behavior, if the mechanism of restraint (Girard 1989, 2) or critical check (Wicktorowicz 2005, 94) is absent. This is why religion has accounted for more wars, killings, and perpetuation of evil than any other institution in history (Silberman 2005, 529).

In conclusion, despite this deduced link between religion and violence, there is still need for caution. Hall enlightens us that studies have shown that “violence will take different forms according to the circumstances of its expression” (2001, 9). Thus, it might not be helpful to embrace a single general theory about the link between violence and religion. Religious violence can be “embedded in moments of history and structures of culture” (2001, 9). Hence, it is, probably, more helpful to use context in defining violence. Nevertheless, it is sustainable to argue an ideological link between religion and violence. There is, therefore, social and academic relevance to examine the impact of Maududi’s ideological interpretation of Islam, especially his political theory of Islam, on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. However, the researcher cannot end this chapter without attempting a definition of violence.

Violence Defined

The aim here is not to rehash different definitions or provide a water tight definition, but to highlight how complex it is to define violence, as well as attempt to develop a working definition for violence relevant to this study. There is a sense in which definitions of violence are all working definitions since, as Hall argues, “Theories of violence and religion do not yield any obvious grand synthetic model” (2005, 12). Moreover, it is notorious that definitions only establish something in themselves if carefully constructed to “provide useful orientation, or reorientation, of thought” (Geertz 1973, 90).

Hall explains how difficult and complex it is to define violence, and there is no scholarly consensus on what constitutes violence. Conventional definitions center on the use of physical force to cause injury to persons, and in some cases damage properties. In his view, these definitions don’t hold up to objective or cultural considerations, since even intentional practices or non-forceful activities can be violent or cause injury, for example, use of poison gas or chemical weapons. This challenge has led some authors to try and formulate culturally neutral definitions (2001, 3-5). One of such definitions is Jackman’s definition of violence as “actions that inflict, threaten, or cause injury” (cited in Hall 2001, 443).

Sanni analyzes several definitions and their weaknesses and states: “There is hardly any single, all-embracing definition of violence,” and different situations can influence violence or how violence is defined (2006, 27). Considering context, circumstances and human experience in defining violence is pertinent. Additionally, different theories have been developed to understand why and how violence occurs, and the behavior of perpetrators and victims (Hall 2001, 6-7). These theories indicate that the causes of violence are complex and occur at different levels. Even hot temperatures have been associated with increased aggressive behavior (Anderson 2001). Attention will be focused on theories that examine the role of ideology in mobilizing and legitimizing collective violence. Religion has the capacity, via its ideology, to sanctify collective violence by creating a sense of divine destiny through building solidarity among groups (Hall 2001, 7). This sense of divine destiny seems to be behind the sense of divine obligation expressed by religious groups perpetrating violence.

Furthermore, scholars have not only attempted to define violence, but also studied violence in terms of its types and participants. Galtung identifies three types of violence: direct, structural and cultural violence (1990), while de la Roche classifies violence in terms of participants: individual, collective and national (1996). Studies have also been conducted to determine why people participate in violence. One such approach is the social ecological method. The study of violence through social ecological method uses four levels. It examines biological or personal factors, relationships, community context, and broad social factors. A good example is Umberson, Williams, and Anderson (2002). Others consider sources of violence. Clarke, for example, discusses fundamentalism, secular ideologies and paganism as sources of violence, in light of the wars and genocides that have occurred in recent times (2005, 229-233).

In view of the foregoing, it seems more relevant to define violence in terms of context as suggested above. Context provides specificity to the kind of violence taking place and can be defined in terms of its peculiarity. In the northern Nigerian context, we saw that interreligious conflicts and violence emerged in relation to the arrival and growth of religious fundamentalist ideologies. Bearing this context in mind, violence is contextually defined as all actions motivated by religious ideology that inflict, threaten, or cause injury either physically (this includes destruction of properties) or psychologically.

Summary

In this chapter the researcher discussed the arrival of Islam through Kanem Bornu Empire between the 11th and 12th Centuries, and its spread through the 19th Century Usman Danfodio jihad to become predominant in northern Nigeria, and its influence beyond the north. It emerged that religious conflicts began with intra-religious conflicts, but gave way to interreligious conflicts in the 1980s. This is linked to the arrival and growth of fundamentalist Islamic sects in the 1970s. The research is exploring the role of Maududi's Islamic interpretation, especially his political theory of Islam, on these religious conflicts.

Consequently, the researcher discussed Boko Haram and indicated that there are traces of Maududian ideology in the philosophy of the Boko Haram movement. In addition, the researcher highlighted the anti-proselytization rhetoric of Maududi and its similarity to the anti-proselytization rhetoric of Muslims in northern Nigeria, with its perceived relations to the conversion conflicts between Christianity and Islam in northern Nigeria. Also discussed are the agitations for, and the eventual introduction and implementation of, Shari'a in 12 out of the 19 states of northern Nigeria, which appears similar to Maududi's stipulated path to achieving an Islamic state. This situation led to the examination of how Muslims in northern Nigeria view Shari'a and its relationship to religious conflicts. Also discussed is how all the above relates to Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria and in the context of history.

The chapter ended with an examination of what is the relationship between religion and violence, and posits that although we cannot conclude that religions are intrinsically violent, there is a link between religion and violence, especially through the ideology infused into the worldview of a particular religion. A contextual definition of violence was finally proffered. In the next chapter the researcher will discuss theology, law, interpretation and jihad in Islam.

CHAPTER THREE
THEOLOGY, LAW, INTERPRETATION AND
JIHAD IN ISLAM

Introduction

In the previous chapter, the researcher gave a historical background of the context of the study. This study desires to examine the influence of theology on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, as opposed to the socio-economic and political influences often adduced. Essentially, it is to examine Maududi's Islamic interpretation focusing on his political theory of Islam, its relationship to rising religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, especially in Kano and Kaduna states, and its consequences on Christian-Muslim relations.

Consequently, there is need to review, briefly, the history of theology, law and interpretation in Islam. Understanding issues that relate to Islamic Shari'a and jurisprudence will provide the framework within which to understand Maududi's theological or Islamic interpretation, and also unveil that Islamic interpreters like Maududi are not unusual in the history of Islamic interpretation and jurisprudence. Indeed, the established process of Islamic legal reasoning, as we shall see, encourages the emergence of interpreters like Maududi. This will establish context and provide a foundational perspective for the study. For further context, the researcher will discuss the concept of jihad and violence in the Qur'an, exegete a few Qur'anic texts to provide contrast to Maududi's interpretation, delineate umma and apostasy as traditional sources of violence, and examine jihad as a source of culture change.

Theology, Law, and Interpretation in Islam

Dialectics exist about the beginning of Islamic theology and law. Schacht suggests that the origin of Islamic²⁰ jurisprudence lies in the practice of the late Ummayyad period (1950, 1). He argues that the origin of Islamic law lay outside the confines of religion, but was later incorporated into it (1950, v).²¹ Hourani argues the incorporation of philosophy in Islamic theology at a later time in its development (1985, 6-14). Goldziher agrees with Schacht about primordial inputs in Islamic law (1981, 38-39). However, Dutton differs by arguing that the origin of Islamic law is the Qur'an and Sunna (1999, 157-167). Goldziher suggests that Islamic law as it relates to public needs began immediately after the demise of the prophet (1981, 33). Thomas then asserts that by the beginning of the 10th century, Islamic theology had achieved a level of maturity, which made it versatile in interpreting how God and the world existed and related to one another (2008, 1). These assertions point to the relationship between theology and law in Islam.

²⁰ Schacht used the term Muhammadan, a term no longer acceptable and considered pejorative by Muslims.

These arguments notwithstanding, Muslims generally consider law as the revealed will of God (Waines 1995, 63; Bonner 2006, 23), preceding and not preceded by the historical Islamic state (Coulson 1964, 1).²² Rahman states that the Muslim conception of law lies in the idea that “law is inherently and essentially religious,” and must have its basis in divine revelation: the Qur'an (1979, 68). In other words, theology precedes Islamic law as it is known today. Goldziher might be right in arguing that the law came later. This revealed will of God does not negate the discovery and formulation of divine law as a process of growth. And this is essentially the elaboration and analysis of Shari'a law and not of a historical process, although Islamic legal law has a history and it is an evolving legal system (Coulson 1964, 2, 4). And compositely, “the law, as concrete expression of Allah's will and guidance, is therefore central to the individual and collective Muslim identity” (Waines 1995, 63).

It is argued that Islamic law, indeed theology, is made up of two main sources: the Qur'an and Sunna. Dutton quoted Malik's²³ declaration of the prophet which says, “I have left among you two things, and as long as you hold fast to them you will not go astray: the Book of Allah and the Sunna of His Prophet” (1999, 157). Rippin suggests that the focal point of the law in Sunni Islam is the Sunna because it provides the picture of the perfect way of life for the individual Muslim to follow (2005, 89). Nonetheless, these sources acknowledge the theological origin of Islamic law. Indeed, Bonner posits that the Qur'an is the first source for the divine law of Islam (2006, 23).

²¹ For a more detailed discourse on the non-religious origin of Islamic law, Schacht's chapter two in An Introduction to Islamic law (1982) is very helpful.

²² The Islamic state here differs from Maududi's concept of it and refers mainly to the establishment of the Caliphate.

²³ This is Malik ibn Anas al-Asbahi who gave the Maliki School of Islamic Law its name.

Schacht expatiates that Islamic law as developed by Muslim jurists uses four principles or sources, which are the Qur'an, Sunna, consensus, and analogy (1950, 1; also Mohammad 1985, 384).²⁴

It is important to note that the Shi'a sect rejects analogy and consensus as legal sources²⁵ because "they regard the Imam as the supreme legal interpreter and authority." However, in his absence qualified religious leaders can represent him in interpreting the law, which is binding on the community until the Imam returns as the Mahdi [the guided one] (Esposito 1998, 85). Schacht further stresses that Islamic law is the epitome of Islamic thought and "it is impossible to understand Islam without understanding Islamic law" (1982, 1).

This is probably so because it is impossible to understand Islamic law and its interpretation without theology. Theology is the basis of Islamic law, as Goldziher argues that "the growth of a dogmatic theology in Islam took place along with growth of speculation about the religious law" (1981, 68). When needs arose in the community, transmitted traditions (Sunna) were used to interpret the Qur'an. Muslim theologians developed a science of sifting to establish authentic Sunna (also hadiths) such that no ritual, theology or jurisprudence is without a supporting Hadith or group of hadiths (Goldziher 1981, 39). These interpretations provide legal guidance for actions and behavior in the Islamic community.²⁶

At the beginning of Islamic theology and law, especially during the Abbasid period,²⁷ geography played a major influence concerning doctrine and interpretation. It is this period which saw allegiance to an individual master (Schacht 1982, 57). Shafi'i acknowledges this by saying that "every capital of the Muslims is a seat of learning whose people follow the opinion of one of their countrymen in most of his teachings" (as cited in Schacht 1950, 7). This reported tradition of allegiance to an individual master holds significance to this study as we examine the influence of Maududi.

²⁴ The following works elucidate more on these four sources of Islamic law and their relationships: they are Burton (1990, 9-17); Esposito (1998, 78-84); Rahman (1979, 68-79); Waines (1995, 74-88); Kamali (1991), Ripin (2005, 93-95) and Hallaq (2009, 16-27).

²⁵ The Shi'a and the Kharijite minorities, however, equally accept the "primacy and immutability" (Waines 1995, 64) of Shari'a in spite of the fact that they differ from the Sunnis in its method of understanding Allah's will.

²⁶ The chapter on Development of Law in Goldziher (1981) is important in understanding the relationship between theology and law in Islam.

²⁷ It should be remembered that the Abbasid period saw the rise of the schools of law (we can easily refer to them as schools of theology) and also saw the supposed closure of ijtihad-independent reasoning (Schacht 1982, 69).

However, to Muslims all over the Islamic world, the Qur'an is the foundation and basis for Islamic theology and law, fleshed by Sunna and later ijtihad (Dutton 1999, 157). For a Muslim, "the Koran contains the supreme knowledge accessible to humankind, the ultimate, final truth, for it contains God's own words" (Nagel 2000, 1). This is why the Qur'an is sacred and cannot be desecrated by a non-Muslim in some areas. For example, in 1994, a mob of Muslims beheaded a Christian in Kano. He was alleged to have used a sheet of paper containing Arabic writing, thought to be from the Qur'an, as toilet paper (Falola 1998, 4).

The ultimate source of guidance for law and religious life is the Qur'an. Dutton cites Powers as revealing the importance of the Qur'an in Islamic law that "anyone who wants to shed light on the origins of Islamic positive law ought to begin with the Qur'anic legislation in the field of family law, inheritance, or ritual" (1999, 159). Allegiance to the Qur'an is total and final. All believers are required to obey it fully and completely as the final word of God and the only source and foundation for any norm of law (Hassan 1982, 65). These norms, or God's commandments regarding every aspect of human existence, are called the Shari'a. The Shari'a covers two broad areas of relationships: ibadat-the relationship between Allah and mankind [man's ritual obligations], and mu'amalat -the relationship between human beings [conduct between members of the society] (Waines 1995, 65, 67).

The prophet, when alive, provided theology, laws and their interpretations. Followers simply obeyed the revelations (Qur'an) and asked questions when in doubt (Esposito 1998, 75). The prophet answered them in three ways: by waiting for a revelation, use of authority given to him by Allah, or accepting the opinions of his close companions (Siddiqi n.d.). After the Prophet's demise, the Caliphate was established under the rule of the Caliphs.²⁸ With the Qur'an and consultations, they became the final authority in dispensing judgment in all matters of existence within the Caliphate, and their interpretation was final.

Emergence of Schools of Law and Development of Shari'a

After the demise of the Caliphs, the Islamic dynasties emerged. Subsequently, the title of Caliph became defunct, especially after the collapse of the last dynasty: the ²⁸ There were four Caliphs after Muhammad. They are Abu Bakr, Umar ibn Al-Khattab, Uthman ibn Affan and Ali ibn Abu Talib.

Ottoman dynasty.²⁹The dynastic rulers lacked religious authority as the guided Caliphs and they were seen to deviate from the truth. Jurists and scholars avoided these dynastic rulers and began teaching separately (Siddiqi n. d.; Esposito 1998, 75-76). As the Islamic community expanded and with no central authority, various schools of thought emerged on how the Qur'an and the Hadith should be interpreted. Four main Islamic schools of thought emerged during the Abbasid period referred to as schools of Islamic law today (Esposito 1998, 76). These schools referred to as madhhab (singular -madhabib) are all of Sunni origin with Sunni understanding of Shari'a.

These schools of law are the Hanafi, Maliki, Shafi'i, and Hanbali³⁰ schools of law (also referred to as schools of Fiqh or interpretation). Fiqh (knowledge or literally understanding) refers to Islamic jurisprudence today. Although these schools are named after their supposed founders, based on historical data, Hallaq argues that they, in reality, are not founders as such. He argues that the image of founding fathers was only essential for each school to construct an axis of authority and the image of founder is a later day creation (2004, x). Rippin seems to agree with this position (2005, 90).

Presently, these schools of law are dominant in different parts of the Islamic world: Hanbali in Saudi Arabia; Shafi'i in East Africa, southern Arabia and Southeast Asia; Maliki in North, Central, and West Africa; and Hanafi in the Arab Middle east and South Asia (Esposito 1998, 85). Although there are differences in how each school interprets Islamic law, one will agree with Rippin that the differences between these groups should not be exaggerated (2005, 91) especially in the context of the unification work of Shafi'i (2005, 89, 91; Rahman 1979, 76). The fact that later Sunni scholars view the four preeminent figures as forming an unbroken chain (Waines 1995, 71), gives added credibility to this argument.

The ensuing chaotic juristic controversies following the arbitrary use of ijma and qiyas to develop laws necessitated Shafi'i's unification work. Qiyas is considered as analogical reasoning or deduction. This is the application of a ruling to another matter of similarity. Ijma is the consensus of jurists on matters silent in the Qur'an and Sunna. The view of Rahman is that Sunna and ijma, although distinct, pass into one another through the inalienable bridge of qiyas (1979, 75).³¹ Another term important to explain here is ijtihad. *Ijtihad*³² is regarded as the disciplined (mental effort) independent reasoning and verdict of jurists applicable to matters where no precedent is set by ijma or Qiyas (Elaigwu and Galadima 2003, 124; Rahman 1979, 71-74; Waines 1995, 79-86).

²⁹ There were four dynasties (some refer to them as Caliphates) that ruled the Islamic umma after the Caliphs, which are Umayyads, Abbasids, Fatimids and the Ottomans.

³⁰ Schacht (1950), The origin of Muhammadan jurisprudence is significant in understanding the history and traditions of these schools of law especially chapter four as well as his chapter nine in An introduction to Islamic law (1982). And for discussion on these schools of law, their formation and their masters consult Waines (1995, 65-71); Hallaq (2009, 31-37); Rahman (1979, 81-83); Esposito (1998, 84-85) and Rippin (2005, 90-93).

Kamali says ijtihad may be defined as a “creative but disciplined and comprehensive intellectual effort to derive juridical rulings on given issues from the sources of the Shariah in the context of the prevailing circumstances of the Muslim society” (2002, 623). The innovative addition of creative thinking and prevailing circumstances of the Muslim society introduces unconventional freedom and constant necessity for ijtihad. This captures Islam's legitimate attempt at keeping pace with the reality of social change, emphasizing the continuous need for ijtihad in contemporary Muslim societies and ensuring that independent interpreters will constantly emerge. Ijtihad provided people like Maududi the latitude for innovative independent interpretation of Islam.

The use of ijma and qiyas created a rift between the Malikis based in Medina and the Hanafis in Kufa, the present day Iraq (Esposito 1998, 77; Rahman 1979, 71-72; Rippin 2005, 91). The Malikis were liberal³³ (Rippin 2005, 91) and had strong devotion to traditions of the Prophet for legal guidance (Waines 1995, 67), and so were conservative for ijma. Where differences emerged, the consensus of Medina remained authoritative. The Hanafis, on the other hand, were conservative as they relied on jurists' opinions and local laws (Esposito 1998, 77), and were liberal for qiyas.³⁴ Rippin suggests that the Hanafis were conservative probably because they had close contact with Jewish laws (2005, 91).

Shafi'i then developed a common methodology for all the schools of laws. He systematized his predecessors' procedure for legal reasoning to reduce conflicting ³¹ Rahman provides insight into the dialectics that ensued in the establishment of qiyas, ijma and ijtihad as sources of Shari'a (1979, 75-79).

³² It is also important to note that ijtihad is intellectual exertion to infer rules of Shari'a; it involves personal reasoning and occurs in variety of forms. Kamali's chapter on ijtihad is of great importance in understanding all aspects of ijtihad (1991, 315-338).

³³ The liberality of the Malikis was a later development. Based in Medina, they were initially traditionalists.

³⁴ The Malikis were referred to as Ahl al-Hadith and the Hanafis were referred to as Ahl al-Ra'y (Kamali 1991, 14).

areas in the process of developing laws (Waines 1995, 68). Shafi'i concretizes³⁵ the four sources of law (Usul al-fiqh-roots of law): the Qur'an, Sunna, ijma, and qiyas as the process of establishing laws (Esposito 1998, 77-78; Rahman 1979, 76; Rippin 2005, 91-92). Rippin cautions against exaggerating the differences of the schools of law because the later schools followed the Medinan position (2005, 91), and all followed the systematized legal reasoning established by Shafi'i (Kamali 1991, 15).

Dialogue on interpretations was then established. Hassan points out that "it was left to the trained and highly erudite people to bring together those parts of God's commandments that were pertinent, directly or indirectly, in a consolidated form to be functionally useful in settlement of disputes in the society that Islam had created" (1982, 66). Essentially, this is because the Qur'an is generally not a law book (Esposito 1998, 76) or as Hallaq states, "The language of the Quran and hadith was not always clear and unequivocal" (2009, 19), and silent in many areas of social life.³⁶ Fiqh is then the science of identifying issues of jurisprudence. Qiyas, ijma and ijtihad, therefore, became crucial to the development of Shari'a through the schools of law till today.

Ijtihad is critical to the development of Shari'a; both qiyas and ijma require ijtihad. The researcher alluded to closure of the door of ijtihad above. Waines clarifies that, in reality, this closure of the door of ijtihad discussed by scholars of the 13th Century was never accepted by all the schools of law, despite decline in number of distinguished mujtahidun (1995, 85). Maududi believes in the necessity of ijtihad as against adherence to *taqlid*³⁷ of the Ulama's of his time (Enayat 2005, 101). Ijtihad was never extinct and its call was vigorously resumed by premodern Islamic reformers to which Maududi belongs. The mujtahid is the jurist qualified to deduce the law from sources through his own effort (ijtihad), in contrast to muqallad who follows or imitates the decision of his predecessors without question. The mujtahid must be a Muslim (Kamali 1991, 320) who exercises his skills freely and only answerable to Allah.

The relevance of the mujtahid to the survival of Muslim community has been raised since the 12th Century. Some argue that there will always be the need for mujtahids. Only they are qualified to advise or inform “the community or rulers on matters lawful and unlawful, especially when new situations arose” (Waines 1995, 85-86). In fact, ijtihad is an obligation on qualified jurists in the community, especially when dealing with new cases (Waines 1995, 77). Indeed, there is no sin in performing ijtihad. Rather, there are two rewards if the judgment is correct, and one if the judgment is wrong in the afterlife (Waines 1995, 76).

³⁵ The word concretized is used because there are arguments that usul al-fiqh has existed long before Shafi'i, "but it was through the works of these imams, especially al-Shafi'i, that usul al-fiqh was articulated into a coherent body of knowledge" (Kamali 1991, 14).

³⁶ Out of about 6000 verses of the Qur'an, only about 300 verses can be said to have legal concerns (Bennett 2004, 50)

³⁷ Unquestioned following or imitation

Therefore, despite opposition in certain quarters, independent interpretation is not contrary to Islamic practice. “Islam’s insistence on rewarding the jurisconsult in the hereafter, regardless of the result, dramatized the importance of this supreme function . . . and put a precious premium on the exercise of ijtihad” (Waines 1995, 85). Kamali argues that ijtihad is only next to the Qur’an and Sunna in importance as Islamic source of law. The difference is that ijtihad is a continuous process of development, while divine revelation and prophetic legislation ceased after the Prophet died. Ijtihad continues to be the major instrument in the interpretation of the divine message as it relates to “changing conditions of the Muslim community in its aspiration to attain justice, salvation and truth . . . ijtihad derives its validity from divine revelation” (1991, 315).

The reasons above seem to make the fundamentalists’ insistence on continued exercise of ijtihad valid. Their continued need for mujtahidun, in reality, appears justified and tenable since new situations do emerge requiring religious and legal contextualization. Westernization, modernity and recognition of the secular state are such new situations that confront Islam, requiring guidance on how Muslims should respond to them. It can be argued from Maududi’s interpretation of Islam that he assumed the role of mujtahid in response to this challenge. No wonder he is considered as “leader of the Muslim world” (Ushama and Osmani 2006, 101). A testament to this effect is his development of the political theory of Islam that demands creation of an Islamic state through jihad as antithesis to the secular state³⁸ and corrupting influence of westernization and modernity. His anti-western rhetoric and attempts to Islamize modernity are additional cases in point.

³⁸ Bonner (2006, 161-162), suggests that it is the recognition of the secular state that angered fundamentalists like Hassan al-Banna (1906-1949), Sayyid Qutb (1906-1966) and Abul ala Maududi (1903-1979) and made them develop their political projects and each writing extensively in their different ways about jihad “within a compelling and original analysis of the dilemma of Islam in the modern world.” As a solution to this they had no qualms about offensive jihad. This ideology was transported abroad through publications and formation of more radical groups globally. This supports the thinking in this research that the political interpretation of Islam by Maududi and his desire for the creation of an Islamic state have contributed to the rise of interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria in view of the fact that Maududi’s writings have found their way into northern Nigerian Islamic context.

Maududi might have been groomed to embrace ijtihad. The Hannafi School of Law controlled his Indian sub-continent (Waines 1995, 74) with its emphasis on qiyas. And Rahman significantly argues that ijtihad is to be exercised through qiyas (1979, 77; Esposito 1998, 82) from the sources (Waines 1995, 85). Maududi's writings reveal an attempt to comply with the requirement of ijtihad through qiyas by logical arguments from the Qur'an and Hadith. Classical examples are his Jihad in Islam (1980) and Four Basic Qur'anic Terms (2000).

Interpreting Sharia Is Critical to Muslims

The significance of the mujtahid will be further clarified if we examine why interpreting Shari'a is critical to Muslims. Shari'a is the obligatory laws of God Muslims must obey at all times, covering every aspect of human existence. The Qur'an is the primary source of Shari'a. The Sunna,³⁹ on the other hand, expatiates and clarifies the Qur'an (Esposito 1998, 79-80), but with equal authority as the Qur'an, as it is the traditions, practices and entire conduct of the prophet considered the true reflection of the injunctions of the Qur'an. However, not every Muslim can interpret these sacred books and apply them to everyday life. And the Qur'an and Sunna are not clear and unequivocal in their language, yet decoding the will of God is critical to true obedience.

Furthermore, as the Islamic community grew and continues to grow, circumstances emerge, and the Qur'an and Sunna are silent on how they should be addressed. This is where ijtihad and other interpretative approaches such as qiyas and ijma are employed to develop Shari'a for the community. They are employed to codify the will of God into socially operational guidelines from the sources: the Qur'an and Sunna. Other interpretative methods used to develop laws or issue fatwas (literally opinion, used to mean verdict or ruling) include istihsan, istidlal, istislah, istishab.⁴⁰ It is ijtihad that is of greater interest to this study. It is the tool of choice fundamentalist independent interpreters like Maududi use to interpret Islam.

³⁹ The historical development of the Sunna (hadith), its science and how it was codified and authenticated into its form presently is discussed by Rahman (1979, 63-67).

⁴⁰ Further explanations of these terms are found in the glossary of relevant Islamic terms.

The total life of a Muslim revolves around obedience to Shari'a (Esposito 1998, 75). Without correct interpretation obedience to the divine will becomes unclear. Through interpretation of Shari'a, the divine will is made clear to Muslims. This clarity enables Muslims to practice their faith correctly. This practice of faith entails belief in the six articles of faith accepted as fundamental doctrines of Islam (McDowell and Gilchrist 1983, 25) and performance of the five pillars of faith (observance or rituals).⁴¹ Often jihad is considered as the sixth pillar. Jihad is often referred to as holy war, but its literal meaning is “struggle”.

The articles and pillars of faith fall within the dimension of ibadat. However, where interpretation is more critical is in the mu'amalat (relationship between human beings) with its changing circumstances (Waines 1995, 81). This is where differences are found in interpretations between the schools of law. It is at this level that ijtihad assumes major significance, especially as Islamic community is confronted with new circumstances and social challenges. Mujtahidun emerge within this context. Correct interpretation of Shari'a assists Muslims to classify actions into five established categories: obligatory, recommended, permissible, reprehensible, and prohibited (Rahman 1979, 84; Mohammad 1985, 392).

Concept of Jihad in the Qur'an

As seen above, the Qur'an is the primary source of Shari'a guiding the behavior and actions of Muslims. The Qur'an contains verses on jihad and fighting which need interpretation to guide Muslims on how to undertake them. Some argue that the provision for jihad in the Qur'an and its interpretation generates conflicts between Islam and non-Muslims. It is necessary to examine what the Qur'an says about jihad. Maududi legitimizes jihad as an instrument for creating and operating an Islamic state, with implications for non-Muslims.

⁴¹ The articles of faith are Tawhid (belief in one God), Angels (belief in the existence of angels), Scripture (belief in four inspired books i.e. Torah (Zabur, Injil and Qur'an), Prophets (all prophets and Muhammad being the last and greatest), Last days (resurrection and judgment) and Predestination (God predetermines all things both good and evil for both men and angels). The five pillars are Shahadah (confession of faith), Salat (Prayers five times a day), Zakat (Alms giving), Ramadan (fasting-thirty days), and Hajj (pilgrimage-once in a life time).

War Terms in the Qur'an

A number of Arabic terms describe the concept of war. Besides remote terms like Idhwan (aggression) and Gahzu (armed robbery), the more important terms for us are qital, harb, riddah, futuhah, fitna and jihad. About 109 verses in the Qur'an call Muslims to go to war with unbelievers. These verses are not only considered historical, but having contemporary relevance because they are believed to be part of the eternal, unchanging word of Allah, relevant or subjective as anything else in the Qur'an.

Qital is translated as fight and includes armed struggle, which is part of jihad. It occurs about 40 times in the Qur'an, some of which appear to urge violence against others.⁴² Harb can be translated as war, aggression, unrest or rebellion. It occurs about 5 times in the Quran. It is often exclusively used for wars amongst non-Muslims or against Muslims by non-Muslims.⁴³ Ridda is translated as to turn away or apostasy, often used to describe war against apostasy and discourage disloyalty. It occurs about 10 times in the Qur'an. This war was mostly fought in the early stages of Islam. The first of this war was fought by the first Caliph Abu Bakr against disloyal clans. However, it is now commonly used to commit aggression against those who convert to other religions from Islam. Sura 4:88-92 is often cited in support of it.⁴⁴ Does Islam permit killing in the name of apostasy? It seems the verses refer to idolaters, especially in light of sura 5:33. It is also clear that anywhere apostasy is mentioned, the punishment is always reserved for the hereafter (2:217; 44:31-34; 3:90-94). However, in Hadith by Al-Bukhari (4:260; 6:577; 9:57, 64, 527), Muhammad is said to justify killing of apostates.

Futuhah literally means the opening, and describes the war of opening doors for Islam to enter, since Allah calls all to the house of peace (sura10:25).⁴⁵ When this invitation is rejected, war can be fought to open the door for Islam. This war justified the territorial wars of expansion by Islam during the early phases of Islam and seems to justify wars against infidels to bring them to the path of Allah in contemporary

⁴² Some examples of verses on qital are 2:190, 191, 193, 216,217, 244, 246; 3:111, 167; 4:74-76, 84, 90; 5:24; 8:39, 65; 9:12-14, 29, 36, 83, 111, 123; 33:20; 48:16, 22; 49:9; 59:14; 60:9-9; 61:4.

⁴³ Some examples of verses on harb in the Qur'an 2: 190; 216, 279; 5:33, 8:57; 47:4; 64.

⁴⁴ Some possible verses on riddah are 2:217; 4:63, 81; 5:42; 6:4; 13:11; 15:81; 21:1; 23:71; 46:3; 74:49.

⁴⁵ In his fatwa printed by Donahue and Esposito (2007, 466), Sheikh Attiyah Saqr acknowledged that one of the original purposes of fighting was to clear the hurdles in the path of Da'wa (call to Islam).

times. Fitna translates as unrest, arguments, trials and sometimes affliction, error, or disbelief. It mainly refers to internal or intra Islamic wars. It has about 25 varieties of occurrences in the Qur'an.⁴⁶ The first fitna was between the fourth Caliph Ali and Aisha Muhammad's wife, which resulted in the Battle of the Camel, triggered by the murder of the third caliph Uthman. Many more were fought during the dynastic reigns.

Jihad occurs about 35 times in 15 suras of the Qur'an: four Meccan and eleven Medinan chapters (Haleem 2010, 147). Bonner says words with the root j-h-d occur 41 times (2006, 22). This is, perhaps, the most controversial and misunderstood term in Islam's relations with other religions. It literally means to strive or struggle, often inaccurately translated as holy war. Jihad is mostly interpreted synonymously with war and fighting (qital).⁴⁷ Apparently jihad and qital occur more than other terms. However, Bonner hints that all the terms from above in their semantic ranges overlap and change with distance and time (2006, 2-3).

Jihad in the Qur'an

Jihad is of interest to this research because Maududi justifies it as an instrument for the creation of his Islamic state with consequences for non-Muslims. Jihad is often used synonymously with fighting. Probably this is why it is wrongly translated as holy war. Some translations of the Qur'an translate the term jihad as fighting in some cases. The Noble Qur'an, translated by Al-Hilali and Khan, and Yusuf Ali in his translation, translates yujahidu in 9:44 as fighting.

Several verses express different ideas concerning jihad. Some key examples are where believers are enjoined to strive in the cause of Allah (4:95; 5:35; 9:41; 22:78; 49:15; 61:10-12), but no specifics are given. It is considered as a test for believers (47:31). Allah supports and rewards those who take part in jihad (9:16, 88, 111; 29:69). Those who strive in Allah's way should not be friends with unbelievers (60:1). True believers will not ask to be exempted from jihad (9:44). In fact, there is punishment for those who refuse to engage in jihad (9:81-85). In addition, believers are required to resist those who strive to deviate them from Allah's way even if they are their parents (3:15; 29:8), and Allah will punish those who are striving to make them deviate from striving in the way of Allah (34:5, 38). Whether these verses include use of force will be examined in the short exegesis of some of these verses below.

⁴⁶ Some examples of occurrence of fitna in the Qur'an 2:49, 102; 5:41, 71; 7:155; 8:25, 28; 9:49; 10:85; 17:60; 20:40; 21:35, 111; 22:11, 53; 24:63; 25:20; 29:10; 37:63; 39:49; 51:14; 54:27; 60:5; 64:15; 74:31.

⁴⁷ Verses commonly used for jihad are 2:215; 8:41; 9:111; 49:15; 61:11 and 66:9. Others include 4:95; 5:35; 9:16, 41, 44, 73, 81, 86, 111; 22:78; 25:52; 29:8, 69; 31:15; 47:31; 60:1.

It is important to mention here that Meccan verses of the Qur'an were peaceful (Omar 2003, 159), whereas the Medinan verses contain references and instructions to use force against those who oppose, persecute, renege their agreements or hinder Muslim access to holy sites (Bennett 2004, 36). This has generated debate concerning jihad among Muslims. If numerous verses on fighting viewed as striving in the way of Allah are also added, it emerges why the concept of jihad is very significant not only to fundamentalist Islam, but to all Muslims in general. It becomes clear why fighting and warfare constitute a major theme of the Qur'an (Bonner 2006, 22).

Consequently, jihad is not a questionable injunction to Muslims. The bone of contention is what constitutes jihad in view of the different ideas expressed concerning it in the Qur'an. Some view jihad as personal internal struggle, others consider it as a defense mechanism against outside aggression, while others consider it as legitimacy for physical fighting. It is alleged that there is now a new emphasis on armed struggle as the obligation of jihad against unbelievers (Black 2011, 307). Indeed, some consider all the three as legitimate jihad.⁴⁸ The researcher will exegete some verses to see what the Qur'an actually says concerning qital, riddah and jihad.

Synoptic Exegesis of Some Key Qur'anic Verses

In the next chapter, the researcher shall discuss Maududi's Islamic interpretation in relation to his political theory of Islam and his position on jihad as a means of creating an Islamic state. It is necessary to examine what the Qur'an actually says concerning jihad, fighting (qital) and apostasy (riddah) before considering Maududi's interpretation of them in his commentary of the Qur'an and his writings. These terms define the establishment, character and operation of Maududi's Islamic state and its relations with non-Muslim.

⁴⁸ For more dialectics concerning jihad read Bonner 2006, 1-19

Qital

Key verses in four suras will be discussed and they are 2:190-193, 216-217; 4:74-78; 8:38-40, 65; 9:5, 29, 36, 123. In suras 2:190-193, 216; 8:38-39, 65 and 9:5, 29, 36, 84, 123, it is textually clear that Muslims are enjoined to fight only unbelievers and those who fight them. In fact, even in suras 4:84 and 8:65 where the prophet was enjoined to rouse the believers to fight, it can naturally be understood to be in the context of fighting unbelievers during the early wars of establishing Islam. Thus, the believers are to fight unbelievers (sura 2:190) and slay them (sura 2:191) until there is no more tumult. They are commanded to stop if the unbelievers cease fighting them and only fight those who continue to oppress (sura 2:192-3). What attracts attention is the inclusion of people of the book (Jews and Christians) among the unbelievers in sura 9:29 and inferred in verse 123, yet the believers are charged to consult the people of the book when in doubt about their scripture (sura 10:94). Nevertheless, people of the book are to be fought until they pay jizya with willing submission, and feel themselves subdued.

However, it is not textually evident that suras 2:216, 4:74 and 9:111 provides any clear context as to when and who the believers should fight. Sura 2:216 simply says fighting is prescribed for believers and they dislike it. One translation renders this verse “Jihad (holy fighting in Allah’s cause) is ordained for you (Muslims) though you dislike it . . .”⁴⁹ This is another example of how fighting and jihad are used synonymously. Whereas the Arabic word used is alqitalu from qital (fight), it is important to note that sura 2:217 suggests that fighting is a great transgression, yet believers are asked to fight. Similarly, sura 4:74 did not textually provide a clear context, but verses 75-76 seem to encourage the fight against any form of oppression. However, verse 75 seems to suggest that the fight against oppression is an addition to fighting in the cause of Allah. It is apparent then that verse 74 can stand independently. Sura 9:111 says Allah has purchased the believers and they fight in the cause of Allah, so they kill and are killed, but the context in which all these take place is not provided. Textually, context of when or whom to fight is not provided in all these verses.

⁴⁹ This translation is from The Noble Qur’an translated into English by Muhammad Taqi-ud-Din Al-Hilali and Muhammad Muhsin Khan found on <http://www.imaanstar.com>.

A little confusing is that the Qur'an says Christians are nearest to the believers (sura 5:82), in whose book the prophet is mentioned (sura 7:157), and they should be consulted when in doubt (sura 10:94; 32:23), yet they are regarded as unbelievers to be fought (sura 9:29, 123), and not to have as friends (suras 5:51; 3:28; 60:1, 8-9). Sura 9:111 also provides only the cause of Allah as reason for fighting, but details are not given as to what constitutes Allah's cause. This can be subject to independent interpretation. Some use this as a jihadic verse, yet jihad is not mentioned in it. This brings to mind Omar's stated dilemma of under what conditions Islam condones the use of jihad as force (2003:159).

Riddah

Muslims who justify capital punishment for apostasy majorly use sura 4:88-89. The passage does not textually avail itself to that kind of definite conclusion. It is apparent that the verses are referring to hypocrites. Clearly, there is no single verse in the Qur'an that prescribes capital and earthly punishment for apostasy (Badari n.d.). The punishment has always been in the hereafter as seen in suras 2:217 and 4:137. It is even apparent in sura 4:88⁵⁰ that it is Allah who makes them go astray. Perhaps it is the "seize them and slay them" in verse 89 that creates the dilemma, since the term "renegades" is not clearly explained. All other verses where apostasy is mentioned, is for warning, counsel and revelation of the unbelievers' attitude.

Jihad

In the section on jihad in the Qur'an above, the researcher provided verses on jihad without exegeting them. Some of these verses will now be exegeted here. The passages examined are suras 4:95; 5:35; 8:72; 9:20, 41, 44, 73; 49:15; 60:1; 61:11 and 66:9. These verses use the word jihad (strive) and are commonly used to justify fighting or militant jihad. Although Yusuf Ali translated yujahidu as fighting in sura 9:44, it is obvious that the more appropriate translation is striving. This again reminds us of the use of jihad synonymously with qital. In all these verses, believers are asked to strive in the cause of Allah and in some cases against unbelievers, but none of the verses use the word qital (fight) or its derivation. And in all, they are asked to strive with either their wealth or persons (nafsun) which means soul. The verses contain derivations such as nafsihim, anfusikum, and so on. This striving with one's person is not conclusive in saying it means allowing a person to sacrifice his life in fighting or striving to kill. It can actually mean moral rectitude or inner struggle of right living. Sura 60:1 might seem to suggest that striving may connote aggression, but it is not apparent that rejecting friendship is synonymous with aggression or even violence. This is perhaps why there are divergent views about jihad among Muslims.

⁵⁰ Yusuf Ali agrees that these verses refer to hypocrites within who turned traitors. Maududi as well considers these verses as referring to internal matters and not targeted at those leaving Islam in his commentary of the Qur'an, but his general position on apostasy is different as his writings will reveal.

All these notwithstanding, militancy seems to find some legitimacy in the Qur'an in certain conditions, and this is accepted by all Muslims, whether directly or indirectly. The challenge is under what condition it is allowed. Maududi has no doubt that jihad clearly involves offensive militancy. Has his interpretation influenced conflicts in northern Nigeria? It is important at this point to discuss some scholarly opinions on the issue of jihad.

Some Scholarly Opinions on Jihad

Bennett agrees that jihad in the Qur'an has variety of meanings (2004, 35). Haleem considers jihad as having historical context⁵¹ and the verses are responding to this historical context (2010, 148). Bonner says jihad is undertaken externally and internally. The external and internal jihad is performed collectively or individually. External jihad⁵² is activity involving physical conflict in the world against real enemies, while internal jihad is a struggle against self (2006, 13-14; Bennett 2004, 35; Kamali 2002, 617; Mohammad 1985, 396), but another dimension to internal jihad is social (Mohammad 1985, 396).

Kamali suggests that jihad has both physical and intellectual dimension (2002, 617), and considered as part of Muslims' spirituality (Mohammad 1985, 397). There is historical evidence to show that permission to fight was only given in the second year after the Hijra (Haleem 2010, 163). Haleem stresses further that militant jihad is allowed only for self defense and defending the poor, an argument Al-farag completely refutes (2007, 417-424). Maududi insists that jihad is both offensive and defensive⁵³ (1980, 26).

⁵¹ Jackson (2007, 394-408) made the same assertion in arguing that Islam is a religion of peace and that the state of war has given way to the state of peace in modern times.

⁵² Wiktorowicz says there are two forms of external jihad in traditional Islam: offensive and defensive. Offensive jihad functions to promote the spread of Islam, enlightenment, and civility to the dar al-harb (domain of war), whereas defensive jihad is repelling aggression or militant attack against Islamic community and in this case it is the duty of all Muslims to wage jihad against the enemy. All Islamic scholars accept this is an obligation on all Muslim (2005, 83). It should be noted that offensive jihad did not capture militancy or fighting for spreading the dogma as we are witnessing today.

Bonner suggests that jihad⁵⁴ in the Qur'an is not in the form and sense most familiar to us now. He indicates that jihad in the Qur'an in its j-h-d root appears 41 times and mostly does not refer to warfare, rather to disputations and labors for the sake of Allah. Only 10 references refer to conduct of war. Others refer to devotion to God, righteous conduct, utter dedication and self sacrifice, which may involve physical combat, but it is not obvious that is what is meant.⁵⁵ He sums up that "for reasons that are not entirely clear to us today, the Qur'anic word jihad became associated with a full, complex doctrine and set practices relating to conduct of war." He suggests that this might have occurred sometimes after the revelation and compilation of the Qur'an itself (2006, 21-22).

Offensive Jihad a Later Development

Kamali agrees with Bonner, Heck and Bennett that the offensive character of jihad was a later development, possibly the works of jurists who indulged in legitimizing the policies of expansion of military strategists during the powerful Abbasid state (2002, 620). Heck and Kamali are in agreement that the classical form of jihad was hammered during the early Abbasid period by jurists in the service of the state (2004, 108). Bennett posits that the doctrine of jihad was developed during the futuhat wars under the four Caliphs and Umayyad dynasty when the world was divided into two houses (2004, 37-38): Dar-el-Islam (house of peace) and Dar-el-Harb (house of war).⁵⁶ In the former, people lived according to Islamic law, while they lived outside it in the latter with the two abodes constantly in a state of war-jihad (Omar 2003, 161). Bennett avers that the Dar-el-Harb is a later construction and not a Qur'anic term (2004, 37-38).

⁵³ Euben's (2002) article titled "Killing (For) Politics: Jihad, martyrdom, and political action" is helpful in the discussion on defensive and offensive jihad.

⁵⁴ The perspectives of Shi'a on jihad, which is not the focus of this work, in addition to more discussion on the nineteenth century view of jihad can be found in Lambton (1970).

⁵⁵ Heck also takes a similar position that the term jihad cannot be reduced to armed struggle, because virtually all the instances of the root j-h-d speak primarily to the question of true intention and devotion. Jihad is a means of separating true beliefs from infidelity. He summarizes that "jihad in the Qur'an implies a total devotion to God through a consecration, dedication and even oblation of oneself to His way." Even jihad against the enemy must be carried out with proper intention (2004, 97,101).

⁵⁶ Heck agrees with Bennett that it was during the Umayyad dynasty that the world was divided into two house- Dar el harb and Dar el Islam (2004, 108).

Tibi contends that jihad is aimed at opening (futuhah) the world to Islam (1998, 54), and never for aggression, but an effort to spread Islam as the true religion. Muslims are only entitled to use force in defense of da'wa, against resistant unbelievers. According to him, only unbelievers fight wars [hurub] (1998, 55). Bonner objects to the argument that jihad was developed by the Islamic state. He insists that jihad is “neither the product nor expression of the Islamic state, it developed apart from the state or else in an uneasy coexistence with it” (2006, 3). Bonner, probably, is right since jihad is a provision of the Qur'an. Nonetheless, Kamali argues that with time juristic focus centered on this military jihad to the exclusion of other wider connotations (2002, 620).

Kamali says that the Meccan period emphasized peaceful jihad—peaceful propagation, self discipline and subjugation of self to Islamic way of life stressed in the Qur'an (29:6, 29; 25:59), with no military connotation, although sura 22:78 might suggest both. However, in Medina, permission for war was granted and jihad acquired a new dimension (sura 22:39). He admits that some verses appear synonymous with fighting and war (suras 2:215; 9:41; 49:15). Bennett adds suras 8:41, 49; 61:11 and 66:9 as among the jihad verses used synonymously with fighting (2004, 35). Kamali elucidates that sura 2:190 came in the second year in Medina, yet Muhammad still resorted to jihad as a means of defense.

According to Kamali, major Islamic scholars like Zahrah,⁵⁷ Hakim, Haykal, Hannifah, Dihlari, Sindhi and al-Qadarawi support jihad as a defensive mechanism. They insist jihad is for defense against aggression, to extirpate fitna (disorder, persecution), securing human liberties, establish social justice without fighting to spread the dogma, removal of unlawful governments,⁵⁸ extermination of evil (poverty and disease), and fighting against illiteracy and corruption. In addition, work or learning done in Islam aimed at securing Allah's pleasure and serving humanity is ibadat and jihad. Essentially, Islam is not violent. Islam, as a faith, is a state of the mind and belief which cannot be realized through violence (2002, 621-622).

⁵⁷ Kamali reveals that Zahrah argues that Taymiyyah's position is that jihad is for defense. Indeed Bennett agrees that Taymiyyah only enjoins jihad on innovation and deviation (2004, 47).

⁵⁸ This is differentiated from rebellion without reason. This position agrees with Taymiyyah's position discussed earlier. Maududi advocates removal of all un-Islamic governments in his Jihad in Islam.

Jihad and its Modern Interpretation

Similar to Bonner and Kamali, Haleem opines that in modern times, jihad has been divorced from its Qur'anic significance or meaning. He maintains jihad has a historical context and it is responding to that context (2010, 147). Heck affirms that the various formulations of jihad are embedded in particular socio-cultural contexts (2004, 95). Haleem insists that the jihad enjoined in the Qur'an are verbal (sura 25:52), use of wealth (suras 8:72; 9:20, 41, 86), or describes pagan parents' efforts to revert their children to paganism (suras 29:8; 31:15). Jihad is majorly conducted against unbelievers and not general fighting (suras 9:73; 22:78; 25:52; 29:69; 66:9). Some scholars translate it wrongly to make war (2010, 147). However, the challenge is defining who unbelievers are.

Although Haleem agrees that the use of anfusihi (their soul) in jihad verses might connote participation in war or actual fighting (2010, 148), permission for fighting is majorly defensive (2010, 149) couched in justification, restoration, and reminder of God's power and the believer's duty to him. He insists conduct of jihad has guidelines (sura 2:190-195), which is misinterpreted, especially verse 191. It is not a general order to fight infidels. It is to fight only those who fight you. Haleem disagrees that sura 9:5 abrogates the verses guiding the conduct of jihad (2010, 150) as Shaltut (1898-1963) reportedly did in light of sura 2:194 and confirmed in suras 2:217 and 9:36 (Bennett 2004, 47). He argues that one can only take this position if he/she ignores the surrounding verses of sura 9:5. Haleem adds also that sura 4:75 is clear that jihad is for defense of the helpless and the needy. Using Qur'anic sources, he argues that military jihad is the duty of the state and sura 4:90-91 stipulates cessation of fighting when those fighting Muslims cease. He rejects the use of suras 9:5, 29; 2:216; 8:39 and 47:4 as unconditional permission to fight (2010, 161). He concludes that jihad and fighting are for self defense and defense of the oppressed (2010, 163).

Mohammad seems to support Haleem that Islam permits jihad and not harb [war] (1985, 385), despite recognition of Islam as a major force of revolutionary change in the world order (1985, 381). He uses Yusuf Ali's interpretation of sura 9:20-22 to justify his argument. As Heck, Kamali and Bonner above, Mohammad reiterates that the essence of jihad consists of true and sincere faith, which so fixes its gaze on Allah in such a way that all selfish and worldly intentions seem worthless and fade away (1985, 386). He accepts that “mere brutal fighting is opposed to the whole spirit of jihad, while the sincere scholar’s pen or preacher’s voice or wealthy men’s contribution may be the most valuable form of jihad” (1985, 386). Maududi clearly rejects this position in Jihad in Islam (1980).

Furthermore, Mohammad maintains jihad is for defense against pagans and polytheists, whose faith and practices are directly opposed to the message of Allah given through Muhammad, as Tibi does above. The people of the book (Jews and Christians) are excluded from this group; only moderate jihad can be taken against them to accept Islam or pay jizya (tax). However, he admits that there are four ways accepted by Islamic jurists to fight jihad: the heart, tongue, mind and the sword (1985, 388-389; Willis 1967, 398).⁵⁹ Heck’s (2004) discussion on the diverse conceptions of jihad sheds more light.⁶⁰ Mohammad accepts collective jihad and rejects individual jihad, and that only the ruler (Imam or Caliph) heading the Muslim polity should declare jihad (1985, 390), but he accepts jihad against apostasy because apostasy is treason (1985, 391). He seems to accept jihad against a ruler if the ruler is not a Muslim or fails to implement or violates Shari’a (1985, 393). He is silent on who assesses the ruler’s implementation of Shari’a, issues the fatwa against the ruler, and if an individual has the right to issue fatwa (decree or ruling) against the ruler as we see today. It seems sanctioning jihad against non-Muslim rulers will promote emergence of conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims.

Evolving Use of the Term Jihad

Reference to Heck’s work is significant in that he chronicles the ever-changing use of the term jihad over the centuries according to historical circumstances and needs of Muslims (2004, 95). He reveals the various contexts in which the term has been reinterpreted and accepts that jihad is interwoven in Islamic history (2004, 122). Heck believes that, by its call for the struggle in the path of God, the Qur’an establishes the grounds for the conception of jihad as a struggle for a godly order (2004, 96). He seems to attribute the tendency towards militant jihad to the Qur’an.

⁵⁹ This position appears similar to that of Maududi. He is probably summarizing all shades of opinion on jihad since he is a later writer than Maududi or is influenced by Maududi. More on the varieties and types of jihad can be found in Sedgwick (2007, 7-12) and Lambton (1970, 187) respectively.

⁶⁰ For treatment of diverse topics on jihad, the section titled “Jihad defined and redefined” in Donohue and Esposito (2007) is additionally helpful.

He, however, maintains that jihad will continue to be reinterpreted and the Qur'an will always remain the touchstone of any reformulating of jihad (2004, 122), but insists that context should be considered in all discussions on jihad. Heck interprets that jihad in the Qur'an is ultimately the moral life of the private and public order through the lens of faith. If this aspect is the focus of jihad, other forms of jihad would be less meaningful and the concept of jihad will be rescued from the hands of fundamentalists and terrorists (2004, 123).

From the foregoing, it seems the classical meaning of jihad in the Qur'an tilts towards a more religious and moral understanding, but does not deny the possibility of violence in defense of Islam. However, the defense can be proactive and not docile (Kamali 2002, 621). It seems this defensive proactiveness is the bone of contention between fundamentalists and traditionalists on how to define struggle in the cause of Allah. Laboda seems to agree that the traditional definition of jihad is struggle in the cause of Allah introduced in the Qur'an by sura 4:74-75. However, the challenge is determining what "to struggle" and "in the cause of Allah" mean. Hence, Laboda argues, sura 4:73-75 has "caused Muslims to develop different theories as to what it means to struggle in the cause of God and when it is proper to do so." He admits that "jihad can be interpreted as a call to missionary work and peaceful conversion of oppressed non-believers. On the other hand, it can be interpreted as a command to engage in violent war against all non-believers at all times" (2004, 18). Fundamentalists acknowledge the former, but emphasize the immediate and constant necessity of the latter.

Dialectics on Militant Jihad

On militant jihad, Woktorowicz discusses a number of Islamic scholars who interpret the Qur'an as permitting and enjoining offensive militant jihad. Although many jihadists refer to Taymiyyah as sanctioning militant jihad, Woktorowicz argues that it is generally accepted that Taymiyyah's ideology of jihad has more to do with the traditional religious and moral elements of jihad, rather than the legalistic issues relating to war or rules of engagement (2005, 83). Kirmanj argues that Taymiyya divided jihad into two categories; against believers and unbelievers, but acknowledges that Taymiyya insists that it is all lawful wars that he categorizes as jihad (2008, 75). And in the context of history, it is defensive especially against the Mongol invaders.

Nonetheless, Woktorowicz⁶¹ discloses that Ibn al-Demyati (d. 1412) encouraged participation in militant jihad through addressing the fears of those who abstain from it. He used the Qur'an and Sunna to reveal the benefits, in the hereafter, of participating in jihad. In contemporary times, Abdullah Azzam,⁶² who assisted in founding Al-Qaeda, is accused of resurrecting the call for active participation in jihad through drawing attention to the fact that all the misfortunes befalling Islam today is because Muslims have abandoned jihad. Azzam quoted several Qur'anic verses such as sura 2:216 to show that militant jihad is an undeniable duty of Muslims (Woktorowicz 2005, 83-84). Azzam was Maududi's student (Jackson 2011, 2).

For Al-Farag, to say that jihad is only defensive is false. He argues that the Prophet says "whosoever fights in order to make the Word of God supreme is someone who (really) fights for the cause of God." Furthermore, Islam was spread by the sword⁶³ and it is obligatory for Muslims to raise their sword under the very leaders who hide this truth and spread falsehood (2007, 418). He refutes jihad as defensive, and cites several scholars such as Al-Husayn ibn Fadl, Imam Abu Abdallah Muhammad ibn Hazm, Abu al-Qasim Hibbat Allah ibn Salam and Ibn Kathir, who maintain that sura 9:5 has abrogated all verses commanding Muslims to be at peace with infidels. And the abrogating sura 47:4 makes fighting obligatory. It is only when Muslims are weak that it is obligatory to endure insults.

Al-Farag further argues that to say fighting is not part of jihad is not only putting an end to fighting for Islam, but also the end of intention (niyah) to fight for Islam. To encourage refraining from jihad we must also encourage refraining from fasting and prayer. He says sura 2:183 ("fasting is prescribed for you") and 2:216 ("fighting is prescribed for you") give similar commands. One cannot perform one and eschew the other, and fighting means confrontation and blood. Al-Azzam affirms that whoever discourages people from going to jihad is like one who discourages people from fasting during Ramadan (2007, 426). Fighting jihad is thus similar to fasting and prayer. In light of the above argument, Al-Farag declares it is obvious that jihad is the individual duty of every Muslim today;⁶⁴ jihad is not fought in successive phases where you finish that of the soul, engage the devil, and then fight the infidels and the hypocrites. All must be fought concurrently (2007, 418-423). When it comes to individual obligation to perform jihad, no permission should be sought from anyone (Al-Azzam 2007, 426; Al-Farag 2007, 422). This seems to account for individual jihadists today.

⁶¹ According to Wiktorowicz, offensive jihad is for spreading of Islam and from the tone of his writing it appears he has peaceful means of spreading Islam in mind.

⁶² Azzam is influenced by Maududi according to Jackson (2011, 2). See next chapter for further discussion.

⁶³ The same argument Ahmad (1989) says Maududi made to encourage jihad by the sword.

Jihad in the Qur'an and It's Diverse Interpretations

The foregoing corroborates Bennett's position that there are three valid interpretations of jihad in the Qur'an. There are the peace verses classified as used by progressive Islam (suras 16:125; 41:34; 88:21), the defensive verses used by moderate Islam (suras 22:39-40; 2:190; 8:63), and the sword verses used by radical Islam (suras 2:216; 9:5, 111, 123).⁶⁵ Bennett suggests the peace verses are the true stance of Islam and violence is permitted only in extreme cases, and the defensive verses qualify the sword verses and permit Muslims only to fight unbelievers who fight them. Here, Bennett has tilted towards traditional interpretation of jihad. However, for him to say the traditional view is that the sword verses have abrogated the earlier verses which justify perpetual war against all unbelief, including against heretical Muslims, appears contradictory (2004, 43). In that case, his argument that the peaceful verses are the true stance of Islam is nullified. As we have seen, there is complexity in discussing jihad in Islam, and probably why the fundamentalists will continue to justify militant jihad without any decisive refutation.

Perhaps one of the challenges in refuting the militant jihad of the fundamentalists is the synonymous use of jihad and qital (fight). One commonly used verse to refer to jihad is sura 9:111, yet the verse uses the same term fight as in suras 2:216 and 9:5; 123 commonly used for jihad. This association makes it really difficult to refute completely the offensive tones in suras 2:216; 9:5, 123 and others that can be interpreted independently from surrounding verses. This, perhaps, is the dilemma for scholars endeavoring to interpret Qur'anic jihad in a non-violent way and suggesting that other means of propagation can be used.

⁶⁴ Al-Farag gives three cases in which jihad is compulsory to individual Muslims requiring no permission to participate, which are when two armies are already confronting each other (8:15, 45), when infidels attack a Muslim nation, and when an Imam calls upon people to fight (9:39-39).

⁶⁵ This is the position popularized by Maududi

One can understand the difficulty inherent in Osman's argument that jihad is not limited to armed struggle and can include self control, moral development by encouraging what is right and forbidding what is wrong, mass political movement against injustice and oppression, and severing relations with enemies, and so forth (2003, 472), or Omar's argument that "jihad is a comprehensive concept embracing peaceful persuasion (16:125), passive resistance (13:22; 23:96; 41:34) as well as armed struggle against oppression and injustice (2:193; 4:75; 8:39). Moreover, jihad is not directed at other faiths" (2003, 160). Fundamentalists like Maududi will certainly disagree with the final part of this argument. Indeed, Bennett aptly argues that "it is absurd to say that jihad was always a peaceful concept and only misused by few fundamentalists. Most references, especially in the Shari'a, to jihad include detailed guidelines for armed combat" (2004, 51).

The argument for non-violent interpretation of jihad might have arisen from the realization that conquest cannot be achieved in all circumstances, especially beginning from the failure to conquer Constantinople in 718 AD. According to Bennett, this triggered a crisis leading to the creation of Dar-al-ahd (house of contract). Muslims can enter into Sulh (armistice) where they can live in peace under non-Islamic law. However, this is a temporary measure, as the aim is still to bring this area into Dar-al-Islam (Bennett 2004, 39). Thus, contemporary Muslims view the world as Dar-al-da'wa (house of invitation) for dialogue.

Overall, as it has emerged, jihad for Muslims is for defending and expanding Islam. This manifests in several forms as anti-colonialism and other contemporary forms. In the end, despite diverse arguments, jihad is a Qur'anic concept; how it is interpreted is the bone of contention. Indeed, Omar is accurate that all Muslims virtually accept that Islam is not a "pacifist tradition"⁶⁶ and allows for and legitimates the use of violence under certain conditions, the definitions of which may differ from one Muslim scholar to the other. It is here that a large measure of the problem lies. Under what conditions does Islam condone the use of violence" (2003, 158)? Maududi has interpreted jihad in his unique modern way as the next chapter discloses.

In ending this section, it is necessary to point out that understanding jihad is critical to understanding religious conflicts involving Muslims. Mohammad suggests we must understand jihad to understand Islam and our Muslim neighbors (1985, 397).

⁶⁶ Jackson holds a similar opinion (2007, 401).

Doubtlessly, jihad has undergone reinterpretation and rethinking, as Bennett points out (2004, 38), or as Heck indicates. Jihad is ever-changing according to historical circumstances and needs of Muslims (2004, 95). Wiktorowicz reasons that the development of the jihadi thought is characterized by the erosion of critical checks used to limit warfare and violence in classical Islam (2005, 94). Perhaps the contemporary appeal of jihad to Muslims is captured in what Willis argues is also behind the recurrence of revivalist movements in Islamic history: “the inability of a Muslim community in disarray to preserve in ideal form the Islamic religion and community, and to realize the ostensible ambitions of the Prophet, and certainly those of his successors, to create a world unified on the basis of Islamic principles” (1967, 395).

However, one identifies with Bennett that the problem might be with the Qur’an itself since all readings of the Qur’an are interpretations and none can claim to be better or more accurate than the other (2004, 35). Even Esack believes September 9/11 was inspired by Islam since the Qur’an is open to diverse meanings (2004, 50). No doubt, jihad is a religious concept from an Islamic point of view, an important and significant part of a Muslim’s spirituality. It is, therefore, difficult to alienate jihad from a Muslim’s religious practice, way of life and devotion, notwithstanding belief in militant or pacifist jihad. Consequently, jihad should be understood as a personal and collective effort, striving and struggle of Muslims, whether leaning towards pacifism or militancy. Muslims can, therefore, interpret or reinterpret jihad according to contemporary exigency of social change, which can be pacifist or militant.

Mohammad aptly concedes that colonialism and western domination encouraged the contemporary reinterpretation of jihad by fundamentalists like Maududi to fight against non-Muslim political control and religious decay within Muslim society. This same concern for the Muslim society led to the emergence of people like Wahab, Afghani, Abduh and Rida (1985, 393). It makes sense that Maududi developed a political theory of Islam to establish an Islamic state through jihad in answer to the decay of Muslim society and the corrupting influence of westernization. Bennett adds that Zionism and westernization are used by fundamentalists as a justification in activating the injunction to use violent jihad as a defense (2004, 32). Mohammad is convinced that in the 20th Century, scholars like Iqbal, al-Banna, Maududi and Qutb emerged to confront the internal and external decline of Muslim society and loss of Muslim land to foreign occupation. In his view, they reinterpreted Shari’a and the doctrine of jihad (1985, 394-395) as a result. This affirms the concept of jihad as having both elements of continuity and change (discontinuity) in its contemporary expression.

The discussion of jihad above clearly indicates that Muslim scholars of all shades do not exclude fighting or war as part of jihad. The only difference is that for fundamentalists like Maududi, militant jihad is a central offensive tool and a priority to secure Muslim society, whereas for the moderates or traditionalists, militant jihad is the last resort and it is defensive. The major differential in Maududi's philosophy is that he made jihad a global agenda and duty. According to him, Islam requires the whole earth. This entails the elimination of all un-Islamic systems to establish Islamic systems in their place (1980, 19-22; 1964, 64; Bennett 2004, 44-45). In essence, Muslims must take the initiative for jihad, an idea echoed by Qutb in his work Milestones (Bennett 2004, 45).

Omar's admission above, therefore, is not surprising (2003, 158). Fundamentalists appear to exploit this lacuna in interpreting jihad to proffer their interpretations of it. And since the fundamentalist fervor seems to rhyme with the desire of most Muslims for the actualization of the global establishment of the rule of Shari'a, it appears to find more populist sentimental support across the Muslim divide, either overtly or covertly. This dialectic concerning jihad seems destined to remain as an essential part of Islamic culture and consciousness. It is important at this point to discuss Umma and apostasy as sources of violence, and jihad as a source of culture change, in order to delineate them within the context of this research.

Umma and Apostasy as Traditional Sources of Violence

Umma in Islam appears to have political and religious (spiritual) connotations. This might suggest that its mere existence promotes conflicts with other religious communities. Muhammad's historical use of umma to militarily expand Islam might support this assertion. However, there is historical difficulty in verifying this assertion. In Muhammad's time, it appears that Muslim wars were politically motivated, even before umma was formed. The umma itself was not the direct motivation for them. Conflicts would have occurred wherever the umma was established after Muhammad's time, if its mere formation had been a direct cause of them. Besides, the Qur'anic concept of umma, according to Ayubi, is not necessarily a religious one (1991, 91). Theological revelations seem responsible for mobilizing the umma into war with other communities. This suggests that without a secondary influence, the mere existence of umma or quest for it cannot lead to conflicts. Its formation in Medina by Muhammad was generally peaceful.

Furthermore, there is no suggestion in several scholarly works that the mere existence of umma is a source of conflict. Denny explores the meaning of umma in the Qur'an, its evolution and its political and religious nature as the Medina constitution also captures (1975, 1977). Akram argues that umma is transnational in nature and all Muslims agree it should transcend national boundaries and is bound together by Shari'a. This impacts Muslim consciousness and political behavior (2007). It is also a fact that the Islamic community in general owes its allegiance to God and the umma (Al-Turabi, 1983). Esposito describes the umma as "transnational community of believers" (1999, 11). Voll argues that loyalty to umma can supersede loyalty to state (1994, 152-155). In all these, there is no suggestion that the mere existence of umma generates conflicts with other communities.

In the same vein, some might argue that the treatment of apostasy in Islam can lead to conflicts with other religious communities. However, as we saw above, even sura 4:88-92 is insufficient to justify killing of apostates, since it only sanctions the killing of hypocrites who join the enemy. Sura 9:5, 11-16 refers to idolaters who break covenant while sura 5:33, 37 refers to those warring against the apostle and causing harm in the land. Clearly, the punishment for apostasy is in the hereafter (suras 2:217; 3:90, 106; 4:38, 40, 137).

In fact, the Hadith records the prophet prohibiting the killing of people of the book (al-Bukhari 9:60),⁶⁷ or any killing because it is among the biggest sins (al-Bukhari 1:17; 3:821; 8:667), and prohibiting even throwing stones (al-Bukhari 7:388). Indeed, suras 2:256; 3:20; 18:29; 88:21-22 grant freedom of choice. Maududi, interestingly, agrees with this in his commentary on sura 2:193. He states that "as a matter of fact Islam allows freedom of belief to all non-Muslims; one may adopt any way of life that one chooses and may or may not worship anyone or anything" (Tafhim al-Qur'an). Even the Hadith al-Bukhari 9:57 used to argue that the prophet justified killing for apostasy, is often questioned as to its authenticity (Badari n.d.). It also seems that death penalty for apostasy after the death of the prophet can be associated with the refusal of tribes to pay Zakat (Al-Bukhari 2:483).

⁶⁷ Hadith references are from Alim, CD-ROM, version 6.0.11.1. U. S. A.: ISL Software Corp, 1986 – 2000.

Peters and De Vries discuss classical prescriptions pertaining to apostasy from the four schools of Islamic law, modern application of the law and how this relates to the principle of freedom of religion (1976-1977). They argue that death penalty is recommended for apostates by some schools of law, in spite of the evidence to the contrary in the Sunna and the Qur'an, as discussed above. In fact, several Islamic countries do not apply them today. All these confirm that umma and apostasy should not promote interreligious conflicts, unless otherwise interpreted outside the obvious provisions of the sacred sources.

Jihad as Source of Culture Change

Some might also argue that jihad too created a new culture of violence against other religious communities. It is a historical fact that Muhammad's jihad changed the culture of Arabia from an idolatrous one to a monotheistic one, often by armed struggle. This trend of jihad with armed struggle under a leader continued through the period of the Caliphs (successors to the Prophet) and the dynasties of the Umayyads, Abbasids, Fatimids and Ottomans. This trend is evident even in contemporary times. It is also obvious that jihad in northern Nigeria produced a similar culture change through armed struggle. This probably suggests that passion for jihad might be behind religious conflicts.

Ghanem examines the causes and motives of jihad in northern Nigeria. He discovers how jihad brought a marriage of governance between the Fulani and Hausa styles (1975, 623). As a result, it has perhaps, produced what is referred to as Hausa-Fulani hegemony today. Islamic laws substituted tribal allegiance (1975, 623) by reforming the idolatrous, oppressive and corrupt cultural practices of the Hausa kings. They replaced them with Islamic cultural practices. He concludes that jihad brought about political transformation in northern Nigeria (1975, 624).

Waldman reevaluates the Fulani jihad. According to him, it brought about cultural change in northern Nigeria. He interestingly reveals that jihad was forced on Danfodio by aggressive Gobir Hausa rulers as they rejected the cultural change to Islam he desired. He argues that Islam did not affect the social and religious life of Hausa land, although the rulers had Islamic clerics attached to their courts before the jihad. It is clear that Islam existed in Hausa land without cultural effect until the jihad (1965).

Levtzion gives a clear summary of Islam in Hausa land before the jihad with its syncretistic nature (2000). Gilliland explains the symbiotic relationship between Islam and various cultures of northern Nigeria.⁶⁸ He states that “religious change is as much the by-product of cultural change as it is an agent of it” (1986, 5). He points out that without jihad, some northern cultures resisted Islam. He argues that in spite of the presence of Islam in Hausa land before the jihad, cultural change was slow compared to the time after the jihad. Evidently, jihad is an Islamic ideology (Falola 1998, 72). Othman Danfodio used it to incite his followers to stage jihad against the Hausa kings. Levtzion quotes Usman Danfodio’s brother, Abdallah, as saying that “when the shaykh saw that his community was ready for jihad, ‘he began to incite them to arms . . . and he set this verse in his non-Arabic Qadiri poem (qasida ajamiyya qadiriyya)’.⁶⁹ This mystical verse had a hypnotic effect upon devotees on the eve of the jihad” (2000, 86).

The point here is that oppression and deprivation were insufficient to “incite” them without theological ideological push. It is apparent that the idea of jihad without the “incitement” (ideology) did not create grounds for conflict or culture of conflicts, just like the adage that says “all revolutions have ideas. Though, not all ideas have revolutions.” However, the historical success of jihads might have influenced Islamic fundamentalists to view jihad ideology as effective for Islamic revolution and cultural change across the world, and perhaps the reason for Maududi’s strong advocacy for it.

What essentially emerges is that whether for sacred or profitable reasons, as Karsh analyzes, the history of jihad appears to suggest that it needs an arrowhead leader with the ideology to drive it (2007, 24-25). Karsh seems to further support this by arguing that “throughout history all imperial powers and aspirants have professed some kind of universal ideology as both a justification of expansion and a means of ensuring the subservience of the conquered peoples” (2007, 24). It cannot be denied that the history of jihad in Islam seems to support this assertion. From the Prophet to the Caliphs and the dynasties that emerged afterwards, whenever a leader emerged whose ideology did not emphasize militant jihad the aggression and expansionist tendency diminished. And this complacency often contributed to the emergence of internal strife and collapse of the dynasties.⁷⁰ The Qur'an, as discussed above, does provide the grounds for unique conceptions of jihad ideology in the hands of mujtahidun or even self acclaimed mujtahidun.

⁶⁸ Kane’s contribution to updating literature on Islam and social change in northern Nigeria in his 2003 book title Muslim modernity in postcolonial Nigeria: A study of the Society for the Removal of Innovation and Reinstatement of Tradition is very valuable.

⁶⁹ The translation of this was not provided by the author. I could not find appropriate translation for it.

Summary

In this chapter, the researcher discussed theology, law and interpretation in Islam and discovered how central these are to a Muslim's life, as well as to understanding Islam. We saw how critical interpretations are to Muslims' ibadat (ritual performance) and mu'amalat (relationship with others) as they seek to obey and submit to Allah completely. The quest for correct interpretation of divine laws led to the emergence of the four major schools of law after the demise of the prophet, the Caliphs and the Umayyad dynasty. Then the next Abbasid dynasty saw the systematization of interpretation to rely on the Qur'an, Sunna, qiyas and ijma exercised through ijtihad. This necessitated the emergence of mujtahidun who are skilled in exercising ijtihad. The continued emergence of mujtahidun is contingent on the constant social changes confronting Islam and the need for contextualized interpretations. It is this situation, in addition to the fact that mujtahidun are rewarded in the hereafter, whether their interpretation is correct or wrong, that led to the emergence of mujtahidun like Maududi.

Furthermore, the researcher discussed the concept of jihad in the Qur'an and its significance in the lives of Muslims, and making it necessary to interpret it for Muslims as to how it should be undertaken. Traditional and fundamentalist interpretations of jihad became obvious. In addition, it surfaced that despite the numerous war terms in the Qur'an, it cannot be definitely established that jihad means violence, even though it is accepted by Muslims that Islam allows for violence under certain conditions. Rather, it came out that peaceful (moral), defensive (repelling aggression), and offensive (militant) jihads can all be supported from the Qur'an. The researcher argues that in view of this review of literature, fundamentalists appear justified to pursue militant jihad as interpreters like Maududi justified it.

⁷⁰ For further discussions on the caliphates and their collapse see Karsh (2007), Wheatcroft (2003), and Armour, Sr., (2002).

It also emerged that umma and apostasy cannot be sources of conflicts with other religions without additional interpretations outside the conventional meanings. Finally, jihad as a source of culture change was discussed. Although historical evidence exists to show that jihad has been a source of culture change, it needs an arrowhead leader providing the ideological content to perform that role. In contemporary times, Maududi assumed that role of being the arrowhead in interpreting the role of jihad. The researcher's attention now turns to him next.

CHAPTER FOUR

ABUL ALA MAUDUDI AND HIS INTERPRETATION OF ISLAM

Introduction

In the previous chapter, the researcher posited that fundamentalists find Qur'anic support to justify the pursuit of militant jihad. Besides, the continued evolution of Islamic society validates the emergence of mujtahidun (diligent independent interpreters) to give it guidance (Waines 1995, 77, 85-86). Indeed, right or wrong, mujtahidun have a reward for their interpretations (Waines 1995, 76, 85). One such contemporary mujtahid is Maududi, who interpreted the necessity for militant jihad in the establishment of an Islamic state, thereby politicizing jihad.

The researcher observes that the passion for an Islamic state is present among Muslims of northern Nigeria, and jihad, both militant and non-militant, seems to be the preferred instrument or route to achieve this desire. Has Maududi's interpretation played a part in the development of this passion for militant jihad in northern Nigeria? This is a valid question because Islamic scholars credit Maududi with the development of political interpretation of Islam. Nasr acknowledges that the essence of Maududi's message is distinct from "the teaching and worldview of traditional Islam within the debate in which his vision took shape" (1996, 6). He argues, as did Zakaria (2010, 721), that Maududi is the first Islamic thinker to develop a "systematic political reading of Islam and a plan for social action to realize his vision" (1996, 3). Ayooob adds that "Maududi is the most seminal thinker of all the ideologues of the Islamist movement. His approach to Islam was quintessentially political" (2008, 66). Cheema credits Maududi with making the creation of an Islamic state a religious duty to struggle for, just like other religious obligations (2013, 52), and as we shall see, people like Qutb and others only interpreted this concept further.

Furthermore, in the editor's comment to Maududi's book of 1960, the renowned Islamic scholar Khurshid Ahmad says it is no exaggeration to say that by the time of his death, Maududi "had become the most widely read Muslim author of our time, contributing immensely to the contemporary resurgence of Islamic ideas, feelings and activity all over the world” (Maududi 1960, 13; cf Rahman and Ali 2012, 235; Adams 1983, 99). Zakaria affirms that Maududi is arguably the one who gave a modern meaning to umma as one that is separate and distinct from a secular-national community (2010, 721), and universal in nature (Ayoob 2008, 67). Ayubi seems to agree when he argues that nowhere in the Qur’an or subsequent writing of Muslim authors is umma given unequivocally religious connotation (1991, 3), and so “the main Qur’anic concept of the body politic (umma). . . is not necessarily a religious one” (1991, 91 italics original).

In fact, Wood argues that Maududi established “a religio-political idiom for Islamic fundamentalism” (2011, 174). This is in line with Nasr’s claim that it is Maududi’s “creation of a coherent Islamic ideology, articulated in terms of the elaborate organization of an Islamic state” that provided the essential breakthrough leading to the rise of contemporary revivalism (1996, 3). Indeed, Ayubi acknowledges that “one of the most important contemporary sources for the doctrine of political Islam” is the writings of Maududi (1991, 96). Politics is important to Maududi because he believes it is the most “legitimate vehicle for the manifestation of Islamic revelation” and the sole means for the expression of Islamic spirituality (Ayoob 2008, 67).

In his model, Wood traces the genealogy of fundamentalist ideology from Maududi through Qutb to contemporary fundamentalist discourse. He cites Nasr, in another work, as labeling fundamentalism as Maududi’s “brainchild” (2011, 174). It is in the light of all the above that it is now necessary to discuss who Maududi is and his interpretation of Islam, especially his political theory of Islam.

Abul Ala Maududi

The researcher relied on the following sources to provide all the information about the life and works of Maududi: Jackson (2011, Chapter 1-5), Encyclopedia of World Biography on Abu-I A'la Maududi, Encyclopedia of the Middle East on Maududi, Nasr (1995), Rahman and Ali (2012, 233), Armajani (2012, 164-164), Adams (1983, 100-111) and Nasr (1996, 9-26). The following website also provided the timelines in Maududi’s biography: <http://aamaududifsl.blogspot.com/2010/01/biography-of-abul-> aala-maududi-rahi-of.html. The summary of the life of Maududi and his works are based on these sources.

As mentioned above, Maududi is acclaimed as one of the foundation stones of the 20th–century Islamic resurgence and most read Muslim writer of his time. Maududi was born in 1903 and died in 1979. He was born in Awrangabad of Hyderabad, a state in present day India, and into a strong Muslim family. He was the youngest of five sons born to Sayyid Ahmad Hassan Maududi, and the second son of his second wife. Maududi descended from one of the prominent branches of the Chishti Sufi order. His father was a deeply religious lawyer. His father’s religiosity might have influenced Maududi and sowed the seed for his religious passion later in life. He went to school in the same town of Awrangabad until he was 15 and was forced to leave school after the death of his father, who succumbed to a stroke. Most of his Islamic education was conducted at home and not in a traditional Muslim religious school. This led to criticism of Maududi’s qualification as a mujtahid when he began to publish his religious views.

Maududi ventured into a writing career when he moved to Bijnur in the United Province of India to join his brother, who was then the editor of the journal Madinah. Maududi then went on to work as a journalist at age 17, first as a correspondent and then editor of Taj in Jabalbur. He became editor of Muslim, the magazine of India’s learned Muslim divines called Jam ‘iyat-i Ulama in 1920, until 1923 when it closed. After 18 months he became the editor of its prestigious replacement, al-Jam ‘yah, and left journalism in 1927 to engage in scholarly writing. Maududi’s passion for writing might have been influenced by his maternal grandfather who was a poet and a writer. It is during this period that he wrote the history of Asafiyah dynasty of Hyderabad and Towards Understanding Islam that brought him out as a serious religious writer.

It is also clear that Maududi was an avid reader beyond Islamic writings, by the western discourse and thought in many of his writings, although he was distrustful of the premises of western thought and its objectives. And it is apparent that his reading of modernity and western thought was thorough, by his succinct critique of them. Maududi shared the deep concerns of the Deobandis of India in respect of the intrusion of colonial culture into the lives of Muslims. Maududi’s intellectual awakening that led him to reading and exchange of ideas, which included anti colonial rhetoric, rhymed with his increasing interest in politics, leading to his participation in the independent movement in India.

Consequently, Maududi had a political stint with Gandhi in Satyagraha, but it ended in 1921 because he felt the interests of Hindus and Muslims were divergent and irreconcilable, as India moved towards independence. He later viewed Gandhi with contempt. The disappointment with the nationalistic stance of Gandhi would push Maududi into a deeper involvement with the Khilafat movement, from where he learnt more about the West and politics. He also learned the art of social mobilization, political propaganda, as well as “the utility of putting Islamic slogans and symbols to communalist and political use” (Nasr 1996, 19), skills he apparently would put into effective use nationally and globally, as his influence seemed to suggest. The many ideas of the Khilafat movement, such as anti-imperialism, attempts at uniting various expressions of Islam in India, its pan-Islamic sentiments, its use of symbols to political end, and its consideration of the viability of resuscitating the institutions of the Caliphate, are all attributed to Maududi. The failure of the Khilafat movement in 1924, occasioned by the Turkish government’s abolishment of the Caliphate, and his distrust for nationalism had a far reaching impact in driving Maududi back to Islam and the revival of its institutions in crafting a political strategy for safeguarding the interests of Muslims. This led him from communalism to global Islamic revivalism. This necessitated the reinterpretation of umma into a universal ideological state.

Maududi’s journalistic writing experience propelled him into Islamic writing, as he politically interpreted Islam and promoted the need to bring religion into politics. The reason is that Maududi considered the abolishment of the Caliphate by the Turkish government as a result of machinations of Westernized Turkish nationalists, as well as betrayal by Arab nationalists. Maududi, therefore, considered the eternal marriage of religion and politics as the right strategy to safeguard Islam from all corrupting influences and demise. One of the defining works that espoused his principles, and would reflect in his later writings, is Jihad fi Sabilillah (Jihad in the way of God). His association with Tarjuman al-Qur’an in 1932 provided the vehicle for propagating his views of reforms among Muslims, and his views of Jama’at-i-islami (The Party of Islam) he founded in 1941.

Maududi, with some of his followers, moved to Pakistan in 1947 when the Indian sub-continent was partitioned, where he assumed the political role of the main advocate for an Islamic state. He was jailed in 1948 and 1953 for being antagonistic to the government and agitating against the Ahamadiyah sect, respectively. He later received a death sentence from a military court that was never administered.

The 1958 military takeover banned political parties, including his jama'at-i-islami, and this turned him into an advocate for restoration of democracy. His opposition to the government of Ayyub Khan got him rearrested in 1964. Maududi was a pragmatist. Against his religious belief, he supported a female presidential candidate. He joined right wing religious parties to oppose Ali Bhutto's socialism in 1970. Maududi's acceptance of militancy was also clear, as he ordered his followers to support and participate with the military against the Bengalis in the 1971 civil war, when Bangladesh emerged so as to save Pakistan. He finally resigned as Amir of jama'at-i-islami party. Maududi died in a New York hospital where he was receiving treatment in 1979. He has written over 120 works reflecting various aspects of Islam.

Why Maududi

As the preceding introduction discloses, Maududi's interpretation and militant rhetoric had a global influence, especially on Qutb, as we shall see. The presence of his ideas in northern Nigerian Islam is also acknowledged. It became preferable to examine whether it is actually Maududi's interpretation that is the catalyst responsible for the emergence of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria in view of this disclosure. More so, if the argument that "...no account of the contemporary resurgence of Islam would be complete without attention to the major role played by Abul Ala Maududi in these movements" (Hassan 2003, 429) is true, then his influence on religious fundamentalism in northern Nigeria is worthy of examination.

Additionally, Maududi is considered as one of the most prolific thinkers of the contemporary Muslim world (Khalidi 2003, 415). His skills at interpreting Islam greatly influenced Sayyid Qutb of Egypt (Osman 2003, 478). It is in light of this that this work desires to examine Maududi's teaching, research into the presence of the elements of his teaching within Islamic jurisprudence and theology in northern Nigeria. This is to ascertain whether it accounts for the fueling of Islamic fundamentalism and religious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Furthermore, Demant establishes the foundation of Qutb's ideas in Maududi's thoughts. Demant argues that although the global fundamentalist Sunni movements appear to be inspired by Egypt's Muslim Brotherhood and the ideas of Sayyid Qutb as its principal ideologue, "Qutb was strongly influenced by the writings of Abu al-Ala al-Mawdudi of Pakistan who was educated in the ultraconservative deobandi school. In the 1940s and 1950s, he developed five principles that Qutb would later make his own: anti-apology, anti-westernism, literalism, politicization, and universalism” (2006, 97, 98). Importantly, it is in the 1950s that Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt started to become militant, as we saw in chapter one as revealed by Esposito. Osman, like Demant, also argues that Maududi’s skills at interpreting Islam greatly influenced Sayyid Qutb (2003, 478; also Nasr 1996, 3). And as Khalidi acknowledges, Maududi is one of the most prolific thinkers of the contemporary Muslim world who greatly influenced the advocates of Islamic fundamentalism (2003, 415; also Nasr 1996, 3). Maududi is recognized to have written more about Islamic jihad than any Islamic writer.

Scholars like Esposito (1999) appear to suggest that Qutb was the main promoter of radical, militant or combative Islam. This position seems to neglect Maududi’s militant stance on jihad, and the fact that it was Maududi’s theological ideology regarding jihad that influenced Qutb, especially if we consider the opinion of the scholars discussed above and additional scholarly opinions below. This same ideology has been exported to northern Nigeria. The researcher believes there is both direct and indirect influence of Maududi’s ideology on northern Nigerian Islam. The direct influence is through contact with Maududi’s writings, while the indirect influence is through encounter with ideas of others who have been influenced by Maududi, such as Qutb or even late Sheikh Abubakar Gummi’s Izala movement. The extent of this direct and indirect influence will be explored.

It is significant to note also that the writings of Maududi are still being published and distributed in Nigeria by The Islamic Foundation of Nigeria, a branch of The Islamic Foundation based in the United Kingdom, which has an office in Kano. In addition, although his writings are considered old by some in Kano, they are still being marketed in Kasuwan Kurmi (Kurmi Market), renowned for decades in producing and marketing Islamic publications within neighboring countries like Niger, Benin Republic and surrounding countries. They are also found in libraries of northern Nigerian universities. Also, the rhetoric of modern Islamic clerics in northern Nigeria seems laced with Maududian rhetoric.

Maududi is, therefore, selected as the main research focus in this present study above Qutb, who was majorly influenced by Maududi. Since there is evidence that Maududi’s militant writings have found their way to Nigeria, and of the extent of his global influence, it is preferable to examine his influence on Islam in northern Nigeria. Nasr seems to suggest that even Khomeini was influenced by the writings of Maududi (1996, 3). This influence on Khomeini is confirmed below.

Furthermore, Ahmad reveals that Maududi's writings were adopted as important sources to develop the agenda for Islamic social change even in Nigeria (2003, 533). This desire for Islamic social change appears to have made Islam in northern Nigeria militant, anti-West and anti-Christian, as Maududi's five principles espoused. The latter two appear to be inseparably intertwined, where Christianity is seen to be wearing western skin. It is seen as an agent of western subjugation and bringer of all that is morally evil in the West to Islam, in the name of modernity and progress. This might suggest why the church in northern Nigeria bears the brunt of any anti-western aggression through the burning of churches and killing of Christians.

Conditions that Influenced Maududi's Interpretation of Islam

Nasr (1996) discusses the conditions which influenced Maududi into fundamentalism. These conditions are significantly similar to those in northern Nigeria after colonialism. These conditions made northern Nigerian Islam as receptive to Islamic fundamentalist ideologies as Maududi's India. These conditions are summarized as the loss of prestige, status, economic power, political influence, and cultural harmony. Ahmad argues that what generally led to Islamic resurgence is the "positive aspiration of the Islamic umma to regain the position it lost because of the western domination . . . a dissatisfaction with the ideals and values, the institutions and systems of government exported from the west and imposed on them" (1983, 220, 226).

Specifically, Nasr explains how the collapse of the Caliphate affected Maududi. The collapse of the Caliphate revealed his distrust and frustration with secular political institutions to bring change and even safe guard Muslim interests in India, where Islam had reigned supreme for decades (1996, 20). The defeat of the Khilafat Movement and the inability of the Muslim intellectual leaders to defend Islam adequately, coupled with the attendant helplessness and resignation, "impressed on Maududi the need for action" (1996, 21-22). This stirred in him the desire to restore the lost glory of Islam in India (1996, 23).

Another influence was the neglect of his contribution by the Islamic political class of India towards reviving Islam in India (1996, 27), which created a lack of confidence in traditional Islam (1996, 29). This is in view of the death of Islamic thought, diminishing and decline of Islamic values and morality (1996, 32). Nasr argues that this made Maududi seek recourse to “Islam itself and to the revival of its values as key to reversing the decline of Muslim power in India” (1996, 27). Ahmad agrees with Nasr that Maududi’s focus was to restore Islamic political power in India (1989, 37, 48).

This recourse to Islamic sources with its provisions seem to make the jihadist militant tone of the Qur’an appealing to Maududi. Falola suggests, “Islam has tradition of militancy...and some believe that jihad is the only way to purify Islam and overcome paganism entirely” (1998, 46). This tradition of militancy must have held an attraction for Maududi. Although Nasr suggests that Maududi did not advocate or favor violent revolution (1996, 69), it can be argued that his theological ideology does. Ahmad, however, disagrees with Nasr by arguing in his book that Maududi’s rhetoric and writings incite, encourage and support violence by arguing it from the Qur’an and Islamic history (1989).

Maududi’s Influence on Global Islam

Badri, a Sudanese, aptly sets the tone for understanding Maududi’s influence on individuals and the Muslim world when he states, “I must say that I am also indebted to Maududi’s literature in directing me, even at a young age, to the idea of the Islamization of the social sciences” (2003, 501). Nasr states that “his prolific writings have not only made him the foremost revivalist thinker of his time, but have also confirmed his place as an important force in traditional religious scholarship.” He goes further to say that “Maududi’s ideological perspective, one of the most detailed and compelling articulations of the revivalist position, has been influential in the unfolding of revivalism across the Muslim world” (1995, 49, 50). Moten affirms by stating that “highly influential and prolific as Maududi was, his writings have greatly contributed to the articulation of Islamic revivalist thought and has influenced Muslim thinkers and activists all over the world” (2004, 247).

Maududi did not only shape individuals, but ideologies and territories. He postulated ideas that provided a theoretical basis for Islamization of knowledge (Moten 2004); he influenced Islamic discourse on human rights with over 40 titles (Idris 2003); and promoted Islamic renaissance fundamentalism (Ahmad 1967). Tibi recognizes Maududi as the intellectual father of Islamic fundamentalism (1998, 42), while Wood is categorical that Maududi “provided fundamentalism with its key vocabulary” (2011, 174). Khalidi (2003) and Moten (2003) expose his influence on political discourse in India and Pakistan, and Ahmad (2003) discloses how Maududi influenced discussion on Shari’a. Through the Penal Code and recent Sharia documents, this influence would be explored.

Furthermore, Lerman uncovers how Maududi shaped the understanding of the concept of Islam itself (1981, 496), while Ansari expertly discusses Maududi’s contribution to Islamic theology by chronicling Maududi’s contribution to Islamic theology, although he did not leave behind any systematic work on theology (2003). Chapra gives a full discourse of how Maududi influenced Islamic economics and banking (2004). Maududi is said to argue that the real threat to Islam was western thought, and so he set out to critique the secular mind and erase the Muslim’s acceptance of the supremacy of the West (Jan 2003, 504). In fact, Osman argues that Maududi was responsible for shaping or developing the modern Islamic thinking in the Arabic speaking world (2003). Tibi confirms that Maududi is the most read, not only in the Arabic speaking world, but the entire world of Islam (1998, 34).

Outside the Arabic speaking world, his territorial influence is also evident. Moten suggests that Maududi’s ideas actually took shape in South Asia, and his influence there has been more pronounced (2004, 247-248). According to Idris, Maududi used his “pen to counter the effect of external influences on Muslims in India” (2003, 548). Indeed, in his article on a brief survey of the influence of Maududi’s thoughts in South Asia, Hassan claims that his thoughts have influenced the following countries through varieties of his writing: Malaysia, Indonesia, Philippines, Thailand, Singapore, Cambodia, Vietnam and Myanmar, and Brunei Darussalam (2003).

Maududi’s ideas have been most influential in the Muslim majority countries of Southeast Asia, particularly Malaysia⁷¹ and Indonesia. These are the most exposed countries where the Muslim population constituted about 200 million, and his writings were available in English, Malaysian and Indonesian translations (Hassan 2003). Demant not only affirms Maududi’s influence in South Asia, but also his global influence (2006, 154-157).

⁷¹ It is no surprise that militant Islam is so strong recently in Malaysia and some South Asian countries.

Ahmad argues that Maududi's revivalist writings and preachings, and his monolithic, totalitarian⁷² and fanatical religiopolitical organization were the most dynamic and well organized challenge that modernist Islam in Pakistan faced (1967, 368). It is important to note the fanatical religiopolitical aspect. Important also is Osman's revelation of the manifestation of his ideas in the exegesis of Qutb in Egypt, and other Islamic personalities in Algeria, Iran and Sudan as a result of the availability of Arabic translation of his works since early 1950s (2003, 465). Very significant to this work is, unlike several scholars who proffer Qutb as influencing the philosophy of Al-Qaeda, Jackson avers that it is Maududi who influenced Azzam and Azzam taught Osama bin Laden. Besides this influence on Al-Qaeda, Jackson insists that Khomeini found Maududi's theodemocracy fitting for Shi'a political thought after translating his works into Farsi (2011, 2).⁷³ This adds to the significance of studying his influence on northern Nigerian Muslims and leaders, since the common belief is that it is Qutb who is the major influence on Muslim brothers and Al-Qaeda as well as Khomeini's Iranian revolution. Most militant Islamic groups in Nigeria are said to be linked to Al-Qaeda.

Ahmad confirms Maududi's influence and states that Egypt was actually the first country where his writings initiated new waves of thought within Islamic circles, then Sudan in 1952 and the following countries: Turkey, Syria, Iraq, Indonesia, Malaysia, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Nigeria, South Africa, Kenya as well as elsewhere (2003, 533 italics mine). In a summary fashion, Khalidi says Maududi's "ideas have greatly influenced Islamic movements within his native India-Pakistan subcontinent, to the Middle East and Maghrib in the west, and to Southeast Asia in the east, due to widely available translations of his works in Arabic, English and other languages" (2003, 415).

Nasr (1996), in his in-depth analytical work on Maududi's thoughts, ideology and philosophy exposes how Maududi impacted Islamic revivalism globally. In the light of this, Ahmad's conclusion is apt that "it was his unique discourse, both in form and substance, that led to the intellectual and cultural grooming of several generations of Muslims” (Ahmad 2003, 533). These generations of Muslims could have been groomed in northern Nigeria as well. All the above make the examination of Maududi’s influence on northern Nigerian Islam compelling and necessary, in attempting to understand its bearing on religious conflicts there. How did Maududi influence Qutb and Muslim Brotherhood of Egypt?

⁷² Tibi argues that Maududi shaped totalitarian fundamentalism, insists that Islamic fundamentalism is a new variety of totalitarianism and indeed the most recent variety of totalitarianism following in the wake of fascism and communism (1998, 138, 177, 200). He is unequivocal that Islamic state points to totalitarian political rule (1998, 58, 158), and his basis for this is that hakimiyyat Allah does not exist in the Qur'an (1998, 29). He asserts that fundamentalists defile Islam by legitimizing totalitarianism as well as silencing liberal Muslims (1998, 154).

⁷³ Philip Jenkins in an article of December 24, 2008 "The roots of Jihad in India" on tnr.com The New Republic confirmed Khomeini met with Maududi as early as 1963 which led to the translation of his works into Farsi. Consequently, Khomeini's revolutionary rhetoric often draws from Maududi.

Maududi’s Influence on Sayyid Qutb and Muslim Brotherhood of Egypt

Before the researcher discusses how Maududi’s ideology, or his interpretation of Islam, is linked to northern Nigeria, let me examine Maududi’s influence on Qutb. Wood traces the genealogy of fundamentalist ideology from Maududi through Qutb to contemporary fundamentalist discourse (2011, 174). His position seems to accept Maududi as the major architect of contemporary or modern fundamentalist ideology, as Tibi does above, with others as channels. This researcher sees Qutb as a channel and an extension of Maududi’s global influence across the Muslim world, despite his acclaim. This section is, therefore, not a comparison of Qutb and Maududi’s ideas, but establishing Maududi’s influence on Qutb and its global implications. Qutb is seen as an extension of Maududi per se in this research. Since, therefore, it is not Qutb’s ideology that is under scrutiny here, reliance on scholarly materials that have effectively and sufficiently summarized his ideas are adequate. This notwithstanding, ideas from Qutb’s book Milestones are compared to Maududi’s ideas below.

Nonetheless, Qutb has been described as “the most sophisticated representative of Islamic fundamentalism in the modern Arab world” (Abu-Rabi 1991, 285). This is in spite of the fact that Rahman and Ali, through content analysis of Qutb’s work, have established that the most important person responsible for shaping the life of Qutb and creating profound changes in his intellectual and political outlook is Maududi (2012). Born in 1906 and executed in 1966, Qutb joined the Muslim Brotherhood in 1951 (Rahman and Ali 2012, 235).⁷⁴ Nasser sentenced him to fifteen years in 1954, but released him in 1964. He rearrested him in 1966 and executed him (Shephard 1989, 32 and Musallam 1990, 176). Although Qutb benefitted from western education when he was in the United States from 1948-1951, he derided the decadence he saw there ⁷⁴ Some authors say that Qutb joined the Ikhwan in 1953. It appears by the report of other authors and events surrounding his contact with Nadwi as we discussed below, 1951 is more accurate.

(Ungureanu 2010, 182; Laboda 2004, 1), and resented secularism and support for Israel by America (Calvert 2000, 115).

The impact of his experience in America led to his joining the revolutionary movement of the Muslim Brothers on return to Egypt and declaring that 1951 signified his new birth (Ungureanu 2010, 182).⁷⁵ Perhaps his American experience became the catalyst that persuaded Qutb to embrace fundamentalism. Indeed, Laboda seems to agree when he declares that “Qutb’s rejection of the West would lead him towards a more radical agenda in Egypt that affirmed his Islamic beliefs” (2004, 1).

It is also important to establish the link between Qutb and Maududi before engaging the ideas of Maududi in Qutb’s writings. In doing this, it is necessary to reemphasize that Maududi has been accepted as the initiator of the political reading of Islam with a plan on how to achieve this vision, especially of an Islamic state. He used his mobilization skills, as discussed above, to galvanize Muslims in India, his sub-continent and later globally (Nasr 1996, 3; Zakaria 2010, 721). He also promoted the creation of an Islamic state as a religious obligation (Cheema 2013, 52) because he considered Islamic rule as the only rule under which Muslims can fully live freely as Muslims (Butterworth 2010, 717).⁷⁶ He, as well, gave umma a modern iteration (Zakaria 2010, 721) because, for Maududi, the Islamic state is not any specific nation, it is the umma, and umma is a moral and ideological entity universal in nature. Nationalism is a western concept with no place in Islam (Jackson 2011, 129). In addition, he articulated the legitimacy of jihad with the sword (New World Encyclopedia).

It is perhaps in the light of what has been stated above that Zakaria accepts that Maududi’s political reading of Islam influenced Qutb through his writings. He agrees that Qutb only built on the writings of Maududi (2010, 721; cf Ayoub 2008, 73; Bennett 2004, 45). Indeed, Ayubi is more emphatic that Qutb actually assembled the elements from the thoughts of Maududi and Nadwi (a disciple of Maududi) and “reproduced such ideas in a more extreme, single minded and action oriented fashion” (1991, 104). One of the areas in which Qutb rehashed Maududi, according to Laboda, is by taking Maududi’s position discussed in his Four terminologies in the Qur’an that “obedience to any man made government and its laws is to worship the same men who created it” (2004, 7). El-Kadi wrote that “Qutb’s writings prior to 1951 are more of a “moralist.” It was after he was introduced to Maududi’s ideas, especially his emphasis on Islam being a complete way of life, and establishment of Allah’s order on earth as every Muslim’s primary responsibility, that Qutb changed into a revolutionary” (n.d.). El-kadi believes his two years stay in the US opened his eyes to the malaise of the western culture and non-Islamic ideologies (n.d.)

⁷⁵ All the biographical information provided here is corroborated by al-Mehri in his biography of Qutb included in his translation of Milestones written by Qutb published by Maktabah Book Sellers and Publishers in 2006.

⁷⁶ It is important to acknowledge that this position taken by Maududi does have a potential of generating conflicts where Muslims co-exist with other non-Muslims in a secular system as it is in Nigeria if it becomes an agenda in the hands of even a few radical Muslims.

Rahman and Ali argue that Maududi’s writings “attracted Qutb so much... including the idea of establishing a true Islamic society” (2012, 232). Qutb’s interest in Maududi’s writings began in the early 1950s as a result of several translations of his works into languages of the Muslim and western worlds. Qutb gained access to Maududi’s writings when he joined the Ikhwan (Muslim Brothers), and played a crucial role in translating and circulating Maududi’s ideas. Among the works translated at that time were Jihad in Islam, Islam and Jahiliyya and The Principles of Islamic Government (2012, 232, 234; cf Sivan 1985, 23).

Rahman and Ali add that Qutb met al-Nadwi,⁷⁷ a friend and disciple of Maududi, in 1951 who authored a book entitled What did the World Lose Due to the Decline of Islam? The book contained Maududi’s views on modern jahiliyya.⁷⁸ Consequently, Qutb’s exposure to Maududi’s ideas and Islamic activism increased when he met al-Nadwi that year. Therefore, Qutb’s works in the 1950s quoted Maududi’s Islamic ideas and terms such as jahiliyya, hakimiyya, manhaj and jihad.⁷⁹ Qutb will also accept jahiliyya as encompassing the whole world based on Maududi’s concept of pure and mixed jahiliyya, the former being total rejection of God and the later being the association of religion with infidelity by Muslim leaders. Rahman and Ali affirm that Maududi’s Islamic thoughts were a paramount influence, and Qutb’s joining of Ikhwan in 1951 was a significant moment in his Islamic activism (2012, 235; cf Calvert 2010, 157-158).

⁷⁷ Although New World Encyclopedia reported that Maududi toured a number of countries from 1959-60 including Egypt, there is no sound academic proof that Qutb met Maududi. There is only conjecture found in non-academic sites that Maududi’s son claimed that Qutb met his father during one of the hajjs in Mecca.

⁷⁸ The traditional concept of jahiliyya in Islamic history is the period of ignorance before the coming of Islam (pre-Islamic period) characterized by total pagan ignorance in Arabia. Maududi argues that modern jahiliyya has two sources: ‘traditional’ which describes the practice of Muslim political leaders after Muhammad and the first two Caliphs and ‘Western’ which was brought to the Muslim world by colonialism and imperialism (Ayubi 1991, 98).

⁷⁹ Ayubi also accepts that these terms are reproduced by Qutb from Maududi (1991, 106).

Khatab draws our attention to Shepard's objection to the notion by several scholars that Qutb borrowed the concept of jahiliyya from Maududi, because the term is not new and exists in Arabic literature (2006, 5, 59). However, what Shepard appears to ignore is the fact that Maududi generated a modern interpretation of jahiliyya away from the traditional meaning. It is this modern interpretation of jahiliyya that Qutb borrowed. Wood also affirms that the concept of modern jahiliyya is Maududi's (2011, 174). In fact, Sivan has this to say about Islamic renaissance, that "the renaissance had its origin in the theory of 'Modern Jahiliyya' (that is, modernity as the New Barbarity) developed in India since 1939 by Maulana Maudoodi" (1985, 22). Indeed, Qutb only picked up Maududi's concept of jahiliyya (New World Encyclopedia; Khatab 2006, 59).⁸⁰ Maududi's concept of jahiliyya concerns the deviation of self proclaimed Muslims, influence of imperialist powers and use of non-Islamic laws (Woktorowicz 2005, 78), as against the traditional view of pre-Islamic ignorance of pagan Arabia. And he insists that all Muslims must struggle (jihad) against this ignorance because a Muslim's allegiance should be to his religion alone (Ayubi 1991, 109).

Woktorowicz corroborates Rahman and Ali with this copious quote:

Mawdudi's importance for the Egyptian stream is his impact on Sayyid Qutb, often seen as the godfather of revolutionary Sunni Islam (he was executed by Nasser in 1966). Qutb read Mawdudi's most influential works, including Jihad in Islam, Islam and Jahiliyya, and Principles of Islamic Government, which were translated into Arabic beginning in the 1950s. A more direct connection existed through one of Mawdudi's most important protégés, Abdul Hasan Ali Nadvi, who was a central figure in transmitting his mentor's theories to the Arab world. In 1950, Nadvi wrote What Did the World Lose Due to the Decline of Islam?, a book published in Arabic that expounded on Mawdudi's theory of modern jahiliyya. When he first traveled to the Middle East in 1951, Nadvi met with Qutb, who had already read his book. Both Mawdudi and Nadvi are quoted at length in Qutb's In the Shade of the Qu'ran, published in 1953 (2005, 78-79; cf Sivan 1985, 23).

He sums up that Qutb brought together Maududi's "modern jahiliyya" and Ibn Taymiyyah's argument that the unity of God demands that all Muslims follow divine laws (2005, 78-79).

⁸⁰ Ayubi also accepts Maududi's unorthodox application of jahiliyya to contemporary Muslim society as original to him and considers it his main "theoretical contribution" which specifically influenced the thinking of Sayyid Qutb and several radical Islamic activists (1991, 98).

It is understandable, therefore, that Wood will claim that Maududi is arguably the “most influential Sunni Muslim to be labeled fundamentalist” (2011, 174). In fact, Murr is more definitive that Maududi shaped Qutb’s Islamist ideology (2004, n.p.). Perhaps it is Laboda’s summary that captures it all by declaring that “the thoughts of Maulana Mawdudi . . . was influential in molding Qutb’s belief that the government is the most defining aspect of society” (2004, 7-8), after examining various quotes from Maududi in Qutb’s works.

It is difficult to argue against the fact that Maududi drew inspiration from Taymiyyah, the best known *Salafi*⁸¹ scholar (Jackson 2011, 96-98).⁸² Similarly, it appears difficult to argue against Maududi being the author of the concept of “modern jahiliyya” and a few more concepts, as explained above, or refute the influence of Maududi on Qutb.⁸³ Perhaps one can only debate its extent, as Shepard above seems to have done. It is also acceptable to argue that some of the concepts in Maududi’s Islamic thoughts and ideas are not essentially new; it is, however, the modern and contemporary interpretations given to them that make them unique to him and signify his breaking away from tradition, as captured by Nasr (1996, 110-114).

There is additional support, not only on Maududi’s influence on Qutb, but also on the whole Islamic world. Ahmad indicates that Egypt was the first country to be influenced by Maududi’s writing (2003, 533). It is also accepted that Maududi is the most read Muslim writer who exerted great influence on Qutb (Encyclopedia of World Biography; Demant 2006, 99). Demant concedes that Egypt is the center of gravity from which Islamism radiated abroad. He added that in the 1970s and 1980s, while the “South and South East Asia” with the largest Sunni Muslims was calm, Egypt was “where the first fundamentalist wave to sweep the Islamic world had its origin and its most forceful manifestation” (Demant 2006, 105). Roper conclusively ties Muslim Brotherhood of Egypt to Maududi (2007, 12), as Ayubi seems to do (1991, 93), and rightly so, in view of the above and the fact that it is there that Qutb came into contact with Maududi's writings and his ideology ultimately.

⁸¹ The salafi philosophy calls “for ‘a return to true Islam’ as practiced by the first generation of Muslims in the seventh century. Advocates of salafiyya believe that only by returning to the “true Islam” of the salaf (ancestors) can Muslims fight the immorality, foreign values and practices, and domination by others” (Kirmanj 2008, 70).

⁸² Jackson argues that although categorized as Salafi, Maududi must be distinguished from salafis because his ‘idiosyncratic’ approach to ijtihad, which he combines with literalist exegesis makes him different slightly (2011, 106).

⁸³ Sivan clearly argues that “the core of Sayyid Qutb’s ideas thus consists in a total rejection of modernity-following in this his Indian teachers Maudoodi and Nadvi-since modernity represents the negation of God’s sovereignty (hakimiyya) in all fields of life and relegation of religion to the dustbin of history” (1985, 27).

At this stage, it is appropriate to link the examination of Qutb's significant ideas as they reflect Maududi's ideology as a logical precursor to discussing Maududi's ideas below. It is important to reemphasize that when Maududi is credited with these ideas, it is not that the concepts are necessarily new as Ayubi points out (1991, 93-94, 106). The researcher has earlier discussed the traditional Islamic roots of some of these concepts in the previous chapter. It is the modern interpretation he gave to them that distinguish his ideas from the traditional interpretations, as Ayubi acknowledges. The concepts are old, but the interpretations are new. Scholarly, the opinions above have already affirmed that the modern interpretation of jahiliyya, *hakimiyya*⁸⁴, manhaj and jihad in Qutb's ideology are derived from Maududi's works, and the researcher intends to provide some supporting references from Maududi's works to these ideas.

First, the modern concept of jihad in Qutb's view reflects Maududian influence, captured in his book Jihad in Islam, as we shall see.⁸⁵ Qutb states thus,

Before a Muslim steps into the battle field, he has already fought a great battle within himself against Satan, against his own desires and ambitions, his personal interests and inclinations, the interests of his own family and of his nation; against anything which is not from Islam; against every obstacle which comes into the way of worshipping Allah and implementation of the Divine authority on earth, returning this authority to Allah and taking it away from the rebellious usurpers (Qutb 2006, 82).

Damant asserts that Qutb only accepted and expanded Maududi's concept of jihad to Muslim society itself (2006, 100).

In addition, Qutb's idea of the modern expansion of jihad to include mushriks and Islamic states not under Shari'a (Demant 2006, 102) appears rooted in Maududi's ruling that Muslims have a duty to internally fight the states where the rule of Allah is not in place (1964, 64).⁸⁶ Maududi adds that "in the initial stages it is incumbent upon members of the Islamic party of Islam to carry out a revolution in state systems of countries to which they belong” (1980, 23). Qutb’s advocacy for jihad to the whole world because it lies in jahiliyya (Shephard 2003, 523) can be traced to Maududi also (1980, 9; 1964, 64). His argument that the state (government) as an integral part of Islam necessary for implementation of Shari’a (Soage 2009, 300) is hinged on Maududi’s injunction that jihadists must seize government in order to fully practice Shari’a (1980, 26; 1964, 11; Nasr 1996, 81). In fact, the state must serve Allah (Demant 2006, 99). Muslims must bring about this through jihad (Ayubi 1991, 93).

⁸⁴ Shepard says jahiliyya and hakimiyya are Qutb's major theoretical contribution (2003, 521), yet this concepts are traced to Maududi as scholars indicated above. Shepard (2003, 524) and Khatab (2002, 152, 158) provided Qutb's definition of these concepts and they are not different from Maududi's, he only added. Qutb also says that continued jihad is needed until hakimiyya is achieved over all humanity. Compare that with Maududi's claim that jihad exists to "establish Allah's ways completely and in its entirety" (commentary on 8:39; 1964, 16-17, 64).

⁸⁵ New World Encyclopedia attributes Maududi as the one, through his writing, who advocated the legitimacy of the sword and was widely cited.

⁸⁶ The dates of publication provided are only the dates of publications available to the researcher and not the original dates of the publications.

Qutb sees Islam as inflexible and must follow Allah’s established path (Shephard 1989). His hermeneutics were radical to achieve this existential seclusion (Nayed 1982; Shephard 1992, 212-216). This existential seclusion of Muslims has Maududi’s idea of an Islamic state sown into it, as we saw above.⁸⁷ Indeed, the modern term of an Islamic state is attributed to Maududi, according to Nasr (1996, 80-106; cf Armajani 167-168; Adams 1983, 111-115). Furthermore, Qutb adopted a modern interpretation of the Qur’an (Kafrawi 1998), and like Yannaras sought to provide an alternative version of political society (Payne 2008). Therefore, Butterworth concludes that both Maududi and Qutb were religious populists appealing to masses rather than the learned (1992, 35-36). Invariably, Haddad agrees that Maududi and Qutb interpreted Islam as a revolution (1983, 17-19). Again Nasr, a major scholar on Maududi, attributes the coining of the term Islamic revolution to Maududi, with possible Marxist influence (1996, 70; cf Armajani 2012, 169-171; Jackson 2011, 146).⁸⁸ There is also a veiled acceptance of this idea in Enayat’s argument (2005, 83-84), and Enayat adds that Maududi believes that an Islamic state without an Islamic revolution will not succeed (2005, 102).⁸⁹ And Maududi first argued for Islam as a revolutionary ideology in Jihad in Islam (1980, 5, 22) to establish Allah’s way (1980, 9).

Qutb rejects the use of the Qur’an as a science book (Khir 2002), as he presents his Islamic view (Abubakar 1984). His position on the status of non-Muslims and the payment of jizya are Maududi's modern interpretations of the concepts (Khatab 2002). In fact, Ayubi says Maududi is antagonistic to non-Muslims and insists that they should be excluded from political participation as if they do not belong to their native countries (1991, 40). Qutb advocates equality of men and women, but like Maududi he justified men overseeing women (Agbetola 1989, 132-133). He also advocates that democracy and justice are primarily found in Islam (Khatab 2009, 318). These principles were Maududi's modern creation in his work Political theory of Islam (2011), where he even coined the term theodemocracy. Qutb ultimately holds, like Maududi, that the Qur'an is the ultimate source of knowledge and truth in all human existence (Nettler 1994, 112).

⁸⁷ Enayat accepts that Maududi’s religious and political teachings offer “the most comprehensive exposition so far of the nature of the Islamic state” (2005, 102).

⁸⁸ Nasr tones down Maududi’s call for revolution as evolutionary rather than militant, but this appears contrary to the tone of Maududi in several of his writings and the opinion of scholars like Ahamad in his work Murder in the Name of Allah (1989). And indeed, Nasr’s admittance that Maududi’s aim is for the religion to control centers of power (1996, 69) and “the Islamization of politics would have to be implemented, even through coercion” (1996, 82), appears to contradict the evolutionary revolution theory he is suggesting.

⁸⁹ Enayat thinks that Maududi believes violent revolution is not inevitable, but does not rule out force as an unavoidable means of dealing with the evil world (2005, 103).

Qutb, according to Khatab, "provided a modern systematic political, economic, social, intellectual and moral reading of Islam and outlined the islamically based political theory of Islamic nation state" (2004, 217). This is the reading of Islam whose origin is attributed to Maududi and his Political theory of Islam by scholars cited above. In general, Qutb echoes Maududi who says, "No community of Muslims can collectively adopt an independent attitude in political, cultural, economic, social and international matters and still remain Muslim" (commentary 106.3 on 9:111-112). Maududi's influence on Qutb is significantly immense and decisive.

Sampling Maududi's Ideas in Qutb's Milestones

The box below attempts to sample Maududi's ideas as they appear in Qutb's translated book Milestones (Ma'alim fi'l-tareeq) published in 2006.⁹⁰ Woktorowicz does mention that Qutb also quoted Maududi at length in his In the Shadow of the Qur'an (2005, 78-79). As mentioned above, since this is not a general content analysis of Maududi's work in Qutb, Rahman and Ali (2012) and Laboda (2004) have done that and reported their findings referred to above, this single book analysis suffices here just to buttress the researcher's position stated above that the researcher holds the view that Qutb is considered an extension of Maududi in this research.

Maududi - From several works	Qutb – From Milestones
On unapologetic Islam "But the Way of Allah is straight and clear and does not stand in need of any apology to the rebels against Allah" (Commentary 28 on sura 9:29 in Tafhim al-Qur'an).	On unapologetic Islam "There is nothing in our Islam of which we are ashamed or anxious about defending; there is nothing in it to be smuggled to the people with deception, nor do we muffle the loud truth"

⁹⁰It is important to still bear in mind that these publications are republished books and not the original dates of publications and that some of them have been published under modified formats and sometimes English titles.

	which it proclaims... A person who feels the need of defense, justification and apology is not capable of presenting Islam to people. Indeed, he is a person who lives the life of Jahiliyyah, hollow and full of contradictions, defects and evils, and intends to provide justification for the Jahiliyyah he is in" (p. 154).
On rejection westernization "On the one hand, Islam has set up such a superlative democracy, and on the other hand it has put stop to that individualism which militates against the health of the body-politic. The relations between the individual and society have been regulated in such a manner that neither the personality of the individual suffers diminution or corrosion, as it does in the communist and Fascist social systems, nor the individual allowed to exceed his bonds to such an extent as to become harmful to the community, as happened in the western democracies" (2011, 36). "What is the witness of our writers? That their literature has the same message to impart as that of the godless writers of the secular West" (2011, 34).	On rejection westernization "I, on the other hand, took the position of attacking the Western Jahiliyyah, its shaky religious beliefs, its social and economic modes, and its immoralities... Yet there are people - exponents of Islam-who are defeated before this filth in which Jahiliyyah is steeped, even to the extent that they search for resemblances to Islam among this rubbish heap of the West, and also among the evil and dirty materialism of the East" (p. 155).
On Literal reliance on the Qur'an and Sunna "There was a time when I was also a believer of traditional and hereditary religion and practiced it. . . . At last I paid attention to the Holy Book and the Prophet's Sunnah. I understood Islam and renewed my faith in it voluntarily" (cited in Nasr 1996, 29).	On Literal reliance on the Qur'an and Sunna "To wipe jahiliyyah we must return to the Qur'an and it is the only source (Qutb 2006, 28,) it is the only pure guidance (p. 30-3, 74). "The Islamic movement does not need any arguments taken from the literature, as it stands on the clear verses of the Qur'an" (p. 79) Commenting on Qur'an and Sunna: "Islam builds its entire structure in such a way that these two parts of the declaration determine its system and its characteristics" (p. 99)
On Universalism "A state of this sort evidently cannot restrict the scope of its activities. It is a universal and all inclusive state. Its sphere of activity is co-existence with the whole of human life" (2011, 29). "Islam does not recognize any geographical, linguistic or colour [barriers] in this respect. It puts forward its constitution, purpose and programme of reform before all men. Whoever embraces Islam, no matter what race, nation or country he may belong to, can join the community that runs the Islamic state. But those who do not accept it are not entitled to have any voice in shaping the policy of that state" (2011, 30)	On Universalism "A Muslim has no nationality except his belief, which makes him a member of the Muslim community in Dar-ul-Islam; a Muslim has no relatives except those who share the belief in Allah, and thus a bond is established between him and other Believers through their relationship with Allah Almighty. A Muslim has no relationship with his mother, father, brother, wife and other family members except through their relationship with the Creator, and then they are also joined through blood" (p. 133) "The homeland of the Muslim, in which he lives and which he defends, is not a piece of land; the nationality of the Muslim, by which he is identified, is not the nationality determined by a government; the family of the Muslim, in which he finds solace and which he defends, is not blood relationships; the flag of the Muslim, which he honours and under which he is martyred, is not the flag of a country; and the victory of the Muslim, which he celebrates and for which he is thankful to Allah, is not a military victory. It is what Allah Almighty has described" (p. 140)
On Jihad of the sword "When every method of persuasion failed, the Prophet took to the sword. That sword removed evil mischief, the impurities of evil and the filth of the soul. The sword did something more – it removed their blindness so that they could see the light of truth, and also cured them of their arrogance; arrogance which prevents people from accepting the truth, stiff necks and proud heads bowed with humility" (1989, 13). "Moreover, the battlefield for Jihad is, in fact, the whole world, and Islam demands that one should exert one's utmost against all the rebels of Allah and the wicked powers with all of one's heart and mind and body and health" (commentary 128 in Tafhim al-Qur'an). "Jihad represents all the composite forces that will achieve the revolution as well as the alteration of "old tyrannical social system and [the establishment of] a new just order of life by the power of sword" (1980, 7). Islam is a "comprehensive system which envisages to annihilate all tyrannical and evil systems in the world and	On Jihad of the sword Jihad is not only defensive (p. 65) "Jihad tries to annihilate all political and material powers to enforce Islam" (p. 66). It should "abolish all systems of government based on the rule of man" (p. 70). Jihad by the sword is to clear the way for preaching and fighting jahiliyya (p. 71) and jihad is an eternal state (p. n75). Jihad establishes the authority of Allah on earth (p. 81).

enforces its own programme of reform which it deems best for the well-being of mankind” (1980, 16-17). Islamic party or the umma’s sole duty is to “wipe out oppression, mischief, strife, immorality, high handedness and unlawful exploitation from the world by force of arms” (1980, 18). “The aim of jihad is [t]o eliminate the rule of an un-Islamic system and establish in its stead an Islamic system of state rule. Islam does not intend to confine this revolution to a single state or a few countries; the aim of Islam is to bring about a universal revolution” (1980. 22).
On Jahiliyya However, if the individual is negligent of God's messages, disease emerges and develops. Mawdudi refers to this state as jahiliyyah, a term used by the Qur'an to describe pre-Islamic Arabia. When God's sovereignty is ignored or denied, "jahiliyyah (may have) different shapes and forms . . . , but remains jahiliyyah in each” (cited in Osman 2003, 475). Esposito states that Maududi sees modernity as the new jahiliyyah (2003, 154). “Maulana Maududi emphasizes that there are two basically different, in fact mutually opposed, attitudes to life; one, of accepting God as the sovereign and Law-Giver and as such responding to Him as slave and servant, the other, of defiance and rebellion against God and arrogation to oneself or to others that the One True God of the authority to command . . . is termed by Maulana Maududi as Jahiliyya...Now, jahiliyyah, has different shapes and forms, and thus possessed of considerable internal diversity. It remains jahiliyyah, nevertheless, in each of these shapes and forms...” (Ahmed and Ansari 2000, 21-22).	On Jahiliyya The present world is in Jahiliyyah (p26-27).Jahiliyyah is rebellion against Allah and usurping of the sovereignty of God by being lord over others. Jahiliyyah is one man’s lordship over another” (p. 57). “Jahili society is any society other than the Muslim society” (p. 91) and “all societies existing today are Jahili” (p. 91). “The Jahili society is that which does not follow Islam and in which neither the Islamic belief and concepts, nor Islamic values or standards, Islamic laws and regulations, or Islamic morals and manners are cared for. In Jahili society people can accept the existence of Allah, pray, fast and go for hajj, but restrict Allah to the heavens and his rule on earth suspended (p. 106-107). “In all modern⁹¹Jahili societies, the meaning of 'morality' is limited to such an extent that all those aspects which distinguish man from animal are considered beyond its sphere. In these Societies, illegitimate sexual relationships, even homosexuality, are not considered immoral” (p. 111). “For human life, there is only one true system, and that is Islam; all other systems are Jahiliyyah” (p. 131). “Jahiliyyah is the worship of some people by others; that is to say, some people become dominant and make laws for others, regardless of whether these laws are against Allah's injunctions and without caring for the use or misuse of their authority” (p. 146).
On Hakimiyya of Allah (The political Sovereignty of Allah) “None is entitled to make laws on his own authority and none is obliged to abide by them. The right vests in Allah alone” (2011, 19). “No person, clan, class or group, not even the entire population of the state as a whole can lay claim to sovereignty. God only is the real sovereign; all others are merely subjects” (2011, 20, 31). “All legislative power too vests on God” (2011, 21). Allah is “the Supreme Sovereign and the ultimate Law-giver in all matters whether political, cultural or social...Who alone was the Ilah and the Rabb in the supernatural sense and in political, social; and cultural matters” (2000, 53, 54). “As for taghoot, this term applies to every person, or group or persons, or organizations and institution which, instead of submitting to God and His Injunctions, rebels against them and virtually sets up himself or itself as god instead, or is so set up by people” (2000, 60). “If the ultimate authority for the law or code, etc, which is followed, is God Himself, then the person concerned is observing Allah’s deen, if it owes itself to the commandments of a monarch, then he is in the monarch’s deen; if it is	On Hakimiyya of Allah (The political Sovereignty of Allah) “Islam establishes the lordship of Allah alone and orders practical life in all its details” (p. 86). “By 'the Shari'ah of Allah' is meant everything legislated by Allah Almighty for ordering man's life; it includes the principles of belief, principles of administration and justice, principles of morality and human relationships, and principles of knowledge” (po. 121). “In the world there is only one party of Allah; all others are parties of Satan and rebellion” (p. 130).

⁹¹ We can see here a confirmation is given by Qutb that their definition of Jahiliyya is a modern one. Compare this with Sivan’s (1985, 22) position cited above.

prescribed by some priests or pundits or other religious leaders, then he is observing their deen; and if it has been laid down by the family, the clan or the tribe, or the national body-politic, he is following their deen" (2000, 91).
On Human Rulers usurping Allah's authority "It is only man's excessive lust for power and desire for exploitation that prompts him to impose himself on other people as a god and compel obedience, force them to bow down before him in reverential awe and make them instruments for his self aggrandizement" (Maududi 2011, 11). "Again, what are the consequences of this domination of man by man, of this attempt to play the role of divinity" (2011, 17)? "The basic principle of Islamic politics is that, both individually and collectively, human beings should waive all rights of legislation and all power to give commands to others" (2011, 19).	On Human Rulers usurping Allah's authority "Human rulers are usurping God's sovereignty making themselves lord and others slaves" (p. 67). Obedience to laws and judgments is a sort of worship (p. 70)
On Islam capturing all authority "The party of Islam has no choice except to capture State Authority, for an evil system takes root and flourishes under the patronage of an evil government and a pious cultural order can never be established until the authority of Government is wrested from the wicked and transferred into the hands of the reformers . . . it becomes impossible for the party itself to act upon its own ideals under an alien state system . . . it is impossible for a Muslim to succeed in his intention of observing the Islamic pattern of life under the authority of a non-Islamic system of government" (1980, 19).	On Islam capturing all authority "Islam must take control of all the political authority so that it may establish Shariah on earth" (p. 86)
On Islam as a holistic and complete way of life "No doubt the Islamic state is a totalitarian state and comprises within its sphere all departments of life. But this totalitarianism and universality are based upon the universality of Divine Law which an Islamic ruler has to observe and enforce" (2011, 34).	On Islam as a holistic and complete way of life "By 'the Shari'ah of Allah' is meant everything legislated by Allah Almighty for ordering man's life; it includes the principles of belief, principles of administration and justice, principles of morality and human relationships, and principles of knowledge. By 'the Shari'ah of Allah' is meant everything legislated by Allah Almighty for ordering man's life; it includes the principles of belief, principles of administration and justice, principles of morality and human relationships, and principles of knowledge" (p. 120).
On consultation (Shura) as mode of leadership "The entire Muslim population runs the state in accordance with the book of God and the example of His prophet. . . The executive under this system of government, is constituted by the general will of the Muslims who have also the right to depose it" (2011, 22). "Another qualification is that this group should work with mutual consultation and always abide by the norms of consultation" (2009, 16).	On consultation (Shura) as mode of leadership "There is only one place on earth which can be called the home of Islam (Dar-ul-Islam), and it is that place where the Islamic state is established and the Shari'ah is the authority and Allah's limits are observed, and where all the Muslims administer the affairs of the state with mutual consultation" (p. 131).

It is very obvious that jahiliyya is the overriding theme in Milestones. It also comes out clearly that reading through Milestones, one cannot also disagree with Rahman and Ali that the most important person who shaped the life of Qutb is Maududi (2012). In light of the above comparison, one would have no reason to doubt Woktorwicz that Qutb quoted Maududi at length in his In the Shadow of the Qur'an. In this single book analysis you find Maududi's ideas from different works such as Jihad in Islam, Islam and Jahiliyya, and Principles of Islamic Government as Woktorowicz mentions (2005, 78-79) above and indeed this position is also supported by Sivan (1985, 23). Indeed, Zakaria is accurate that Qutb built on the works of Maududi (2010, 721). One must agree with Ayubi that Qutb took Maududi's ideology and expanded such ideas in a “more extreme, single minded and action oriented fashion” (1991, 104).

A Comment on the Issue of Continuity

In contemporary times, different scholars give different reasons for the rise of fundamentalism or Islamism and Islamic resurgence as some refer to it (Cheema 2013, 63; Kirmanj 2008, 79). There are grounds on which it can be argued that the roots of Islamic fundamentalism go deeper into Islamic history beyond Maududi or Qutb. Kirmanj believes, after examining the views of Islamists of centuries back, it will emerge that “this movement is a new wave in an old continuum” (2008, 79). Some scholars trace it back to Taymiyyah (1263-1328) who theorized jihad against false leadership and made it not only a collective obligation, but also incumbent on every individual Muslim.

Others trace it beyond Taymiyyah to the concepts of tajdid (renewal) and Islah (reform) as discussed in chapter one. Demant even argues that Maududi and Qutb only updated it (2006, 102). Morgan adds that it is Ibn Taymiyyah that influenced both Maududi and Qutb as well as Muhammad Ibn Abd al-Wahhab, the godfather of Wahhabism from Saudi Arabia (2007), who is argued to be the major influence on Gumi of the Izala sect in Nigeria (Bala 2006, 85).⁹² Scholars like Jackson even argue that revivalism or resurgence began around 1950, when the traditional theocratic concept of the Islamic state was undermined by European conquest and introduction of alien ideologies such as liberalism and nationalism (2011, 88).

However, there is also no doubt that Islamic fundamentalism has undergone some metamorphosis. Ayoob puts it that despite the contemporary admiration of Ibn Taymiyyah, Islamists have in theory “radically reversed the traditional orientation of Islamic theological interpretation” (2008, 6). The work of Ayubi (1991) and Tibi (1998) strongly support this position, as well as numerous other works cited. Modern and unique new interpretations have been introduced. Unique interpretations like Maududi’s have emerged as acknowledged by scholars cited above. Jackson further argues that Maududi’s “brand of revivalism is not hacking back to a social order that existed in the past,” but borrows from different traditions when it suits him. This is why it is difficult to pigeon-hole him and form the basis for his appeal (2011, 95).

⁹² Esposito and Voll (2001) did a valuable study of contemporary Muslim activist intellectuals and their place in history that is very insightful. It is also possible that Wahhab is not the only influence on Gumi as we shall see below.

The researcher therefore joins Cheema in agreeing with Foucault (1972) that there are multiple discontinuities and ruptures in a course of history. He argues that “every discontinuity or rupture is accompanied by a paradigm shift which lays down new parameters of thinking” (2013, 60). Indeed, the emergence of Islamic modernism in the 19th Century is acknowledged by Browsers (2010, 712). Consequently, in spite of the argument for continuity by some scholars, it must be acknowledged that “the modernism of this intellectual movement distinguished it from earlier Islamic reformist and revivalist movements that did not identify with modernity” (Browsers 2010, 712). Nasr acknowledges that “revivalists are not only moderns but modernists” (1996, 51). Maududi, indeed, accepts modernization and rejects blind westernization. For example, a television is a technological tool; what makes the difference is what is broadcast through it (Jackson 2011, 107). The same philosophy we see in Boko Haram as discussed in Chapter Two.

In fact, Butterworth argues that Maududi and Al-Banna simply ignored the philosophical teachings of the distant traditions. He adds that fundamentalists like Qutb and Khomeini dismiss the older philosophers as having been too influenced by a foreign tradition to be of assistance in an authentic Muslim endeavor (2010, 717). The researcher suggests that the arguments for continuity should be made with caution. It can even be argued that all new ideas have foundations in the past. However, if the argument for continuity is stretched beyond its limits, new innovations or ideas will lose their distinctiveness and significance in social analysis or progress. Continuity must sometimes pale in the light of new creation. Cheema points out that Maududi himself argues that there is no possibility of change if we continue relying on traditional methodologies (2013, 58).

Nevertheless, it must be acknowledged that modern fundamentalist thoughts did not emerge from a vacuum; they evolved from the root of the past. We must, therefore, acknowledge continuity (Tibi 1998, 99) and discontinuity at the same time. For example, the desire for Islamic ruler-ship over the world has been as old as Islam in the light of history. Furthermore, the politicization of Islam existed all along. Indeed, in majority of the Islamic world, politicization of Islam suffices where Shari'a runs side by side with other secular laws, as evident in several Islamic countries of North Africa and the Middle East. What Maududi apparently provides for the fundamentalist movement is the push to Islamize politics. He led by example in the formation of a religiopolitical party in Pakistan, and this is unique to him.

This Islamization of politics appears to be the major influence in jihadist movements globally, including Nigeria. This is particularly significant if we take into cognizance the argument by Ayubi, that although “Islam is a religion of collective morals, it is not particularly a political religion” (1991, 91). This puts into proper perspective Maududi’s passion for the Islamization of politics. Nasr admits that Maududi interpreted Islam in a new way and to him “new interpretation of Islam had to serve a purpose greater than mainly saving souls of individual Muslims: it had to restore Islam to its place of glory” (1996, 55). In light of this, there is cogency in Ayubi’s argument that “religious fundamentalism is not a religious faith, but a political ideology which politicizes religion for sociopolitical and economic goals in the pursuit of establishing the divine” (1991, 20).

Therefore, for Maududi “making politics sacred was a religious obligation” (Nasr 1996, 81). It is in this regard that, for Maududi, Islam and democracy are not compatible, or as Tibi summarizes Maududi’s Islam and Modern Civilization, that Islam is against democracy (1998, 97) and “profoundly at odds, and in fact irreconcilable” (1998, 28, 77, 177, 187). Esposito is then accurate to categorize Maududi and his colleagues as “trailblazers” (1999, 129) and Voll also by acknowledging in his book Islam: Continuity and change in the modern world (1994) that there is both continuity and change in modern Islam. It is the influence of these new interpretations of Islam, especially those of Maududi, that this work is concerned with.

The Emergence of Maududi’s Ideology in Northern Nigerian Islam

The preceding section showing that Qutb’s ideology is essentially influenced by Maududi’s is significant. It provides the basis to argue that the writings of Maududi and the arrival of Muslim Brotherhood to northern Nigeria are both basically propagating the fundamentalist ideologies of Maududi. This paves the way to explain how Maududi’s theological interpretation, through his writing and Muslim brotherhood, arrived in Nigeria and was propagated.

Northern Nigerian Islam has a long standing contact with Egypt and the Arab world, since the time of the Kanem Bornu Empire (Yusuf 2007, 238), as we saw in Chapter One. This contact was sustained through provision of scholarships and exchange of missionaries. Maududi's writings and ideology came to northern Nigeria as a result of this contact through publications, the education route, as well as the arrival of Muslim Brotherhood. Ahmad affirms that the "Ikhwan of Sudan, as early as 1952, took his writings as a major source for the development of their agenda for Islamic social change. This has also been the case in Turkey, Syria, Iraq, Indonesia, Malaysia, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Nigeria, South Africa, Kenya and elsewhere" (2003, 533 italics mine). This is how early Maududi's writings arrived in Nigeria, yet his influence has hardly been studied.

The education route is more intriguing. It is both internal and external. The internal route is through the Muslim Students Society (MSS), while the external one is through returning graduates and Islamic missionary educators. Internally, by mid-1970s there was fundamentalist fervor among MSS students (Ibrahim 1987, 71-74), which by 1970 had over 400 branches and adopted a more missionary and fundamentalist approach to their activities (Clarke 1988, 524). The association of MSS to Maududi's ideology seems to be captured by Winters, although he categorized all fundamentalist Islam as Wahabist, including the one coming from Egypt. He states that "Wahabi influences in northern Nigeria are largely on account of those students who graduated from Schools of Arabic Studies, attended al-Azhar university in Egypt and the Islamic university in Saudi Arabia" (1987, 176). Winters' categorization is plausible, since Maududi is connected with the Saudi Arabian state and universities.⁹³ Barkindo reports the wide establishment of these Schools of Arabic Studies in Kano around the 1950s (1993, 102). It is these graduates who became teachers in schools and universities and began to propagate their learning.⁹⁴

El-Zakzaky, the godfather of Muslim Brotherhood in northern Nigeria (his movement is now referred to as Islamic Movement in Nigeria), is a product of Kano School of Arabic Studies from 1971-1975, a school established in 1934. This school had a historical association with Sudan. He then proceeded to Ahmadu Bello University to study economics and became the secretary general of the MSS branch there, and later became the vice president (International Affairs) of the national body in 1979 (Alao n.d., 17). Ibrahim explains that "since the mid-1970s a hardcore extremist leadership has risen in both MSS national leadership structure and in the centres of Islamic radicalization in the universities of Zaria, Kano, and Sokoto” (1987, 73).⁹⁵

⁹³ Maududi's influence even in Saudi Arabia is established. He was on the academic council of Islamic University in Medina since its inception in 1962, a member of the Foundation of the Rabitah al-Alam al-Islami in Mecca (New World Encyclopedia).

⁹⁴ This kind of spread could be significant if we consider that all this graduates are assimilated into the northern societies.

Ibrahim (1987) and Clarke (1988) both acknowledge the role of Muslim Student Association (MSS) in this radicalization and the role of El-Zakzaky in it. This education path is also acknowledged by Kalu (2004), Winters (1987) and Clarke (1988), especially through schools of Arabic studies. They also acknowledge the role played by Islamic missionary educationists from Pakistan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria. El-Zakzaky was severally detained, while in the university, and was severally jailed for sedition and inciting disaffection against government (Alao n.d., 17).

Kalu (2004), Alao (n.d.), Sanneh (2003, 237), and Christelow (2002, 197) acknowledge the role of El-Zakzaky in this radicalization as leader of the Muslim Brotherhood, which he established when he left the Muslim Student Society (MSS) of Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria. The Muslim Brotherhood is even described as an offshoot of MSS, led by El-Zakzaky, to provide political orientation that he felt was lacking in MSS, since he felt the society must have political goals oriented towards practical and revolutionary transformation of the country. He split from MSS to form the group (Crisis Group 2010, 14-15). Kalu argues that “from the 1980s, the danger posed by combined forces of radical students and unemployed youths deepened as the face of Islam turned violent” (2004, 248).

Significantly, even the Izala puritanical movement of late Sheikh Abubakar Gumi, in spite of it being labeled Wahabist from Saudi Arabia, appears to have a Maududian influence. We have already indicated Maududi’s influence in Saudi Arabia. Gumi went to the same Arabic school in Kano attended by El-Zakzaky. This school has strong connections with Sudan, as mentioned above, a country already strongly influenced by Maududian ideology.⁹⁶ Gumi eventually went to Sudan to study (Falola 1998, 119, 122). Indeed, scholars trying to trace the radicalization of Islam and the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in northern Nigeria, acknowledge this path of Islamic education in radicalizing northern Nigerian Islam.

⁹⁵ These universities are Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria; Bayero University, Kano and Usman Danfodio University, Sokoto.

⁹⁶ Badri (2003) is a good example of Maududi’s impact in Sudan. Badri stated how they read Maududi, met with him in Beirut and visited him in Pakistan. Esposito (1999, 129) also comment on the influence of Maududi in Sudan.

Externally, Winters linked the arrival of Maududi's ideology to the Islamic knowledge these returning graduates received in Europe, where these "African jihadists" encountered Pakistani and Arab brands of Islam (1987, 177). It is apparent that Maududi is the major Islamic force from Pakistan. Clarke also finds this link to Pakistan when he talks of the arrival of missionaries from Pakistan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria. In fact, of interest here is that it is during this same period that northern Nigerian students were receiving training at the Islamic university of al-Azhar in Cairo (Clarke 1988, 32).

Perhaps this is why Alao links the rhetoric of Nigerian Muslim Brotherhood to Qutb of Egypt (n.d., 17). Qutb's reliance on Maududi has already been discussed above. Importantly, Sanneh suggests that there were breakaways from this initial fundamentalist group (2003, 240). Boko haram, discussed in Chapter Two, comes to mind. Christelow concludes that the "international resurgence of Islam as a political and ideological force helped stimulate the development of another more enduring Islamic challenge in northern Nigeria" (2002, 196). Sanusi, recently crowned as the emir of Kano, is closer to the point than Alao. Sanusi is very clear that the agitation for the implementation of Shari'a and establishment of an Islamic state, at least outwardly, is a popular demand "led by mainly young and educated Muslims associated with Muslim activism and supported by Islamic scholars, particularly graduates of Arab universities" (2007, 177).⁹⁷ Although he associates the clamor for an Islamic state by Nigerian Muslim Brotherhood to the Iranian revolution (2007, 183), it is sustainable to argue that the clamor for an Islamic state in Nigeria started long before the Iranian revolution, as we have seen in our preceding discussion, especially in Chapter Two. The Iranian revolution only gave its possibility a major push.

Maududi's Ideology and Its Receptivity in Northern Nigeria

This researcher believes that similar conditions in India that led Maududi to embrace fundamentalist Islam exist in northern Nigeria, which encourage receptivity to Maududi's ideology. History unveils that the colonial conquest of the Sokoto Caliphate brought about the loss of power and socio-political influence of Muslims over northern Nigeria, which includes loss of economic control. It is natural that after colonialism came the desire to restore the influence and glory of the caliphate established by the Usman Danfodio jihad. In fact, Falola clearly explains that Muslim rulers then were concerned about the loss of political power because they were forced to be subordinate to Christian officers considered to be pagans, and who introduced cultural practices that were alien to Islam (1998, 25-30).

⁹⁷ This seems to affirm the assumption in this study that there is no distinction between various Islamic tendencies when it comes to Islamic activism and religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, it assumes a populist dimension.

Closely related to this is urbanization, as Barkindo argues. He acknowledges the rise of what he calls Islamism in the 1970s in Kano. He suggests it was the result of agitation by Muslims over the erosion and disintegration of their Islamic values and identity under the onslaught of Westernization, and the failure of all other strategies to curb urban problems. Therefore, “Islamic solutions to the problem of the country” was the answer (1993, 91).

As a result, the desire to reestablish the supreme reign of the caliphate in northern Nigeria and beyond was politically evident after colonialism. Indeed, it is now common and acceptable knowledge that this was the clear agenda of the then northern Muslim leaders, led by Ahmadu Bello. It is no longer a hidden fact that a number of minority traditional rulers were forced to convert to Islam or lose their seats. The emerging clerics also became dissatisfied and disgusted by the actions of political leaders to bring about the rule of Islam over northern Nigeria. They also became antagonistic to traditional Islamic leadership. These conditions appear similar to those that led Maududi to fundamentalist interpretation of Islam. These feelings could have accounted for the emergence of various sects in the pursuit of restoring Islam to its pre-colonial glory. This might have made, or is making, northern Nigerian Islam receptive to fundamentalist ideologies such as Maududi’s.

The arrival, therefore, of Muslim Brotherhood to northern Nigeria seems to have encouraged the formation of Islamic fraternities to restore Islam to its pristine heights, especially among the young and the educated Islamic class. This is an idea, apparently, imported from the Egyptian experience of the Muslim Brotherhood. There is evidence of the strong presence of Muslim Brotherhood in majority of northern Nigerian universities in the late 1970s. Although the Muslim Brotherhood movement did not supplant the traditional Muslim Student Society in the universities, their influence grew and began to influence the social fabrics of the northern Islamic communities. Graduates belonging to the Muslim Brotherhood began to take up positions in Muslim societies after leaving the university, as seen in the case of El-Zakzaky.

At the initial stages of the formation of Muslim Brotherhood in Nigeria, the rhetoric was reformist and not apparently militant. As the followership grew, it gravitated from reformist to militancy, in similarity to the Egyptian experience of Muslim Brotherhood's confrontation with the state in the 1950s. Militancy gained ascendancy in the 1980s in northern Nigerian Islam. The introduction of militancy into northern Nigerian Islam, which saw the participation of Muslims across Islamic groups, captured the imagination of this writer. It stirred the interest to examine the influence behind the rise of this fundamentalist Islam, especially because the socio-economic and political reasons advanced by earlier writers did not appear evidently convincing in explaining the causes of this militancy and why they continue to occur.

What is the extent of this influence in the promotion of Islamic fundamentalism and religious conflicts in Kano and Kaduna states is the thrust of this research. It will certainly contribute to our understanding of the Islamic movement in Northern Nigeria and how this has influenced religious fundamentalism, as we examine the influence of Maududi's ideology on it. It is, therefore, important not to assume that his ideas are antiquated by more modern influences.

Maududi's Political Theory of Islam

Islamic political thought is as old as Islamic history. Rosenthal (1962) and Crone (2004) are excellent works on Islamic political thought and governance from its origin through medieval times and its engagement with modernity. Although the contemporary expression known as political Islam emerged from the threshold of Islamic political thought, it has elicited sharp criticism in some quarters, especially on the question of the Islamic state. It is beyond the space requirement of this section to embark on analysis of contemporary Islamic thought.

However, Belkeziz's treatise on The state in contemporary Islamic thought (2009) is a brilliant treatise on five generations of Islamic intellectuals, covering a century and a half on the political question in Islam, with each addressing the peculiarity of its problematic of the state. Ayoob (2008) is also very useful in exposing the fact that political Islam covers a wide spectrum of convictions and that it is not monolithic, as viewed by the West. His significant argument is that political Islam is not inherently violent, and that the intermingling of religion and politics is not unique to Islam. According to him, political Islam encompasses multiple voices that claim to speak for Islam and their demands range from proper recognition in national life to radical transformation of society and politics by whatever means. In his view, discrete national contexts give different manifestations of political Islam their distinctive local color. One, however, disagrees with Ayoob that factions of political Islam engage in violence in response to state repression or foreign occupation (2008, 1). The cases in Nigeria, Kenya, Somalia and several places do not reveal such repression or foreign occupation; although it is true that not all Islamist political formations are violent.

On the critique of political Islam, Tibi (1998) is a good example. He sees political Islam as fundamentalism (1998, 12), and to him fundamentalism is a political ideology that should be differentiated from Islam. This dichotomy is necessary to deny Islamists the claim of being true representatives of Islam (1998, 139). According to Tibi, “Religious fundamentalism and Islam are (or should be) two different issues” (1998, 177). He argues strongly that fundamentalism is not a renaissance of religion, but only a reflection of political ideologies apparently drawn from religions in an effort to recreate the world (1998, 139). This argument is possibly tenable, but the elevation of religion to the political domain by Islamic fundamentalists might be a legitimate cry to revitalize a religion that is perceived to be overshadowed by westernization and headed for an uncertain relegation. If this relegation causes a loss of identity, which can create an aimless void, it seems justifiable to resist it at all cost.

Perhaps it is the nature of resistance that is the bone of contention. The fundamentalists think that creating an Islamic order in the world will solve all Muslim problems,⁹⁸ but as Tibi argues, the Islamic order, which fundamentalists assume an Islamic state will provide as panacea to all Muslim problems, is virtually a “conviction lying beyond evidence” (1998, 99). Tibi, therefore, throughout his work incisively exposes the challenges of fundamentalism, raising questions about its authenticity as a true Islamic philosophy, and challenges its quest for an Islamic state as a genuine Islamic endeavor that can be supported from classical Islamic texts or history. This is particularly because it paints Islam as a religion that is militant, violent and supports terrorism, contrary to textual evidence that Islam is a religion of peace.

⁹⁸ Ushama and Osmani argue that Maududi showed in practical ways how Islam “can be used today to solve problems of Muslims in modern ages” (2006, 93)

Maududi, who is considered as “the major ideological authority and source of political Islam” (Tibi 1998, 187), considers his interpretation of Islam as the true Islam (Nasr 1996, 63). His political theory of Islam is the major parameter that will be used to examine his influence in northern Nigeria. His insistence on the necessity to “Islamize politics” (Nasr 1996, 82) seems to hold the greatest potential towards generating friction with non-Muslim ideologies, especially secularized governments. The western ideology of separation of religion and politics is rejected by Maududi because, for him, separation of religion from politics has no place in Islam (Nasr 1996, 39). Maududi’s assertion that Islam is incompatible with western democracy (Donahue and Esposito 2007, 261) in the wake of European colonial experience, with its political and cultural impact, perhaps, impressed on him the necessity to develop the political theory of Islam.⁹⁹ If this is the case, the argument that the resurgence of political Islam is not the concern of divinities, but rather more related to social, political and economic consideration (Tibi 1998, 104) is tenable.

It is also possible that the power exerted by Europeans to colonize Muslim nations convinced Maududi that “Islamization of politics would have to be implemented, even through coercion” (Nasr 1996, 82). Although Nasr points out that Maududi never explained what this coercion is, the ominous meaning seems inherent. To Maududi, Islamization of politics is the antithesis of secularism. Islamization of politics is contingent on the formation of an Islamic state. Jihad, which does not exclude coercion, is the means of achieving an Islamic state where the rule of Allah is enforced over all mankind (Ayubi 1991, 93). And jihad of the sword is a legitimate part of the process as captured in his Jihad in Islam, as we shall see. Maududi’s writing on the understanding of jihad and its legitimacy proved to be hugely influential (Jackson 2011, 3).

It is important to point out here again that the concept of political government has a prior connotation in Islam in the term Caliphate (Kirmanj 2008, 73-74), which essentially represents a sovereign state of the entire Muslim faithful (umma) or community of believers (Ayubi 1991, 93). On the other hand, the modern concept of an Islamic state is recent, as Ayubi argues that “the concept of an ‘Islamic State’ (Islam is both religion and politics: din wa dawla) is fairly recent,” and specifically traces it “to the teachings of Maududi and some Muslim brothers” (1991, 93). Before ⁹⁹ Ayubi’s discourse on why politics was “religionised” is very insightful (1991, 20-26) although not directly necessary for discourse in this work.

Maududi, Ushama and Osmani argue that Islam as a political system was alien to the modern man, and that Maududi established that the modern state could be efficiently run by Islamic principles (2006, 96). Even so, support for political government (Caliphate) is traced to the Qur'an (24:55; 4:59; 5:49) and Hadith. Caliphates were established after the death of Muhammad and ended with the collapse of the Ottoman Empire in 1924 (Tibi 1998, 144), in spite of the Khilafat movement to preserve it. Since then, no single Caliphate represented the whole umma again. Caliphates like the Sokoto, Ahmadiyya Caliphates, and so on, emerged but never represented the whole Muslim umma, and were limited within their territory of influence.

In recent times, a number of nation states have declared they are Islamic by incorporating Islamic law, or claimed to be Islamic states (e.g. Pakistan,¹⁰⁰ Iran, and so on). Agitations continue in several countries for the establishment of Islamic states. Enayat is, in some way, right to link the modern agitation for Islamic state to the Caliphate concept, but is more accurate in saying that the contemporary canvassing for an Islamic state is driven by fundamentalism (2005, 69).¹⁰¹ Indeed, fundamentalists do not demand a return of the Caliphate as the traditional order of Islam, but a “new concept of dawla Islamiyya”- Islamic State (Tibi 1998, 158). Classical Caliphate is no longer the political system of choice, but rather Islamic legitimacy, and the governance of Islamic umma by Shari'a law as its major condition. The hitch is that umma is a community and not a state (Tibi 1998, 101).

Nevertheless, the term “Islamic State” has never been used in theory and practice of Muslim political science before the twentieth century (Khan 1982, 74; Eickelman and Piscatori 1996, 53).¹⁰² Black admits that up till the 19th Century Iran, “a state in the modern sense hardly existed” (2011, 300). Kirmanj credits contemporary Islamists with coining the term Islamic state (2008, 75), but believes the difference is only in name. However, Nasr specifies and attributes the modern conceptualization of the ¹⁰⁰ The website www.nationonline.org/oneworld/Pakistan.htm reveals the official name of Pakistan as the Islamic republic of Pakistan or Officially as Islami Jamhooriya-e-Pakistan.

¹⁰¹ Enayat says fundamentalism was first a marriage between the Puritanism of the Wahhabis of Saudi Arabia and Salafiyyah movement, but later parted ways with the latter being increasingly represented by activists and revolutionary trends (2005, 69). According to Black, the Wahhabis adopted Taymiyyah's salafi philosophy around the eighteenth century (2011, 162; also Ayubi 1991, 96).

¹⁰² Ayubi argues that the Quran or the Hadith did not specify how governments should be formed or what they should look like. “If there ever was an imagined ideological Islamic State based entirely on ‘pure’ shari'a, such a state was in dissonance with the ‘historical Islamic State’ which relied in most stages of its existence on extra-canonical sources of law, such as custom, convention and the ruler's will (qanun, nizam, iradeh) (cf. Vatikiotis, 1987: Chs 1, 2 and 3)” (1991, 91).

“Islamic State” to Maududi (Nasr 1996, 3, 80-106), and it is considered a “novel and a product of modernity” (Ayoob 2008, 67). Tibi seems to add credence to Nasr’s claim that “mainstream fundamentalism is dominated by the views of the Pakistani Abu al-A’la al-Mawdudi” (1998, 158). And the modern influence and push for Islamic state through revolution is also attributed to Maududi (Enayat 2005, 83-84, 102-104).

The foundation of Maududi’s political theory of Islam is anchored on the premise that religion and politics cannot be separated because the practice of religious obligations is not possible without an Islamic state (Cheema 2013, 52, 54; Maududi 1980, 19). The thinking here is that this Islamic order will provide solution to all Muslim problems. This appears similar to Taymiyyah’s position, but a closer examination of Taymiyyah’s position will reveal his argument to be that religion and government need one another (Black 2011, 160)¹⁰³ and are not necessarily inseparable. The power of government is needed to ensure good and forbid bad. In essence, the traditional Islamic view only gave “religious legitimacy to political power” (Ayubi 1991, 2).

By way of interjection, there is validity in the argument that the Islamic order desired by fundamentalists as the panacea to all Muslim problems, which makes an Islamic state paramount, is virtually a conviction without proof (Tibi 1998, 99). And the irony is that those who question this fundamentalist stance are considered renegades from the umma, deserving mortification and death, while those who accept and believe it are authentic Muslims. Considering that the Qur’anic verses used by fundamentalists are viewed as arbitrary and selective (Tibi 1998, 99), objective fairness was not a consideration in reaching this decision.

Furthering the discussion on unity of religion and politics above, Ahmad reports that several scholars argue that the non-separation of religion and politics has always been a central discourse of Islam (2006, 12). Kirmanj (2008, 74-75) and Black (2011, 306) agree with this position. Nonetheless, such traditional understanding has not limited the state to interpreting God’s law by abrogating its independent legislative function like Maududi did (Ayoob 2008, 68). Moreover, history and Islamic theology seem on the side of Ahmad, as seen above, that the reason why,

The state became central to Islamism was not because Islam theologically entailed it. Rather it is so because of the configuration of the early twentieth century socio-political formations under which the state as an institution had acquired an unprecedented role in expanding its realm of action and scope of its effect. Since Islamism was a response to the modern state formation with its far reaching consequences, it was only logical that state became the centre of its discourse. Thus it was not due to Islamic theology that the state became central to Islamism; on the contrary, it was the unusual expansion of the early twentieth century state and its imprint on almost every domain of life that drove Islamists to make the state central to theology (2006, 12).

¹⁰³ Black questions, in a general sense, whether Taymiyyah’s works were correctly understood (2011, 162).

Throughout Ahmad's article, he credits Maududi with the modern iteration of the concept of Islamic state and traced its evolution through the experiences of Maududi. His use of historical approach helped to support his argument that Maududi's "theoretical elaboration of Islam being synonymous with the state was enmeshed and a direct product of the political-electoral matrix of colonial India" (2006, 12). Black's argument supports Ahmad's position that Islamism¹⁰⁴ should be understood in the context of twentieth century politics, both international and domestic (2011, 304). According to him, Islamism is a specific reaction to modern social and economic conditions, which include urbanization, dislocation of traditional communities and crafts as well as unemployment and anomie (2011, 306). Essentially, it is a new phenomenon. Ahmad and Black's views seem to tally with Tibi's argument that ideologies do not fall from heaven or stand in isolation, "they are articulations of specific historical conditions" (1998, 139).

The present researcher, therefore, agrees with Zubaida that fundamentalism is modern and best understood in the context of the concepts and assumptions of modern political ideas related to the nation and nation state (1993, ix, 18, 33, 155). Ipso facto, Ayubi's argument that the very belief that Islam by its very nature is a political religion is recent in origin (1991, 3-5). He specifically states that "political Islam is a new invention – it does not represent a 'going back' to any situation that existed in the past or to any theory that was formulated in the past" and the only link to the past is the "juridic tradition of linking politics and religion" (1991, 2).¹⁰⁵ Ayubi is emphatic that "the now widely held opinion among Muslims that Islam is both 'a religion and a State' (din wa dawla) is a measure of the extraordinary intellectual influence of the modern fundamentalist thesis on mainstream Muslim opinion" (1991, 3).

¹⁰⁴ It is important not to forget that Islamism and fundamentalism are often used synonymously as indicated in chapter one.

¹⁰⁵ Ayubi emphasizes his position by referring to several authors in chapter nine of his book that "the most important elementary point to remember is that the Qur'an did not stipulate a specific form for the State or the government, nor did the Prophet Muhammad appoint a successor for himself even though he knew his demise was imminent" (1991, 4).

Cheema's paper rejects Maududi's major contribution that religion cannot be separated from politics, in agreement with Khan. Khan argues that Maududi did not differentiate his interpretation of the Qur'an from what is original and what is consequential, by emphasizing the consequential over the original as the real call of the Qur'an.¹⁰⁶ According to Tibi, Hussein Fawzi al-Najjar also insists that no single text in the primary classical sources of Islamic Shari'a supports the formula of din wa dawla – unity of religion and state (1998, 165). However, Cheema admits that Maududi's ideas are always referred to in debates on constitutionality in majority of Muslim countries (2013, 53), and concedes that the concept of theodemocracy introduced by Maududi has no parallel in the literature of Islamic political theory (2013, 60), as well as his introduction of the sovereignty of God as antithesis to the sovereignty of man, which is the problem with different systems of the world (2013, 65; Ayoob 2008, 67).

Tibi identifies a contradiction in the fundamentalists' theory of Islamic state. On the one hand, they advocate a revolt against the existing order to establish the sovereignty of God, and the state run according to the will of God, yet they sanctify state rule with the absolutism of the ruler as divine (1998, 176). Maududi, therefore, substitutes theocracy and democracy with theodemocracy, and argues that the Islamic state is universal and all embracing. In spite of the fact that Tibi considers Maududi as shaping totalitarian fundamentalism (1998, 177), according to Cheema, Maududi insists that although his concept of theodemocracy seems to intervene in the individual's life, it is not totalitarian because it provides the individual the freedom to express his views in all matters of the state (2013, 66). In light of Khan's argument, Cheema concludes that although Maududi's argument makes the divine speak (2013, 70), it cannot be considered entirely divine because there are many human interjections in developing the complete picture (2013, 71, 78).

Maududi's Principle on the Unity of State and Religion (Din wa Dawla)

The above notwithstanding, Maududi's greatest treatise in building his concept of theodemocracy is his book the Four Basic Qur'anic Terms (2000). Ahmad calls it "the bible of Maududi's political theory" (2006, 13). This book reflects new interpretations of the terms deen,¹⁰⁷ ilah, rabb and ibadah. Cheema says he gave the terms innovative meaning (2013, 74), while Ahmad says he “introduced innovative theorization in the name of reclaiming ‘pure’ Islam” (2006, 13). Indeed, Ayubi generally argues that those who advocate political Islam have “actually introduced some novel, and radical, changes in the way the Islamic political tradition is understood” (1991, 2). This book is Maududi’s major work in which he argues the inseparability of religion and politics. It is here he argues the sovereignty of God over the entire universe as an indivisible entity and not amenable to sharing out in any manner whatsoever. This is probably his way of emphasizing why democracy or different systems of the world, that place premium on the rulership of human beings, are not Islamic.

¹⁰⁶ Cheema reports that Khan argues that the individuality of the sovereignty of God is restricted to the spiritual only and cannot be extended to political sovereignty.

Maududi establishes that as regards illah (godhood or object of worship), it is polytheism to consider somebody as worthy of obedience without the clear sanction of God. To obey secular laws is to attribute godhood to their creators, as the essence of godhood is authority (2000, 20), and no man has the authority to legislate for mankind (2000, 27). Maududi does not, however, differentiate authority. If authority is godhood, do parents assume godhood since they have authority over children? Maududi says regarding anyone as deserving obedience without any sanction from God, is to be guilty of *shirk*¹⁰⁸ (2000, 27). Can there not be authority without godhood? Does all human legislation amount to usurpation of godhood? Needless to say, this is where Maududi’s political Islam establishes confrontation with the secular state.

Concerning the term rabb (lordship, sovereignty or ownership), Maududi argues that it is a misconception to compartmentalize rububiyyah or sovereignty into metaphysical and political or cultural aspects. All these are exclusive attributes of God; hence, they form part of the same whole which is essentially indivisible. Sovereignty then is political, and Allah is a political rabb. It is not enough to submit and acknowledge the supreme God; he must dictate in all aspects of life; hence, you cannot separate the metaphysical and the political or cultural. God is not “illah only in the supernatural sense, but also as the Supreme Sovereign and the ultimate law giver in all matters whether political, cultural, or social” (2000, 53). Rububiyyah is not something which could be split into compartments (2000, 67). Rabb, as presented in the Qur'an, shows Allah as the absolute monarch of all creation, and its sole lord and master (2000, 71). However, does human government mean lordship or ownership?

¹⁰⁷ This is Maududi’s spelling of din in his book. It is retained in this section only.

¹⁰⁸ This means idolatry or polytheism.

On ibadah (submission, obedience or to serve), Maududi asserts that every state and government which governs and demands submission without the guidance of God falls in the category of taghoot.¹⁰⁹ Anyone who submits to the dictates of all such authority and do its bidding, that person's ibadah is that of taghoot (2000, 75).

Nonetheless, the Qur'an encourages obedience to authority (sura 4:59; cf 4:83). Does obedience to authority necessarily amount to worship? What is the faith of Muslims in secular states?

Finally, as regards deen (religion, way of life or submitting to), it emerges that Maududi considers deen as having both religious and political connotations. In fact, deen to Maududi is synonymous with state, as Nasr suggests (1996, 82). His interpretation is clearly to show that governance (politics) and religion cannot be separated and all must be performed as worship to Allah (2000, 88-91). If a person follows any system of rules and regulations, where ultimate authority is vested in or sanctioned by God, it means that person is following God's deen. Conversely, if one follows any other system where authority is vested in a monarch or anyone other than God, then that person follows the monarch's deen or that other's deen (2000, 91). Deen is a comprehensive way of life including political, social and cultural (2000, 92-93). In all of these, Maududi did not separate between worship and respect, nor did he separate between honor and worship. Is it not possible to honor and respect without worshipping?

In arriving at these interpretations, Maududi collects and analyzes all verses of the Qur'an to make his point through explaining their historical context. Generally, he divides sovereignty into metaphysical and political as well as cultural categories, and argues that rulers during those periods conceded the former, but were unwilling to concede the latter. The implication of all these is that the Qur'an's demand for submission to God's sovereignty is applicable to political and cultural category. In essence, Maududi interpretes these words to mean state. Majorly, Maududi does not explain how this indivisibility of God's Sovereignty is applied in practical terms politically, and in day to day relationship of governance. For example, who supervises the obedience of the ruler to the Shari'a (Tibi 1998, 103)?

¹⁰⁹ This word can mean the devil or anything worshiped instead of Allah.

Basic Principles of Maududi's Islamic State

Maududi's quest to articulate the political theory of Islam appears hinged on the desire to establish that Islam is a holistic ordered system (political and cultural) set upon definite principles (Maududi 2011, 6). It encompasses all aspects of religious life laid down in the Qur'an: morality, ethics, politics, social, and economic (Maududi 1960, 164). The main principle is the propagation of the absolute sovereignty of God and his rulership over all creation.

Apparently, building on his treatise on the four Qur'anic terms, he argues that the problem in the political system of the world is man's greed for power and usurpation of God's attributes of rabb (sustainer and nourisher) and ilah (master and law giver). This is man's desire for godhood and attempt to play the role of divinity, whose only remedy is renunciation of man as master and acknowledging God as sole master and lord (Maududi 2011, 9-18). This remedy must begin by humanity (individual and collective) waiving all rights to legislation and all power to give commands to others. No one is entitled to make laws in his own authority and none is obliged to obey them (Maududi 2011, 19; cf Bennett 2005, 50). This is the basis of an Islamic state. Again this position potentially undermines loyalty to secular states, and is a potential source of altercations.

An Islamic state is not a democracy because democracy vests sovereignty on people and no such thing exists in Islam (Maududi 2011, 21). The model of Islamic state is theodemocracy. This is "divine democratic government" where Muslims have "a limited popular sovereignty under the suzerainty of God" (Maududi 2011, 22; cf Bennett 2005, 49). The executive is constituted by general will of all Muslims and they are entitled to depose it. Problems not addressed by Shari'a should be settled by the opinion of Muslims. All qualified Muslims able to give sound opinion on Islamic principles are entitled to interpret the law of God also. In this sense, and contrary to tradition, all Muslims are mujtahidun. Nasr summarizes the essence of Maududi's Islamic state: *din*¹¹⁰ is the state and government, Shari'a is the law of the state and government, and ibadah is following and complying with the law (1996, 82). The state will be established through Islamic revolution, and the instrument of the revolution is jihad (Maududi 1980, 5, 7; Armajani 2012, 169). Nasr clarifies the instrumentality of jihad that “the convergence of Muslim piety and religious values with political objectives found its embodiment in the doctrine of jihad” (1996, 83).

¹¹⁰*Din* to Maududi is both religious and political.

In Maududi’s Islamic state, there are four basic principles. The first is recognition of the sovereignty of God. God has absolute sovereignty. God is the source of all laws and not Muslim society. True sovereignty belongs to God only. Leaders and governments have no rights to make laws; if they do, no one is obliged to obey them. The second principle is accepting the authority of all the prophets as representatives of God, and in this capacity, they exercise the political and legal sovereignty of God himself. In the light of this, they are entitled to be obeyed by all who accept the sovereignty of God.

The third principle is that the state is the vicegerent of God and accepts his sovereignty. It cannot make or enforce laws in its own name; it is only an agent of its suzerain (Sura 24:55). Indeed, all men are vicegerent of God. Men are all Caliphs, but can nominate an individual Amir to exercise authority on their behalf. He then becomes answerable to God and his fellow Caliphs. He must have the confidence of the largest number of people concerning his knowledge and grasp of Islam. He must be a Muslim, male, sane, adult, and citizen of the Islamic state possessing an impeccable character and does not aspire for the office. Amir and the state have right to use coercive power to maintain order or quell possibility of chaos or fitna.

The fourth principle is that the state conducts its affairs by mutual consultation (shura) with all Muslims. Shura should be the mode of decision making in determining what the Islamic position is. It is on this basis that an Islamic state resembles a democracy. Maududi allows for the formation of consultative assembly (Majlis-i-shura) with no elections but consultative selection without electioneering, because there is no place for elections in Islam. Those qualified to be such advisers are those who accept the ideology of the state from the beginning. In essence, an Islamic state rests on the sovereignty of God and caliphate of man. All Muslims participate in its formation or disposal, and have a right to express themselves on every public issue (Maududi 1960, 166-183, 218-219, 225,231-236, 243-244; Adams 1983, 115-119; Armajani 2012, 167-169; Bennett 2005, 49-51; Maududi 2011).

The two major characteristics of Maududi’s Islamic state are that it is universal and all-embracing and ideological. It is universal and all-embracing because it cannot restrict its scope of activities; it is co-extensive with the whole human life. In this state, “no one can regard any of his affairs as personal and private” (Maududi 2011, 29). This is in essence Islamic totalitarianism, or what Tibi calls “divine pattern of totalitarianism” (1998, 158), and Maududi surprisingly compares it with fascist and communist regimes. However, he argues that, in spite of this, individual liberties are not curtailed, just as limited popular sovereignty did not suppress human freedom, but protected it (Maududi 2011, 29; Adams 1983, 120).

The Islamic state is ideological because it welds all believers into one community (umma) in spite of race, color or country. It does not recognize linguistic, geographical or color barriers (Maududi 2011, 30; cf Adams 1983, 120; Bennett 2005, 51), with the aim of reestablishing a universal caliphate. All Muslims hold the same ideology, and the implication is that the state must be run by Muslims, and so the citizenship is classified into Muslims and *Dhimmis*¹¹¹ (Non-Muslims). The non-Muslims are not guaranteed political expression or full equality with their Muslim counterparts (Adams 1983, 121-122; Maududi 1960, 245-252, 274-298). This is another potential source of altercation in a secular state with Muslims and non-Muslims.

Since Shari'a is central to an Islamic state, and it is a complete way of life that defines what is haram (prohibited), makruh (disliked), fard (mandatory), matlab (recommended) and mubah (permitted) in a Muslim's life (Bennett 2005, 52), Maududi limits materials for the constitution of an Islamic state to four principal sources: Qur'an, Sunna of the Prophet, the conventions of the Four Rightly Guided Caliphs (Khilafat-i-Rashidah), and the rulings of the great traditional Islamic jurists (Maududi 1960, 203-204; Jackson 2011, 109-127; Adams 1983, 114). The limited functions of the three organs of the Islamic state (legislature, executive, and judiciary) are, therefore, defined. The legislature cannot legislate in contravention of the already existing directives of God and his prophet; if it did, all such laws are ultra vires. In spite of this limitation, the legislature still functions to enact into practical rules existing laws, decide which interpretation to adopt where there are multiple possibilities, provide fatwas where none explicitly exists in the Qur'an or Sunna, and legislate where none exist in all available traditional sources.

¹¹¹ Again the Dhimmi concept is not new in Islam. Maududi, however, went into more specifics against Christians and non-Muslims than traditional Islam did. For example even Taymiyyah was only generalistic that the people of the book (Christians and Jews) should be fought until they become Muslims or pay jizya. As we shall see, Maududi went into very specific actions. It appears the northern states adopted his principles.

The executive exists to enforce the directives of God found in the Qur'an and the Sunna, and ensure willing compliance with these directives in practical life of the umma, while the judiciary is also to enforce the divine codes and not violate them as they are doing, according to Maududi, in almost all Muslim states. He, however, admits that no clear cut instructions exist as to how their relationship should be. The only guide is the example of the prophet and the rightly guided Caliphs (Maududi 1960, 221-225; Jackson 2011, 129-131). Armajani adds that the legislature and the judiciary also advise the Amir, who is given enormous amount of power so as to apply God's sovereignty (2012, 167). One challenge that emerges is how to distinguish between Maududi's theoretical sovereignty with sovereignty in the immediate and practical sense. It appears he did not pay attention to the mundane and the practical aspects of the Islamic state. Herein also lies the lacuna that might encourage local multiple interpretations navigating in different directions with altercative consequences.

Maududi's Qur'anic Interpretations of Jihad and Fighting

The centrality of jihad as instrument of revolution to create an Islamic state is clear in Maududi's ideology (1980, 5). Maududi's position on jihad, fighting and apostasy are also central in defining the character of relationship between the Islamic states with non-Muslims. It is important to still bear in mind that jihad and fighting have been interpreted synonymously. The researcher shall rely on his Qur'anic commentary¹¹² and writings to discuss his views on these terms. Refer to footnotes henceforth for Maududi's exact words on ideas explored.

Furthermore, jihad and defense of Islam are two critical aspects in the practice of Islamic faith, in Maududi's view. A Muslim's reliability and integrity relies on how he defends Islam (Bennett 2004, 44). Maududi also advocates the total sufficiency of Islam as "different from, incompatible with, and superior to any other religion, one must maintain a barrier between Islam and the non-Muslim world. Islam needs no apology but must counter-attack" (Demant 2006, 99). Maududi's definition of jihad requires a Muslim to surrender and utilize all he has, including his life, for fighting to defend Islam.¹¹³

¹¹² The complete commentary of the Qur'an by Maududi titled Taflim al-Qur'an is downloaded from www.english tafsir.com in a soft copy. The commentary is the same published in hard copy.

Some Fighting Verses

In Maududi's definition of jihad, militant jihad as well as fighting is not optional to Muslims. Selected commentaries considered here will further verify that.

Commentaries selected are the ones viewed as having the potential to promote altercations with non-Muslims. First, in sura 2:190, although Maududi admits those to be fought are people who hinder Muslims from following the way of Allah, Muslims can use force where it is absolutely indispensable and necessary without explaining what situation is absolutely indispensable and necessary. On sura 2:191, rather than allow people to persuade or persecute Muslims out of Islam, Maududi justifies the use of brute force against them.¹¹⁴

Maududi appears to advocate freedom of religion in sura 2:193.¹¹⁵ However, his clarification contradicts this position. Unbelievers have no right to enforce ungodly laws on believers; therefore, preaching and fighting are allowed to eliminate such unjust conditions, as the occasion requires, without explaining what the requirement of the occasion might be. This seems to suggest that whenever Muslims are in the minority, they must fight until they rule. His position in Jihad in Islam seems to confirm this.

Surprisingly, in sura 2:216 where Allah enjoins war for believers that they dislike, Maududi gives no interpretation. However, in his commentary on sura 3:169 that corresponds with sura 2:152, Maududi eulogizes martyrdom as revitalizing and keeping "alive the spirit of courage" (Commentary 155 on sura 3:169), and ¹¹³“The word “jihad” means to exert one's utmost for the achievement of an object. It is not a synonym for “holy war” but has a far wider meaning than this and covers every kind of effort. And the mujahid is one who is always after the achievement of his ideal, plans for it, propagates it with his tongue and pen and struggles for it with all his heart and body. In short, he spends all his efforts and resources for its achievement and fights against all those forces that oppose it; so much so that he does not hesitate to put even his very life in danger for his ideal. The struggle and fight to such a person will be technically Jihad. A Muslim, however, is required to do all this in the way of Allah alone under certain moral restrictions for establishing the Way prescribed by Him and for elevating His Word above all. And there should be absolutely no other object than this before a Muslim in performing Jihad” (Commentary 234 on sura 2:218).

¹¹⁴ Commentary 200-202 on sura 2:191)

¹¹⁵ Commentary 205 on sura 2:193: He, however, defines the freedom. This freedom “does not allow the unbelievers the right to enforce on God's earth any ungodly law and make the servants of Allah the servants of someone else. In order to remove such and unjust condition, Islam allows both preaching and fighting according to the requirements of the occasion. The believers, therefore, cannot rest content unless this fitna, political domination and legal sovereignty or unbeliever is eradicated and freedom for the way of Allah is secured.”

interpreted “alive and well catered for” to mean eternal life.¹¹⁶ On sura 4:74 Maududi says asceticism and eschatological expectation is the true qualification for those who can fight for Allah, and sura 8:39 makes fighting to establish the way of Allah obligatory and lawful.¹¹⁷ This appears to justify proactive use of force. Maududi seems to accept that sura 9:5-6, 123 abrogates the peaceful verses and permits unprovoked military action in the way of Allah. He largely clarifies lawful months to fight mushriks (disbelievers).¹¹⁸ And Maududi insists that sura 9:29 approves jihad beyond the people of the book (Jews and Christians), which curtails their independence and supremacy, to force them to accept Islamic way of life, to global application on non-Muslims¹¹⁹ forcing them to pay jizya ¹²⁰ in an Islamic state.

The promise of paradise to those who fight jihad and die or are killed for the cause of Allah in sura 9:111-112 is a transaction beyond the metaphysical and verbal profession of faith. It involves total physical surrender. In this regard, believers cannot remain Muslims and be indifferent politically, culturally, economically, socially and in international matters.¹²¹ And on sura 61:4 (48:16),¹²² God requires fighters who disregard every kind of danger.¹²³

¹¹⁶ Commentary 155 on sura 3:169: “It is forbidden to refer to those who are martyred for Allah’s sake as “dead” because the very word “death” and its thought are very discouraging, and kill the spirit of self-sacrifice and the urge to fight in the way of Allah. Instead of this, the Muslims are told to believe the martyrs to be enjoying eternal life. And this is a reality which revitalizes and keeps alive the spirit of courage.”

¹¹⁷ Commentary 103, 31 on sura 8:39

¹¹⁸ Commentary 6-7, 121-123 on sura 9:5-6, 123

¹¹⁹ Commentary 26-28 on sura 9:29

¹²⁰ Maududi commented on jizyah in commentary 28 on sura 9:29 that “This is the ‘jizyah’ of which the Muslims have been feeling apologetic during the last two centuries of their degeneration and there are still some people who continue to apologize for it. But the Way of Allah is straight and clear and does not stand in need of any apology to the rebels against Allah. Instead of offering apologies on behalf of Islam for the measure that guarantees security of life, property and faith to those who choose to live under its protection, the Muslims should feel proud of such a humane law as that of jizyah. For it is obvious that the maximum freedom that can be allowed to those who do not adopt the Way of Allah but choose to tread the ways of error is that they should be tolerated to lead the life they like. That is why the Islamic State offers them protection, if they agree to live as its Zimmis by paying jizyah, but it cannot allow that they should remain supreme rulers in any place and establish wrong ways and impose them on others. As this state of things inevitably produces chaos and disorder, it is the duty of the true Muslims to exert their utmost to bring to an end their wicked rule and bring them under a righteous order.”

¹²¹ Commentary 106-107 on sura 9:111-112

¹²² Commentary 3 on sura 61:4

¹²³ In Commentary 106.2 on sura 61:4, Maududi interpreted that Allah “considers the faith of only that person to be true, who makes this bargain with Him and sells his freedom of thought and action to Him and gives up his entire claim to ownership in his favour. That this is why a man might profess the articles of faith and observe the prescribed obligatory duties, but if he considered himself alone to be the master and owner of his body and soul, his heart and brain and his other faculties, his property and his resources and other things in his possession, and reserved to himself the right of expending them as he willed, he shall be regarded a disbeliever in the sight of Allah even though he shall be regarded a

Jihad has internal consequences in Maududi's interpretation of sura 9:123, which he linked to verse 73. Syncretism should be crushed without regard to race, family and social relations.¹²⁴ Maududi's definition of *mujahadah*¹²⁵ in his commentary 8 of sura 29:6 underscores his emphasis on the global militant nature of jihad. Mujahadah involves fighting all men, "from home to the world outside, whose ideology, trends, morality, customs, way of life and social and economic principles may be in conflict with his faith; and he has to fight that state too, which enforces its laws independent of obedience to Allah" (Commentary 8 on sura 29:6).

Maududi's interpretation of sura 48:16 enjoins participation in jihad by able-bodied men as the only mark of sincerity to Islam, although the verse is talking about Bedouins. Even sura 49:9 allows use of force between Muslims to quell aggression, not to kill. One wonders how to prevent killing, with certainty, in a fight. On sura 60:8-9, contrary to his explanation of mujahadah, which means fighting everything un-Islamic, Maududi says Muslims must distinguish hostile and non-hostile disbelievers. However, he did not explain what it means to be hostile.

Some Jihad Verses

Similar to his interpretation of sura 8:39 and contrary to what the verse suggests, Maududi interprets sura 4:95-96 to mean voluntary and ordered jihad are obligatory. Only hypocrites shy away from it.¹²⁶ Maududi's commentary on Sura 5:33 exposes his political reading of the Qur'an. Although it refers to Allah and his messenger, he believer in the sight of the world...The very fact the man does not expend his life and property in the way Allah approves of, or expends these in the way he disapproves, shows that the one who claimed to profess the faith either did not sell these to Allah or after having made the transaction still regarded himself to be their master and owner."

¹²⁴"Disbelievers who are near you refers to those hypocrites who were doing great harm to Islamic Society by mixing up with the sincere Muslims...The Command has been repeated at its end in order to impress on the Muslims the importance of the matter and to urge them to do jihad and crush these internal enemies, without paying the least regard to the racial, family and social relations that had been proving a binding force with them" (Commentary 121 on sura 9:123).

¹²⁵"The word mujahadah means to struggle and exert one's utmost against an opponent, and when the particular opponent force is not pointed out, the word implies an all-out, many-sided struggle. The struggle that a believer has to make in the world is of this very nature. He has to fight against Satan, who frightens him every moment of the possible losses he/they have to incur for the sake of good and allures him with the benefits and pleasures of the evil. He has to fight his own self also, which exerts to make him the slave of its lusts. He has also to fight all those men, from home to the world outside, whose ideology, trends, morality, customs way of life and social and economic principles may be in conflict with his Faith; and he has to fight that state too, which enforces its laws independent of obedience to Allah, and employs its forces to promote evil instead of the good. This struggle is not of a day or two, but of a lifetime, of every moment of the day and night. And it is not a struggle in one field only but on every front of life. It is about this that Hadrat Hassan Basri has said: "Man exerts in the way of Allah, even though he may not strike one sword at any time" (Commentary 8 on sura 29:6).

¹²⁶ Commentary 128 on sura 4:95-96.

avers the word “land” means Islamic state, and so any attempt to overthrow an Islamic state is war against Allah.¹²⁷ In sura 5: 35, he claims the phrase “exert your utmost” does not convey the full meaning of jahidu, which implies a harder struggle against all powers, individuals and groups standing against the way of Allah.¹²⁸

In sura 9:16, Maududi asserts new Muslim converts must ignore blood ties and worldly interests, as a test, to fight for Allah through sacrificing their lives, wealth and dear ones. In sura 9:38, a Muslim leader’s call for jihad becomes obligatory to all Muslims, irrespective of the group or region they belong to. Going for jihad establishes the genuineness of one’s faith. In Maududi’s view, the phrase “whether light or heavy” in sura 9:41 comprehensively means participating in jihad in spite of any personal state of being; and refusal makes one a candidate of hell (sura 9:49), as if jihad is the only religious duty of a Muslim.

However, most of these verses do not avail themselves to such interpretations.¹²⁹ For example, Maududi’s explanation of jihad in light of sura 22:78 appears contrary to the meaning of da’wa (propagation) intended in the verse.¹³⁰ Also he does not make the distinction between inner jihad and militant jihad, like some Muslim commentators do. Introducing jihad-i-kabir (greater jihad) on sura 25:52, Maududi completely leaves the subject of the verse, which is jihad with the Qur’an, and extends the meaning to include exertion with one’s self, and fight against enemies of Islam with resources. He summarizes that jihad entails the use of “one’s tongue, pen, wealth, life and every other available weapon.”¹³¹

¹²⁷ Commentary 55 on sura 5:33

¹²⁸ Commentary 59 on sura 5:35: “‘Exert your utmost’ does not fully convey the meaning of Jahidu. It implies that the Believers should struggle against all the forces that stand in the way of Allah, as if to say, ‘You can please Allah and win His favor only if you exert your utmost in the way of Allah: struggle hard against all the persons, parties and forces which stand in Allah’s way, which hinder you from Allah’s way to turn you away from it, which do not let you follow Allah’s way as His servants and force you to become their servants or servants of others. Such exertion and struggle will lead you to true success and become the means of obtaining your nearness to Allah.’”

¹²⁹ Refer to commentaries 16-18, 40, 43, 49-50 on sura 9

¹³⁰ Commentary 128: “The Arabic word Jihad is very comprehensive. It includes every kind of effort, exertion, conflict and war. Jihad for the cause of Allah means that it should be performed for His service and for His approval against those who prevent others from following His Way. The performance of Jihad also requires that one should first of all fight against one’s own self in order to subdue it. For there can be no true Jihad unless one fights against one’s evil self and subdues one’s desires and lusts to the obedience of Allah. The Holy Prophet himself has emphasized the need for this Jihad. Once when the warriors for the cause of Allah returned from Jihad, he said: “You have returned from the lesser Jihad to the greater Jihad.” They asked, ‘what is that greater Jihad?’ The Holy Prophet replied, ‘It is the Jihad against one’s own desires and lusts. Moreover, the battlefield for Jihad is, in fact, the whole world, and Islam demands that one should exert one’s utmost against all the rebels of Allah and the wicked powers with all of one’s heart and mind and body and wealth.’”

¹³¹ Commentary 67 on sura 25:52

Justifying jihad with “every available weapon,” he argues that sura 47:4-6 grants authorization for war in consonance with permission granted in sura 39 and 2:190. Sura 47:4-6, therefore, is the initial instruction for the laws of war. Setting aside textual context, he interprets that Allah enjoins conflict between believers and worshippers of falsehood. The fight will distinguish clearly the qualities of the two.¹³² In this instance, Maududi does not differentiate between hostile and non-hostile disbelievers. He further comments that martyrdom has benefit (profit and not loss) to both the living and the martyr.¹³³ He carries the same theme of bargain (profit and loss) into his interpretation of sura 61:10-11. To Maududi, militant jihad is contemporarily relevant. His Qur’anic interpretation of apostasy is more conventional than it appears in his writing.

Jihad, Fighting and Apostasy in Maududi’s Works

Maududi’s writings expose a more expanded treatment of militant jihad, fighting and apostasy. Witness to Mankind (2011) explains the sacrifice required to globalize Islam and make it undeniable to humanity. Organizational discipline of obeying leaders and taking up hijra and jihad are necessary requirements. It is only through “corporate life, jama’ah, collective struggle, jihad, can we fulfill the main objectives of Islam and most of its requirements” (2011, 47-48). In Islamic Movement: Pre-Requisite for success (2009), he stipulates the conditions for success in establishing the social order of Islam in the world, which are personal, collective and complimentary qualifications that must include forbearance and steadfastness. Revolution in leadership is the objective of the Islamic movement in The Islamic

¹³² Commentary 9 on sura 47:4-6

¹³³ Commentary 10 on sura 47:4-6: “A person being slain in the way of Allah does not mean that he lost his life and as far as his person was concerned all his lifework was wasted. It is wrong to think that the sacrifices of the martyrs are not beneficial for themselves but only for those who live after them in the world, and take advantage of their sacrifices. The fact is that even for the martyrs themselves it is a bargain of profit, not of loss at all. “This is the profit that the martyrs falling in the way of Allah will gain. Its three grades have been stated: That Allah will guide them; that He will set their condition right; and that He will admit them to the Paradise with which He has acquainted them beforehand. Guidance here obviously implies guiding to Paradise; setting the condition right implies that before their entry into Paradise, Allah will adorn them with robes of honor and remove every filth which had polluted them in the life of the world; and the third stage means that even in this world they have been told through the Qur'an and the Holy Prophet what kind of Paradise it is that has been prepared for them; when they enter that Paradise they will enter a place with which they will already be familiar and they will come to know that they have been blessed precisely with the same that had been promised to them in the world.”

Movement: Dynamics of Values, Power and Change (2011). Striving to achieve this in the world will secure God's favor in this world and the next.

Views on Jihad and Fighting

Jihad in Islam defines Maududi's concept of jihad and fighting and captures his anti-colonial and anti-western rhetoric. Ushama and Osmani say Jihad in Islam greatly impacted the world (2006, 97). Maududi begins with a scathing, sarcastic condemnation of Muslims for renouncing militancy and being apologetic in their response. The sarcasm is inherent when Muslims say the crusade of the sword has been abrogated for the satisfaction of his majesty and "now 'Jihad' only refers to waging war with the tongue and pen. To fire cannons and shoot with guns is the privilege of your honour's government and wagging tongues and scratching with pens is our pleasure" (1980, 3). Jihad is justified in Islam because Islam is not a conventional type of religion, as the word religion connotes (1980, 4).

Islam is a revolutionary ideology to alter global social order, "Muslim" is the international revolutionary party, and jihad is the instrument of revolutionary struggle (1980, 5).¹³⁴ Jihad is selected against harb (war), which is conventional, because jihad is "more forceful and wider in connotation." Revolutionary ideologies shun conventions (1980, 5). Jihad represents all the composite forces that will achieve the revolution (1980, 7). Revolutionary mobilization through speech and writing, utilization of resources and physical energies, as well as alteration of "old tyrannical social system and [the establishment of] a new just order of life by the power of sword" are all forms of jihad (1980, 7 Italics mine). And the aim is to establish God's just order in the world and enforce it upon mankind to gain God's favor (1980, 9). With sura 28:83 as justification, jihad is "an invitation to join a movement of social revolution" (1980, 13).

All prophets are revolutionary leaders, with Muhammad as the greatest (1980, 15). Islam is a "comprehensive system which envisages to annihilate all tyrannical and evil systems in the world and enforces its own programme of reform which it deems best for the well-being of mankind" (1980, 16-17, Italics mine). Muslims are members of “hizbAllah” (the international revolutionary party), or Islamic party, or the umma of Islam, with the purpose of destroying the “hegemony of an un-Islamic system” to establish a new social and cultural order. Their sole duty is to “wipe out oppression, mischief, strife, immorality, high handedness and unlawful exploitation from the world by force of arms” (1980, 18 Italics mine). Ahmad cites Maududi arguing that the use of arms to spread Islam was there since the beginning (1989, 13).¹³⁵

¹³⁴"Islam is a revolutionary ideology and programme which seeks to alter the social order of the whole world and rebuild it in conformity with its own tenets and ideals. 'Muslim' is the title of that International Revolutionary Party organized by Islam to carry into effect its revolutionary programme. And 'Jihad' refers to that revolutionary struggle and utmost exertion which the Islamic Party brings into play to achieve this objective."

The Islamic party must capture state authority, without which Islamic pattern of life is impossible (Maududi 1980, 19).¹³⁶ The justification for this position is sura 9:43-45. Jihad aims at global revolution to eliminate the rule of un-Islamic systems and replace them with Islamic systems of state rule (1980, 22).¹³⁷ Sura 4:75 justifies this aim. Maududi refers to Jamaat-i-Islami party as God’s troopers and not a missionary organization of preachers or evangelists (1964, 58), because uprooting mischief and disorder and reforming mankind cannot be realized through sermonizing and counseling (1964, 11).¹³⁸ This is a similar idea El-Zakzkay will express as a student Member of MSS as shall be relayed later. The requirement of prayer, fasting,

¹³⁵“The Messenger of Allah invited Arabs to accept Islam for 13years. He used every possible means of persuasion, gave them incontrovertible arguments and proofs, showed them miracles and put before them his life as an example of piety and morality. In short, he used every possible means of communication, but his people refused to accept Islam. When every method of persuasion failed, the Prophet took to the sword. That sword removed evil mischief, the impurities of evil and the filth of the soul. The sword did something more – it removed their blindness so that they could see the light of truth, and also cured them of their arrogance; arrogance which prevents people from accepting the truth, stiff necks and proud heads bowed with humility. As in Arabia and other countries, Islam’s expansion was so fast that within a century a quarter of the world accepted it. This conversion took place because the sword of Islam tore away the veils of which covered men’s hearts.”

¹³⁶“The party of Islam has no choice except to capture State Authority, for an evil system takes root and flourishes under the patronage of an evil government and a pious cultural order can never be established until the authority of Government is wrested from the wicked and transferred into the hands of the reformers . . . it becomes impossible for the party itself to act upon its own ideals under an alien state system . . . it is impossible for a Muslim to succeed in his intention of observing the Islamic pattern of life under the authority of a non-Islamic system of government.”

¹³⁷“The aim of jihad is [t]o eliminate the rule of an un-Islamic system and establish in its stead an Islamic system of state rule. Islam does not intend to confine this revolution to a single state or a few countries; the aim of Islam is to bring about a universal revolution. Although in the initial stages it is incumbent upon members of the party of Islam to carry out a revolution in the State system of the countries to which they belong, but their ultimate objective is no other than to effect a world revolution. No revolutionary ideology which champions the principles of the welfare of humanity as a whole instead of upholding national interests can restrict its aims and objectives to the limits of a country or a nation. The goal of such an all-embracing doctrine is naturally bound to be world revolution. Truth cannot be confined within geographical borders.”

¹³⁸“Anyone who wants to uproot mischief and disorder from the world and wants to reform mankind should realize that he cannot do so by mere sermonizing and counseling. It is useless. He should rise against the government of false principles, he should seize power, remove the wrong doers from authority and set up a government based on sound principles and just administration.”

charity and pilgrimage is training for jihad to establish the government of God, as state governments train their armies, police and civil service for war (1964, 16-17).

Global Islamic militancy is necessary for the complete freedom of humanity, the safety and general reform of the Islamic state, and the salvation of all mankind. In this regard, “if this Islamic state has power and resources, it will fight and destroy non-Islamic governments and establish Islamic states in their place” (Maududi 1964, 64).¹³⁹ The dual task of crushing opposing ideologies and capturing state power to distill Islamic principles in space–time forces is what Maududi considers as the defensive and offensive object of jihad (1980, 26).

Islamic jihad is to deny non-Muslims the right to administer state affairs or continue cultural or religious practices inimical to the public interest of Muslims (1980, 27). Apparently, non-Muslim interests are not considered public interest in an Islamic state. Therefore, as soon as the umma captures state power, businesses charging interests will be banned, gambling prohibited, and all entrepreneurship forbidden by Islamic law curbed. Prostitution dens will be closed and women forced to observe the Islamic form of dressing. No cinemas will be allowed, and all non-Muslim cultural practices will be viewed to be corrosive and fatal to the moral fibres of Islam, and hence they will be banned (1980, 27-28). A similar policy is pursued in states that implemented Shari’a in northern Nigeria.

Jihad as part of the overall defense of Islam, in Maududi’s view, is a dry labor devoid of pleasure, which demands sacrifice of life, wealth and carnal pleasure (1980, 29).¹⁴⁰ This defense involves upholding and guarding the prestige as well as the interest of Muslims at large. Those who do not subscribe to this are false pretenders to friendship with Allah (1960, 107).¹⁴¹ Maududi’s global outlook here seems to bring to ¹³⁹ The principle of implementing Shari’a in northern Nigeria by 12 states seems to be pursuing this agenda. In fact, Boko Haram articulates this demand unapologetically.

¹⁴⁰ The way Maududi advocates for the defense of Islam reminds the researcher of Saul later Paul in the Bible. Maududi may not be exactly like Paul in Christianity, but his influence have been great especially among radicalized Muslims.

¹⁴¹“Jihad is a part of this overall defense of Islam. Jihad means struggle to the utmost of one’s capacity. A man who exerts himself physically or mentally or spends his wealth in the way of Allah is indeed engaged in jihad. But in the language of sharia this word is used particularly for the war that is waged solely in the name of Allah and against those who perpetrate oppression as enemies of Islam. This supreme sacrifice of lives devolves on all Muslims. If, however, a section of the Muslims offer themselves for participating in the jihad, the whole community is absolved of its responsibility. But if none comes forward, everybody is guilty. This concession vanishes for the citizens of an Islamic state when it is attacked by a non-Muslim power. In that case everybody must come forward for the jihad. If the country attacked has not strength enough to fight back, then it is the religious duty of the neighboring Muslim countries to help her, if even they fail, then the Muslims of the whole world must fight the common enemy. In all these cases, jihad is as much a primary duty of the Muslims concerned the fore, and suggests, why there are Muslim outcries on issues such as the cartoon of Prophet Muhammad in Denmark.

Views on Apostasy

Maududi justifies the killing of apostates and those recanting their conversion to Islam (1981, 32). It appears non-Muslims and converts to Islam have no freedom of choice in an Islamic state, although the Qur'an permits freedom of religion and choice (sura 2:256). Maududi states that, "in our domain we neither allow any Muslim to change his religion nor allow any other religion to propagate its faith" (1981, 32). He asserts that enforcing death penalty is the only way to stop Muslims from converting to other religions and falling into kufur (disbelief), and for non-Muslims to accept Islam or leave the Islamic state (1981, 80-81).¹⁴²

This means multi-religious existence is a misnomer, and distinction between one born to be a Muslim and one who converts to Islam should not be made in judging apostasy (1981, 72-73).¹⁴³ Maududi agrees that sura 2:256 means no one is compelled to accept Islam, but "we must warn anyone who wishes to recant that this door is impassable to free traffic. If you wish to come, do so with the firm decision that you cannot escape" (1981, 73). Therefore, interfaith propagation within the boundaries of as the daily prayers and fasting. One who shirks it is a sinner. His very claim to being a Muslim is doubtful. He is plainly a hypocrite who fails in the test of sincerity and all his ibadat and prayers are a sham, worthless hollow show of devotion" (1960, 107).

¹⁴²"Whenever the death penalty for apostasy is enforced in a new Islamic state, then Muslims are kept within Islam's fold. But there is danger that a large number of hypocrites will live alongside them. They will always pose a danger of treason. My solution to the problem is this. That whenever an Islamic revolution takes place, all non-practicing Muslims should, within one year, declare their turning away from Islam and get out of Muslim society. After one year all born Muslims will be considered Muslim. All Islamic laws will be enforced upon them. They will be forced to practice all the fara id and wajibat of their religion and, if anyone then wishes to leave Islam, he will be executed. Every effort will be made to save as many people as possible from falling into the lap of kufur. But those who cannot be saved will be reluctantly separated from society forever (executed). After this purification Islamic society will start afresh with Muslims who have decided voluntarily to remain Muslims."

¹⁴³"There is one final question about capital punishment which may disturb many of us. A non-Muslim who freely embraced Islam then returned to kufur can be said to have made a deliberate mistake. He could have remained a dhimmi, so why enter a religion of collective responsibility from which there is no escape? But what of the person who was born of Muslim parents and who has not embraced Islam? He is a Muslim by birth. If, on reaching adulthood, he wants to reject the faith, you threaten him with execution and he remains a Muslim; this would be unjust. And it also provides sustenance to the ever-growing number of born hypocrites in Muslim society. There are two answers to this question, one deals with the practical aspect, the other with the principle. In principle there can be no distinction between the born followers of a religion and that religion's converts. And no religion has ever made that distinction. Both converts and born followers are governed by the same laws. It is both impossible and a logical absurdity to treat the children of the followers of a religion as kufar or aliens till they are adults, then give them the choice of choosing or rejecting the religion (or citizenship, for that matter) of their birth. No society in the world could manage its affairs in this way."

an Islamic state is prohibited (1981, 32), and global religious freedom rejected. Other religions are false and advancing towards fire, and should not be allowed to attract others to it (1981, 35). Maududi finds historical precedence in the actions of the guided Caliphs (1964, 64).

Concisely, Maududi justifies militant jihad or use of the “sword” to enforce Shari'a on all mankind (1980, 7, 9, 16-18), capture all state authority and make it Islamic (1980, 19), destroy and eliminate all un-Islamic rule and establish Islamic rule (1980, 22; 1964, 64), and achieve global Islamization (1980, 5, 22; 1964, 64). Jihad is also necessary to prohibit the non-Islamic way of life in an Islamic state (1980, 27-28), disallow un-Islamic religious propagation and make conversion from Islam impossible (1981, 32, 73), and enforce the exit of non-Muslims from the Islamic state who refuse to embrace Islam (1981, 80-81), because multi-religious co-existence is not allowed in an Islamic state (1981, 72-73). This is the fundamentalist philosophy of the Islamic state Maududi globally exports across Muslim territories through Egypt, with Sayyed Qutb and Muslim Brotherhood.

Summary

In this chapter, the researcher discussed Maududi and his Islamic interpretation, especially his political interpretation of Islam that emphasizes creation of an Islamic state anchored in the philosophy of Din wa Dawla (Islam is politics and religion). The focused issues in the discussions are as follows: how he primarily shaped the philosophy of Qutb and the Muslim Brotherhood; how this philosophy was exported globally and specifically to Nigeria; how Maududi's writing emphasizes militant jihad as instrument of revolution to achieve the creation of an Islamic state, eliminate all un-Islamic state systems for global Islamization, eliminate the rights of non-Muslims' participation in politics, and stifle multi-religious existence and conversion. It is highly probable that this understanding of Islam by Maududi has shaped global antagonism towards the non-Muslim world among Muslims who saliently accept it.

CHAPTER FIVE

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

Introduction

Research methodology is important in research because it provides the basis for validity, which is said to be “the central issue of research methodology” (Elliston 2011, 56), and reliability, which is the “degree of consistency of a research instrument or method” (Elliston 2011, 62) of research. This ensures relative objectivity of the research, relative in the sense that, as Shorter explains, “complete objectivity is unattainable” (Shorter 2000, 13). In addition, Elliston states that two fundamental issues are addressed by research method, and these are the collection and analysis of data (2011, 74). This study is a qualitative research.

The methods employed to provide answers to the research questions, including the incorporated Kim’s Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA), are discussed below. However, before this explanation is undertaken, it is important to give a methodological/theoretical review on the themes of culture, religion, ideology, emotion, and violence/conflict, since they are underlying themes in this research.

A Methodological/Theoretical Perspective

There is a relationship between religion, culture, ideology and conflicts. This is evident by the views expressed by sociologists, psychologists, political scientists and anthropologists concerning the existence, nature, cause and effect of conflict or violence. Of particular interest here is the relationship between religion and violent conflict.

Religion is complex and difficult to define, as seen above. It is seen as a false explanatory system (Taylor 1958), the social nexus of a group (Durkheim 1915), or a cultural meaning (Geertz 1973). Some scholars view it as the term of exchange with the god or gods (Stark and Finke 2000). Others see it as moral orientation for life (Smith 1998), or an evolving mechanism with various sociocultural dimensions (Smart 1969). Religion as a belief system has deep roots in culture, since it forms the worldview of a society which permeates its values and concerns (Lambek 2008, 9). Religion is also an ideology, as will be seen, because it includes explanation of the origin and nature of world affairs (Bond n. d., 37). Nonetheless, the symbiotic relationship between religion and culture is an interesting one.

Relationship between Religion and Culture

Kraft views religion as a sub-system of culture (1996, 49, 122, 198-199), especially as it forms part of a people's customs which shapes the way they behave and do things. However, if religion, through its sacred symbols, shapes the way people perceive life and motivates action and behavior (Peterson 2001, 9; Geertz 1973, 129), and shapes total social behavior (Geertz 1993, 89-90), then religion has the force of culture. Thus, religion can be seen as culture, especially since culture is also made up of beliefs and values transmitted unchanged from generation to generation by ethnic, religious and social groups organized by ideology (Facchini 2011, 1). Consequently, religion is a culture in itself. This is because it has equal power as culture to influence cultural behavior.

Furthermore, Kraft accepts Kluckhohn's definition of culture as "a total way of life of a people, the social legacy the individual acquires from his group" (1996, 38). This seems to be similar to Geertz's acceptance that religious worldview shapes total social behavior (1993, 89-90). This is, perhaps, why Holt concedes that Islam is both a religion and a culture (1970, 569). Cultures are learned (Kraft 1996, 40, 45), so are religious cultures. That is why they become habitual, and the power of cultures over people is through the force of habit, whereas cultures do not force people to follow them, as Kraft argues (1996, 37). Cultural habits are then formed because they make sense to those within the culture (1996, 46). Considering the above, it means that with effort, habits can be changed (1996, 37). Herein lies the potential to change conflict related behaviors, and even for conversion.

Religion and culture mutually exert on one another, depending on the context. There are times when religion shapes cultural practices, and times when culture shapes religious practices. However, even where religion is within a culture, it maintains its power as a culture, often overriding and imposing itself over social culture and altering cultural practices. Classical examples are the effect of religious jihad on Arabian culture and on the cultures of northern Nigeria, especially in Hausa land as discussed in Chapter Three. This is why religious belief can transcend family, community, and national ties, and probably why Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno see religion as an independent cultural force in society (2004, 295) and Geertz sees it as a cultural system (1973). Yet religion cannot exist without human cultures.

Religion, Culture and Ideology

Besides the relationship between religion and culture, both have a relationship to ideology, in spite of all being distinct. Ideology is the intellectual dimension of religion and culture. Ideology as an intrinsic part of religion is captured by Facchini, who argues that ideology is not only belief but the intellectual dimension of a belief system, and a justifying part of it (2011, 3). Culture and religion are both belief systems, and as belief systems, they need ideology as their driving force. Implicitly, religion and culture are ideologies in themselves (Young 2008; Bond n.d.), in spite of Shrimali's doubt that the question of religion as an ideology has remained unanswered (1988, 23-24).

Invariably, without ideology it will be difficult to transmit religion and culture because ideology is their substance or content. Evidently, religion, culture and ideology are inseparable (Geertz 1973; LaCapra 1988). Since religion is knit with culture, it is important to note what Ture says: "To every culture corresponds an ideology and the nature of culture is but a transposition of the ideology which, as set of rules of conduct, fit for the attainment of certain ideals . . ." (cited in Pan African Culture and Ideology). Consequently, whenever there is cultural change, it is driven by ideology. This is because ideology legitimates norms and beliefs that is why it plays a specific role in cultural change (Facchini 2011, 3).

In summary, ideology in religion and culture influence behavior and actions. Ideology, therefore, is an important term in this study. It intends to examine the influence of theological ideology behind religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Ideology also comes with definitional baggage. It also concerns the ideas of how people think about the world and how to ideally live in it. These shape goals, expectations and actions. This study accepts the position that ideology is a belief system and not a discourse, as Schull advocates (1992).

Schull postulates that ideology is a discourse and not a belief system. He argues that accepting ideology as a belief system fails to capture the variety of sub-beliefs in a group by assuming that there is only a single core or central belief in the group. Acknowledging ideology as a discourse recognizes that various ideologies or less dominant beliefs permeate the group. His argument makes it appear that groups do not have central ideologies or core beliefs they adhere to. However, he does not appear convincing on how sub-beliefs exist without a central or core belief system. The simple reason is that sub-beliefs spring from a core or central belief system. For example, every culture or religious culture has a central ideology or core belief from which sub-beliefs emerge.

It is acceptable that the power of ideology is in its communicative action. However, it does not appear possible to communicate a sub-idea without a central idea. Adherents of a culture or religion do not differ in central ideology or core belief, which is often the unifying factor and power of the culture or religion, in spite of the existence of sub-beliefs. Therefore, it is the central idea (core belief) that provides the latitude for discourse of its varieties (sub-beliefs). For example, you must accept Christianity before you talk of being Evangelical, Protestant or Orthodox. In other words, you cannot justify part of a belief without subscribing to the core belief. It is concrete concepts in peoples' minds that aid discourse. Freedman's argument is apt here, although tilted towards politics. He argues that "ideologies are configurations of political concepts – such as liberty, democracy, justice, and nationhood – in which particular interpretations of each constituent concept have been selected out of indeterminate range of meanings they may signify" (1998, 749). Why religion and culture are powerful is because they have a central ideology or core belief system. This is what strongly bears on human behavior and action as it generates powerful feelings or emotions.

Ideology and Emotions

Cash is then correct that ideologies are central to political life and conflicts because they are saturated by emotions (1989, 704). Theological or religious ideologies can carry similar emotions. Ideologies are systems of interacting symbols and patterns of interworking meanings (Geertz 1973). This is why they inform, shape and animate emotions. Ideologies also operate by constructing a system of relationships that simultaneously subject members to position within the system by providing a structure of signification functioning in line with psychological rules. The human side of ideology makes it radically mind-dependent, which subjects individual human beings to defined positions (Cash 1989, 704-707). In other words, ideologies influence how people think and feel.

Francis, therefore, is accurate to say that in the same way people influence what we think, they can also shape what we feel (1997, 153). Although her study is on the interpersonal management of emotions, Francis brought to the fore Horchschild's argument that "ideology is a crucial influence on the social construction of emotion" and also that ideology affects how we define the events of our experience and "these definitions outline the rules of behavior, whether that behaviour is physical, rational or emotional" (1997, 154). Indeed, Huaco analyzes that one way ideology is viewed is something that is held with feelings or emotions, passion or commitment, and so on (1971, 246). Passions and commitments have associations with negative or positive actions. Negative actions might include conflicts or violence, especially if emotions are hyped up.

Emotions and Conflicts

Ideas shape emotions and emotions also shape actions. Therefore, ideas and emotions shape human behavior in many circumstances, although they are different. The way people feel influences how they behave and act. According to Costalli and Ruggeri, "emotions are the residues of experience . . . the marks left on individuals following positive or negative shocks" (n. d., 8, 14). Atran and Ginges are even more explicit about emotions, as they argue that "humans will kill and die not only to protect their own lives or defend kin and kith, but for an idea—the moral conception they form of themselves, of 'who we are'" (2012: 855). Consequently, emotions represent some kind of triggering mechanism (Costalli and Ruggeri, 8-9). In fact, Passerelli and Tabellini associate political unrest with emotions (2013, 1).

However, Costalli and Ruggeri point out that it is only of recent that ideas and emotions are given recognition as having strong influence on human behavior that involves conflicts or violence (n. d. 2). Currently, both political scientists and economists are coming to terms with the importance of integrating ideas and emotions in the causal mechanisms of human behavior. Examples are works by Cederman, Weidmann, and Gleditsch (2011), Rodrik (2013) and Passerelli and Tabellini (2013). Costalli and Ruggeri then help us to see that "emotions may shape action by their impact on the preferences, or the action tendencies that are the precursors of action" (n. d., 16). This argument seems to affirm Hepburn's position that there is a need to examine the transactions that occur between the participants prior to committing violence (1973, 420).

Religion is one force that can invoke such emotions. Hall's description of Durkheim's sacralization process as one in which the community of believers affirms their idealized vision of society and social relations (Hall 2001, 8) comes to mind. And Marshall captures the power of religion to evoke emotions that the sacred becomes absolute and "demands attention, evokes strong feelings, and occupies a unique place in the perceiver's thought" (2010, 65). Peterson compliments Marshall that religion, through its sacred symbols, shapes the way life is perceived and motivates action and behavior (2001, 9).

Sacred symbols have this emotional effect because they are a store of meaning (Geertz 1973, 127) and so induce devotion and enforce emotional commitment (1973, 126), which could include violent behavior through the meaning they provide. And "sacred values determine which social and material transactions are morally sanctioned, and can drive actions in intergroup conflict independently of material interests or consequences" (Atran and Ginges 2012, 857). The foregoing inherently links community interest with individual action (cf. Costalli and Ruggeri n. d., 12-13). In fact, Atran and Ginges argue that there is ample historical and cross-cultural evidence that demonstrates that when conflict is "framed by competing religious and sacred values, inter group violence may persist for decades, even centuries" (2012, 857), for example, when two religions consider a particular item, place or space as sacred.

How Religion, Culture, Ideology and Emotions Relate to Conflicts

As the researcher attempts this integration, it is necessary to give some additional background on violence as it relates to individuals and societies. First, let us say that there are vast theories that attempt to explain violence in individuals and in societies. These theories are broadly categorized into two: Violence within the individual and within the social environment. The first looks at internal motivation for violence, while the second looks at external motivation for violence. The former is the domain of psychologists, psychiatrists and psychoanalysts, and the latter is the domain of sociologists, political scientists and anthropologists. However, contemporary studies view these traditional approaches as being ad-hoc, one dimensional and limited (Barak n. d.). There is a move towards an interdisciplinary or integrative approach and a multi-causal developmental process perspective study (Staudigl 2007). Nevertheless, these draw from the earlier theoretical traditions.

As a result of these studies, forms of violence have been classified into direct, structural (Verobej 2008; Winter and Leighton 2001), and cultural (Galtung 1969, 1990). According to Galtung, cultural violence, which is significant to this study, means those aspects of culture symbolic to our existence exemplified by religion and ideology, and so forth, used to validate or defend direct or structural violence (1990, 291). We are also informed that there are three natures of violence: organized (criminal or political), spontaneous (individual or collective), and pathological (individual). Types of violence are revealed as self-directed, interpersonal or collective (Van der Dennen n.d.). Collective violence is also relevant for this study.

It is interesting that Coser (1996) sees the social function of violence as achievement, danger, or as catalyst (also Das 1987, 11). This is akin to the Marxist theory that socialist revolution is established through violent revolution producing social change, and change being an achievement (Schaff 1973). It is important that what we have discussed here is a concise summary because, even within the same discipline, opinions on violence differ, for example, in anthropology (Das 1987; Nordstrom and Robben 1995), and psychology (Bellinger 2003; Umberson et al 2002; Hepburn 1973). Indeed, roots of violence are found in different areas, such as religion (Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno 2004; Geertz 1973; Silberman 2005), culture (Bond n.d.), and power relations as sources of political violence (Ross 1986; Delos Rios n.d.). Even heat (environmental temperature) is considered to increase aggressive behavior (Anderson 2001). Our concern here is religion as source of conflict or violence.

Religions and cultures rely on ideology for their transmission. The argument here is that ideology is the locus of violence for a number of reasons. First, all studies on conflicts or violence are culture conditioned, and the researcher has argued that religion is a culture. There is no conclusive evidence in the human sciences that a gene exists in individuals that propels them to violence. Theologically speaking, even culture (resulting from the human mind and heart) is contaminated by sin in many ways, even though culture is not sin by itself. It is a fact that individuals are shaped by cultures, hence by ideologies. Personality traits and behaviors are not devoid of cultural and so ideological conditioning. Therefore, “violence is a dimension of people’s existence, not something external to society and culture that ‘happens’ to people,” and basically, “like creativity and altruism, violence is culturally constructed” (Nordstrom and Robben 1995, 2). And in consonance with all cultural products, it is basically a potential, which gives form and content to specific people within peculiar contexts of histories (Nordstrom and Robben 1995, 2-3). Conflicts and violence need to be studied within contexts and histories. This is what this study embarked upon. Indeed, “every human action has a social context” (de la Roche 1996, 101).

Secondly, even felt needs or deprivations are, to a large extent, culturally conditioned. Some studies attribute religious violence to felt needs and deprivations in northern Nigeria. This is possible, but even this is not devoid of cultural (ideological) conditioning. People in other areas with similar needs or deprivation do not resort to violence. What is also a need in a culture may not be in another culture. Indeed, felt needs and deprivations appear insufficient to propel violence without ideological push. Trotsky argues that “the mere existence of deprivations is not enough to cause an insurrection; if it were, the masses would always be in revolt” (as cited in Berman 2003, 258).

Thirdly, religion as an independent cultural force in a society only holds a tendency to become a threat to other cultural and political powers, but cannot make religious violence inevitable (Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno 2004, 295). It means an ideology must propel it towards that direction. It is only when it is infused with values and ideas that it can “facilitate prejudice, hostility and violence by accentuating the ‘otherness’ of others” (Silberman 2005, 535). It is religious beliefs and practices that render the ethos of a group intellectually reasonable (Geertz 1993, 89-90). The argument of Atran and Ginges is then tenable that “religious beliefs involving sacred values facilitate both large-scale cooperation and enduring group conflict” (2012, 856). For example, non-violent movements and Al-Qaeda are each motivated by religious commitment. Thus, this makes religion an agent of either peace or violence (Silberman 2005, 535).

Beliefs and practices are the ideological content of a religious culture. Significant to this study is the argument that “humans acquire novel beliefs from cultural models (experts, leaders), similar to how children acquire unfamiliar tastes from adults, by inferring commitment through actions” (Atran and Ginges 2012, 855). This argument provides additional impetus for the choice to target elites, intellectuals, and leaders in this research. Nonetheless, “the symbolic and social boundaries of a religion (no matter how fluid or porous) mobilize individual and group identity in conflict, and sometimes violence, within and between groups” (Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno 2004, 291). Religion’s direction is, therefore, navigated by its ideology. It is directionless, per se, by itself. Apparently, it is the ideological content of a religion that makes it violent or peaceful (Silberman 2005, 535).

This means that a religion can change from peaceful to violent by the kind of ideology infused into it and the kind of emotions it generates. And this cultural change can come when the beliefs and norms of a culture are considered obsolete. When a group's ethos or culture becomes problematic to an individual, he chooses to become deviant and breaks away from part of his culture (Facchini 2011, 4). Fundamentalist Islam appears to represent this kind of breakaway from traditional Islam. At least Maududi showed that kind of dissatisfaction with traditional Islam's ability to defend Islam, as seen earlier. Such dissatisfaction is also apparent in northern Nigeria, as the researcher discussed previously. Is this shift in theological ideology responsible for the spate of religious conflicts in northern Nigerian Islam? This is the interest of this study.

Religious culture then, in view of the foregoing, can provide the platform for the emergence of cultural or collective conflicts, depending on the ideology being propagated and the emotional reaction that ensues. The kind of ideology propagated justifies and legitimates direct or structural violence (Galtung 1990, 291). Considering also that ideology is saturated by emotions (Cash 1989), it would be correct to agree that "culture is profoundly implicated in all we do, and is responsible for legitimating the violence we perpetrate against one another" (Bond n.d.). Culture, however, does not act by itself, as discussed above (Kraft 1996, 37). It acts through willing individuals who are sufficiently and ideologically indoctrinated.

It is accurate to say that without culture, collective violence will be non-existent. Cultural systems socialize individuals into groups and are galvanized by events to wreak collective violence on legitimized targets (Bond n. d.). Such collective violence includes lynching, rioting, vigilantism, and terrorism (de la Roche 1996, 102-105). It is argued further that collective violence is more prone where there is relational distance, cultural distance and independence and inequality, as it appears apparent in northern Nigeria between Muslims and other religious people like Christians. And where these are so great, there is likelihood and severity of collective violence (de la Roche 1996, 105 -115).

Azzam believes that fundamentalist Islam, which he refers to as Islamism, has harnessed feelings of anger and a sense of humiliation across different ideological and political groups in the Muslim world. He suggests the necessity to explore ideological aspects of this Islamism or fundamentalism (2006, 1119, 1121). In view of the fact that these feelings are apparent in northern Nigeria, and remembering that ideology is saturated with emotions, the following questions seem relevant to this study's major concern: Has Maududi's theological ideology propelled this kind of anger and humiliation into stirring political consciousness to reestablish the supremacy of Islam in northern Nigeria? Is his ideology then responsible for triggering the anti-Christian and anti-West hatred that has been channeled into violent conflicts; or are there other influences?

Munroe and Kreidie discuss in their work that there is a cognitive influence to Islamic fundamentalism (1997). If this is the case, it would be helpful for this study to explore the extent of the cognitive influence among fundamentalist Muslims in northern Nigeria. The areas to examine will include the theory that an ideology can create the propensity for collective violence, especially when supported by relational and cultural distance, functional independence and inequality. This can happen when an ideology in culture (religion) emphasizes "otherness" and is internalized as an individual or collective system of meaning (Silberman 2005, 535), and corresponds with the social and psychological needs of a group or people (de la Roche 1996).

Methodology

As mentioned in the introduction, as part of the methodology for this research, Kim's Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA) was incorporated in the research methodology. Although this study examines the impact of theological ideology (particularly Maududi's political interpretation of Islam) on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, Kim's caution is pertinent that we should not ignore the ordinary lives of Muslims, and be careful not to categorize all Muslims as violent people in the fundamentalist spirit, as often largely conveyed in Western academia (2014, 179). This study has been careful not to "demonize" Muslims and present them as "blood thirsty Mongols." It must be acknowledged that Muslims are ordinary people with ordinary desires and needs, like other people, whether they are leaders or intellectuals. Although this study focused on leaders and intellectuals, these groups are not exempted from the ordinary lives of Muslims. The main advantage of targeting leaders and intellectuals is that they are opinion shapers, and as it has emerged from the data, Muslim leaders, preachers inclusive, and intellectuals, influence the opinion and understanding of unread Muslims. However, it cannot be denied, as seen above, that religion influences the behavior of people (Geertz 1973, 1993; Silberman 2005; Peterson 2001; McIntosh 1995). Several scholars have also associated religion with conflicts or violence (Hall 2001; Durkheim 1995, 1915; Girard 1989, 1972; Silberman 2005; Simmels 1955; Harmerton-Kelly 2004; Geertz 1973, 1993; Sanni 2006, Galtung 1990).

Kim explains ordinariness as “human condition that represents a general tendency of the human mind before it is formulated or empowered by any ideology or theology through a deep and long intentional thinking process” (Kim 2014, 180). This research acknowledges and understands that ideological understanding and knowledge do not eliminate human ordinariness (Kim 2014, 180), but examines the impact of theological ideology on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, specifically Maududi’s political interpretation of Islam.

Despite our human ordinariness, it cannot be discountenanced that our human behavior and actions are shaped by tendencies beyond our ordinariness, as acknowledged by Kim (2014, 181). Most especially because indoctrination (cultural or religious) begins from birth, it appears that even ordinariness is shaped by cultural or religious conditioning. This is why, perhaps, Geertz argues that a religious worldview shapes total social behavior (1993, 89-90). The ordinary way in which ordinary Hausa Muslim Nigerians are, varies from the way ordinary Luo Muslim Kenyans are. And as Kraft acknowledges, people ordinarily follow cultural tracks, not because there is power in culture to press for conformity, but by force of habit (1996, 36-37).

Habits are indoctrinations put into repetitive actions or behavior. Therefore, whether ordinariness can be completely separated from conditioning, such as cultural, religious and ideological, as it happens to people from birth, is an area that might require scrupulous examination beyond the dictates of this study. Indeed, Atran and Ginges suggest that “we need more developmental study on how children acquire religion and sacred values, and how people come to change or abandon them” (2012, 857). We do, however, share an “intrinsic element of humanness” (Kim 2014, 180) common to all humanity.

Although this study does not majorly examine how northern Nigerian Muslims in their ordinariness are affected by or respond to conflicts, but what influences their participation in conflicts, incorporating Kim’s Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA) in the process of this research has been helpful for carrying out this qualitative research. Investigating how northern Muslims are affected or respond to conflicts helped to unravel the way they deal with official or perceived religious requirements on conflicts, especially if they see or are made to see these requirements as obligations.

STA is an unconventional method that seeks to “grasp Muslims’ lived experiences and their cultural minds,” which conventional methods seldom provide (Kim 2014, 182). The approach seeks not only to describe but also to understand cultural experiences of ordinary Muslims. STA is an integrative method which incorporates three research components: “1) a (cognitive-) philological study on the topic under investigation, 2) an anthropological study with ethnographic fieldwork in the cultural area with which the topic is concerned, and 3) an interdisciplinary analysis of the data drawn from the previous two researches” (Kim 2014, 183). The figurative model below graphically captures the STA approach as adapted from Kim’s model (2014, 183)

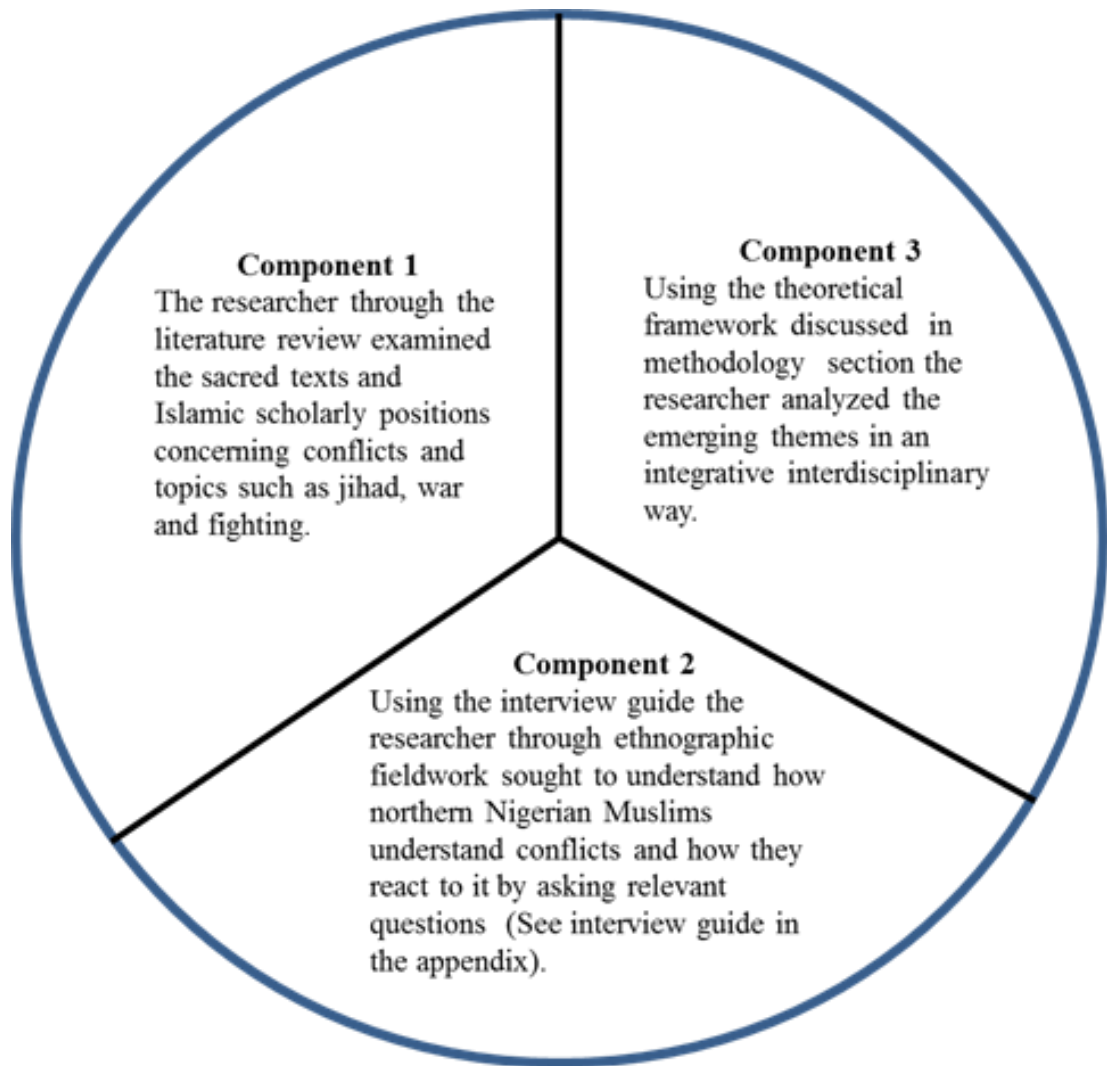

Figure 1: An adaptation of Kim's Synthetic Triangular Approach to Studying Muslims.

As the chart reveals, the researcher undertook a critical literary investigation that included the sacred texts and scholarly writings on the issue of conflicts, jihad, war and fighting, and this is captured in the literature review. This was followed by ethnographic fieldwork using interviews through the interview guide to find out what ordinary Muslims think about conflicts, jihad, and war, as well as fighting. Finally, the interdisciplinary analysis of the data collected from the two, as the chapters on analysis reveal, has helped to unravel the way Muslims deal with official or perceived religious requirements on conflicts, especially when they are made to accept it as obligatory.

Data Collection Method

Strauss and Corbin define methods as “a set of procedures and techniques for gathering and analyzing data” (1998, 3). This section and the following ones is a description of such procedures and techniques used in gathering and analyzing data in this research. As mentioned above, this research is mainly qualitative. Indeed, “human behavior that cannot be investigated by direct observation such as attitudes and other emotions are best studied using the qualitative method” (Mugenda and Mugenda 1999, 156). Qualitative method also provides the basis to conduct in-depth studies on a broad array of topics in “plain everyday terms” without the constraints experienced by other research methods that require experimental conditions, sufficient variables, adequate sample respondents or time frame limitation (Yin 2011, 6). According to Strauss and Corbin, the term qualitative research means “any type of research that produces findings not arrived at by statistical procedures or other means of quantification” (1998, 11). However, this does not mean that quantification cannot be incorporated in qualitative research, because qualitative research is continually undergoing changes (Silverman 2004, 1). The quantification comes in during the analysis of data as used in this research.

Qualitative research relies on qualitative data that deals with meaning, and meaning resides in social practice (Dey 1993, 11-12) built around experiential understanding (Stake 2010, 20; Yin 2011, 3-4, 7-9). The understanding of these social practices requires collection of qualitative data from the people involved as performed in this research. There are basically three main sources of qualitative data: interviews, observations and documents (Patton 2002, 4; Stake 2010, 20), but Yin adds feeling as the fourth (2011, 129). This research mainly relied on interviews and documents and some level of observation.

Qualitative data was collected and multiple methods were employed. Since qualitative method is more descriptive, it allows for this approach. Elliston states that “descriptive research allows the combination of multiple methods in order to describe better a given situation. For example, participant observation may be combined with interviewing to provide a base for understanding a local situation” (Elliston 2011, 80). Multiple methods are important in order to collect data from all important and relevant sources because “research is only as good as its sources” (Shorter 2000, 29), and “a valid study rests upon the reliable collection of data” (Elliston 2011, 80). A multiple methods approach also reduces the weaknesses of the individual methods.

This study employed interviews (ethnographic) and focus groups to collect data (reactive) and analysis of documents (non-reactive) (Elliston 2011, 80), used to answer the research questions. Ethnography is simply the art of studying cultures, and a complex task to a non-native. “Ethnography is the work of describing culture,” and the goal of ethnography is to apprehend “the native’s” viewpoint (Spradley 1979, 3). Ethnography sees “human behavior and the ways people construct and make meaning of their worlds and their lives as highly variable and locally specific” (LeCompte and Schensul 2010, 1). Muslims are “natives” in an Islamic culture and to understand their behavioral patterns regarding religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, ethnographic interviews¹⁴⁴ were necessary.

On the other hand, interview has been defined as a “disciplined search for responses to your research issues” (Ammerman et al 1998, 203). Intensive interview allows in-depth investigation of a particular topic or experience and useful for interpretive inquiry (Charmaz 2006, 25), in line with the focus in this research. It helps to gain access to “the native’s” viewpoint. Interview uses questions as “an analytic device used to open up the line of inquiry” with inquiry being an appeal for information (Strauss and Corbin 1998, 73). Good questions reduce the risk of collecting extraneous information or missing the critical ones (Yin 2011, 28). Interview is necessary because as Patton points out, we find out from people what we cannot observe because we cannot observe everything such as feelings, thoughts and intentions. We cannot observe past behavior, actions that preclude observations, how people have organized the world and the meanings they attach to what goes on in the world. We have to ask the people. And the purpose then is to get the other person’s perspective (2002, 340-341; Stake 2010, 95) or the native’s view as Spradley says above. These are the perspectives this research explored by interviewing northern Nigerian Muslims.

An interview guide was preferred since it provides consistency in the basic line of inquiry and guides the course of the interview (Patton 2002, 341). The interview guide seems to contrast a bit from Yin’s qualitative interview in which no guiding questionnaire is used and verbalized questions to participants differ according to context and setting of the interview (2011, 134). The interview guide provided uniformity, consistency and reliability to the data collected. In other words, the interviewees were asked “the same questions-the same stimuli-in the same way and the same order, including standard probes” (Patton 2002, 344). This allowed for flexibility in questioning, which took context and setting into consideration. It provided topics or subjects within which interviewers freely asked questions, explored and probed to clarify and shed light on a particular subject (Patton 2002, 343).

¹⁴⁴ Spradley’s twelve stages of ethnographic interviews are helpful in the understanding ethnographic interviews (1979) and his work Participant Observation (1980) is also a heuristic guide.

Most often the interview guide contains open-ended questions on the predetermined subject, which allows the interviewee to respond at the length they wish. And they are more appropriate if the pursuit is depth and breadth, as in this research. Open-ended questions also allow for following on the interviewees’ vocabulary, provide rich detail, reveal areas for further questioning hitherto untapped, and allow for spontaneity. In addition, they allow for effective use of research assistants when the researcher cannot do the research all alone, as it is easy for them to follow the guide without much digression. Hence this research employed research assistants as presented below.

However, some scholars argue that no knowledge about reality that is out there in the social world can be collected through interviews. This is because interview is exclusively an interaction of the interviewer and the interviewee and both only provide their narrative construction of the social world. Yet, as argued, information about the social world is achievable through in-depth interviewing. This is because, although research cannot provide the mirror reflection of the social world the positivists strive for, it may provide access to the meanings people attribute to their experiences and social worlds. While the interview is itself a symbolic interaction, this does not discount the possibility that the knowledge of the social world beyond the interaction can be obtained. In essence one cannot “discount entirely the possibility of learning about the social world beyond the interview in our analysis of the interview data” (Miller and Glassner 2004, 125-126).

Indeed, as further argued, it is simply in the framework of non-positivist “interviews, which recognize and build on their interactive components (rather than trying to control or reduce them), that ‘intersubjective depth’ and ‘deep mutual understanding’ can be achieved (and, with these, the achievement of knowledge of social worlds)” (Miller and Glassner 2004, 126-127). Shorter also argues that “it is best to conduct interviews on a one-to-one basis, because that way one is in control of the process” (2000, 46). It is on the basis of this that interview was selected as the major method of data collection. Since it is an examination of the influence of intellectual ideas, Muslim leaders and intellectuals have been mostly contacted.

Interviewing elites is also important in assessing intellectual ideas. It is argued that elite individuals are considered to be “influential, prominent and/or well informed in an organization or community; they are selected for interviews on the basis of their experience in areas relevant to the research and for their perspectives” (Marshall and Rossman 2011, 155). This is important because in interviewing elites “valuable information can be gained from these participants because of the positions they hold in social, political, financial or organizational realms.” The difficulty, however, is being able to hinder them from hijacking the interview and make you dance to their wishes and preferences (Marshall and Rossman 2011, 155-156).

Interviews were conducted by the researcher and trained research assistants with individuals that included students, preachers and religious leaders (Imams), academics and professionals purposively sampled in the two states (Kano and Kaduna) in line with available and discovered people. Within these two states, interviews were conducted in Kano, Kaduna and Zaria cities. 159 interviews and 3 focus groups were conducted. 85 interviews came from Kano city, 35 from Kaduna city and 39 from Zaria city. The number of interviews appears large, but the researcher considered that the research is made more reliable and valid by the extensive views received, which makes it more representational. Again, as pointed out, “qualitative researchers rely quite extensively on in-depth interviewing” (Marshall and Rossman 2011, 142). And these interviews were transcribed and coded according to themes that emerged as documented in the analysis chapters.

Focus group, on the other hand, is described as a way of collecting qualitative data, which usually “involves engaging a small number of people in an informal group discussion (or discussions), ‘focused’ around a particular topic or set of issues” (Wilkinson 2004, 177). Shorter refers to it as “fact or cluster of facts” (Shorter 2000, 46). Since the focus of this study is to understand the influence of Maududi’s political interpretation of Islam on religious conflicts, the motive for using focus groups in this study was to engage younger educated Muslims and see whether ideas derived from reading Maududi’s materials, or contact with his ideas, can be traced. This is also in view of the fact that this would be conducted several times with different groups. And as argued, “these focus-group interviews may be conducted several times with different individuals so that the researcher can identify trends in the perceptions and opinions expressed, which are revealed through careful, systematic analysis” (Marshall and Rossman 2011, 149). This is helpful in that usually discussions are recorded then transcribed and analyzed using “conventional techniques for qualitative data: most commonly, content or thematic analysis” (Wilkinson 1997, 169). The researcher held three focus group interviews with some students of Bayero University, Kano and Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria.

Data Collection Procedure

Shorter rightly argues that “research is only as good as its sources” (Shorter 2000, 29). This necessitates the choosing of the right sources as well as a sample to be examined as it is often not possible for the researcher to research the whole population in question. Therefore, “well-developed sampling decisions are crucial for any study’s soundness . . . decision about sampling people and events are made concurrently with decision about specific data collection methods to be used and should be thought through in advance” (Marshall and Rossman 2011, 105). Elliston suggests a number of reasons why the use of sampling is even more appropriate. Sampling saves time and money especially because interviewing itself takes time. Sampling is more accurate as it will have less non-sampling errors (Elliston 2011, 129). Therefore, Flick states that sampling talks about the “strategies for assuring that you have the ‘right’ cases in your study” (Flick 2011, 77).

Consequently, and as normative with qualitative sampling, purposeful sampling was employed in selecting the sites and individuals that were interviewed. “Purposeful sampling is where the researcher intentionally selects individuals and sites to learn or understand the central phenomenon” (Creswell 2002, 194). Creswell argues elsewhere that “the idea of qualitative research is to purposefully select informants (or documents or visual materials) that will best answer the research question” (Creswell 1994, 148). Marshall and Rossman further break down purposeful sampling into two types: Random purposive (which adds credibility to a sample if the potential purposeful sample is large) and Stratified purposive (which illustrates subgroups and facilitates comparison) (2011, 111). And as seen, the researcher used a large sample. Flick provides additional variants of purposive sampling (2011, 76). Random purposive sampling was viewed as more relevant to this study and was employed.

Purposeful sampling is classified as non-random sampling and widely used as a method in naturalistic or exploratory studies where the interest is not generalization but desiring in-depth information from a few respondents (Mugenda 2008, 195). Mugenda goes further to say that “Purposive sampling is a sampling technique that allows the researcher to use cases that have the required information with respect to the objectives of his or her study. Cases of subjects are therefore handpicked because they are informative or possess the required characteristics” (Mugenda 2008, 196). Consequently, interviewees and documents have been purposively identified and handpicked as deemed relevant or available for this research as mentioned above.

In his research of the Society for the Removal of Innovation and Reinstatement of Tradition (Izala in Hausa), Kane explains that if he were not a Muslim and dressed in traditional northern Muslim dress he would not have been accepted by the groups he was studying (2003, 24). This buttresses the reason why this research employed Muslim research assistants and thus they gained access to individuals and data the researcher could otherwise not have had access to. Research assistants also played a significant role in the speed of data collection because the researcher could not be at more than one location simultaneously, especially with clash of opportunities. The researcher used 7 research assistants in Kano, 10 research assistants in Zaria and 10 research assistants in Kaduna.

Data Recording Procedure

Creswell advises planning of how data will be recorded before venturing into the field. He suggests several approaches that the qualitative researcher might adopt in recording his data (Creswell 2003, 189). The researcher opted to conduct unstructured, open-ended interviews, audiotaped the interviews using digital recorders and transcribed the interviews as well as kept a journal during the research study, as the experience on the field dictated.

Sources of Data for the Research

The researcher felt that in addition to interviews as described above, and in pursuit of examining the impact of Maududi's political interpretation of Islam on religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, it was also important to analyze the Penal Codes and Shari'a laws in both Kaduna and Kano states of northern Nigeria to determine the extent of the presence of Maududi's ideology in them. There was a dearth of relevant scholarly materials; however, a book titled Towards Diffusing Religious Tension in the Polity: Islam and Politics in Nigeria: 1903-1983 written by a former Professor of Islamic studies at Bayero University, Prof. Sulaiman Mohammed Jami'u, was found relevant as well as representational for analysis.

Qualitative content analysis was performed on all available documentary materials found as part of complimenting the data collected through interviews and observation as a means of triangulation. Triangulation is said to be at least a three way verification or corroboration mechanism in research to strengthen validity (Yin 2011, 81). Triangulation combines methods such as intermixing interview, observation and document analysis because studies that use only one method are more vulnerable to errors linked to that particular method (Patton 2002, 247-248). Triangulation evaluates the credibility or authenticity of findings (de Laine 2000, 173) by multiple methods and different sources to see the number of their occurrences (Miles, Hubberman and Saldana 2014, 238-239). However, recent studies have applied triangulation to one set of data (Flick 2014, 12).

Triangulation can be applied throughout the study, but mostly used at data collection stage (Flick 2014, 12; Yin 2011, 81) as done in this study. There are four possible kinds of triangulations: data, investigator, theory and methodological triangulation¹⁴⁵ (Patton 2002, 247). Triangulation might corroborate or be inconsistent or conflict with findings that require an explanation of why. It can be due to undetected variability of something needing consideration, anomalies not expected, a deviation in the trend being studied or a mistake by the researcher. However, conflicting findings can be a blessing in that the different methods employed to collect facets of data combine to build on one another (Miles, Hubberman and Saldana 2014, 238-239), be illuminative as Patton points out (2002, 248), or as a means of differentiation to see important multiple meanings (Stake 2010, 123-124). However, in view of the sensitive nature of this research, flexibility has been utilized to adapt to whatever was the changing situation in the field.

¹⁴⁵ Seale's (2003) discussion on the various conflicting scholarly views on triangulation is helpful in establishing the usefulness of triangulation especially the methodological triangulation.

Triangulation Matrix

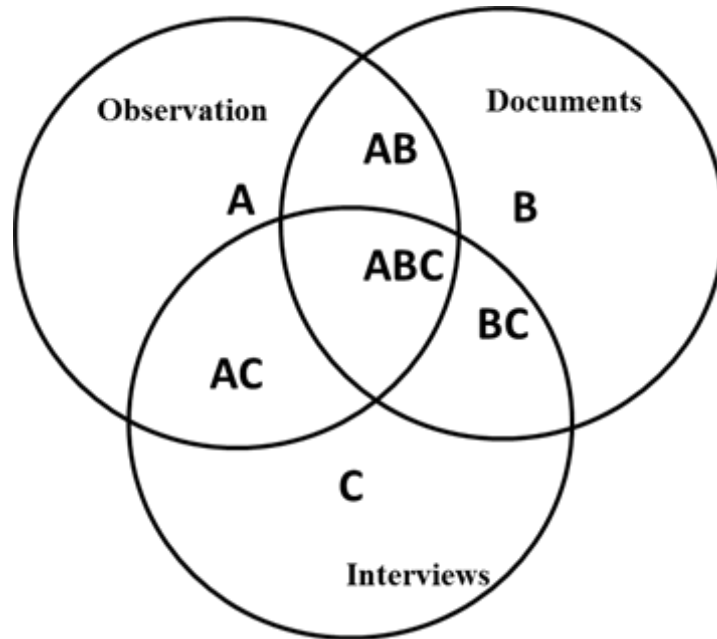

Figure 2: Validity levels achieved by triangulation

The chart above exposes the levels of validity that can be achieved through triangulation of the various methods of data collection (observation, documents, and interviews). A, B, C, individually provide low validity, AB, AC, and BC provide strong validity, and ABC provides high level validity. ABC is where information is confirmed by the three sources. Any finding confirmed by the three sources is the most preferred and highly credible information.

Data Analysis

There are a number of approaches to analyzing qualitative data, and coding is one of them (Glaser and Strauss 2006, 101-115). This research applied the coding and Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA) on data collected. Coding and QCA have been applied to the interview data as well as the documents secured. All this was interspersed with observations. Qualitative data analysis is complex, in view of the volume of data and its varieties, and the complex nature of social phenomena (Anselm 1987, 7, 10). According to Creswell, it involves a three step organizing, and preparing data for analysis by reading through all the data and coding it (2003, 131).

Coding of Data

Anselm argues that any researcher who wants to be proficient in qualitative research must learn to code well and easily because the excellence of the research lies in the excellence of the coding (1987, 27). Coding involves the procedure of organizing texts of the data and unearthing patterns within that organized structure (Auerbach and Silverstein 2003, 31; Stake 2010, 151), or it “involves organizing data into categories related to the framework and questions guiding the research so that they can be used to support analysis and interpretation” (LeCompte and Schensul 1999, 45). Coding is not only a mechanical exercise. Although Stake argues that coding is for interpretation and storage (2010, 151), the researcher agrees that coding is also analysis because it involves deep reflection on the data and so it is “deep analysis and interpretation of the data’s meanings” (Miles, Hubberman and Saldana 2014, 55). This is why coding is central to qualitative research. Coding is the primary step that moves the research beyond concrete statements in the data to engage in analytical interpretations (Charmaz 2006, 43; Patton 2002, 463). Coding on the whole is segmenting or categorization of data, concurrently summarized and identified by short names, in order to account for each portion of data relevant for analysis and subsequent interpretation.

Strauss and Corbin (1998), in their approach to developing grounded theory, introduced three stages in coding: the open, axial and selective coding. The open coding is the initial stage that produces explicit concepts that fit the data and opens the inquiry and helps to conceive concepts and their relationships, and leads to analytically breaking the data conceptually, which is later concisely modified. The axial coding is the reassembling of this dissected data into categories and sub-categories and relating them. Finally, selective coding is the selection of a central (core) category as a vehicle for the integration of the other major categories, thereby developing and refining theoretical claims. However, Charmaz (2006) regards this as highly structured and optional. For Charmaz, coding is in two stages: the initial and focused coding. The initial coding is the study of fragments of the data (words, lines, segments, and incidents) to determine their import for the analysis, while the focused coding is selecting the most useful codes and testing them against extensive data. The whole dual process entails comparing data with data and data with codes (2006, 42, 46).¹⁴⁶

What this brings out is that researchers can borrow coding systems used by other researchers previously in a different research or “they use a system that they developed themselves” (LeCompte and Schensul 1999, 52)¹⁴⁷ since, as Yin agrees, there is no fixed routine (2011, 186). Weft QDA was used to develop codes as they relate to the research questions and other important and relevant themes that emerged because, as Yin states, “The software does not actually do the coding. You do” (2011, 190). The process followed was actually reading through the interviews after transcription of the documents, and “assigning to sentences or paragraphs of text numerical or alphabetical codes representing concepts, categories, or themes” (LeCompte and Schensul 1999, 45). This differs from in vivo coding that uses the exact words of the interviewee to name codes and categories (Charmaz 2006, 55-57). Coding can begin early, or it can be done after all the data is in. This researcher began coding after the data was completely collected. In this research the researcher tilted towards structuring the coding along the research questions, as Stake suggests it can be done (2010, 151). Further explanation on the coding system used is found at the beginning of Chapter Six.

Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA)

The researcher also feels it is important to explain Qualitative Content Analysis. The challenge of content analysis is simplifying and making sense out of complex massive collected data (Patton 2002, 463). Coding is content analysis; however, in a broader sense, coding is part of content analysis. Patton’s description of content analysis alludes to this idea that content analysis “involves identifying, coding, categorizing, classifying and labeling of primary patterns in the data” (2002, 463). What essentially emerges is that Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA) is wider than coding, and coding is an intrinsic part of QCA. It is important to point out that QCA can be applied on both documents and interviews. In some sense, interviews, after ¹⁴⁶ See also Thornberg and Charmaz (2014, 153-169).

¹⁴⁷ Auerbach and Silverstein 2003 and chapter four of Miles, Hubberman and Saldana (2014) relay different approaches to coding.

transcriptions, become documents to be subjected to content analysis. QCA involves the process of condensing raw data into categories and themes using valid inferences and interpretations through inductive reasoning, by which themes and categories emerge. However, this does not exclude deductive reasoning (Patton 2002).

Hsieh and Shannon (2005) describe three approaches to QCA, depending on the degree of inductive reasoning employed. The first is conventional QCA, where categories or themes are derived directly and inductively from the raw data. The second is direct content analysis which starts with a relevant theory or research findings. Data is then analyzed to allow themes to emerge from the data. And the third is summative content analysis which starts with counting words, and then extends to analysis of latent meanings and themes. This appears to start quantitatively, but the goal is to explore usage of words in an inductive manner. This research adopted the conventional approach.

Schreier's simplistic definition of QCA¹⁴⁸ as "a method for systematically describing the meaning of qualitative data" (2014, 170) suffices here.¹⁴⁹ Marying's (2000) definition appears a little cumbersome. This research accepted the steps for QCA provided by Schreier. After the research questions have been decided and materials selected or obtained, the following steps were followed: building a coding frame, segmentation, trial coding, evaluation and modifying the coding frame, main analysis and presentation, and interpretation of findings (2014, 174-181).¹⁵⁰ However, the researcher believes from building a coding frame up to evaluating the coding frame are not mutually exclusive steps, but run simultaneously back and forth.

As mentioned above, coding along research questions was adopted in this research. Schreier emphasizes the centrality of research questions guiding QCA as well, because this reduces the danger of looking parochially at the material through the assumptions and expectations of the researcher. Therefore, the researcher focuses on aspects that relate to the overall research question (s), and the systematic examination of the material (coding up to analysis) is to find out which part is relevant to the research questions (2014, 170-171; Mayring 2000, n. p.). Thus, QCA allows for ¹⁴⁸ Neuendorf seems to refer to qualitative content analysis as descriptive content analysis (2002, 53-54).

¹⁴⁹ Hsieh and Shannon believe QCA is a distinct research method used to analyze text data like ethnography, grounded theory, phenomenology, and historical research (2005, 1278) rather than the approach used for developing grounded theory as suggested by Zhang and Wildemuth (n. d., 2).

¹⁵⁰ This process of QCA appears similar to the process explained in Zhang and Wildemuth (n. d., 2-5).

purposive selection of texts that inform the research questions under investigation (Zhang and Wildemuth n. d., 2).

Qualitative research is interested in finding meaning within context (the interest of this research), and meaning is intricate, holistic and depending on context, and not necessarily obvious at the first time. Therefore, qualitative content analysis, which is concerned with describing meaning in context (Schreier 2014, 174), is more relevant than quantitative analysis which relies on frequencies. However, it is important to note that QCA is not opposed to quantification and can include statistical analysis (Strauss and Corbin 1998, 11, 28). LeCompte and Schensul advocate that “the best research uses features of both qualitative and quantitative designs to complement and strengthen each other” (LeCompte and Schensul 2010, 126; Weber 1990). Schreier, in fact, argues that qualitative and quantitative analysis are not sharply different, since both are concerned with systematic description of data through coding that follows defined series of steps (2014, 173). And Auerbach and Silverstein (2003, 22-28) argue that they are complementary. Some form of quantification formed part of the analysis in this research as presented in the analysis chapters. Nonetheless, QCA is a better option to traditional quantitative content analysis if the researcher is working in an interpretive paradigm (Zhang and Wildemuth n. d., 11).

The flexibility of QCA in matching the coding frame with the material (Schreier 2014, 171) added value to its choice, and majorly the collected data have been analyzed also along thematic lines, in accordance with Maududi’s interpretative framework developed. QCA also allows researchers to “understand social reality in a subjective but scientific manner” (Zhang and Wildemuth n. d., 1). In essence, therefore, the data analysis employed in this research is generally categorized as Qualitative Content Analysis.

Ethical Consideration

Ethics has become fundamental to conducting effective research. Researchers are immensely scrutinized today. We must bear in mind that ethical issues are not hard and fast rules cast in stones. They are varying universal principles. This is because they vary relatively from context to context depending on research situations. Ethical concerns arise at every juncture in the research project, which Elliston categorizes into three areas as the research process, research constituencies and cultural concerns (Elliston 2011, 105-110). This means every research will possibly raise ethical complexities as suggested by Nesbitt and Arweck (2010, 21) and Baum (2001, 17). This is perhaps, as Spradley states, because the researcher and informants hold conflicting values (1979, 34). It is more so, for example, with a Christian conducting a research in a Muslim context. Some ethical issues were given careful consideration in this research as a result.

Although Trochim's six broad ethical concerns conveyed by Elliston (2011, 104-105) are not itemized here because he appears to focus on missions, and the concerns of this research are beyond missions, the researcher bore them in mind as he grappled with ethical considerations. Basically, religious and cultural bias was shunned through objective verification of comments, actions and behavior. The researcher also paid attention to LeCompte and Schensul's advice that informants, participants and communities must be protected from social, physical, financial and emotional risks (2010, 285). Baum observes that researchers often have not given priority to sensitivity to the welfare of participants (2001, 14). In view of this, the researcher gave an introductory letter to the research assistants and permitted the interviewees to have the option of accepting to be interviewed or not, or mentioning their names in the recorded interviews.

A deliberate attempt has also been made to respect cultural values of Muslims, especially as regards the behavior and actions of women. For example, photographs or videos can be useful in supporting and giving clarity to data collected. However, it is necessary to avoid discussing with women without the permission or presence of men, if they so desire, or as concerns taking pictures and the recording of audio visual materials. In all the interviews conducted, consent was sought and obtained because Nesbitt and Arweck (2010) argue that consent is necessary. And Baum advises that the researcher must be sensitive to the community under research (2001, 12-13).

Furthermore, the behavior of research assistants was also given careful attention, to ensure dependability and reliability of data collected, through appropriate training and cross checking of performance and materials. This ensures non-manipulation of data by assistants, especially if there is expectation of reward. Confidentiality of all participants was also a major priority as a means of ensuring that opportunity for future research was not destroyed. And as mentioned above, where the interviewees were not willing to reveal their identities in the recordings, such stance was respected. Personally, the researcher also must maintain integrity in handling and engaging with the data. It is important that validity and reliability is maintained and, for the researcher, the question of validity is the question of truthfulness, and that of reliability is the question of trust (Van Engen 2011, 115). The researcher can testify here that all the interviews conducted were real interviews with consenting Muslims, most of which were obtained by using research assistants who are Muslims.

Spradley (1979, 34-39) provides six ethical principles that are complimentary to those raised above. In summary and broadly speaking, the potential areas of ethical concerns in conducting research among Muslims are protection of participants, consent by participants, capacity to participate, confidentiality, deception, prejudice, bias and respect for cultural and religious practices, as well as use of data, and tampering and manipulating natural and social research environment. The researcher paid attention to all these ethical considerations.

Summary

In this chapter the researcher provided a methodological/theoretical perspective to the research in which he discussed, theoretically, how religion, culture, ideology and emotions are related to conflicts/violence and how they can possibly shape it. The researcher explained Kim's Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA) and how it added value by bringing out how Muslims in northern Nigeria view, respond to and are affected by conflicts as a possible way to understand why they might engage in conflicts. Qualitative research, the method of this research, was explained as well as the sources of data and the procedure for its collection. It was also revealed that Coding and Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA) were employed for the analysis and interpretation of the data collected, with preference given to the conventional approach where categories or themes are derived directly and inductively from the raw data and guided by the research questions. Some ethical considerations observed were discussed that took into cognizance the protection of participants, consent of participants, capacity to participate, confidentiality, prejudice, bias and respect for cultural and religious practices, as well as use of data, and tampering and manipulating natural and social research environment.

CHAPTER SIX
CAUSES OF ISLAMIC FUNDAMENTALISM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA

Introduction

As earlier mentioned, 159 interviews and 3 focus groups of both males and females were conducted, involving university students, Islamic preachers, religious leaders (Imams), academicians and professionals of Islamic background within Kano and Kaduna States, specifically in Kano, Zaria and Kaduna cities. 85 interviews came from Kano city, 35 from Kaduna city and 39 from Zaria city. The researcher and trained Muslim research assistants conducted these interviews in these three locations. The researcher explained to the research assistants that his desire or purpose is to make the genuine voices of Muslims heard on this very important, sensitive and controversial issue of Islamic fundamentalism or religious conflicts. For the sake of uniformity of data collection, an interview guide was used as found in appendix 2. This approach helped greatly in providing rich Islamic perspectives. The following approach is used to analyze the findings of this research: Each Sub-research Question is analyzed in a separate chapter in Chapter Six, Seven and Eight. The analytical integration and theoretical synthesis of the outcome of the Sub-research Questions are found in Chapter Nine in relation to how they helped to answer the Main Research Question, and Chapter Ten covers the Conclusion with summary, implications and the recommendations made.

There are 19 themes with their sub-themes developed across the 3 Sub-research questions, and a couple of significant themes that emerged. In view of the challenge in obtaining documents, only the Penal Code and Shari'a laws obtained in the two states and a book are subjected to content analysis as a means of triangulation of data, and will be integrated in Chapter Nine. Therefore, the researcher relied heavily on the data collected through the interviews. The findings are reported in a descriptive, interpretative and analytical manner.

Coding and Usage

It is important to explain coding and its usage as adopted in this research before reporting the findings. At the end of the interviews and focus groups, the researcher transcribed all the recorded interviews from oral to written. As indicated in Chapter Five, Weft QDA software was used to organize the transcribed data into themes and sub-themes. The software automatically assigns codes to the various entries under each developed category. The main themes are coded Th1-19 and the sub-themes take their decimal numbers from the main themes (e.g. Th1.1). Focus group interviews are coded FG1-3, while the individual interviewees are coded with double letter initials representing the city of the interview and a number identifying the interviewee, that is, KN for Kano, ZA for Zaria and KD for Kaduna. Therefore, KN1 represents interviewee number one in Kano, and so on and so forth.

The number in parenthesis is the code supplied by the software to distinguish the entries and their location in the whole document analyzed. For example, KN1 is followed by numbers in parenthesis e.g. [592-664]. Hence, you will find in the report of the findings references like Th1/FG2 [440-546] or Th2.1/KN3 [1780-9428] referring to the theme or sub-theme, interviewee and number identifying the entry in appendix 1. The Sub-research Questions are coded SRQ 1-3, and the sub-sub-research questions take their decimal numbers from them e.g. SRQ1.1. The two significant emerging themes take their references across the thematic categories. All the references related to the emerging themes will be specifically indicated in the body of the work, since they cut across the themes. Therefore, to find the reference SRQ1.1/Th1/FG1 [440-546] and the comment, the reader has to look under Sub-research Question one, sub-sub-research question one and FG1 [440-546] to find the whole comment. The researcher also applied footnoting rather than parenthetical referencing to aid smooth reading.

Therefore, the entire original comments of the interviewees and all the categories are found in appendix 1. In view of space constraint, only summaries and selected quotes or references to significant ideas not directly quoted would be on the footnotes in the analysis of findings. This confirms what is stated that coding involves the procedure of organizing textual data and unearthing patterns within that organized structure (Auerbach and Silverstein 2003, 31; Stake 2010, 151), or that it “involves organizing data into categories related to the framework and questions guiding the research so that they can be used to support analysis and interpretation” (LeCompte and Schensul 1999, 45). This chapter will address Sub-research Question one and its sub-sub- research questions. The Sub-research Question one examines what Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano States say is the main cause of Islamic fundamentalism in their areas.

Understanding the Terms Islamism, Islamic Revivalism and Militancy¹⁵¹

The essence of human communication, in most cases, is to elicit desired responses that reflect true understanding of what is being communicated. Therefore, meaning¹⁵² is central to perception, understanding and response in communication. Meaning is very significant in qualitative research because “human behavior and the ways people construct and make meaning of their worlds and their lives are highly variable and locally specific” (LeCompte and Schensul 2010, 1). It is important to find out how interviewees perceive the terms “Islamism,” “Islamic revivalism” and “militancy” in their context before eliciting what they think are the main causes of Islamic fundamentalism in their areas, bearing in mind that the researcher’s use of fundamentalism covers the issue of radicalism, militancy, Islamism and revivalism and the interchanging usage of these terms.¹⁵³ It should be noted that the interviews were conducted in English, and what is obtained are cultural and religious understanding of the concepts rather than just the English meaning of the words.

Islamism

There is a general understanding of the term Islamism among the interviewees. The major nuances associated with the term Islamism emerged clearly. Islamism is said to mean Islam should guide the social, political and personal lives of Muslims. A country or a state should have Islamic strength and dominance and that Muslims should practice Islam according to the teachings of the Qur’an and Sunna. Furthermore, Islamism is seen as establishing an Islamic state and doing things based on Islamic principles, adhering to and applying strictly the tenets of Islam and that it is an ideology and the practice of Islamic ideology.

¹⁵¹All ideas addressing SRQ1 are found in SRQ1/Th1, Th2.1, Th2.2, Th2.3, Th2.4, Th3 and Th4. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

¹⁵² For helpful discourse on meaning refer to Three Levels of Meaning by Harman (1968) and Literal Meaning, Conventional Meaning and First Meaning by Talmage (1994).

¹⁵³ Refer to ‘The Term Fundamentalism and Research Rationale’ in chapter one Importantly also, Islamism is viewed as Muslims' attempt to reassert their political identity and that "Islamism . . . known as political Islam, is a set of ideology holding that Islam should guide social and political as well as personal life according to some scholars of Islam."¹⁵⁴ It is also said to be a movement that attempts to purify and sustain the purity of Islam. Perhaps also relevant is the view that Islamism is the proliferation of Islamic knowledge in all areas; local governments, states, countries and the entire world by creating awareness to the teaching of Islam. On the extreme side is the view that Islamism is extremism in conducting religion. In spite of this major understanding of Islamism, some interviewees understand Islamism as the practice of the five pillars of Islam and simply total submission to the will of Allah. These do not express the conventional understanding of Islamism. Others just view Islamism as the definition of what Islam is and that Islam is a religion of peace. Nonetheless, there is a general understanding of what Islamism is all about.

Islamic Revivalism

Ipsa facto, there is a general understanding of the term Islamic revivalism among the interviewees. Some view Islamic revivalism as reclaiming the glory of Islam, renewing and reintroducing the teachings of Islam or reviving the decaying Islamic culture and practices like Al-Afghani and Maududi did. This begins to allude to Maududi's influence. More interviewees see Islamic revivalism as bringing back the statutes, values and norms of Islam, reforming and transforming the religion or reviving Islam within the Umma. Others see it as restoring the identity of Islam and its values, while some simply see it as reviving the lost Islamic law. To a few, it is extracting Islam from the disease affecting it and correcting the deviation from the teaching of Islam. Some see it as a period marked by resurgence to counter the lethargy introduced by colonialism. On the extreme side is the view that Islamic revivalism led to the division of Islam into sects and can take the form of revolution, respectively. But for some, Islam has never gone down and does not require reviving. On the whole, there is generally a conventional understanding of what Islamic revivalism is.

¹⁵⁴ SRQ1/Th1/KN75 [557-2318]

Islamic Militancy

The interviewees also have a conventional understanding of Islamic militancy. A greater proportion of them view Islamic militancy as carrying arms or use of force to enforce a point of view, ideas, and beliefs, as well as achieve desired objectives. Some are more specific by saying it is the attempt to impose Islam by force. There is also the association of militancy with revivalism and seen as a revolutionary force that wants to establish an Islamic state through authoritarian or democratic means. Accordingly, Islamic militancy is attacking people with weapons without any authentic reason, while another says it is resistance by some groups of people claiming to be fighting jihad. For some interviewees, it is the use of weapons to issue threats so as to be recognized by authorities, or armed fight for political reasons not admissible in Islam. A few interviewees recognize it as the anger of youths against oppression by the ruling class, expressing grievances through the use of religion and as terrorism or terrorist attacks. Boko Haram is also used to explain Islamic militancy. Surprisingly fundamentalist, some interviewees see Islamic militancy as a form of standardizing the norms and objectives of Islam.

Although the idea of militancy is acknowledged, it is seen as misuse of jihad, a form of rebellion by some Muslims, illegal violence or taking up of arms against the law, as well as selfish interest in wanting to acquire something by use of arms. Notwithstanding these general views about Islamic militancy, a good number of the interviewees aver that there is no militancy in Islam. Militancy is un-Islamic, inappropriate and actually it is a set up by western society to blacklist the Islamic world. Others generalize that the three terms do not exist islamically. They are only western propaganda and coinage to give Islam a bad name, or simply western and European ways of understanding Islam that reflects a misunderstanding of Islam or misconstruing of the terms. These terms are all foreign to Islamic religion. However, a view related the three terms to jihad. A few people think that all the three terms are synonymous. Another view says the terms are talking about Muslims who think they are more devoted than others, while an opinion concludes that they are all distortions.

Examining the understanding of these terms add credibility and significance to the views expressed throughout this research because having a clear understanding of these terms gives credence to the opinions they are expressing. Essentially, the views or perspectives expressed can be relied upon as the true understanding of the views sought. This means that these views should be reliable as genuinely perceived causes of Islamic fundamentalism.

Main Causes of Fundamentalism or Militancy in Northern Nigeria

Eckert (2012) alludes to the complexity of being definitive about what causes people to engage in militancy, or in this case fundamentalism. There are those who focus on social circumstances, some on individual character and others on intergroup dynamics or cultural factors. Indeed, some focus on role or identity, while others focus on religion. Northern Muslims within their context express varying views as to why Muslims get involved in militancy or fundamentalism. However, before itemizing these causes, the researcher examines whether the interviewees agree that more Muslims are getting involved in militant or fundamentalist activities in northern Nigeria. The table below is the summary of responses.

Table 1: More Muslims getting involved in militancy and fundamentalism in northern Nigeria.

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree	75	3
Disagree	56	4
Few Muslims	3
Not only Muslims	6
No response	19
Total	159	7

On the whole, 93 interviewees, one way or the other, agree that northern Muslims are getting more involved in militant activities. The two views expressed by those who disagree are that there is no militancy in Islam and no good and true Muslim will engage in or support militancy, except for lack of understanding. These views do not seem to deny the presence of militancy among Muslims, but only question the true identity of those involved. The reason is that those who disagree often provide reasons why individuals engage in militancy.

Reasons Why More Muslims are Getting Involved in Militancy

Ignorance is seen as the major reason behind the growing fundamentalism or militancy in northern Nigeria. Ignorance allows people to be misled.¹⁵⁵ Indeed, “this militancy has its roots in ignorance”¹⁵⁶ or “sheer ignorance.”¹⁵⁷ Another significant reason pushing Muslims into militancy is inadequate Islamic knowledge and being deceived by the notion that if one is killed in the act he will get to heaven, contrary to the major Islamic tenet of not hurting others.¹⁵⁸ Other terms used to denote ignorance are “illiteracy,” “lack of Islamic education,” “lack of understanding,” “lack of exposure,” “not properly taught,” “lack of knowledge,” “inadequate informed knowledge,” “inadequate Islamic knowledge,” “lack of knowledge” and “uneducated.”

Other reasons given relate to pedagogy and instruction, which apparently are related to theological learning, include brainwashing and indoctrination, uneducated clergy with shallow or half-baked learning, distorted or misrepresentation of Islamic teachings by scholars, and trying to protect the religion or religious identity. Included also are wrong interpretations by scholars, internal ideological conflicts among sects, and external ideological influence. More reasons are misconceptions and misunderstanding of Islam and selfish interest by preachers. In addition to these are reliance on personal interpretation as sufficient, signs of the last days, desire to have a Muslim society, and perceived western threat to Islamic religion and culture. Also added are the desires by youths to actively participate in religious activities, reaction to hurt due to stigmatization of the religion, and reaction to the imposition of western system of governance. Interestingly, militancy is approved as just being jihad, if done rightly, while lack of love is seen as having influence on fundamentalism or militancy.

Although socio-political and socio-economic factors emerged as influences on fundamentalism or militancy, it is not surprising that they are not as prominent as those related to ideology or, more appropriately, theology. For example, only 19 interviewees view poverty as a reason why Muslims are influenced into fundamentalism or militancy, in comparison to 75 interviewees for ignorance.

¹⁵⁵SRQ1/Th2.1/KD1 [2341-3819]

¹⁵⁶SRQ1/Th2.1/KD27 [942-1315]

¹⁵⁷SRQ1/Th2.1/KN2 [4459-4669]

¹⁵⁸SRQ1/Th2.1/ZA6 [933-1574]

Actually, poverty is the reason with the highest occurrence among the socio-economic and socio-political factors. Other related reasons are unemployment, politics or political influence, and grievances against government for lack of responsible, representative government. Furthermore, some think the reason is injustice and oppression. Lack of tolerance, conspiracy, retaliation and discrimination by Christians are among other factors mentioned. Curiously, some interviewees see fundamentalism simply as a global issue spreading around the globe. This view is significant to this research in view of the external influence of Maududi being examined. Other significant reasons behind fundamentalism or militancy given with theological ramifications are discussed below.

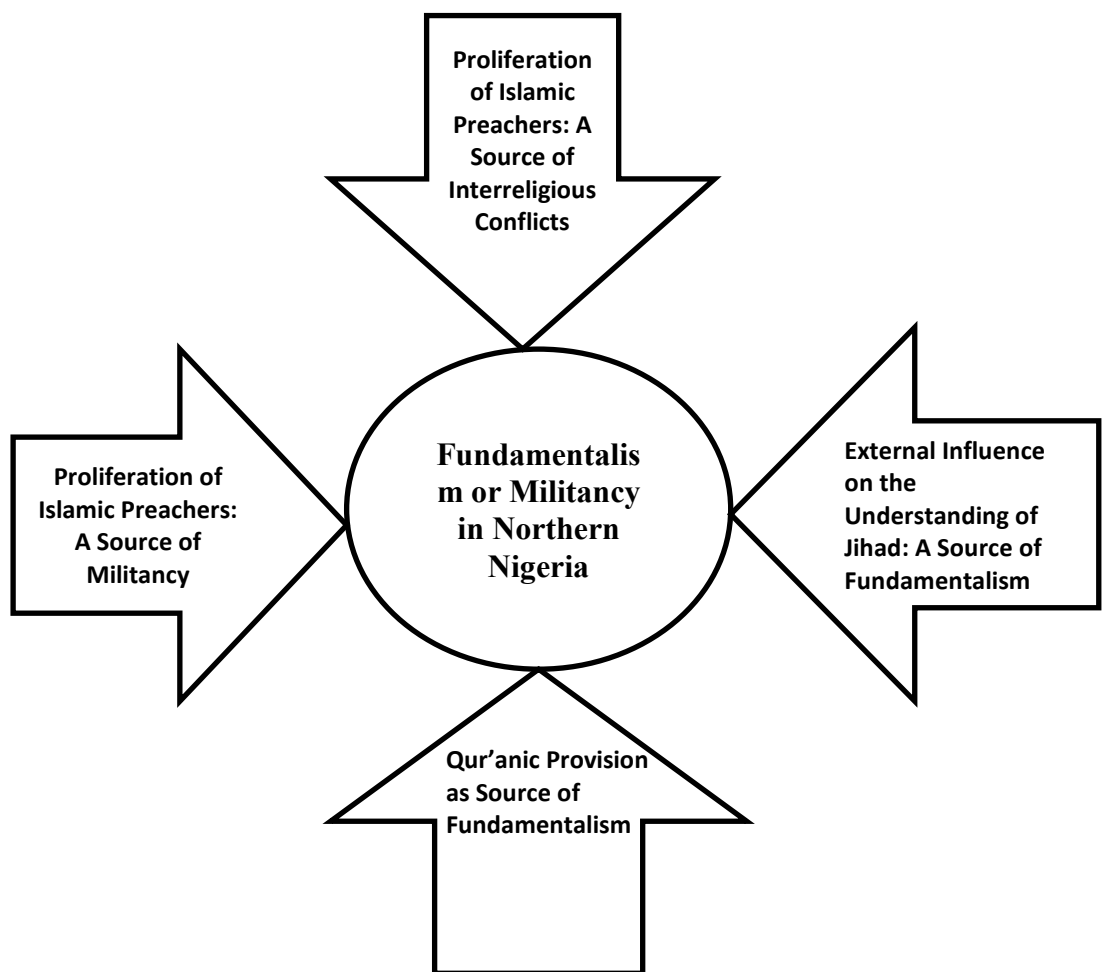

Figure 3: Diagram showing some significant reasons behind fundamentalism or militancy

Proliferation of Islamic Preachers: A Source of Militancy

Table 2: Relationship of proliferation of Islamic preachers to fundamentalism or militancy

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree	99	10
Disagree	45
Dual	3
No opinion	6
No response	16
Total	159	10

As the table above indicates, more interviewees agree that proliferation of Islamic preachers has a relationship to fundamentalism or militancy. There is no doubt that religious preaching is theologically based. Among the views expressed are that this proliferation of Islamic preachers is caused by the fact that there is diversity among Muslims in northern Nigeria with preachers preaching according to primordial interests.¹⁵⁹ These different sects align themselves to different schools of thought, with each owing allegiance to their sectarian beliefs. This generates militancy, which extends to the larger society due to the absence of screening of what people preach.¹⁶⁰ Institutions are not established to vet qualified preachers¹⁶¹ or take responsibility for monitoring them.¹⁶² No governmental control¹⁶³ over the preaching of “dangerous ideologies,”¹⁶⁴ as we saw in the past. On the other hand, some maintain that this proliferation has been predicted by the prophet as an end time event that will break Islam into many parts, bringing confusion among the followers regarding what to follow.¹⁶⁵

Notwithstanding a disagreement over the relationship between proliferation of Islamic preachers and militancy, these preachers are still referred to as “immature or inexperienced or uneducated or unexposed scholars or preachers.”¹⁶⁶ The researcher finds agreement in those who believe that these preachers lack education, substantial knowledge of Islam or are incompetent Muslim scholars that are half-baked Ulama,

¹⁵⁹SRQ1/Th2.3/KN75 [9208-10609]

¹⁶⁰ SRQ1/Th2.3/FG1 [9255-9694]

¹⁶¹SRQ1/Th2.3/FG2 [7562-7895]

¹⁶²SRQ1/Th2.3/ FG2 [7897-8156]

¹⁶³SRQ1/Th2.3/FG3 [16770-18070]

¹⁶⁴SRQ1/Th2.3/KN45 [1646-1917]

¹⁶⁵SRQ1/Th2.3/FG3 [13958-15133]

¹⁶⁶SRQ1/Th2.3/KD1 [6107-7440]

or simply illiterates who hide under Islam to preach un-Islamic ideas.¹⁶⁷ It is asserted that people just want to become preachers without being trained or grounded in the teaching of the prophet, by assuming a scholarly role without proper authentication.¹⁶⁸ Hence, without clear-cut religious ideology, they end up preaching their selfish interests or ideologies out of greed. They essentially contribute towards blind movements.¹⁶⁹ They should be known as “Islamic fanatics,”¹⁷⁰ not Islamic preachers. It is added that these preachers misconceive, misinterpret and intentionally misguide people regarding Islamic principles, as well as “misunderstand the basic concept of jihad; as such they lead people into such [militant] activities.”¹⁷¹ Certainly, “no Muslim will just wake up and pick up an arm without having a leader who has put him unto that path.”¹⁷²

Other contributory factors are the uninterested attitude of the clerics in vetting would-be scholars, freedom of expression without recourse to true scholarship and to the basic tenets of Islam.¹⁷³ The blame is also laid on blind followers of their mallam's (teacher's) ideologies, who have no true knowledge of Islam to influence their actions.¹⁷⁴ If the mallam associates killing with entering paradise, the followers simply act without ascertaining the truth concerning the killing of an innocent soul, since they want to enter paradise.¹⁷⁵ It is also believed that preachers rigidly instigate youths to carry arms. There is also the interesting assertion that this situation arose because the younger ones are not allowed to acquire knowledge of Islam from those who have the right teaching.

Also, international and national organizations' sponsorship of preachers to preach un-Islamic doctrines contributes to militancy.¹⁷⁶ These preachers are motivated by political and economic gains,¹⁷⁷ as well as to gain fame and popularity to influence massive followership.¹⁷⁸ Very significant to this study is the acknowledgement that graduates of foreign scholarships return with new ideas or fresh ideas alien to

¹⁶⁷SRQ1/Th2.3/KD4 [2776-3201]

¹⁶⁸SRQ1/Th2.3/KN80 [3632-4679]

¹⁶⁹SRQ1/Th2.3/KD11 [6312-6923]

¹⁷⁰SRQ1/Th2.3/KD14 [2211-2527]

¹⁷¹SRQ1/Th2.3/KN85 [1798-2161]

¹⁷²SRQ1/Th2.3/KD21 [2035-2333]

¹⁷³SRQ1/Th2.3/KD27 [2589-2918]

¹⁷⁴SRQ1/Th2.3/KN8 [1362-1579]

¹⁷⁵SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA24 [3228-4356]

¹⁷⁶SRQ1/Th2.3/KN57 [2092-2463]

¹⁷⁷SRQ1/Th2.3/KN67 [1143-1449]

¹⁷⁸SRQ1/Th2.3/KN70 [3568-3972]

northern Nigerian Muslims.¹⁷⁹ Related to this and affirming it is the view that militancy is contingent on the coming of Wahabi ideology, stated as follows:

Well it is true, some would say the Wahabi brand of Islam that was foreign to the history of Hausa land that emerged in I think somewhere around 1978, 79 or perhaps at the period where certain youths now traveled outside to study outside the country, particularly in Saudi Arabia and some other parts of the Muslim world, and came up with new ideas, came up with more intolerant ideas.¹⁸⁰

It is reported in the literature review that some people inaccurately see all forms of fundamentalism as Wahabism. This also confirms that the education route played a major role in the rise of fundamentalism in northern Nigeria, and that this shift emerged in the 1970s.

Another factor is lack of single leadership of an Amir in northern Nigeria chosen by all Muslims and not by politicians, as in the case of traditional rulers. There is also the wrong application of Qur'anic verses, as well as the non-contextual application of knowledge gained from writings, such as that of Sayyid Qutb, which is not applicable in northern Nigeria.¹⁸¹ The killing of Muslims by non-Muslims is believed to contribute to proliferation of preachers and their militant tone of preaching as a means of arousing Muslims to contend for their religion.¹⁸² The researcher believes these opinions suggest that the role of changing theology, accentuated by proliferation of preaching, is acknowledged to influence Islamic fundamentalism in northern Nigeria.

Contrary to the preceding arguments, some believe that proliferation of preachers is not the problem. They believe emergence of immature, inexperienced, uneducated or unexposed scholars or preachers is. Theological or ideological influence is acknowledged here, although not attributed to proliferation of preachers. Some interviewees argue that proliferation should have the advantage of informing Muslims on how to perform their ibadat (worship/devotion) to Allah. Proliferation of preachers should contribute towards developing Islam and enlightening people, as well as helping to reduce the misconception people have about Islam. In their opinion, these preachers preach publicly and in mosques. Therefore, they cannot preach militancy or violence but peace. It is politicians who misuse religion for selfish goals. Besides,

¹⁷⁹ SRQ1/Th2.3/KN70 [4078-4742]

¹⁸⁰SRQ1/Th2.3/KN78 [4965-6105]

¹⁸¹SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA30 [4174-5680]

¹⁸²SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA35 [1522-1974]

Muslims are guided by the laws of the Qur'an and will be punished if they go against it. However, the researcher believes expectation is different from reality.

Furthermore, they argue, it cannot even be proliferation of preachers, as this kind of militancy occurred during Maitatsine riots when there was no such proliferation. It is subject to enlightenment or level of education in the entire society.¹⁸³ After all, the Irish Republican Army (IRA) in Northern Ireland, Rwandan crisis, and the Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People (MOSOP) in southern Nigeria are not Islamic.¹⁸⁴ These leaders emerged because of the violation of Islamic tradition and doctrines.¹⁸⁵ In any case, these preachers do not deny people the choice of religion.¹⁸⁶ The problem is government negligence to screen for credible and qualified preachers to teach Islam.¹⁸⁷ Holistically, it is social, political and economic factors that breed such situations.¹⁸⁸ Largely, it is a question of perspectives. Certainly, no credible Islamic preacher will motivate these conflicts.¹⁸⁹

They argue that religions have people with different perspective about religion.¹⁹⁰ Besides, there is no statistical evidence that Muslims are more involved in militancy, insurgency or conflicts than Christians or other faiths.¹⁹¹ On the contrary, Muslims feel the proliferation of oppression and subjugation by western countries.¹⁹² In any case, as the Muslim population increases, there is need for more scholars to teach Islam. The problem is lack of control. They argue that it is an insignificant few that engage in militancy.¹⁹³ However, the researcher believes these objections do not significantly diminish the views that proliferation of Islamic preachers has influence on fundamentalism or militancy in northern Nigeria.

¹⁸³SRQ1/Th2.3/KD30 [2764-3454]

¹⁸⁴SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA1 [2461-2923]

¹⁸⁵SRQ1/Th2.3/KN13 [2258-2888]

¹⁸⁶SRQ1/Th2.3/KN39 [1216-1444]

¹⁸⁷SRQ1/Th2.3/KN47 [3340-4475]

¹⁸⁸SRQ1/Th2.3/KN49 [2150-2524]

¹⁸⁹SRQ1/Th2.3/KN84 [3390-3864]

¹⁹⁰SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA7 [2870-3743],

¹⁹¹SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA20 [1792-2053]

¹⁹²SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA26 [1945-2272]

¹⁹³SRQ1/Th2.3/ZA37 [1977-2415]

Proliferation of Islamic Preachers: A Source of Interreligious Conflicts

Table 3: Proliferation of Islamic preachers as source of Interreligious conflicts

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree	83	10
Disagree	48	4
Dual	2
No idea	10
Decline to answer	10
No response	6
Total	159	14

The above table shows that the majority agree that proliferation of Islamic preachers does not only have a relationship to militancy or fundamentalism, but it is also a source of interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria.¹⁹⁴ Again this implicates theology. It is reasoned that diversity of preachers produces confusing teachings, which cannot be traced to Islam. This makes it difficult to discern right and wrong teaching. This does not only cause interreligious conflicts, but also intra-religious conflicts, especially the Shi'a-Izala-Darika disputes. This includes conflicts generated by the Tijjaniyya claim that Sheikh Ibrahim Nyass is above the prophet. Ipso facto, sects incite their followers to see other Muslims as Kafirs (unbelievers).¹⁹⁵ It is logical that if these preachers are against Muslim sects, they will be against other religions. They also argue that proliferation of preachers is not restricted to Islam. Since other religions preach freely, without selecting who preaches, they must take mutual responsibility for the conflicts.

Essentially, this proliferation of Islamic preachers introduces religious bigotry, which is “the main thing causing these conflicts between Muslims and the Christians,”¹⁹⁶ considering the fact that Nigerians tend to listen to their priests without reasoning on the implications of their interpretations. This is the implication of allowing absolute freedom for both Muslims and non-Muslims to freely claim the position of the clergy and preach.¹⁹⁷ Instead of these preachers calming the nerves of people, they actually infuse in them the spirit of fear and retaliation.¹⁹⁸ Conflicts are ¹⁹⁴ It should be noted how proliferation of preachers is accepted here as source of interreligious conflict although it appears weak in the section on Reasons for Growing Conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims/Christians.

¹⁹⁵SRQ1/Th2.4/KN58 [7806-8839]

¹⁹⁶SRQ1/Th2.4/FG2 [16580-16828]

¹⁹⁷SRQ1/Th2.4/FG3 [24087-25768]

¹⁹⁸SRQ1/Th2.4/KD1 [10797-12458]

also said to be generated by scholarly misunderstanding between Muslims and non-Muslims. Leaders hide under the umbrella of Islam to disparage other religious leaders out of selfish interests. The preaching of personal views and selfish ideologies can lead to many things other than conflict.

It is argued that various schools of thought today bring personal interpretations to bear on the Qur'an, contrary to conventional Islamic exegesis or jurisprudence.¹⁹⁹ They take a Qur'anic verse and "translate it in their own understanding, thereby looking at the non-believers, people of the book, as enemies that should be wiped away with the blink of an eye."²⁰⁰ They preach anyhow in order to be known as leaders of sects or to build dynasties.²⁰¹ "The preaching of hatred between Muslims and Christians as propagated by some Islamic preachers"²⁰² instigate these conflicts. It is maintained that there are leaders who, in order to hold their flocks together, convey "false information about Christianity . . . to cause conflicts."²⁰³

It is further argued that the absence of a regulatory agency or council of Ulama to censor preachers allows unrestricted comments that make conflicts inevitable. Indeed, "a great many conflicts are as a result of negative preaching."²⁰⁴ There is no doubt leaders influence followers.²⁰⁵ Some of these religious preachers are government agents serving government interests. These preachers cause conflicts by gathering the so-called almajirai (meaning disciples in Hausa), who are illiterates and use some Qur'anic verses to brainwash them to engage in conflicts.²⁰⁶ Conflicts are seen to be generated when some preachers support non-Muslims rather than Muslims. This affects Muslim sensibilities and can promote conflicts.²⁰⁷ Some of these preachers, who are not Nigerians, instigate conflicts by "the radical nature of their preaching."²⁰⁸ They "instigate and pervert the minds of teeming youths in Nigeria to carry arms in order to fight for Islam, which is contrary to [the] philosophy and teaching of Islam."²⁰⁹ For example, a mallam was said to instigate attacks against

¹⁹⁹SRQ1/Th2.4/KD7 [4579-5000]

²⁰⁰SRQ1/Th2.4/KD21 [3269-3508]

²⁰¹SRQ1/Th2.4/KN71 [9455-10112]

²⁰²SRQ1/Th2.4/ZA21 [2914-3313]

²⁰³SRQ1/Th2.4/ZA31 [3981-4332]

²⁰⁴SRQ1/Th2.4/KD27 [4484-4547]

²⁰⁵SRQ1/Th2.4/KN9 [3407-3819]

²⁰⁶SRQ1/Th2.4/ZA9 [5752-6460]

²⁰⁷SRQ1/Th2.4/KN15 [5026-5481]

²⁰⁸SRQ1/Th2.4/KN21 [2431-2496]

²⁰⁹SRQ1/Th2.4/KN22 [4516-4947]

Christians during the Plateau state crisis.²¹⁰ Preachers around Kaduna and Jos areas are accused of contributing towards Christian-Muslim crises and violence that occur around these areas.²¹¹

These preachers engage in erroneous preaching by adopting a reckless interpretation of the Qur'an to wrongly show that the only relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims is that of antagonism.²¹² They attack non-Muslims without reason.²¹³ They discountenance the long standing mutual coexistence with non-Muslims²¹⁴ while misinterpreting jihad by limiting it to forceful jihad.²¹⁵ Being misguided about Islam, they constantly preach violence and instigate their followers to commit violence against other religions.²¹⁶ Many of these preachers are intolerant, and it is seen in their negative mindset that considers any policy from America or universities in Europe as having Christian backing.²¹⁷ Followers are also blamed for unquestioningly taking their teachers or Sheikhs as role models. They accept their ideologies and statements as absolute truth. Sometimes they misunderstand the vituperations of their leaders' reaction to unpleasant situations as incitement to adopt antagonistic stance.²¹⁸

Although it is acknowledged that radical Islamic preachers will always exist as well as the gulf of differences between Muslims and non-Muslims,²¹⁹ it is the inappropriate method of preaching which employs careless dangerous statements that plays a significant role in conflicts,²²⁰ especially with unlearned Muslims.²²¹ It is argued that preaching has influenced people's perception and conception of Islamic jihad to mean killing non-Muslims in order to establish Islam.²²² It is added that conflicts arise by deviating from the Qur'an and Sunna.²²³

For those with contrary opinions, politics is the source of conflicts and not proliferation of Islamic preachers. It is politicians who use religion to generate

²¹⁰SRQ1/Th2.4/KN23 [4179-4580]

²¹¹SRQ1/Th2.4/KN75 [15655-16097]

²¹²SRQ1/Th2.4/KN25 [4886-5300]

²¹³SRQ1/Th2.4/KN72 [7376-7473]

²¹⁴SRQ1/Th2.4/ZA38 [10337-11348]

²¹⁵SRQ1/Th2.4/KN27 [3879-4188]

²¹⁶SRQ1/Th2.4/KN43 [5674-6005]

²¹⁷SRQ1/Th2.4/KN65 [6590-7262]

²¹⁸SRQ1/Th2.4/ZA11 [5588-6336]

²¹⁹SRQ1/Th2.4/KN49 [3891-4324]

²²⁰SRQ1/Th2.4/KN80 [7972-8659]

²²¹SRQ1/Th2.4/KN80 [7972-8659]

²²²SRQ1/Th2.4/KN85 [3289-3665]

²²³SRQ1/Th2.4/ZA30 [8329-11118]

conflicts. In summary, these conflicts are economically, politically or ethno-socially driven, although religion is not completely exonerated.²²⁴ Essentially, it is reiterated that a serious Muslim cannot preach violence because there is no known specific Islamic teaching that encourages conflicts. Communication barriers, ignorance, impatience and intolerance are behind these conflicts. In addition to these are deviating from the prophet's teaching, personal ambitions and the fact that non-Muslim preachers are also involved. These conflicts are seen as mostly intra-religious and not interreligious. According to the interviewees, proliferation of Islamic preachers aids understanding and not generating conflicts, especially since Muslims are good people. Proliferation of Islamic preachers simply cannot generate interreligious conflicts. However, the researcher fundamentally believes theological influence is not far fetched because, rightly or wrongly, preachers render interpretations through a theological process.

External Influence on the Understanding of Jihad: A Source of Fundamentalism

Table 4: External influence as source of fundamentalism and conflicts in northern Nigeria

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree	112
Disagree	25
No idea	7
No opinion	2
No response	13
Total	159

External influence on the understanding of jihad is also seen as a source of fundamentalism and negative conflicts in northern Nigeria. The above table reveals an overwhelming agreement among the interviewees on that. They claim that an interpretation of jihad previously alien to northern Nigeria is presently influencing Muslims towards fundamentalist jihad. This external influence came through importation of a militant jihadist stance by new emerging Islamic sects and local jihadist groups like Boko Haram, with links to foreign jihadist groups. This is what is fueling the crisis. It is argued that local jihadist groups engage in jihad by fashioning themselves like these foreign groups. "Most of these jihadists in Nigeria copied the idea of Arab jihadists and adopted it in the north.”²²⁵ These local jihadist groups are seen as being sponsored from other countries, and they receive weapons and support from such countries. With proliferation of arms, people claiming to be Muslims use these arms in the name of fighting for Islam. It is believed that international entities supply these groups with sophisticated weapons, money and food to protect their influence rather than religious interests.

²²⁴SRQ1/Th2.4/KN78 [10419-10762]

Concisely, this external influence has changed the total meaning of jihad in northern Nigeria to mean²²⁶ creating disorder in the society, fighting and killing.²²⁷ It is even seen to introduce a new meaning of the religion²²⁸ and changed the way Muslims engage in jihad.²²⁹ Therefore, it is not only non-Muslims that misunderstand jihad but Muslims also. Interestingly, this new external conception of jihad is blamed on western influence and conspiracy to diminish or tarnish Islam. Others blame it on irritation towards western education’s attempt to condemn some aspects of Islamic way of life in the north. This introduction of alien western ideology is influencing people to embark on jihad in contemporary northern Nigeria. Westerners are also seen to brainwash Islamic scholars to preach perverted Islam²³⁰ through their powerful media like BBC, VOA and the rest. This has colored jihad, contrary to Islamic perspective, and confuses the ordinary person’s understanding of jihad.²³¹ This is seen as neocolonialism. Western media propaganda portrays Islam as a religion of terrorists or Muslims as terrorists.²³² On the whole, western influence, seen to be against Islam, has negated the influence of Muslims in northern Nigeria.²³³

It is further suggested that extremist and fundamentalist led terrorism is the contemporary challenge of Islam today.²³⁴ This gives the impression that Islam is violent, kills and maims people instead of preaching peace.²³⁵ Initially commoners saw Osama bin Ladin of Al-Qaeda, Al-Shabab and other groups as heroes of Islam, but later realized that people like Osama were not sane after all. Economic interest is seen to be behind this external influence. Jihadist groups like ISIS and Al-Qaeda

²²⁵SRQ1/Th3/KN81 [13170-13359]

²²⁶SRQ1/Th3/KN68 [4986-5078]

²²⁷SRQ1/Th3/KD10 [14759-14998]

²²⁸SRQ1/Th3/KN58 [21919-22552]

²²⁹SRQ1/Th3/KN69 [18754-19234]

²³⁰SRQ1/Th3/KN9 [13663-14056]

²³¹SRQ1/Th3/KD9 [21446-22354]

²³²SRQ1/Th3/KN56 [8767-9180]

²³³SRQ1/Th3/KN67 [9857-10159]

²³⁴SRQ1/Th3/KN22 [12832-13059]

²³⁵SRQ1/Th3/KN42 [12941-13803]

unnecessarily claim to be fighting for an Islamic state. Consequently, those in northern Nigeria not versed in Islam copy and emulate them.²³⁶ Since the activities of these groups achieve media acclaim, sects like Boko Haram embrace the notion that it is the only way to be heard.

Besides alien interpretation of jihad, interviewees aver that other imported foreign teachings unfamiliar to Islam in northern Nigeria that have gone out of hand are causing serious devastation.²³⁷ Often these ideas emanate from countries with hundred percent Muslims having different experience from Muslims living within multi-faith societies and communities.²³⁸ These dangerous trends of teaching imported by wealthy individuals have infiltrated and bastardized the ways of northern Nigerian Muslims.²³⁹ Adulterated ideas or ideologies with no roots in Islam take captive the unlearned youths and use them to achieve selfish goals. It has resulted in many Muslims sharing or imbibing these foreign ideologies.

Media and globalization are viewed as culprits in hoisting this new understanding of jihad. Media and the internet avail Muslims easy access to external information. Right or wrong teaching is easily downloaded as audio or video to be watched or listened to. Some of this information is contrary to the Islamic position. The challenge media and globalization create is providing high level connectivity in terms of movement of information. The global village syndrome ensures that what happens in other parts of the globe affects other communities.

Similar to jihadist groups are new imported sects into the northern Nigerian Islamic terrain. “Today the Muslims of the Tijjaniyya sect, the Muslims in the Ahlul Sunna sect, and the Muslims in the Shi’a sect just don’t dine on the same table.”²⁴⁰ Proliferation of preachers is attributable to the emergence of these sects. Sects like Shi’a interpret jihad wrongly, contrary to the belief that Islam does not preach violence. The coming of Shi’a is considered antithetical to peaceful coexistence of Muslims in northern Nigeria,²⁴¹ and this extends to all Salafi groups like Boko Haram. The emergence of El-Zakzaky and his membership of the Muslim Student Society

²³⁶SRQ1/Th3/ZA8 [32411-35145]

²³⁷ SRQ1/Th3/KD1 [32215-33387]

²³⁸ SRQ1/Th3/KN46 [19515-21199]

²³⁹ SRQ1/Th3/KN62 [28265-29296]

²⁴⁰ SRQ1/Th3/KD21 [11081-11484]

²⁴¹ SRQ1/Th3/KN43 [14867-15370]

that transformed him into what he is today are attributed to the Iranian revolution, as well as the external support they are getting from Iraq and Iran.²⁴²

Contact with radical Muslims from abroad by northern Nigerian Muslims is also believed to be responsible for this new understanding of jihad.²⁴³ People become radicalized as they go outside the country²⁴⁴ and come back preaching violence, terror and unrest, which destabilizes the stable social dynamics of northern Nigeria.²⁴⁵ They adopt practices and concepts that are contextually irrelevant to northern Nigeria. Through these foreign visits, people come back with “many ideologies and perspectives on how [they] should be governed.”²⁴⁶ Related to the above is the indoctrination of students sent to Arabian countries to study Islam with what is considered to be negative understanding of Islam, and they return infested with rebellious attitudes²⁴⁷ and start practicing sectarianism, which is the root of all the sectarian conflicts. It is claimed that these returnees do not understand that not all religious leaders are capable of instructing Muslims.

Another external influence is Muslim’s solidarity with the suffering of other Muslims abroad. They attempt to seek justice where they think justice is being denied other Muslims. The Palestinian question is an example that motivates common Muslims to be ready to fight, because of the impression that Europeans do not like Islam. Politicians capitalize on the experiences of other countries to brainwash unlearned Muslims for their selfish interests to the detriment of the country.²⁴⁸ It is maintained that these extremists are brainwashed and blindfolded by some Islamic scholars into thinking they are serving the cause of Allah.

Those averse to the preceding arguments believe it is simply a manifestation of shallow understanding or ignorance of Islam and influence of politicians. They argue that jihad should not be externally influenced, considering the rules and regulations guiding it from the Holy Scripture. Actually, these are just conflicts between Christians and Muslims over certain things and not jihad. If there is anything, it is rather a western exploitation. They disagree because Islam does not teach Muslims to engage in conflicts. Actually, most northern Nigerian Muslims simply ignore such ²⁴² This is an idea also espoused by Jami’u (2012, 304).

²⁴³ SRQ1/Th3/KN35 [10050-10202]

²⁴⁴ SRQ1/Th3/KN49 [14278-14831]

²⁴⁵ SRQ1/Th3/KN49 [14278-14831]

²⁴⁶ SRQ1/Th3/KN80 [26140-26495]

²⁴⁷ SRQ1/Th3/ZA4 [30452-30889]

²⁴⁸ SRQ1/Th3/ZA9 [17733-18436]

militant teachings and are not dependent on them for such a meaning of jihad because “we have better interpretation of what is jihad in northern Nigeria.”²⁴⁹ Overall, the researcher avers that pedagogy or theology is again implicated.

Qur’anic Provisions: A Source of Fundamentalism

Table 5: Qur’anic provisions as source of Fundamentalism

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree with condition	10
Agree	1
Disagree	136	4
Decline comment	1
No response	11
Total	159	4

Scholarly opinion exists that the provisions of the Qur’an provides leverage for Muslims to engage in militancy against non-Muslims. However, the table above indicates an overwhelming disagreement with the above position, although there are a few dissenting voices with conditions. Nonetheless, one interviewee accepts the position without reservation. The voices of disagreement question the contemporary relevance of militant jihad or its application as of old times, in spite of its existence in the Qur’an. They say it seems unfair to Islam to say that a verse revealed one thousand four hundred years ago to the prophet, when kuffar (unbelievers) ruled in Mecca, is applicable today.²⁵⁰ Besides, the Qur’an provides conditions for the application of jihad, even for the prophet who first practiced it. These verses only encourage Muslims to fight when it is necessary.²⁵¹ It is only when “our religion is being confronted.”²⁵² The bench mark set by the Qur’an has not been crossed in the case of Nigeria to warrant militant jihad. In any case, jihad fi sabilillah, not physical jihad, is the requirement. The use of wealth is the jihad Allah ordained for Muslims.²⁵³

Furthermore, the punishment for killing an innocent soul is hell fire,²⁵⁴ and saving a soul is akin to saving the world.²⁵⁵ The Qur’an cannot condemn killing and

²⁴⁹SRQ1/Th3/KN47 [24370-25565]

²⁵⁰SRQ1/Th4/KD32 [17242-19097]

²⁵¹SRQ1/Th4/KD35 [16945-17312]

²⁵²SRQ1/Th4/KN16 [7227-7357]

²⁵³SRQ1/Th4/ZA23 [17766-18146]

²⁵⁴SRQ1/Th4/FG3 [46327-46914]

encourage conflicts concurrently. The Qur'an provides guidelines for good and harmonious living with non-Muslims. Interpreting the provision of the Qur'an and Sunna is always the problem.²⁵⁶ It is argued that current interpretations of the Qur'an on jihad are contrary to hundreds of years of interpretations by notable and recognized scholars. Twisted personal interpretation of jihad out of the blues aimed at gaining popular support is not acceptable.²⁵⁷ Single verse application of the Qur'an without considering several interpretations (tafsir)²⁵⁸ or isolating a single verse of Hadith and interpreting it to suit personal caprices is wrong. Besides, the example of the prophet must guide Muslim's interpretation of the Qur'an. They aver that these verses are misconceived, misinterpreted and misunderstood in an attempt to misrepresent Islamic teaching by people with inadequate knowledge of Islam.

The view is that Islam and the Qur'an consistently preach peace. Therefore, Allah's Qur'an cannot contradictorily preach violence and peaceful coexistence simultaneously,²⁵⁹ otherwise, Muslims would have been fighting everywhere in the over 1000 year existence of the Qur'an. It is believed that violence, conflicts and killing of non-Muslims are not provisions of the Qur'an. "The Qur'an has always been a blessing to mankind. It is never going to engage in violent conflicts with Muslims and non-Muslims."²⁶⁰ Allah's instruction in the Qur'an is to be patient and not to fight. Non-Muslims should be invited to Islam in peace and truth.²⁶¹ "Violent conflict is not jihad,"²⁶² neither is fighting between Muslims and non-Muslims. The majority assertion is that it is mendacity to say that the Qur'an encourages conflicts.

The dominant opinion is that these interpretations are out of selfish interest or quoting the Qur'an deliberately out of context. It is suggested that the Qur'an is divided into what has happened, is happening and is to happen. The part of the Qur'an that preached about fighting is for those oppressed in the past.²⁶³ This also happens, probably, when the Umma lacks guidance; "They tend to teeter, follow across the

²⁵⁵SRQ1/Th4/FG3 [46916-47407]

²⁵⁶SRQ1/Th4/KN69 [19453-20744]

²⁵⁷SRQ1/Th4/KD1 [33605-35567]

²⁵⁸SRQ1/Th4/KN47 [25778-27088]

²⁵⁹SRQ1/Th4/KN56 [9390-9615]

²⁶⁰SRQ1/Th4/KD21 [11911-12139]

²⁶¹SRQ1/Th4/KD24 [43238-45338]

²⁶²SRQ1/Th4/ZA33 [9715-10064]

²⁶³SRQ1/Th4/KN42 [14013-14871]

violent part of it.”²⁶⁴ Essentially, the Qur’an only allows jihad for self defense or revenge, when Muslims and the prophet are being attacked.

Those who accept that there are Qur’anic provisions that suggest Muslims can fight with Christians and non-Muslims say it is conditional. Such allowance is not for indiscriminate killing, but when Muslims are provoked or killed. The question is not the presence of jihad verses. The problem is how the jihad verses are interpreted. Often people interpret these verses selfishly,²⁶⁵ or apply wrong interpretation due to lack of the science necessary to interpret the Qur’an. It is added that “Islam is dynamic itself. There are things that can be useful now that . . . won’t be useful again.”²⁶⁶ Indeed, “I agree that the Qur’an says we should fight non-Muslims or unbelievers, but not in the present now.”²⁶⁷ Nonetheless, another says,

Yes, [it] is true that Qur’anic provisions for fighting, jihad and war encourage Muslims to engage in violent conflicts with non-Muslims, [it] is true because sometimes you cannot come and say something bad on our beloved prophet and expect us to leave you and go free, so we must at least make a move and do the right thing and the right provision that the holy Qur’an gave us. So we have to follow it with due process.²⁶⁸

The researcher believes those who disagree that Qur’anic verses encourage conflicts with non-Muslims do admit the presence of wrong interpretation of the Qur’an by those who do so. Therefore, theology is implicated in generating interreligious conflicts, as those who find support in the Qur’an rely on theological interpretation, rightly or wrongly, to do so.

Reasons for Growing Conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims

Table 6: Summary of Reasons for the Growing Conflicts between Muslims and Non-Muslims

Reasons for Growing Conflicts	No. of Interviewees
Politics and politicians (bad governance)	73
Lack or shallow understanding /misunderstanding of religion	48
Illiteracy	31
Economic issues (including poverty)	21
Lack of tolerance	14
Greed and selfish interest	13
Teaching/preaching of preachers/scholars and attitude of religious leaders	10
Lack of unity and respect for each other’s religion	6
Tribalism	5

²⁶⁴SRQ1/Th4/KN26 [13735-14037]

²⁶⁵SRQ1/Th4/KD7 [16700-17071]

²⁶⁶SRQ1/Th4/KN23 [10650-10895]

²⁶⁷SRQ1/Th4/ZA24 [23180-24520]

²⁶⁸SRQ1/Th4/KN15 [14011-14447]

Perceived oppression by majority Muslims	4
Mistrust	3
Superiority complex	3
Injustice	3
Parental indoctrination	3
Lack of communication	2
Imposition of un-Islamic laws	2
External jihadist influence	2
Lack of cooperation	1
Extremism	1
Criminal tendencies of Human beings	1
Conspiracy	1
Deviation from the teaching of Islam	1
Manipulation of religion	1
Desire to protect the religion	1
Media hype	1

As the above table summarizes, the interviewees give general reasons why there are growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims. Some give more than one reason. The significance of the discoveries made in the preceding sections is made clear by comparing it with the responses in this section. Although negligibly few reasons appear similar to the preceding sections, however, the variance is quite considerable. For example, the five major reasons advanced here (politics and politicians, illiteracy, lack of understanding, lack of tolerance, economic), with the exception of illiteracy and perhaps lack of understanding, are all socio-political, socio-economic and socio-cultural. Other reasons advanced here follow a similar pattern, whereas in the preceding sections, the reasons were more instructional or about indoctrination of ideas, or more specifically religious ideas and so related to theology.

More reasons advanced are teaching or preaching of scholars, preachers and attitude of religious leaders, tribalism, differences in ideology or cultural values, perceived oppression by majority Muslims, and lack of unity as well as disrespect for the other's religion. Others include mistrust and hatred, superiority complex, injustice, lack of communication and imposition of un-Islamic laws, as well as external jihadist influence. Additional reasons are lack of cooperation, extremism, criminal tendencies of human beings, conspiracy and deviation from the teaching of Islam or manipulation of religion. An interviewee says it is the desire to protect the religion, while another simply sees it is just media hype. A factor that might be related to theological pedagogy as well is parental indoctrination.

What this suggests is that although there are factors related to theology mentioned, the interviewees appear to differentiate the causes of fundamentalism among Muslims from the causes of interreligious conflicts. The reasons for fundamentalism or Islamic militancy lean more towards indoctrination, which hinges more on theological pedagogy, while interreligious conflicts lean more towards socio-cultural, political or economic factors. However, there should be a connection between the two, as would be discussed further later.

Theological Influence on Fundamentalism in Northern Nigeria²⁶⁹

The Sub-research Question 1.1 examines how theology is influencing fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. The views of the interviewees addressing this research question are presented below.

Imported Fundamentalist Islamic Teaching: It's Influence on Muslims

Table 7: Influence of imported teaching on fundamentalism or militancy in northern Nigeria

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree	70	9
Disagree	47	2
Positive Influence	24
Decline Comment	4
Comments Not Clear	4
No response	10
Total	159	11

The above table reveals that more interviewees believe foreign teaching or rather imported theology has greatly influenced fundamentalism or militancy in northern Nigeria. However, there are those who believe these imported teachings have had a positive influence. It is argued that the theology or teaching that motivates extremism in northern Nigeria originates from countries like Iraq, Iran, Sudan and Saudi Arabia through scholarship. Other countries include Senegal and Mali from where different interpretations or understanding of Islam are imported into northern Nigeria.²⁷⁰ These extremists insist that their Islamic way is the best.²⁷¹ Clash of ideologies between the various schools of thought like the Hannafis or Malikis in Islam is also seen as a major source of friction. What is applicable in the Hannafi society might not be applicable in a Maliki society, yet scholars who studied in one society might want to impose such ideas in another like northern Nigeria.

²⁶⁹ All ideas addressing SRQ1.1 are found in SRQ1.1/Th5.1 and 5.2. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

²⁷⁰SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG1 [10743-11160]

²⁷¹ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG1 [11162-11559]. Nasr reports that Maududi considers his interpretation of Islam as the true Islam (1996, 63).

These foreign teachings, like Boko Haram's, foment trouble in the country.²⁷² They create a dilemma between what is initially learned and what is imported. The imported teaching influences negatively towards radicalism, especially the youths,²⁷³ yet it is presented as true Islam. These teachings preach against other religions in the name of jihad, with ideas obtained from the Middle East or North Africa and accepted without question.²⁷⁴ What is a worry to many is that these ideologies are elevated above primary and secondary sources of Islam.²⁷⁵ This emulation of Arabian jihad²⁷⁶ is applied without reasoning,²⁷⁷ contrary to the teachings of the prophet. Foreign study is viewed as another channel for the influx of these foreign theologies or ideologies. Students who studied in places like Mecca, Medina, Malaysia, Dubai, Egypt, Morocco, Kuwait and the like, return with approaches or methods of teaching different from indigenous ones which are seen to have no Islamic foundation. These greatly radicalized returnees, accorded prestige and superiority as *Ustaz*²⁷⁸ (respected teacher) because of their studies abroad, are more prone to reactionary, forceful or violent behavior in the way they react to situations they consider unfavorable.²⁷⁹ They introduce sectarian divisions unknown to Nigeria for decades.²⁸⁰ Often this sectarianism is contrary to Islamic teaching.

It is stressed that these sectarian theologies or ideologies bred sectarian conflicts new to northern Nigerian Islam. Now problematic sects exist like Shi'a, Darika and *Qadiriyya*²⁸¹ all assuming superiority, while some have links to violent Middle Eastern Islamic groups. Currently, more sects are emerging unabated with different Islamic perspectives.²⁸² These sectarian teachings, like that of Shi'a, now extend beyond the north to western and eastern Nigeria. These sects, like Izala, Wahabis and Shiites, were not part of the Islamic history and experience of the Hausa land prior to

²⁷²SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KD35 [4249-5037]

²⁷³SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN25 [3795-4158]

²⁷⁴SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN40 [2359-3067]

²⁷⁵SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN80 [5875-6775]

²⁷⁶SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN79 [2994-3211]

²⁷⁷SRQ1.1/Th5.1/ZA9 [3976-4389]

²⁷⁸ This is officially accepted as a written variation of Ustad but pronounced as Ustad. It is commonly used in northern Nigeria.

²⁷⁹SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN49 [2683-3262]

²⁸⁰SRQ1.1/Th5.1/ZA38 [6707-9106]

²⁸¹SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG1 [12028-12314]

²⁸²SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN2 [6204-6617]

the 1970s and 1980s.²⁸³ Sunni ideology was prevalent in northern Nigeria, until the 1980s when Shiite ideology arrived to join the Izala ideology that arrived in the 1970s. Then the brotherhood arrived and grew stronger, coexisting with the Qadiriyya and Tijjaniyya sects. These imported ideologically strong sects produced four antagonistic groups²⁸⁴ that gave rise to conflicts.²⁸⁵ However, there is a fascinating view that this sectarianism has colonial origin. Supposedly, the colonialists engineered the breaking of Islam into sects to hinder Muslims from becoming a united formidable force.²⁸⁶

It is argued that foreign theologies or ideologies also came to northern Nigeria through books in the 1970s, written by people like Maududi, Qutb and Al-Bannah of Egypt.²⁸⁷ They contextually wrote these books while incarcerated by government for their preaching. Their writings are characterized by expatiating, repeating and interpreting single verses which some northern Muslims accept unquestioningly.²⁸⁸

An interviewee says,

Late mallam Yusuf, the one that founded Boko Haram, someone reliably told me that he, in fact, he really loved one of this name you mentioned Hassan al-Bannah, Sayyid Qutb, there is another one they call him Abul Ala Maududi. All these people are jihadists and what they were preaching to people was un-Islamic in their own time, because their own belief was to wage war against the government and topple the government of that particular country. And what I heard [is that] they said even this Yusuf happen[s] to be an admirer of these people, so most of these things they are agitating for in Islam, they did get it from the books of these people they read and [are] trying to implement it in this country.²⁸⁹

As further reiterated, globalization and multiplicity of media outlets socialize Muslims negatively. Militant messages alien to the tenets of Islam and the country are heard and imbibed by some Muslims, thereby instigating militancy. It is believed that the Shiites train in anticipation of fighting against Christians or the Sunni as a result of the teaching they receive. By these kinds of negative teaching, Muslims are easily brainwashed to take laws into their hands.²⁹⁰ The innovations forbidden are

²⁸³ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN78 [6425-7901]

²⁸⁴ The four antagonistic groups are the Izala, Shiites, Tijjaniyya and Qadiriyya groups.

²⁸⁵ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN43 [4410-5352]

²⁸⁶ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN3 [11932-13292]

²⁸⁷ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [18347-19443]. This idea is also found in Jami'u (2012, 294).

²⁸⁸ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [18347-19443]

²⁸⁹ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [20527-21373] see also SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [21377-21875]

²⁹⁰ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG2 [9804-10150]

incorporated into Islam due to the ignorance of Muslims receiving these teachings, and this negatively impacts Muslims and Islam.

Conversely, some view these foreign theologies or ideologies positively. They provide deeper knowledge of Islam due to research and further studies abroad, which enhances awareness and practice of Islam. On the whole, these teachings improve discipline among Muslims in several areas, such as dressing as well as providing more Imams, Sheikhs and preachers that were hitherto few. Generally, morality and ethics of living are improved.²⁹¹ Knowledge of jurisprudence is broadened²⁹² while the purity of Islam is maintained by eliminating syncretistic mixing of Islam with tradition. Furthermore, interviewees draw attention to the fact that Islam itself is an imported religion to the Muslim north. From the beginning, these teachings helped to spread and universalize Islam.

The interviewees who do not agree with the two preceding positions argue that Islam has never changed. They argue that the Qur'an and Sunna, the basis of Islam, have been compiled, completed, authenticated and sealed some 1400 years ago without anything imported into them. Nothing can be added to Islam. It is a closed system. Present today are misinterpretation, damage and distortion that are easily detected by reputable scholars.²⁹³ The term import presupposes the non-existence of these teachings in Islam. Fundamentalism or militancy seen today, such as Boko Haram or Maitatsine movement before it, are home grown leadership problems or caused by fake sponsored Islamic scholars. It might also be individual attitudes of Muslims or poverty pushing people to earn a living by fomenting trouble.²⁹⁴ Illiteracy cannot be ruled out also. It is argued that Islam in northern Nigeria is different from current imported ideologies emanating from Sudan, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Retrospectively, although how imported theologies differ from indigenous ones are not specifically mentioned, it can be gleaned that interviewees are mostly referring to radical theological interpretation of jihad justifying militancy, importation of contrary Islamic schools of thought and sectarian ideologies and practices. For example, the Izala sect theologially interprets Islamic dress code to mean growing of long beards and wearing of short trousers that are clearly above the ankles as maintenance of purity. They consider the cultural practice of bending down to greet

²⁹¹SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN38 [1195-1283]

²⁹²SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN70 [5575-6449]

²⁹³SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN62 [5026-5950]

²⁹⁴SRQ1.1/Th5.1/ZA24 [4512-4955]

anyone, including parents, as worship and believe in the superiority of politics over the five daily prayers (Bala 2006, 85-87; Jami'u 2012, 291). These were not part of common Sunni practice in northern Nigeria before the coming of these sects.

Proliferation of Islamic Teachers and Teaching as source of Religious Fundamentalism or Interreligious Conflicts

Table 8: Proliferation of teachers and teaching as source of religious fundamentalism or interreligious conflicts

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Agree	86	5
Disagree	46	2
No Idea	7
Decline Comment	3
Comments Not Clear	6
No response	11
Total	159	7

There is also a majority agreement, as the table above shows, that proliferation of teachers and teaching is influencing fundamentalism or interreligious conflicts. This further emphasizes how theology is influencing fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. It is believed that the high growth rate of new and distorted understanding of Islam, expressed by proliferated Islamic preachers, has led or added to conflicts in northern Nigeria. These conflicts can be linked to these Islamic preachings²⁹⁵ which negatively influence people.²⁹⁶ These pedagogical instructions are a “great factor militating and regulating the current rise of conflicts in the northern region,”²⁹⁷ especially by young people.²⁹⁸ It is added that in northern Nigeria today, teaching and religious conflicts are directly correlated.²⁹⁹ These teachings have significantly changed a lot of Muslims’ perspective of Islam.³⁰⁰ Indeed, an informant says, “Islamic scholars are one of the basic factors that [are] influencing militancy in general.”³⁰¹ These preachers hide behind Islam to perpetrate violence by exploiting freedom of speech in the absence of screening of renegade preachers who camouflage as mallams. It is suggested that checks and balances are required through screening by Ulama or

²⁹⁵SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN8 [2513-3133]

²⁹⁶SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN16 [2138-2293]

²⁹⁷SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN19 [4775-5397]

²⁹⁸SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN23 [3820-3932]

²⁹⁹SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN65 [5384-6421]

³⁰⁰SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN82 [5627-5936]

³⁰¹SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN27 [3489-3728]

government agencies to weed out uncertified preachers who aim to build schools to teach.

It is further alleged that proliferated ideological teaching promotes conflicts through violent radical preaching, which pushes people into militant activities. This creates unrest and violence among Muslims and non-Muslims. The intensity and incitement by these extremist preachers cause followers to engage in militant activities or riots. Furthermore, it is said that these half-baked supposed Islamic preachers or teachers, devoid of Islamic knowledge and understanding, misrepresent Islamic teachings to facilitate conflicts in northern Nigeria. One such preacher sparked conflict in Kano recently, when he preached that salvation can only be gained through a Shaihi (meaning Sheikh in Hausa). As indicated, these preachers promote different personal new ideologies under the banner of Islam. Such is the case with the founder of Boko Haram, who parted ways with respected scholars to embark on preaching Islam contrary to the tradition of Sunna, while generating conflicts in the process.

Sectarianism reoccurs as a source of conflict. The desire to preach sectarian beliefs and doctrines to indoctrinate people sentimentally stresses sectarian ideological differences often exploited by politicians. Some of these are inconsistent with Islamic principles and encourage proliferation of preachers, with the adverse effect of promoting conflicts. Also included are politicization of religion in mosques and churches, syncretistic or adulterated teaching of Islam, also found in books that instigate Islamic uprising and embolden Muslim youths to kill and murder fearlessly. It is argued that the basis for all these is the uncritical and non-contextual adoption of ideas by preachers, as well as unquestioned followers like the group led by El-Zakzaky. Some are convinced of external European sponsorship of scholars trained in the West or Arabian countries to destabilize Islam through discrediting older teachers to diminish their influence in northern Nigeria.

Those with contrary views to the above arguments blame poverty, reaction to present dynamics in the country, lack of adequate exposure of preachers, and those weak in faith as the sources of conflicts. Also blamed are non-Muslim attacks on Islamic teachings. They further argue that most good Islamic preachers preach peace, compared to the few who instigate trouble or preach violence. Sectarian sentiments and conspiracy in training non-Muslims to appear as Muslims are seen as igniters of conflicts. Conversely, proliferation of teachers only increases perspectives and awareness of Islam, guides and enlightens Muslims to the righteous path. Indeed, proliferation of even a single aya (verse) to others is incumbent on all Muslims.³⁰² The researcher believes that these perspectives notwithstanding, theology is implicated in promoting religious fundamentalism or conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad³⁰³

The Sub-research Question 1.2 examines how Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano States view Maududi's interpretation of jihad and its contemporary implication for northern Nigerian Islam.

Knowledge about Maududi

Table 9: Knowledge about Maududi

Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Heard about Maududi	75	5
Have not heard about Maududi	70	1
No response	14
Total	159	6

In addressing the above sub-research question, it is important to find out what interviewees know about Maududi. The above table reveals those who say they have heard about Maududi and those who have not. More interviewees from Kano State have heard about Maududi than in Kaduna State. It is possible that people in Kano heard more about Maududi because of the office that distributes his books in Kano, as mentioned earlier.

Maududi is said to be a Pakistani scholar or a British Indian who is no longer as mentioned as Sayyid Qutb and Hassan Al-Banna. One view expresses the following about Maududi:

I think he is a scholar that portrays the meaning of jihad to be the carrying of sword and a violent means. Though I don't think if you are dwelling on only the perspective of Abul Ala al-Maududi, you will be able to understand the true meaning of jihad because Abul Ala al-Maududi, as a scholar, portrayed the use of force to achieve any Islamic state or even using the sword to achieve the truly Islamic state which I totally disagree with him and I think if you can go into the scripture itself, there are a lot of scholarly views not only Abul Ala Maududi talk about jihad. So you cannot take only Abul Ala Maududi's perspective and build on it.³⁰⁴

³⁰²SRQ1.1/Th5.2/ZA3 [5622-5932]

³⁰³ All ideas addressing SRQ1.2 are found in SRQ1.2/Th6.1-Th6.6 and SRQ1.2/Th7.1-Th7.16. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

Maududi is also known as an Indian journalist and philosopher who rebelled against colonialist's attempt to impose their law and custom on people and he died in 1974.³⁰⁵ His doctrines and creed are considered contrary to Shari'a. He is a twentieth century renowned political and Islamic philosopher with several classics who devoted his life to Islamic revivalism. Maududi is said to believe in universalism. It means the universe is Muslim and must submit to God's laws. He also believes that for a Muslim society to be Islamic it must establish an Islamic state.³⁰⁶ An interviewee significantly came across Maududi in an Arabic school as a scholar who contributed to aspects of fiqh. The above indicates a clear understanding of Maududi's posture on jihad, universalism and quest for an Islamic state as captured in the literature review which reveals Maududi's influence.

Interviewees further provide more information that signifies a deeper knowledge of Maududi and perhaps his influence. He is recognized as one of the Indo-Pakistani globally recognized Islamic scholars, whose literature serves as a guide to understanding Islam and whose effort assisted in establishing the Pakistani nation. Acknowledged also is his doggedness to achieve an Islamic state in Pakistan by creating Jama'ati-Islami to contest election after the partition of India. He believes an Islamic state can be created either through physical jihad or the intellectual process. Recognized as a 19th Century Islamic revivalist who attempted to restore an ideal Islamic society, his effort included the social, economic and political revival of Islam, and most importantly, promoting Islamic doctrines from a political point of view. He received a golden award from King Faisal of Saudi Arabia for his Islamic activism and revivalism. The researcher has also highlighted this earlier.

Maududi is also recognized as a revolutionary scholar and jihadist who derailed from the Islamic path. He used violent speeches to encourage crisis, instigate and push Muslims to physically fight jihad as the only path to freedom, contrary to the teaching of the Qur'an.³⁰⁷ His written ideologies, freely obtained through various media, are recognized as being influential for developing Islamic history and how Islamic society would be restored. Through his influential writing, like the Qur'anic

³⁰⁴SRQ1.2/Th6.1/KD4 [19955-21083]

³⁰⁵ Actually Maududi died in 1979 and not 1974 as indicated by this interviewee.

³⁰⁶SRQ1.2/Th6.1/ZA32 [35852-37394]

³⁰⁷SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KD25 [59411-59942]

translation and commentary Tafhim al-Qur'an, he influenced the Ikhwan of Egypt (Muslim Brotherhood), Islamic jurisprudence and politics, as well as jihad. An interviewee acknowledged hearing about him from the preaching of many scholars.³⁰⁸ Recognized as a theologian, his influence on the Muslim Student Society (MSS) reported in the literature review is supported by the following view that “being an MSS member in so many stages, we used to have series of lectures that will tell us . . . about his writings, about his principles, about his views of Islamic politics and what have you.”³⁰⁹

Through his reforming and reframing of Islamic political thought,³¹⁰ Maududi wrote that Islam and democracy can be married. His extremist fatwas are recognized as controversial and lean heavily towards extremism.³¹¹ Many scholars are said to disagree with his doctrines and refuse to reckon with him³¹² because he is seen at times to mislead by mixing his activities with non-Muslim ideas.³¹³ Some interviewees also disagree with him.³¹⁴

Contact with Maududi's Works

Out of the 44 interviewees who made actual contact with Maududi's writings, some cannot remember the titles they read, while some only read a short biography, quotations in Islamic books, magazines and abstracts or just simply heard of them. Among those who have heard about Maududi and offered opinions, not all have come across his written works. This affirms the power of oral transmission as a channel through which ideology can be transmitted. Indeed, northern Nigeria is very strong in the use of oral transmission. Interestingly, most of the books cited by the interviewees relate to statehood and governance. Others, who could not mention the titles, mention the idea in the books such as theodemocracy, suicide bombing and some Arabic clichés. Some report that they read some things on revivalism and birth control without giving titles. It is important to note that even these religious titles dealt with the issue of Islamic state and governance in a way.

³⁰⁸SRQ1.2/Th6.2/ZA22 [12801-13204]

³⁰⁹SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KN71 [34346-34669]

³¹⁰SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KN49 [15593-15783]

³¹¹SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KN46 [23376-23641]

³¹²SRQ1.2/Th6.2/FG3 [48957-49264]

³¹³SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KN72 [18751-18887]

³¹⁴SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KN79 [15743-15897]

Things Remembered about Maududi

The four major striking things remembered about Maududi are first, his advocacy and politicization of the creation of an Islamic state for Muslims to have an Islamic community. He made political Islam and the establishment of Shari'a prominent and argued why Muslims need an Islamic state and to defend it. He espoused the rights of non-Muslims, behavior of Muslims and how a Muslim state can only be an Islamic state if the Qur'an and Shari'a make up the constitution. One statement captures his tireless fight for an Islamic state thus, "one of the things that fascinated me about Maududi is his philosophy on the Islamic state. He had tried to present a model of an Islamic state in which Muslims and non-Muslims coexist together in which Islam is practiced in [the] best way."³¹⁵ Another opinion significantly captures that Maududi was the first Muslim "to equate religious devotion with political obedience through Jama'at-i-Islami."³¹⁶ The researcher has pointed this earlier also.

Secondly, Maududi is remembered as a revivalist who justified revivalism as a means of putting Islamic society on the cause of Allah. Through his radical work, he awakened the Muslim Umma to realize the significance of Islamic civilization to mankind, and Islam as the best religion in the world. By teaching the true meaning of Umma in Islam, he stirred Muslims to reclaim their political identity and Islamic values by rejecting what the colonialists brought, and stressed the necessity for Islamic scholarship. Thirdly, Maududi is remembered as a great jihadist who conceptualized Islamic jihad and emphasized its importance by defining and explaining what jihad means. He emphasized many things Muslims can achieve through jihad. He is seen to introduce the notion of modern political and social reform and remembered as a "radical Islamist."³¹⁷ Maududi is viewed as rigid, inflexible and never compromising, one that "loves violent situations and conditions"³¹⁸ contrary to the general Islamic perspective.

Finally, Maududi is remembered for his devotion to Islam by teaching Muslims about mu'amalat (relationships) and ibadat (worship). In spite of difficult conditions and western pressure, his committed teaching encouraged morality, good citizenship and Islamic zeal for right living among Muslims, and united them to establish true

³¹⁵ SRQ1.2/Th6.4/KN85 [14646-14890]

³¹⁶ SRQ1.2/Th6.4/KN21 [7408-7519]

³¹⁷ SRQ1.2/Th6.4/KN37 [9011-9138]

³¹⁸ SRQ1.2/Th6.4/KD25 [60437-60898]

Islam. He is considered a good man for translating the Qur'an and his mastery of English at an early age to simplify and promote the understanding of Islam in English among non-Arabic speakers.

Agreement or Disagreement with Maududi

There are those who completely agree with Maududi's scholarly teaching found to be in conformity with the Qur'an without reservation. Others agree with his every teaching or writing they have come across, because they see nothing contrary to what they believe, especially his concept of Tauhid, which is the guiding principle for his political sovereignty. Some agree with Maududi's view that in the turn of the 19th and 20th Centuries, Muslims were oppressed and helpless, thus providing the basis for them to arise and reclaim their Islamic heritage.³¹⁹ Significantly, there is more agreement with Maududi's position on the creation of an Islamic state as the basis for control, and creating an orderly society in which the nexus for coexistence between Muslims and non-Muslims is made clear. Maududi taught how Muslims should create an Islamic state and maintain it through his political concept of theodemocracy that marries Islamic governance with the western concept of democracy, although it is seen as a dangerous mix by some. They agree with Maududi that Muslims must fight to establish an Islamic state, since Islam and state are inseparable.³²⁰ His fascinating concept of sovereignty as crucial to establishing an Islamic state is seen as a valid contribution to Islam.³²¹

However, there are those who partially agree with Maududi's ideas. His push for Muslims to reform themselves finds strong agreement, but his definition of jihad is strongly rejected. He stands for the truth in worship, but becomes an extremist in the practical strive to maintain Islam by instigating Muslims to engage in violence. His teaching on Sunna is often agreeable, but placing personal opinions above the Sunna sometimes is not. The enjoining of Muslims to live by the etiquettes and standards of Islam is acceptable to all Muslims, but the methodology implored for implementation is not, especially in trying to implement his methods in a secular and multi-ethnic society like Nigeria. This is seen as unrealistic.

³¹⁹ SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KD27 [17442-17927]

³²⁰ SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN71 [35123-35617]

³²¹ SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN85 [14955-15338]

Although Maududi rightly motivated and encouraged Ulama to seek more knowledge, his fatwas are rejected because they contradict the basics of the Maliki School of Law that is prevalent in northern Nigeria.³²² Overall, some of his teachings are acceptable, but there is reservation for some, while some are simply ignored or disagreed with totally. There is a mistaken suggestion that Maududi was influenced by Sayyid Qutb's extremism. However, the literature review indicates it is the other way round. Nonetheless, some interviewees out rightly disagree with all the teachings and ideology of Maududi, especially on violent jihad. This alludes to the concept of "selective adoption" of Maududi's ideas to be engaged with later. The above discussion demonstrates the influence of Maududi in northern Nigeria.

On whether interviewees will recommend his teaching to other Muslims, it is interesting that most of them say they will recommend his writings to other Muslims for the following summarized reasons: Muslims now and the coming generations need to know and appreciate the intellectual contributions of scholars like Maududi, who doggedly worked and never failed to stand up for Islam. He pursued fairness for his community and Muslims in the world at large. His teaching enhances knowledge,, especially that of jihad, and for this, all Muslims should not only read but own Maududi's books, especially those who want to study and understand revivalism. He also provides the true picture of Islamic values which, if followed, will ensure good leadership even in Nigeria. Other things to be recommended are fighting when necessary, as it was for Maududi to fight against British domination and his translation of the Holy Qur'an.

Conversely, some will cautiously recommend what they read, whereas others will recommend any scholar, as knowledge is not wasted. It is argued that his writing should be recommended to only the knowledgeable in Islam, in view of the power and influence of his writing on people, especially those with extremist tendencies. Rationality is required to read Maududi's books, and seeking expert advice with regards to uncomfortable opinions is recommended. Because of the propensity of his teachings to propel to violence, some will not recommend his writings to anyone. Considering that people are randomly and purposively selected, and that almost all the ideas expressed here are captured in the literature review, the foregoing indicate a significant and huge influence of Maududi's ideology, more so since a greater number of interviewees reflect good knowledge of Maududi and his ideology.

³²² SRQ1.2/Th6.5/ZA34 [23185-23545]

Analyzing Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad

The ideas in the heading "Maududi's Qur'anic Interpretation of Jihad and Fighting" in Chapter Four and other places in this work shaped questions asked in the interviewee guide for this section. For space constraint, Maududi's ideas on jihad will be reserved for comparison in Chapter Nine during analytical integration. In this section only the ideas of the interviewees' understanding of jihad on Maududi's interpretation of jihad will be reported.

Understanding of Jihad fi Sabilillah

This part begins with the interviewees' general understanding of Jihad fi Sabilillah (jihad in the way of Allah). Most define it literally as striving in the cause of Allah without expatiation. Others define it as holy war in the name of Allah, which uses arms to defend Islam, fighting for God's sake, fighting for Islam to prevail over what is un-Islamic and to secure freedom. It is also defined as carrying out jihad according to the teachings of the sacred texts, fighting when Islam, God and the noble prophet are blasphemed, or when Muslims are hindered from ibadat. Jihad fi Sabilillah is seen as spiritual war to cleanse society of moral decadence and ensure that Islam is protected and practiced well. Some define it unconventionally as submission to Allah's will, belief in the oneness of God and propagation of Islam. Other definitions are doing things beneficial to the Umma or to uplift Islam and its structures, performing good works such as giving alms, removing obstacles on the way and donating towards Islamic development. It is said that there are various definitions and interpretations of Jihad fi Sabilillah, including physical fighting. However, it starts with Jihadin nafs (jihad of the heart), as the main jihad. The researcher has drawn attention to the fluidity of interpreting "in the cause of Allah" in the literature review.

Table 10: Summary of Themes Reflecting Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad

Themes	Opinions	Interviewees	Focus Group Opinions
Understanding of Jihad fi Sabilillah	Opinions Directly Reported
Physical Fight for Islam as the True Jihad for All Muslims	Agree	44	5
	Disagree	108	2
	No Response	7
	Total	159	7
Jihad as Obligatory to All Muslims and Ways of Jihad	Agree	138	4
	Disagree	12
	No Response	9
	Total	159	4
Instrument of Jihad	Opinions Directly Reported
Necessity of Jihad in Modern Northern Nigeria	Agree	110	6
	Disagree	38	1
	No Response	11
	Total	159	7
Jihad: An Instrument to Remove Un-Islamic Government	It is	84	4
	It is not	53	2
	No Idea	16
	Total	159	6
Forceful Jihad to Eliminate Corrupt and Un-Islamic Practices	Agree	44	3
	Disagree	95	1
	No Comment	16
	Total	159	4
True Jihad against Multi-Religious Freedom	True	21
	Not True	118	3
	Unclear	7
	No Response	13
	Total	159	3
Jihad as barrier to Muslim Conversion and a Force for non-Muslim Submission	Accept	38
	Oppose	112	3
	Dual	4
	No Response	5
	Total	159	3
Jihad for True Shari'a and Shari'a State in Northern Nigeria	Agree	72	1
	Disagree	68	1
	No Response	19
	Total	159	2
Jihad and Islamic State: A Solution to All Muslim Problems	Accept	75	1
	Oppose	64	1
	Dual	5
	No Response	15
	Total	159	2
Islam and Absolute State Authority: A Requirement for True Shari'a	Agree	32
	Disagree	112	2
	No Response	15
	Total	159	2
Jihad and Islamic State: A Necessity for the Practice of Islam in Northern Nigeria	Agree	31
	Disagree	112	4
	No Response	16
	Total	159	4
Jihad as a Political Tool and When to Conduct Jihad	Agree	36	5
	Disagree	18
	No Comment	15
	No Response	90
	Total	159	5
Colonial Experience and Politicization of Jihad	Related	68	2
	Not Related	33
	Not Relevant	47
	No Response	11
	Total	159	2
Islam as a Revolution	Heard	29	2
	Not Heard	67	2
	No Indication	63
	Total	159	4

Physical Fight for Islam: The True Jihad for All Muslims

The table above summarizes the views expressed on the various aspects of Maududi's deduced interpretation of jihad. In this section, more interviewees disagree that all Muslims must physically fight for Islam as the true jihad. However, both those who agree or disagree see jihad as a religious obligation. The point of departure is how to interpret what constitutes jihad. Those who disagree give four main reasons for disagreeing. First, jihad is striving not fighting. To distance jihad from total submission to God's will and limit it to compulsory fighting for all Muslims is accepting part of the imported adulterated teaching to Islam.

Secondly, there are diverse ways of conducting jihad that include use of brain, wealth and mouth. Fighting is only a conditional part of it. Thirdly, the prophet says jihadin nafs is the greatest jihad. Fourthly, the example of the prophet, which Muslims should follow, did not support fighting. He mostly fought during the time of jahiliyya (ignorance). Hence, fighting is only necessary during true jihad and it is defensive, not offensive, as a last resort.

Those who agree say physical jihad is the prophet's saying. Jihad is literally fighting or holy war. Fighting is true jihad, even if conditional, and fighting physical jihad is necessary as part of the wider and varied meaning of jihad. In fact, implicitly or explicitly, a Muslim must fight jihad with his hands or verbally. In other words, depending on the circumstance, it might be by force or da'wa. In addition, true jihad makes fighting compulsory for Muslims, especially if a fatwa is issued by a true, accepted and trusted Ulama or leaders to safeguard Islam. Readiness to fight for Islam is the mark of a true Muslim.³²³ Although a good Muslim should fight jihad, since it is part of the articles of faith, it is not a license to attack innocent Muslims or non-Muslims indiscriminately.³²⁴ It is argued that jihad as part of state policy is part and parcel of Islamic teaching. Either through violence or non-violence, jihad is part of Islam. "It is both violence and non-violence."³²⁵ Echoes of Maududi's position on jihad can be heard here as discussed in the literature review.

³²³SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD9 [6993-7647]

³²⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN66 [2607-2927]

³²⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN78 [10929-11646]

Jihad as Obligatory to all Muslims and Ways of Jihad

Notwithstanding the preceding section, the table shows most interviewees agree that jihad is obligatory to all Muslims. They argue that jihad is obligatory because it is the duty of all Muslims to protect and defend Islam, especially when Muslims are attacked in their houses, praying grounds, and business places, and when the religion or Muslim community is threatened. Islam describes jihad as a Muslim's obligatory duty to Allah. Allah commands jihad in the Qur'an and the Hadith, when Muslims are wronged by Kuffar (Unbelievers), as in the case of Palestine and Israel. Furthermore, since jihad includes the use of arms or wealth, prohibiting the doing of wrong and encouraging what is right, jihadin nafs and so on, one way or the other, Muslims must fight jihad, be it physically, by heart or giving Zakat.³²⁶ Moreover, when there are no volunteers to relieve others, jihad can be compulsory to the individual or community.

A significant number consider jihadin nafs as the greatest jihad, obligatory to all Muslims. It is not fighting physically that is obligatory to all Muslims. However, "jihad against the munafikum [hypocrites], the Kafirun, the disbelievers and leaders of oppression and innovation [bid'ah] is obligatory upon the community as a whole."³²⁷ For others, a Muslim should always be prepared for jihad, albeit pacifist.³²⁸ Furthermore, jihad is obligatory as a God ordained worship of total submission to Allah's will, and to fight for the cause of Allah. Physical jihad is only circumstantially compulsory, but jihad of da'wa is compulsory everywhere for a Muslim. Also, jihad is obligatory and a mandatory sacrifice, because it ensures religious freedom for Muslims. It is following the example of history and the prophet, who fought to convert empires to Islam, and it is a social corrective device in the society.

Those who disagree argue that jihad cannot be obligatory to all, because a few volunteers can represent the community when fighting is necessary. Not all aspects of jihad are compulsory, and it is not all about fighting. Besides, freedom of conversion negates the use of force. As argued, there is no scholarly or textual evidence that Allah or the prophet have made jihad compulsory.

³²⁶ SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN57 [6009-6165]

³²⁷ SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN41 [4237-4926]

³²⁸ SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN8 [7431-7788]

Instruments of Jihad

In summary, listed among the instruments of jihad for the sake of Allah is the use of wealth to help the needy, support Islamic endeavors and fight physical jihad. Following these is da'wa, education and knowledge, in order for both the leaders and followers to execute jihad unselfishly and in accordance with Allah's will. The physical individual person or human resource in general is also considered as an important required critical instrument of jihad, without which jihad is not executable. Weapons are also an important instrument of jihad to retaliatorily fight those who are aggressive towards a Muslim community, or are militating against Islam. It is critical for the jihadists (mujahidun) to own weapons and wealth for the conduct of jihad. Good leadership by an Amir (ruler) versed in the Qur'an and Sunna, and accepted by all Muslims, is a critical instrument for the success of jihad. Above all, other instruments are the Qur'an and Hadith that guide Muslims from going astray.

The critical non-physical instrument of jihad mentioned is Iman (faith), importantly connected to self/heart purification (Jihadin nafs), considered as taking precedence above other instruments. A Muslim cannot call people to Islam or fight for their souls without first purifying or fighting for his soul. Self/heart purification ensures good conduct or deeds and character, considered as vital instruments of jihad in persuading people to embrace Islam. Other ancillary instruments of jihad mentioned include pen or printed materials used for propaganda, the media, and political power, status or state power. Others are truth or speaking the truth, obedience to the Amir (ruler), submission to Allah's commanded way of conducting jihad, perseverance, as well as prayer for successful return of those who go for jihad. Niyya (intention) is interestingly mentioned as an instrument of jihad, since in Islam actions are judged according to intention. Finally, all means at a Muslim's disposal, aiding and providing him with advantage to achieve his aim, are instruments of jihad.

Necessity of Jihad in Modern Northern Nigeria

As indicated in the summary table, most interviewees accept the necessity of jihad in modern northern Nigeria, but only 5 interviewees consider physical jihad as necessary, when conditions make it inevitable. Concisely, the reason why jihad is necessary in northern Nigeria is the declining quality of Islam, perhaps, due to ignorance, influence of western modernization or ideology, despite the fact that northern Nigeria has majority Muslims. More than half of those who admit the necessity of jihad say it is enlightenment jihad of preaching and teaching, aimed at orientation and reorientation that is required. This is to eradicate ignorance of Islam, even among majority Christians, ensure Muslims understand and practice Islam as well as jihad rightly, in addition to eliminating prevalent syncretistic practices of Islam. More than one third says the greatest jihad necessary is jihadin nafs. Reiterated here also and considered more effective than physical jihad is good works. That is of good character, use of wealth for charity or Islamic development and of right mu'amalat.

Although “jihad is going to be onto the day of Qiyamah [Resurrection],”³²⁹ according to those who say physical jihad is necessary, it is only the Ulama who can declare the right time for physical jihad as a last resort. Physical jihad can only occur in northern Nigeria when religious freedom is denied or there is oppression and injustice. Without further expatiation, other mentioned types of jihad necessary are submission to Allah’s will, peaceful jihad and revolutionary or ideological jihad.

Those with a contrary view to the preceding arguments say jihad is not necessary in northern Nigeria because it has been confused with fighting, without giving credence to other alternatives to physical jihad. Also, there is freedom of worship and religious practice everywhere, with mixed religious practices even within families. It is also argued that jihad is not necessary because of the absence of an accepted Amir, and that jihad of da'wa is not exhausted. Besides, there is confirmation that the Muslim majority northern Nigeria has constitutional rights to establish Shari'a compliant states without resorting to baseless physical jihad against innocent non-Muslims peacefully coexisting with Muslims.

Jihad: An Instrument to Remove Un-Islamic Government

Proponents for or opponents against the above topic, divided into almost two halves, discountenance the use of physical jihad to remove an un-Islamic government. Again the few who consider physical jihad view it as conditional. Most of those who agree cite the example of the Muslim Brotherhood of Egypt to validate consistent educative da'wa as the appropriate jihad to remove an un-Islamic government, although they failed at the implementation stage. Proper knowledge of Islam forms the path to removing an un-Islamic government. Again other peaceful means of jihad resurfaced as paths to removing an un-Islamic government, although physical jihad is possible where Muslims are oppressed or deprived of religious freedom and have the power and leadership to execute jihad. They insist that this is referred to as revolutionary jihad, involving war and bloodshed through the sword.

³²⁹ SRQ1.2/Th7.5/KD10 [10618-11092]

However, those in opposition to the above argue that the prophet's declaration that an unbeliever can rule Muslims under certain conditions, and the Hadith's prohibition of rebellion against a ruler, makes removal of an un-Islamic government untenable. Moreover, arms are not needed to establish an Islamic state. Besides, the Sunnis believe in submitting to whoever Allah gives power to, because the prerogative is his to give power to whomsoever. They insist that democratic jihad is contemporarily more appropriate, as it happened with the election of Buhari in Nigeria and Mursi in Egypt. Use of jihad to remove an un-Islamic government is further discredited because there is no provision for it. In any case, Islam is not against peaceful protest. Besides, the method of changing a government is necessitated by circumstances, and often it is counterproductive to use power to remove power. Moreover, the hindrance to the practice of Islam is westernization marketed by the media.

Forceful Jihad to Eliminate Corrupt and Un-Islamic Practices

As indicated also on the summary table, more interviewees disagree with the above assertion. They insist that forceful jihad is not necessary to eliminate corrupt and un-Islamic practices because Allah commands that there is no compulsion in religion. If there is no force in religion, there cannot be forceful jihad. Coercion only breeds hypocrisy in the practice of religion. Fundamentally, change comes through preaching and education. Eliminating corrupt and un-Islamic practices is also through abiding by the provisions and guidelines of Shari'a, as well as following the example of the prophet and his companions (Sahaba), who did not rebel against corrupt leaders. Force is only necessary in qisas (principles of equal retaliation).

It is argued that the following challenges make the use of forceful jihad to eliminate corrupt and un-Islamic practices futile. They argue that most people are guilty to become judges. God knows sin is present in every human being and there is no society, nation or empire completely free from wrong doings. Correcting wrong doings through jihad will only provide temporary results. Although some believe an Islamic state is a solution to the problem of corruption and un-Islamic practices, to use forceful jihad is misrepresenting Islam.

Those who agree that forceful jihad is necessary to eliminate corrupt and un-Islamic practices say that hard striving is necessary to change a society. Secondly, force is needed to extract obedience from law breakers, as sometimes people do not bend without force. Thirdly, there are practices that are detrimental or pose a threat to the lives of Muslims and Islam. Two examples are adduced to support this position. Allah ordered prophet Ibrahim (Abraham) to destroy his people's idols when the diplomatic process failed, and Danfodio fought to correct and restore Islamic values from the corrupt Hausa kings. Some argue further that for the Islamic state to be established, forceful jihad should be used to eliminate corrupt and un-Islamic practices. It is not possible to do so in a multi-religious and multi-ethnic society. The Khulafa (Caliphs) like Abubakar could use forceful jihad to ensure payment of Zakat by those who refused to pay after the death of the prophet, because they were in an Islamic state.

True Jihad and Multi-religious Freedom

Concomitantly, the view that true jihad rejects multi-religious freedom is unanimously rejected by the interviewees. However, the dual view of one interviewee is worthy of first mention. He said that when jihad takes place, it tends to eliminate every other religious practice and makes Islam dominant, while on the other hand, there is no state in which only a single religious practice exists. Nonetheless, according to those who disagree, Islamic history makes it clear that the prophet and his companions cohabited with other religions, especially Christians and Jews, even during the jihad periods. They aver that the conditions for non-Muslims to live in an Islamic state are the payment of jizya (non-Muslim tax), obeying the rules and regulations of the state, not impeding Muslims' practice of Islam and avoiding public worship outside designated places, after which Islam accommodates, tolerates and offers protection to them. Indeed, Islam permits freedom of religion. Furthermore, the multi-ethnic and multi-religious secularity of Nigeria and northern Nigeria in particular, affirms jihad is not against multi-religious coexistence.

According to those who believe that true jihad rejects multi-religious coexistence, they say Muslims cannot serve two masters. It is not unusual for peace to elude a multi-religious state. In a state where 99.9 percent are Muslims, often the question of multi-religions does not arise. Contradictorily, some agree that jihad does not permit multi-religious freedom, yet argue that it does not mean non-Muslims are rejected or treated differently.

Jihad as Barrier to Muslim Conversion and a Force for Non-Muslim Submission

In the same vein, most interviewees disagree that jihad prevents Muslims from converting to other religions and makes non-Muslims submit to Islam. They argue Islam is a religion of peace, and the Qur'an says Allah calls those he loves to the right path. Conversion is ordained by Allah. Muslims are prevented from forcing people to Islam. What entices people to Islam, in essence, is peaceful jihad. It is enemies of Islam who want to blacklist it that say it is spread by the sword. Forceful jihad leads to crisis, does not convince or invite people to Islam, neither does it hold people in Islam. In spite of several jihads, the prophet lived and converted people to Islam peacefully, with only jizya demanded of non-Muslims. In fact, the Medina constitution had non-Muslim inputs. Today Islam is growing rapidly without physical jihad.

Conversely, most opinions expressed by those who agree are not diametrically opposed to the above. Although they believe that jihad prevents Muslims from converting from Islam and makes non-Muslims submit to Islam, it is only peaceful jihad and not physical jihad. This is Jihad fi Sabilillah of good behavior, jihadin nafs and preaching. Jihad wrongly conveys the picture of using weapons. However, some argue that forceful jihad is necessary to prevent the destruction of Islam and, indeed, "it is true that is the real meaning of jihad."³³⁰ Some agree that it is true that jihad prevents Muslims from leaving Islam, but it is not true that it makes non-Muslims submit to Islam.

Jihad for True Shari'a and Shari'a State in Northern Nigeria

It emerges also, as the summary table indicates, that interviewees are divided into almost two equal halves on whether jihad is necessary to introduce true Shari'a and Shari'a states in northern Nigeria. Nonetheless, the desire for Shari'a and Islamic state on both sides of the divide is not negated. The reasons given by those who believe that jihad is necessary to introduce true Shari'a and Shari'a state in northern

³³⁰ SRQ1.2/Th7.9/KN24 [5886-5932]

Nigeria are very diverse, but those who reject physical jihad are in the majority. Reiterated is peaceful jihad that includes jihadin mal (jihad of wealth) and jihadul ilimiyya (jihad of education). The example of the Zamfara state where democracy was used to introduce Shari'a is a proof that jihad by voting works.

In another vein, Shari'a and Shari'a states are necessary because Muslims must be controlled by Shari'a. Jihad is necessary to understand Shari'a and for proper Islamization of northern Nigeria because Muslims have the right to practice Islam everywhere. Jihad is also the reliable means for Muslims to adhere and conduct themselves according to Islamic teachings and principles, as it is in Saudi Arabia and other countries in the Middle East.³³¹ Therefore, jihad in its entire ramification is needed to establish an Islamic state in order to produce real practicing Muslims in leaders and followers. Often force is required to compel obedience because of the strict and indiscriminate nature of Shari'a. Indeed, this kind of jihad is needed for “the din of Allah to prevail.”³³² Jihad is the prerequisite of Shari'a as mitigation to the obstacles against the enforcement and establishment of Shari'a laws and rule in northern Nigeria. Indeed, the existence of an Islamic state presupposes jihad has taken place. Jihad has the advantage of entrenching and prolonging Shari'a in the mind of Muslims.

It is lamented that the challenges obstructing the jihad necessary to introduce true Shari'a and Shari'a states are lack of a reliable leader to lead the jihad and the multi-religious situation in northern Nigeria. In any case, patience is required as it took 23 years for the Qur'an to be revealed to the prophet. If non-Muslims understand Shari'a, they will love it and not fear, because their rights are protected in an Islamic state, as enshrined in the sacred texts.

Those with contrary opinion to the preceding ones say that Nigeria is a democratic secular state and there is freedom for multi-ethnic and multi-religious coexistence in northern Nigeria. Although Islamic state is required, establishing it and Shari'a through jihad will be risky. Some Muslims see it as an avenue to attack, molest and kill non-Muslims. In any case, jihad was not required to implement Shari'a in some states in 1999 and 2000. Prevalent ignorance also makes establishing an Islamic state difficult, as knowledge is required to run it, which is not acquired through jihad. In ³³¹ This opinion is expressed by the interviewees. Some people will argue that not all countries in the region are built totally on Shari'a.

³³² SRQ1.2/Th7.10/KD10 [11276-11638]

addition, jihad is not necessary because it never enhances the implementation of Shari'a and it is not needed to practice Islam. Islam can flourish without jihad or Islamic state. Besides, Shari'a has always existed in northern Nigeria. Muslim backwardness hinges on Muslims even being more corrupt than others. Real Shari'a is the reconstruction of Muslim lives and not a ceremonial call for jihad and Shari'a with misrepresented sacred texts. Jihad is not the only way to entice people to Islam.³³³

Jihad and Islamic State: A Solution to all Muslim Problems

Interviewees are also divided into almost equal halves on the above assertion, as the table indicates. However, both sides indicate a desire for an Islamic state. 84% of those who agree with the above assertion believe that definitely Islamic state will solve all Muslim problems, but not through jihad. They argue that only peaceful jihad makes an Islamic state solve all Muslim problems, because it entrenches Islamic principles without killings. Physical jihad is considered contrary to the Qur'anic injunction of no compulsion in religion. At any rate, history confirms that Islamic states can be established without physical jihad.

Islamic state not only solves all Muslim problems because it understands Muslim lives completely, it can also solve all human problems. Although physical jihad can create an Islamic state, it is not the only way to ensure Shari'a compliance. The prophet's example teaches that gentleness works, not fanaticism. There are those who conservatively agree that there is historical evidence that Islamic state solves Muslim problems, but not all. Besides, it can only solve all the problems if it has all that Muslims want. Some argue that it is Islam that solves all social problems although it needs authority of an Islamic state. However, some agree that jihad is truly the way to create an Islamic state and the necessary instrument to achieve all Muslim goals.³³⁴ Furthermore, jihad is the only way to create Islamic state in Nigeria, but colonialists have divided Muslims into sects.³³⁵

Not all who disagree give further reasons for disagreeing. Part of their argument is that Islamic state cannot solve all Muslim problems, especially in Nigeria. Indeed, Islamic state is not possible due to the country's heterogeneous secular nature. The idea of an Islamic state scares non-Muslims. Clearly jihad is not the ultimate problem solver because Islamic countries such as Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, Iran, Syria and Iraq are still struggling with unsolved problems like poverty, unemployment and fighting or war. Indeed, no state can solve all human problems.

³³³SRQ1.2/TH7.10/ZA30 [36378-36559]

³³⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.11/ZA7 [7465-7757]

³³⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.11/KN80 [10649-11447]

In addition, evidence exists that flourishing states never relied on jihad. It is argued that physical jihad ended with the prophet and his companions. Jihad is now for eradicating vices within the society. Furthermore, there are non-Islamic states with fewer problems than some Islamic nations. It is argued that to say only Islamic states created through jihad will solve all Muslim problems is extremism. In any case, Muslim problems should be solved at different societal strata through true Islamic teaching and Muslim unity. There are those who argue that whereas Islamic state is necessary because Islam is a total way of life, it cannot solve all Muslim problems. They argue that oppressive states like Syria and Iraq cannot solve Muslim problems. Only true practice of Islam and complying with true Shari'a can do that.

Islam and Absolute State Authority: A Requirement for True Shari'a

Most interviewees reject the notion that Islam must capture all state authority and power to enforce true Shari'a, as the summary table reveals, although some did not give further comments for agreeing or disagreeing. Those who disagree with the notion argue that using jihad to capture all state authority and power to enforce true Shari'a does not eliminate militancy. Besides, Allah designed that Muslims and non-Muslims should exist side by side. The prophet lived peacefully with non-Muslims and even instructed his followers to migrate to Abyssinia, now Ethiopia, a non-Muslim nation, for refuge. The Zamfara State's use of constitutional democracy to capture state authority to introduce Shari'a negates the necessity for jihad. Furthermore, it is not possible for Islam to capture all state authority and power to enforce true Shari'a in a mixed or multi-religious and constitutional secular state like Nigeria.

They argue further that the practice of Shari'a does not require Islam to capture all state authority and power. To enforce Shari'a today, Muslims should use intellectual, economic and political influence, as other powers do or concentrate at individual level through the family by preaching, orientation and entrenching Islamic values. This means through information and making people knowledgeable about ibadat and mu'amalat. That is the path towards Islamizing the nation, and following the example of those who brought Islam to Africa through teaching and not fighting.

Extending the discussion beyond the local context, it is argued that global dominance by Islam is not possible as it is not the predominant religion in the world, a position it must achieve if it hopes to capture all authority and power to enforce Shari'a. However, Islam can dominate through trade, intermarriage, good conduct, brotherhood and so on. In any case, Islam does not need political power, since it has its power recognized by its adherents. Besides, authority or power resides with Allah and he allocates it as he wills.

The central argument by those who agree with the notion is that for Muslims to go beyond just praying (Salat) and fasting (Sawn) to practice pure Islam and implement Shari'a as well as govern an Islamic state properly, Islam needs to capture all state authority and power, including all sectors of the economy and government, just as it happened in the Iranian revolution, which became a sticking point to the West. This guarantees the development of the Islamic society, as Islamic tenets are introduced and enforced. A hundred percent control of all government machinery ensures true application of Shari'a everywhere, which is a Muslim's central concern, as Usman Danfodio was able to do after capturing all places. With such control the state thrives socially, economically and politically.

Furthermore, such control through jihad is needed, since Allah says Muslims should fight kuffar, that is kafirun and almunafikum, to make life uneasy for them. However, it should not be a politicized jihad as practiced in Zamfara state, where the hand of a petty thief is cut and a politician who embezzles billions is ignored. Others add that jihad then is a prerequisite to ensure a good Islamic state. Indeed, it is desirous to achieve this total control of instruments of power globally, through employing all forms of jihad to ensure Islam and Shari'a guide all aspects of people's lives. However, some informants reject physical jihad.

Jihad and Islamic State: A Necessity for the Practice of Islam in Northern Nigeria

In the same vein, the summary table indicates that most interviewees disagree with the above position. However, it is not necessarily because the Islamic state is not required, but because it is not a condition to practice Islam. The opinions of those who disagree seems summarized with this view that Islamic state "is a requirement, but . . .

without Islamic state, you can practice your religion.”³³⁶ The reason for this position is that Nigeria’s constitution guarantees freedom of religion for Muslims in all parts of the country. This permitted some northern states to introduce Shari’a through state legislation. Therefore, the Islamic state is not required for Muslims to practice their religion. What is required is a peaceful environment. Besides, several Islamic states like Indonesia were established without jihad. Islamic states can be established through referendum or democratic means. Actually, when Islam came, Saudi Arabia was not an Islamic state until later.

To say that the Islamic state through jihad is needed in the north presupposes Muslims are presently not practicing Islam, and it seems like an attempt to court trouble. The Islamic state is a spiritual condition of the practice of Islam within an individual, and not a geographical entity. Wherever a Muslim is practicing his religion, he or she is an Islamic state, as long as there is enlightened practice of Islam, otherwise any talk of the Islamic state remains an illusion or fantasy.³³⁷ In any case, northern Nigeria with its Muslim majority is already an Islamic state. It has practiced Islam for hundreds of years, with Islamic structures of the sultanate and Kanem Bornu Empire operating with Islamic principles. Such jihad agitations are only for personal interests. However, some argue that it is not pure Shari’a that is being practiced, because of the multi-religious nature of states which claim to be practicing Shari’a.

Other reasons given to discredit jihad inspired Islamic states are that the time is not ripe, Islam allows diversity, Muslims discriminate against themselves, and jihad will not solve Muslim problems as expected. For example, Muslims from different parts of the country discriminate against one another. It is also Muslims who complained against governor Shekarau of Kano State for introducing some aspects of Shari’a, like stopping women from being transported by motorcycles known as achaba. The call for physical jihad is continuously seen as the act of those who desire to blackmail or tarnish Islam as prophesied by the prophet, or northern Muslims in particular who are humble, hospitable and welcoming.

In the views of those who agree, jihad inspired Islamic state is necessary for Islam to prevail and be practiced completely. Although Muslims can practice Islam anywhere, an Islamic state makes it easier for them to practice Islam wholly, purely and establish Islamic values in the society. There is even scholarly justification for jihad as instrument for creating an Islamic state in order to propagate Islam. Specifically, jihad or Islamic state provides northern Muslims the platform to showcase their religious identity, because the constitution is an obstacle to Muslims' desire for Shari'a countrywide, as reflected in the Shari'a agitation in some states of northern region. The imposed man made political system or democracy, which undermines Islamic political system and limits the practice of Islam to going to mosques, fasting and so on, will be removed by an Islamic state. Therefore, "we need Shari'a in northern Nigeria, whether it is by jihad al-qital (violent jihad), or by jihad starting from the grassroots, sensitizing people, gathering enough information about Islam, knowing about Islam and so on and so forth. Whichever way it is going to be, we need Shari'a in northern Nigeria."³³⁸ However, more cautious views argue that although Islamic state is needed in keeping with the foundation laid down by northern Nigerian forefathers, they insist Islamic state is achieved through a gradual process of diligent propagation of Islam, or peaceful jihad.

³³⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.13/KD26 [12467-12832]

³³⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.13/KN78 [22319-22762]

Jihad as a Political Tool and When to Conduct Jihad

As the summary table reveals, a greater number of interviewees did not respond to this inquiry. Among those who responded, most of those who agree argue that jihad is now a political tool in the hands of politicians. Politicians use jihad as a political instrument, thereby politicizing religion by influencing voting along religious lines. They reveal that in the 2015 Nigerian election, Muslims were discouraged from voting for Jonathan, a Christian. It is argued that the genesis of Boko Haram is the politicization of jihad by politicians, to win elections through perpetration of violence in spite of their ignorance of Islam. The former governor of Borno state is accused of creating Boko Haram for the purpose of winning the election.³³⁹ The Ulama and elites are also guilty of politicizing jihad and generating conflicts for personal interests. Physical jihad is now political jihad in northern Nigeria.

The notion of those who disagree is that political jihad should be discarded, as nothing in Islam can be politicized, when Islam itself is political. "Islam is politics, politics is Islam."³⁴⁰ Real jihad strengthens Islamic practices, so what politicians are using is not jihad. In Nigeria today, what we are having are conflicts, not jihad. Many say they do not even understand what political jihad means, or how jihad became or can become a political tool.

³³⁸SRQ1.2/Th7.13/KD9 [17714-18733]

³³⁹ SRQ1.2/Th7.14/FG3 [44543-46117]

³⁴⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.14/KD6 [21933-22138]

In light of the above dialectics on jihad, interviewees clarify when jihad should be conducted. They say jihad is conducted at all times, everywhere and at every opportunity, during war or peace, as part of a Muslim's all encompassing daily activity. Jihad is mandatory to all Muslims, and it is not limited to engaging in militant or violent activity. More specifically, it is conducted when Muslims are threatened, persecuted and denied freedom of religion, as well as when Islam or its leaders are molested without reprieve, and also when there is total corruption of Islamic morality, or moral decadence in the society, or total disbelief and deviation from the teachings of Allah in the Qur'an and Sunna.³⁴¹

Furthermore, jihad should be conducted when a supreme leader or respected Ulama declares that the time for it is appropriate, in conformity with the shurud (conditions) found in the Qur'an and Sunna. Among the conditions are a sizeable number of sound Muslims and a central Amir (ruler). Jihad is used for seeking power. Hence, "we don't need jihadul qital, jihad of killing."³⁴² Jihad should also be conducted if it is for the sake of Allah, when there is an Islamic state and it is for self defense, as well as when Muslims are well taught or educated to understand the true meaning of jihad. Generally, jihad is a last resort, or when it is necessary, especially to flush out those who attack or capture Islamic territory.

Some add that jihad should be conducted in the case of confrontational interreligious misunderstanding, or people of a certain area are non-Muslims, and Muslims are economically powerful enough to undertake it. There is also the view that "whatever tool you use in that struggle to please and to achieve the commandment of Allah (SBUH), then you adopt that."³⁴³ Some say, essentially, jihad is Muslims' goal for creating a "system that encompasses all Nigerians, a system that does not oppress any Nigerian based on ethnic or religious beliefs."³⁴⁴

³⁴¹ This agrees with Ann Mayer's tripartite generic conditions that promote Islamic insurgence as cited in Jami' u (2012, 287)

³⁴²SRQ1.2/Th7.14/ZA4 [28254-28854]

³⁴³SRQ1.2/Th7.14/ZA3 [13066-13289]

³⁴⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.14/KD27 [12786-14945]

Colonial Experience and Politicization of jihad

As confessed, some interviewees found it difficult to address the relationship between colonial experience and the politicization of jihad in northern Nigeria. More than half of those who agree there is a relationship argue that the colonial master's subjugation of Islamic culture and rule by imposing western culture on Muslims account for the revolt in the form of political jihad seen today. It dawned on Muslim scholars and leaders that the colonialists' lackadaisical attitude towards morality will destroy their religion and people. This marked the beginning of the politicization of religion or Shari'a and jihad in northern Nigeria.

They argue that the character of the present Islamic jihad was shaped by imposition of western political, economic and social systems on Muslims. This gave jihad a new unconventional definition and interpretation.³⁴⁵ Muslims in northern Nigeria felt colonialists came with missionaries to supplant Islam, which necessitated that "all the Muslims have to fight through jihad."³⁴⁶ The subjugation of Islamic systems and killing of leaders created a sense of loss and rekindled hatred, misunderstanding and distrust for the colonial masters, and ignited the feeling that only jihad can eradicate the social vices introduced by the colonialists.

Consequently, they rejected anything aligned to colonialists and accepted jihad as an instrument of reform. Furthermore, Muslims saw colonialism as an extension of Christianity, and so jihad was politicized by galvanized Muslims as a means to regain their societal independence and identity. Muslims were against the overthrow of the Islamic government established by Danfodio in northern Nigeria. This sparked resistance to colonialism and fueled agitation to reestablish the subdued Islamic state.³⁴⁷ Since the colonialists left, Shari'a is no longer fully practicable, as a result of which northern Muslims still struggle to overthrow the secular government established by western colonialists.

This culture of imposition and rejection is strongly behind the politicization of jihad in northern Nigeria. Indeed, as aptly summarized, "they came and they removed and relegated our religion to the background. So we have no alternative but to fight back through jihad."³⁴⁸ It is lamented that Muslims were inflicted with political

³⁴⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.15/KN43 [14314-14640]

³⁴⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.15/KN68 [4621-4755]

³⁴⁷ SRQ1.2/Th7.15/KN79 [13090-13461]

³⁴⁸ SRQ1.2/Th7.15/KN56 [8168-8536]

thinking through the westernization of traditional Islamic institutions, invariably politicizing jihad and bequeathing a corrupted Islam to northern Nigeria. Hence, Muslim politicians became products of colonial influence, negating Islamic principles and becoming oppressive like their mentors. They selfishly politicized jihad to achieve their political goals. Additionally, the attempt by the political class to establish jihad or Shari'a through structures left behind by colonialists aggravates the politicization of jihad. These lingering colonial ideologies also influence contemporary religious leaders and aid the thinking of jihad in political terms.

It is further stated that colonialism also introduced a clash of civilizations between western ideology and eastern ideology. The former is seen as predominantly Christian, while the latter is seen as Islamic, thereby introducing conflict of ideologies. Muslims with Islamic ideology resisted the perceived Christian ideology, and this resistance and struggle is still continuing today. The intertwining of colonialism with Christianity, undifferentiated by ordinary northern Nigerian Muslims, associated colonial force with Christianity attempting to subdue Islamic culture. While colonialists were pursuing their economic interests, missionaries were busy proselytizing, leading to Christians being seen as siblings of colonialists to be resisted. Colonialists are also accused of introducing internal sabotage to overcome Muslim resistance by training Muslim scholars to preach for them to ensure their dominance.

However, there are those who view colonialism positively, because colonialists tried to eliminate unfavorable Islamic practices and provided knowledge for development. Those who disagree, saying there is no relationship between colonial experience and politicization of jihad, argue that the two are different and wrong. Jihad and Islam are spiritual and cannot be politicized, while colonialism is limited to social aspects. Additionally, politicization of jihad is a recent trend fueled by the present crop of leaders, influenced by westernization. And by supporting the establishment of Islamic schools, customs and way of life, colonialists did not tamper with Shari'a as they did with religion in southern Nigeria. Furthermore, in northern Nigeria, Muslims practiced Islam during colonialism, and indirect rule signifies the rejection of what colonialists brought, because they could not subdue the structures established by Danfodio's jihad. Therefore, this politicization of jihad is either a reaction to poverty, bad leadership and illiteracy, or an attempt to blackmail Islam so that it would be rejected.

Islam as a Revolution

As the summary table also points out, fewer people say they have heard, agreed to, or indicate how they came across, the claim that Islam is a revolution. Among the few who mention how they came across the claim, some say it is from a scholar, without providing the identity of the scholar, or an Islamic scholar who is a fatwa giver. Others say it is from Ayatollah and the Iranian revolution in written materials, books or magazines and research. Additional sources are literature on the internet, media and in a book written by Rashid Moten, while one person could not remember the source. Interestingly, 53 interviewees believe Islam is a revolution with diverse reasons, and among them are many that did not come across the claim. Again this could be the influence of oral tradition.

Among the reasons adduced are that since revolution is not necessarily violent and has different dimensions, Islam is simply a revolution by the way it spread, and is still spreading from one person to billions in the world today. It is a revolution by always bringing order, liberating people from the darkness of idolatry and wanton killings, as well as the degrading of children, women and men in Arabia (jahiliyya) to the enlightenment today that is transforming individuals in societies globally. Since revolution also means change, Islam has brought intellectual, spiritual and ideological change from an un-Islamic way of life to an Islamic one, and achieved co-existential harmony by changing societal values. Islam is a “commonsensical revolution”³⁴⁹ of exemplary good conduct, interrelationships and of total submission to Allah as a total way of life. The Qur’an itself is a revolution. One opinion agrees with Moten that Islam is a revolution for marrying capitalism and socialism.³⁵⁰ Above all, Islam is a positive revolution by its survival, teaching, phenomenal growth and non-violent approach, unless it is provoked by opposing the practice of the religion.

The main view expressed that Islam is not a revolution is that revolution means to revolt, whereas Islam is revealed as total submission to Allah as a total way of life that has not changed from Adam to Muhammad. Therefore, saying that Islam is a revolution contravenes the Qur’an and Sunna, which can mislead people to think Islam is a violent religion. There is a difference between Islam and revolution. Islam is the teaching of Muslims, while revolution is a change of government working contrary to the constitution of a country. Hence Islam has gone beyond revolution.

³⁴⁹SRQ1.2/Th7.16/KN13 [5999-6638]

³⁵⁰ SRQ1.2/Th7.16/KN58 [9677-11049]

Summary

In this chapter, data addressing the first Sub-research Question, with its sub-sub-research questions, were analyzed. Interviewees reveal a basic or conventional understanding of the terms “Islamism,” “Islamic revivalism” and “militancy.” It also emerges that there is a strong link between theology and fundamentalism or militancy in northern Nigeria, as reflected in the views of the interviewees. There is also a differentiation between factors influencing Muslims to fundamentalism and factors influencing interreligious conflicts between Muslims and Christians. In the former, the strong influence leans towards theological pedagogical issues, while in the latter there is a more socio-economic, socio-cultural and socio-political influence. The way theology influences fundamentalism in northern Nigeria is through externally imported Islamic teaching and proliferation of Islamic preachers. Also, there is a significant and considerable presence and acceptance of Maududi’s interpretation of jihad, although more interviewees reject some of his interpretations of jihad. The provisional view on the contemporary implication of this in northern Nigeria is that it appears the conventional Sunni understanding of Islamic jihad is gradually being eroded by a new understanding of jihad that is more fundamentalist and militant, considering that a lot of the fundamentalist view of jihad is expressed by the younger generation.

CHAPTER SEVEN
MAUDUDI'S POLITICAL THEORY OF ISLAM AND FUNDAMENTALISM IN NORTHERN NIGERIA³⁵¹

Introduction

In this chapter, Sub-research Question two and the sub-sub-research questions are addressed. The Sub-research Question two examines the impact of Maududi's political theory of Islam on the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. In view of space constraint, the researcher will not provide statistical tables as done in Chapter Six, but the analysis will indicate the proportion of interviewee response on each theme. However, figures are provided where necessary. The analyzed and summarized responses are reported below.

On Din wa Dawla (Unity of Religion and State)

As discussed in the literature review, the researcher ascertained that the modern concept of Din wa Dawla (unity of religion and state) is a major Maududian political theory, and is the major driving force in his argument for an Islamic state. How influential or how deeply rooted this concept and other aspects of Maududi's political theory of Islam are among northern Nigerian Muslims is examined. The researcher views this theological concept of Din wa Dawla as being potentially problematic in existential relations with other religions that embrace the ideology of separating religion from politics. In view of the requirement for brevity and the volume of thematic data, nuances in opinions are invariably and exigently drowned in the summarized presentation that follows.

³⁵¹ All ideas addressing SRQ2 are found in SRQ2/Th8.1-Th8.3, SRQ2/Th9.1-Th9.10, SRQ2/Th10.1-Th10.3, SRQ2/Th11.1-Th11.10, SRQ2/Th12.1-Th12.6, SRQ2/Th13.1-Th13.7. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

Figure 4: Components of Islam in Din wa Dawla

Inseparability of Islam from Politics

With the exception of a few interviewees, all affirm that Islam should not and cannot be separated from politics. The argument advanced by most is that Islam cannot be separated from politics because Islam is all encompassing, comprehensive and a complete way of life.³⁵² Islam covers personal, social and political lives of Muslims as they conform to the rulings and teachings of Islam.³⁵³ The interviewees aver that if Islam is not intertwined with politics, then Muslims will end up being ³⁵² This concept and idea is attributed to Maududi by Jami'u that to him "Islam is a unique universal comprehensive system" (2012, 47).

³⁵³ Jami'u to summarized that according to Maududi, Islamic system "provides solutions to all problems of mankind, socio-religious; politico-economic, etc, but the only problem with Muslims all over the world is their failure to put into test (i.e. into practice) the legacy left for them by the prophet Muhammad" (2012, 297).

controlled by secularism. Secondly, using the Arabic terminology, a large group argues that Islam cannot be separated from politics because Islam is Din wa Dawla. In other words, Islam is politics and politics is Islam. Moreover, historically, Islam developed alongside the state. Indeed, an interviewee says that Maududi and Mawardi argue that there is no distinction between Islam and politics, because during the time of the Prophet, jihad and wars were designed in mosques, and so Islam is both religion and state.³⁵⁴ An interviewee who is a chief Imam admits that he is a partisan politician because there is siyasatul islamiyya (Islamic politics).

Furthermore, Islam unifies spiritual and political leadership into one person. Religion and politics are practiced together with the Khalifa as the leader. The Islamic leader is also the leader of government, ensuring that Islam is not separated from politics. Evidently, the prophet and his companions practiced politics, albeit different from what is obtained today. Politics originated from Islam, although some attribute it to Khalifa Umar bin Khatab, who established ministries, government buildings and parastatals. It is further stressed that Islam cannot triumph without politics because, as a vicegerent of Allah,³⁵⁵ man in this world cannot rule alone without the support of others, and it will not have power to protect the interest of Muslims, especially where Muslims live with non-Muslims. For some, although Islam cannot be separated from politics, it should be differentiated from western democracy (a Maududian ideology captured in the literature review), which is anti-Islam and siyasa fajira (corrupt politics), with no foundation in Islam, and marrying them together will generate conflicts.

Others argue that separating Islam from politics or not depends on the society or the environment, as well as the contemporary challenges Muslims are facing. The fact that western democracy is not Islamic and has no basis in Islam is the reason given by those who think Islam should be separated from politics. The view is that “the leadership of Islam is Allah and the system of Allah’s government cannot be named.”³⁵⁶ Islam is belief or faith, while politics is a game of numbers or human plan to achieve certain objectives. However, since that is what is operational, Muslims should be engaged in politics, but should be guided by Islam. The mixing of Islam and politics is detrimental to Islam. For example, in Hausa land today if people want to call a person a liar, they call him dan siyasa (meaning politician in Hausa). To bring Islam and politics together is secularizing Islam, and there is no way darkness and light can live together.

³⁵⁴ SRQ2/Th8.1/KN58 [24419-25022]

³⁵⁵ Jami’u also attributes this concept to Maududi (2012, 47),

³⁵⁶ SRQ2/Th8.1/KD13 [8483-8660]

Islam as Synonymous with State and Government

There was a slight change when semantics was introduced into the discussion, although there are still more interviewees agreeing that Islam is synonymous with state and government. However, as many as 53 interviewees disagree. But there are a few who insist that Islam is only synonymous with the state in an Islamic state, where Islamic teachings are duly complied with and the people in it are predominantly Muslims and not in a secular state like Nigeria. Those who completely agree give some similar views, as in the preceding section, but add they are synonymous because Islam is designed to have everything, that includes legislation and judiciary and draws its laws from the Qur'an and Sunna.³⁵⁷

It is further added that Islamic laws cannot be enforced on Muslims to produce an orderly society without government, since Islamic jurisprudence can only be provided by the state. The state and government are made synonymous with Islam because the Umma must obey the government as God's representatives, and so without the state there is no full implementation of Islamic principles. This is another Maududian idea. The foregoing explains why Islam fuses everything and possibly why scholars talk about political Islam.³⁵⁸ Hence, there are Islamic economic, social, educational, political systems and others all integrated.³⁵⁹ Essentially, "Islam is synonymous with the state because al-Islamu din wadawla. Yes [it] is a din and [it] is a state."³⁶⁰ Or as differently put "in Arabic [it] is din wa dawlatu. It is a religion and it is a state at the same time."³⁶¹

There are also a few similarities of opinions with the preceding section by those who disagree that Islam can be synonymous with the state where that society is multi-religious. In such a case, Islam belongs to Muslims and the state belongs to both Muslims and non-Muslims, and so Islam is not necessarily corresponding to the state

³⁵⁷ Another idea Jami'u attributes to Maududi (2012, 48).

³⁵⁸ SRQ2/Th8.2/KN45 [5490-5759]

³⁵⁹ SRQ2/Th8.2/KN51 [30138-32482. Jami'u (2012, 297) says it another Maududian philosophy.

³⁶⁰ SRQ2/Th8.2/KN71 [18193-18795]

³⁶¹ SRQ2/Th8.2/ZA37 [10642-10766]

and government. Other additions are that because Islam is all encompassing, it is broader than the state and government. Islam is a revelation of Allah, while people define the state. If they are synonymous, when one is corrupt or violent so is the other. This is rubbishing Islam. In any case, the state might do things that are contrary to Islam. Other arguments given are that religion is personal, states existed before the advent of Islam and Islam is universal and not limited to a geographical state. Furthermore, Islam and state are only related and not synonymous, as governance and mu'amalat are different. Some insist that although the state and Islam are not one, they are not exclusive since the state is needed to protect Islam.

Relationship between Islam, Politics and State

When a further semantic twist was introduced in order to really establish how influential this ideology is, compared to the preceding section, more interviewees insist that Islam, politics and state are intertwined as far as Islam is concerned. In addition to the ideas in the two preceding sections, it is argued that contrary to Christianity, Islam has a comprehensive social and political program and state ideology. They argue that the three simply make up one component, such that without the state there is no Islam and no politics. Other synonyms used to describe their inseparable relationship include “interdependent,” “symbiotic,” “interwoven,” “interrelated,” “interconnected” and “cannot exist without the other.” Others add that the three entities work hand in hand, inter-lapse or are joined together in an interactive relationship.

As similarly argued and summarized here, Islam is a total and complete way of life or ideology that encompasses all political, social, economic and personal as well as religious lives of Muslims. They add that Islam makes the practice of politics compulsory for Muslims, since even between two people a leader must be appointed. Maududi is attributed to argue that Islam needs politics to achieve total control, operate effectively and govern the state.³⁶² In other words, Islam needs the state in order to actualize its principles. Conversely, the two main arguments by those who disagree are that this kind of inseparable relationship cannot exist in a secular state, and that politics and state are subordinate to Islam. More so, Islam is a religion while politics is a dirty game. The influence of Maududi's Din wa Dawla seems apparent in the foregoing.

³⁶² SRQ2/Th8.3/KD30 [24089-24580]

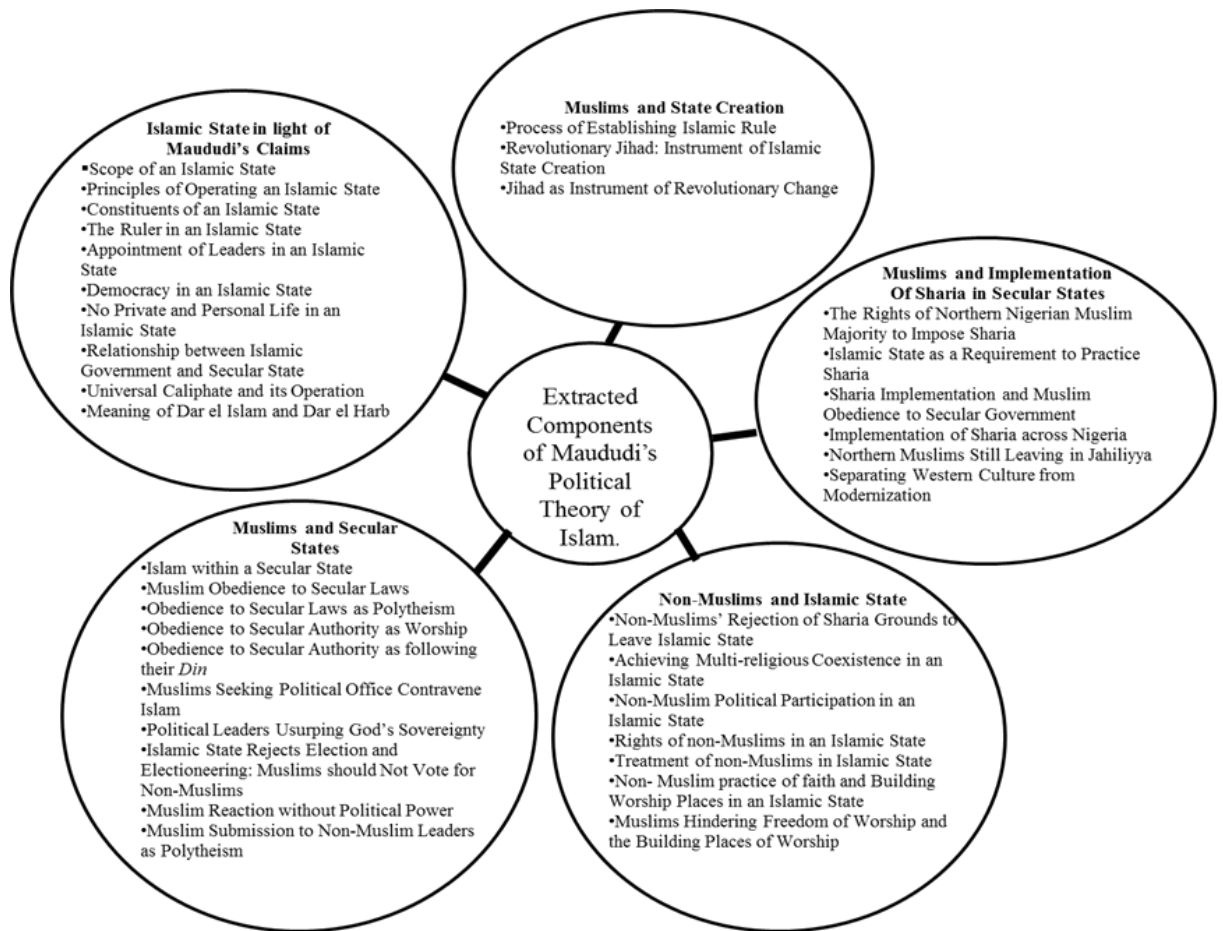

Figure 5: Researcher's extractions of the major components of Maududi's Political Theory of Islam and their thematic elements discussed by interviewees.

Islamic State in Light of Maududi's Claims

Although the preceding discourse suggests that Maududi's Din wa Dawla is very influential in the minds of northern Nigerian Muslims, the depth of his influence is further examined through the assessment of the interviewees' perception of his many other claims on the Islamic state. All these will later be compared during analytical integration.

Scope of an Islamic State

Among the views expressed on the scope of an Islamic state is that the Qur'an and Sunna, as its guiding principles, should be the basis for its establishment and its constitution. They should guide all its practices, aided by ijma and qiyas of the Ulama. In addition, everything should be Islamic in the Islamic state, whether political, social, economic, legal or technological. More specifically, in terms of governance, it provides leadership and welfare for people, protects Muslim lives and possessions, as well as guides their conduct and Islamic practices together with their relations with non-Muslims. Relying on the argument by Maududi obtained from one of his books, according to an interviewee, Islam always desires an Islamic state to protect lives, ensure freedom and security as well as human rights within the state.³⁶³

Others argue that the scope of an Islamic state should not extend outside the state to non-Islamic territories or religions, and it covers only where Muslims are dominant. However, some say its scope is broad and wide beyond limits, without expatiating, and multidirectional in its movement as it operates by Islamic principles. Some novel views say that the scope of an Islamic state are its major institutions like Hisba,³⁶⁴ propagation of Islam, engaging in dialogue, or is limited within the home as one performs jihadin nafs and practices Islam with the family. In summary, "Islamic state covers Muslims, Shari'a and the state itself."³⁶⁵

Principles of Operating an Islamic State

More interviewees claim that the principles of operating an Islamic state must eschew personal knowledge and ideology and rely on Qur'an and Sunna, supported by ijma, qiyas and sound fatwas that embody Allah's will. Those who differentiate Qur'an and Sunna from Shari'a say it must operate based on Shari'a law, although they acknowledge that Qur'an and Sunna are the sources of Shari'a. Others add that it should be on the principles set by the prophet and the four guided Caliphs. Other operating principles advanced include belief in one God, since he is the law giver, applying the five pillars of Islam, and articles of faith.³⁶⁶ It should also be based on

³⁶³SRQ2/Th9.1/KN73 [38078-38450],

³⁶⁴ Literally it means accountability, but it is used to mean Islamic police.

³⁶⁵ SRQ2/Th9.1/KN83 [21625-21717]

³⁶⁶ The five pillars of faith are Shahadah (the creed), Salat (prayer), Zakat (alms), Hajj (pilgrimage), and Sawn (fasting) while the articles of faith are belief in Allah, his angels, his books, his messengers, the last day and predestination.

establishing Islamic institutions such as treasury (baytul mal), Shura committee, and so on, to fight illegalities like drinking alcohol, prostitution and other vices.

Other principles advanced are more relational, such as equality, justice, peace and fairness. Interreligious tolerance, proper religious indoctrination to ensure right compliance with the way of Allah, and operating with truth and transparency are also added. There is the intriguing addition that Islamic state should operate on the principle of jihad, while some amazingly say that an Islamic state should operate with the same principles of a secular state.

Constituents of an Islamic State

It is unexpected that more interviewees claim that what constitutes an Islamic state is when the state is governed by the Qur'an and Sunna as the constitution, and Shari'a is applied supported by ijma and qiyas. Some say that what constitutes an Islamic state is when there is a Muslim leader or a Shura committee, leading the state by Islamic principles where majority or everybody in the state are Muslims willing to be governed by the Islamic system, and are knowledgeable about Islam. It means knowledge of Islam is considered as part of what constitutes an Islamic state.

Others say that what constitutes an Islamic state is when all Islamic institutions are in place, such as Shura committee, the treasury (baytul mal), Hisba (Islamic police) and the rest. Some insist that both Muslims and non-Muslims constitute an Islamic state. There are those with a global outlook who argue that what constitutes an Islamic state is the collection of Muslims all over the world. It is universal. Some are of the view that what constitutes an Islamic state is where Muslims live with justice, without oppression, and sovereignty belonging to Allah and not the people as in a democracy, while others insist it is when a caliphate is established because an Islamic state is incomplete without a caliphate.

The Ruler in an Islamic State

The majority opinion is that the person who rules in an Islamic state is the most knowledgeable Muslim in scripture and has a complete understanding of Islam with its ideology. He can be called an Imam, Khalifa (Caliph), and Amir as well as a Mallam, a scholar, a spiritual leader, supreme leader and so on. He must be competent, faithful to the religion, exemplary, tolerant and accommodate religious diversities in the state. Other attributes are he should be honest, capable, strong, God fearing, fit or sane, pious, versatile, not lazy, temperate and generally possessing leadership qualities that surprisingly include western education.

It is further qualified that the ruler must be a male Muslim, chosen by the Umma on merit. Some argue that it is the Shura committee, sometimes referred to as the Electoral College, which selects the leader. A contrary view is that the Islamic state is ruled by the Ulama (scholars) elected by Muslims. Some insist it is any qualified person, Muslim or non-Muslim, who is able to treat Muslims and non-Muslims equally with fairness, justice and equity, in addition to governing by Islamic principles. An opinion gives the leadership to a supreme ruler from a royal family, as obtains in modern Saudi Arabia.

Conversely, some insist that the scriptures did not clearly state who should rule. Muslims in an Islamic state should decide what type of leadership they want to have, whether autocratic, bureaucratic or democratic. Although a Caliph should rule when there is a caliphate or a global Islamic political authority, however, Islam does not prescribe any system of government essentially. It only enjoins fairness, justice and equity, whether it is a democracy, monarchy or military government.

Appointment of Leaders in an Islamic State

A greater number of interviewees indicate that in an Islamic state, leaders are appointed through careful assessment of their leadership qualities and not by popular election, as it is in democracies, because the Islamic state does not accept democracy or election. A leader is picked from the majority, based on qualities as mentioned in the preceding section. The Caliphs were appointed that way. Some add that it could be hierarchical appointment. Contrary to the preceding argument, some argue that leaders are appointed in an Islamic state through election, especially where consensus is lacking. They argue that Islam encourages election, fair and credible election by simple majority, following normal liberal democratic principles.

Opposing the two preceding arguments are those who insist that the appointment of leaders in an Islamic state is through the Shura committee (Electoral College), a consultative council of learned people using the leadership criteria mentioned above. The people elect those considered spiritual, capable and responsible to be members of the committee, and in turn they appoint the leader from among them in what some call limited democracy, because not all people are involved. This process is traced to the prophet, where a seven-man-member-knowledgeable committee is set up to appoint a leader.³⁶⁷ “Islam does not recognize popular democracy”³⁶⁸ simply because people ignorant of Islamic teachings can be elected, since in a democracy a professor of Islamic studies has one vote, like an ignorant layman.

In complete contrast to the above arguments, a good number argue that there is no specific approach provided in Islam for appointing leaders. The three approaches mentioned above and other approaches are still valid. In their view, a leader in an Islamic state can be appointed, elected, inherit or be selected through the Shura committee. The prophet used appointment. Caliph Umar used Shura committee. Caliph Ali was elected. Mu’awiyya led through succession (inheritance). Shari’a recognizes all, as long as the leadership qualities mentioned above remain pertinent.

Democracy and Islamic State

Fascinatingly, more than half of the interviewees say an Islamic state should be democratic. Their argument is that an Islamic state recognizes all rights of people, as evident during the time of the prophet. Beside these rights, the Islamic state encourages consultation, recognizes minority rights, human rights, and the injunctions of Allah and the prophet are not harsh. Furthermore, the Islamic state discourages dictatorship, requires transparency, accountability and honesty, as well as allows implementation of Shari’a. This makes an Islamic state resemble a democracy. In fact, some argue that democracy is inherent in Islam,³⁶⁹ or Islam is “purely democratic,”³⁷⁰ or even “more democratic than the so-called liberal democracies we have.”³⁷¹ However, Islamic democracy is differentiated from western democracy. Islam rejects western democracy. Islamic democracy is the application of wisdom and freedom to follow Allah’s prescribed way of life. Indeed, Islamic democracy requires nothing from western democracy, since Qur’anic democracy is sufficient. Democracy is not all about voting.

³⁶⁷ SRQ2/Th9.5/ZA15 [18558-18828]

³⁶⁸ SRQ2/Th9.5/KN84 [16090-16284]

³⁶⁹ SRQ2/Th9.6/KN9 [18318-18449]

³⁷⁰ SRQ2/Th9.6/KD13 [9320-9357]

³⁷¹ SRQ2/Th9.6/KD11 [22320-22411]

On the contrary, those who reject the notion that the Islamic state should be democratic, argue that there is no democracy in obeying religious injunctions. Consumption of alcohol cannot be voted for. The Qur'an forbids it, period. Besides "democracy is Kufr"³⁷² and anti Islam. Furthermore, Islamic state cannot be democratic because sovereignty belongs to Allah alone, and not to the people as advocated by liberal democracy. Democracy is a system of government motivated by western ideology, while the Islamic state is rooted in the Shari'a, as contained in the Qur'an and Sunna. "Islam is more than democracy, it is an ideal system"³⁷³ and cannot borrow from secular system or be influenced by westernization.

In the same vein, Islamic scholars reject the use of the word democracy because it is immoral, discriminatory and rejects Islamic principles, such as the rejection of hijab (veil) in France. It condones gay marriage, allows corrupt leaders to be dishonestly elected, and allows all forms of un-Islamic activities in the name of freedom. Therefore, an Islamic state cannot be democratic, since it will not allow such un-Islamic freedom. However, "with this invention of Islamic revolution . . . leaders can be elected to rule in an Islamic state."³⁷⁴

No Private and Personal Life in an Islamic State

Although the margin is close, more interviewees disagree that in an Islamic state nobody can claim that his life is private and personal. Their opinions are that it is not all private or personal things that Allah or Shari'a talks about, such as what to eat, who to marry or how to discipline your children. It is argued that personal life is left to the individual, unless it becomes public. Shari'a prescribes what is lawful and unlawful. Someone even argues that "personal is different from Islam."³⁷⁵ Hence Islam forbids prying into people's privacy. That is why four independent witnesses are required in the case of fornication and adultery. Even unnecessary suspicion is not permitted. A man was set free when he accused Caliph Umar for trespassing by jumping his wall to catch him drinking alcohol. Islam protects a Muslim's privacy.

They further argue that the regulation is more around socio-political and public life, not private life. Shari'a comes into play when there is a public trespass against

³⁷² SRQ2/Th9.6/KD9 [24440-24630] (Kufr means denial of truth)

³⁷³ SRQ2/Th9.6/KN58 [26495-26736]

³⁷⁴ SRQ2/Th9.6/KN65 [20137-20684]

³⁷⁵ SRQ2/Th9.7KD20 [27816-28074]

the state or individuals. As explained, a Muslim has a dual public and private life. For example, all properties legally acquired are private, but Zakat is required. Private property or belongings are not controlled by government. The state acts only when actions are contrary to Shari'a. In fact, the law allows personal initiatives in the application of Shari'a, especially to avoid infringing on human rights.

On the other hand, the argument of those who agree is that the totality of a Muslim's life belongs to Islam and so all private life must conform to Islam and its tenets in public or at home. Private and personal life, or how a person deals with himself, is guided by the Qur'an and Sunna. Since Islam is all encompassing and Allah did not separate state and religion, and given that religion controls the lives of individuals, nothing is private and personal in an Islamic state. One person says he agrees with Maududi that "in an Islamic state the essence of man is to serve God and just serve God and Islam."³⁷⁶ Essentially, since Shari'a is both outward and inward commitment, Muslims must conform to Shari'a. All public or private wrong will be punished. Whoever accepts Islam has no personal life and must submit totally to the prescriptions of Shari'a in all private and public life.

Relationship between Islamic Government and Secular State

In their comments about what should be the relationship between an Islamic government and a secular state, the responses betray a misunderstanding of the inquiry. This outlines the challenge of using assistants because these interviewees were not redirected. Hence several of them highlighted the differences between an Islamic state and secular state or the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims. Nonetheless, it is suggested that the relationship should be good, cordial, peaceful, friendly, cooperative, truthful, fair and sincere, as well as that they should work hand in hand as long as the secular state does not contradict Islamic teachings or pose a threat to the Islamic state. There should also be mutual respect for each other's values or beliefs. They should be interdependent, as no state is self-sufficient, and Islam does not forbid mutual relations with non-Muslims.

Others maintain that the relationship should be multi-dimensional, covering exchange of goods and services, traveling and tourism, sporting activities, establishing embassies and so on and so forth, based on agreement or treaties clearly defined and outlined. Some see Islamic propagation as a reason to maintain relationship with secular states. Some say the relationship should exist if the secular state accepts some Islamic ideologies and practices. Muslims should be conscious of their religion, and ensure Islamic government is always on top, since ordinarily secular states should not be in existence.³⁷⁷ In fact, it is believed that secularism is a hoax, as every nation has a religion they follow, including America. So secularism should be replaced with the word “multi-religious.”³⁷⁸

³⁷⁶ SRQ2/Th9.7/KN85 [35394-35858]

Contrarily, some argue that there should not be, or there is no relationship between, Islamic government and a secular state, and that both should mind their business. This is because the secular state is godless and the Islamic state is governed by Islamic principles. The former is the kingdom of God, while the latter has no religion. The Islamic state does Allah’s will, and the secular state does nobody’s will. In the former, Shari’a is the total way of life, while in the latter religion is separated from leadership. To avoid contaminating the Islamic state, all relationships should be shunned because secular government is viewed as anti-Islam.³⁷⁹ Secularism competes with Islam, since both are religions, although secularism believes in nothing, which is rubbish.³⁸⁰

Universal Caliphate and its Operation

The understanding of most interviewees concerning universal caliphate and its operation relates to a situation when the global movement of Muslims has one central leader, accepted by all Muslims, with subordinates or assistants in various communities, states or countries. Islamically, this leader is referred to as the Khalifa, Amir, Imam or the supreme leader. This is necessary for the Muslim Umma to speak with one voice globally, and prevent the destruction of Islamic society. Furthermore, universal caliphate unites all Muslims under one umbrella, like a unified federal Islamic world government, ruled by the Qur’an and Hadith. It is seen as a global central authority coordinating other Islamic entities,³⁸¹ and possibly controlling the

³⁷⁷ SRQ2/Th9.8/KN28 [10468-10695]

³⁷⁸ SRQ2/Th9.8/ZA23 [19722-20465]. This is also an argument advanced by Jami’u (2012, 1) about Nigeria.

³⁷⁹ SRQ2/Th9.8/KN35 [11504-11579]

³⁸⁰ SRQ2/Th9.8/KN58 [25108-25451]

³⁸¹ SRQ2/Th9.9/KN78 [59787-59912]

entire world³⁸² as it commands respect or exercises “supreme power over non-Islamic state [s] in the world.”³⁸³

It is also believed that a universal caliphate will make the practice of Islam easier for Muslims, since even the Qur’an advocates that the entire Muslim Umma should be under one umbrella. As one Islamic movement, they will have a Shura council, with a central leader such that the problem of one Muslim nation is the problem of all Muslim nations. All Muslim nations, with one united leadership, provide the proper way to address their challenges effectively. Universal caliphate is not restricted to any particular region as some Muslims claim today. It operates wherever Muslims are globally.

Contrary to all the postulations above, some restrict the caliphate to the Caliphs that came after the prophet to the dynastic empires that captured major world powers. They question its contemporary relevance today, considering global changes and developments. There are those who even say the caliphate only operated in the first century of Islam, during the prophetic era. But they insist that it is not existent today because Muslims are scattered across independent states, without any central leadership or voice, and are left only agitating for one world government. In fact, some conclude that with the heterogeneity of cultures and beliefs of the 21st Century, a universal caliphate with a single Khalifa is impossible. However, some argue that despite the gloomy forecast and the universal caliphate appearing contemporarily impossible, its possibility cannot be entirely diminished, “It will come, inshaallahu [Allah willing], through continuous teaching of true Islam.”³⁸⁴

Meaning of Dar el Islam and Dar el Harb

Sixty three interviewees indicate no idea of what these terms mean. They either did not come across these terms, or the meanings given are not related to the terms. Nonetheless, the diverse related meanings given with their shades of meaning are catalogued here. On the meaning of Dar el Islam, most interviewees with relevant ideas say it is a place or territory dominated by Muslims with no non-Muslims. It is an Islamic state or government where the constitution is the Qur’an and Sunna, or Shari’a is operational with no Kufr there, or it is faught. It is also a place where Islam is in total control of the state, and true Islam is practiced freely even where non-Muslims are present. Some are more literal that it is the home, town or house of peace, a community living in peace, or house or abode of Islam.

³⁸² SRQ2/Th9.9/KN49 [28471-28633]

³⁸³ SRQ2/Th9.9/ZA39 [54783-55021]

³⁸⁴ SRQ2/Th9.9/ZA22 [29585-29758]

Dar el Islam is also defined as a group controlled by the Islamic system and following the teachings of Allah, or simply a community of Islam or Muslims. More definitions include kingdom of Islam, an institution of Islam, a Muslim empire and territory no Islamic state can legally fight, as well as where the Muslim Umma enjoys Islamic leadership in safety. Some even argue that if you are a Muslim you are in Dar el Islam. One notable definition is “an association or group of people who are fighting the mission . . . jihad fi sabilillah.”³⁸⁵

Dar el Harb, on the other hand, is deemed to be a territory with a mixed population, combining different people, religions and cultures. Due to disagreements, conflicts often ensue. Some are also more literal that it is the home, house, abode or territory of war. Another definition says it is a state not governed by Islamic rule or any religion. In fact, “a secular state can be classified as a Dar el Harb.”³⁸⁶ Some add that it is a non-Islamic state, classically categorized by conflicts, fighting and misunderstanding with Muslims, who might not have the freedom to practice Islam or implement Shari'a.

Other views say it is anything outside Islamic community, where there is confusion, crisis, militancy or terrorism, and Islam is always under persecution. It is a state where Muslims are struggling to make it theirs, or a state seen as an enemy of an Islamic state, which can be legally fought preemptively, as a deterrent against its aggression, whether headed by a Muslim or a non-Muslim.³⁸⁷ Classically, these are societies defeated by Muslims during battles or wars. It is also considered as a place where jihad or fighting is ongoing. In other words, it is a militant region and, as concluded, Dar el Harb is always at war with Dar el Islam.

Muslims and State Creation

³⁸⁵ SRQ2/Th9.10/KD28 [23519-23703]

³⁸⁶ SRQ2/Th9.10/KD4 [25388-25847]

³⁸⁷ SRQ2/Th9.10/KN46 [32097-33065]

Maududi's claims also relate to how an Islamic state or Islamic rule should be established. These ideas are also tested. Responses received embody the desire for the creation of an Islamic state, the dialectics only being the approach to attain it.

Process of Establishing Islamic Rule

Consequently, a group of interviewees believe Muslims should engage in politicking to achieve Islamic rule by using their representatives at all levels of government and operating within the dictates and limits of constitutional provisions of the land. In other words, use democratic processes. Others insist that Islamic rule can only be achieved through appropriate teaching and propagation of Islam to both Muslims and non-Muslims. Related to this is persuasion by highlighting the benefits of Islamic rule and individually living it out through good conduct and character. When Muslims are good and true ambassadors of Islam, they would be trusted with leadership positions.

Others claim that Islamic rule can only be established by following the Islamic principles laid down by the forefathers of Islam found in the Qur'an and the Hadith without expatiating. However, some argue that establishing Islamic rule is through intellectual process of acquiring education, both secular and religious, which enables Muslims and their leaders to participate in all sectors of national life. Other ways include attaining unity of the Muslim Umma, building ijma through hikma (wisdom) and extending self purification into the society. To others, it can only be achieved by resolving Muslim challenges, striving to gain acceptable leadership as the prophet did, and by being tactical and determined. With this, Muslims can reach the pinnacle of their desire.³⁸⁸

Some insist that it is having a single credible leader to directly or indirectly maneuver things until it is achieved.³⁸⁹ Some are more pragmatic that only when Muslims have a dominant majority can an Islamic rule be established, without conflicts with non-Muslims. Some generally say it can only be established through jihad, while some specify that it is peaceful jihad of tafakkur (intellectual jihad). Others insist that agitation for Islamic rule should only arise if Muslims are deprived of religious freedom. Contrastingly, some insist that the contemporary global situation and secularism are obstacles to the establishment of Islamic rule. What is realistic in the present situation is to pursue jihadin nafs and the practice of ibadat within the context of national peaceful coexistence and religious freedom, since an Islamic state is not possible in Nigeria.

³⁸⁸ SRQ2/Th10.1/KN9 [25752-25968]

³⁸⁹ SRQ2/Th10.1/KN5 [28574-28715]

Revolutionary Jihad: Instrument of Islamic State Creation

There are more disagreements to the notion that revolutionary jihad is necessary to establish an Islamic state than agreements. A greater number of those who disagree argue that in modern times, there are alternatives to revolutionary jihad in achieving an Islamic state. It can be achieved through legislation, like the Zamfara state experience. Moreover, several countries have achieved Islamic state without revolutionary jihad. As argued, jihad is not a revolutionary act of using arms, while force does not change people's thinking; rather, it generates crisis, and it is not a utopia for solving problems. Revolutionary jihad negates Islam's claim to peace, and it is not the starting point to achieve an Islamic state. The starting point is to get people in a particular area to believe in Islam.

It is further stressed that God did not create only Muslims to live in an Islamic state. He created a mixed society of Muslims and non-Muslims. Besides, the prophet did not use revolutionary jihad to establish an Islamic state, more so even when he was prevented from entering Mecca. Islamic state through revolutionary jihad is unnecessary, where secular states permit freedom of worship and there is respect for religious diversity. Besides, it is achieved through a gradual process of eroding resistance by promoting the need for it through enhancing personal devotion to Allah and Islam.

Similarly, those who agree reject the use of jihad of the sword to establish an Islamic state, since Allah forbids killing and shedding of innocent blood. They suggest democratic revolution, as it happened in Nigeria's presidential election of 2015, since revolution is not all about fighting. Although revolutionary jihad is one form of jihad mentioned in the Qur'an and Hadith, there are other forms revealed to the prophet.

Contradictory to the preceding argument, some insist that the firmness of revolutionary jihad is needed to achieve an Islamic state. The "simple reason is because sometimes you need to carry the sword to bring about changes.”³⁹⁰ Indeed, “change cannot come without violence and dispute struggle.”³⁹¹ The fact is “without revolutionary jihad you cannot establish an Islamic state.”³⁹² Total revolt is needed for things to be righted. For example, it is the revolt by northern states by saying a beauty pageant is not welcomed that stopped it.³⁹³ “It is only when you fight for what you want [that] you get it. So if truly we want it we should fight for it on the right base.”³⁹⁴ The fact is “all revolutions, whether Islamic or non-Islamic, are violent in nature and you cannot overturn, you cannot radically transform society with true peaceful means, and that is why when the colonial masters came, they succeeded in changing the way of life of people through violence.”³⁹⁵

Furthermore, revolutionary jihad is necessary to eliminate moral decay and lawlessness in the society, cleanse innate corrupt un-Islamic practices, instill morality and prevent people from degenerating into jahiliyya (ignorance) or perishing. It is also necessary, when you need followers, to revive the teaching of Islam and to ensure compliance with Shari’a. However, some argue that revolutionary jihad is conditional to when the conditions are ripe and met, or when it is the only effective way of achieving an Islamic state. This was the situation in the case of Danfodio’s jihad in northern Nigeria, where there was no established religious justice system, and so jihad was necessary to establish an Islamic state.

Others say it is necessary when there is the required Muslim majority and they have the avenue in order to introduce equality, like in Iran. Some even challenge why Muslims are questioned for undertaking revolution, when Hitler also executed a revolution.³⁹⁶ There are those who argue that revolutionary jihad depends on circumstances and the extant conditions at a particular time. For example, when a Muslim minority is oppressed, they need revolutionary jihad to conquer the place and achieve freedom to establish an Islamic state.

³⁹⁰ SRQ2/Th10.2/KD9 [34956-35442]

³⁹¹ SRQ2/Th10.2/KN83 [18598-18676]

³⁹² SRQ2/Th10.2/KD11 [32240-32462]

³⁹³ SRQ2/Th10.2/KD12 [33666-34086]

³⁹⁴ SRQ2/Th10.2/KN5 [28942-29102]

³⁹⁵ SRQ2/Th10.2/KN78 [53128-53692]

³⁹⁶ SRQ2/Th10.2/ZA26 [18103-18157]

Jihad as Instrument of Revolutionary Change

In complete contrast to the previous section, there are more agreements that jihad is an instrument of revolutionary change. Almost the same number who disagree in the previous section that revolutionary jihad is not necessary to establish an Islamic state agree jihad is an instrument of revolutionary change. Again more of the people who agree insist it is peaceful jihad that embodies aspects previously mentioned. Nonetheless, some argue that there is historical evidence that jihad is an instrument of revolutionary change. People like Salahudeen, Ayubi and Caliph Umar bin Khatab used jihad to bring real time changes that affected the world. Other examples are the transformative jihads of Danfodio and Iran that brought revolutionary transformation and reformed their respective societies ideologically.

It is further claimed that the classical prophetic jihad of Muhammad revolutionarily transformed the Quraish society from jahiliyya or Dark Age to an Islamic Shari'a compliant society, just as it did to Africa and other parts of the world. Jihad will revolutionarily change everything, including reviving Islamic practices, transforming degenerated moral ethics of the society and all aspects of Muslim lives, if fought in conformity with Shari'a and the principles of jihad. Jihad transforms the orientation of individuals if radically conducted appropriately. It is reiterated that, in spite of the dialectics about jihad, “revolutionary change will not be done without jihad,”³⁹⁷ although some insist it is not a misrepresented jihad, because there are ignorant anti-Islamic people who try to define jihad. For example, it is not the kind of jihad propagated by the West to denigrate Islam, or the misconceived and misunderstood jihad publicized by some Muslims. Nevertheless, jihad brings progressive transformative change, and “jihad means a revolution.”³⁹⁸

Others add that jihad as instrument of revolutionary change is necessary where Muslims are pushed to the wall, their religious freedom denied, or they are forced to conform to secular injunctions and their patience exhausted. Allah will guarantee them success. It is also necessary to change a Kufr system of government promoting injustice, lawlessness and immorality. And to those who leave Islam, “jihad is a declaration of war.”³⁹⁹

³⁹⁷ SRQ2/Th10.3/KN11 [26920-27025]

³⁹⁸ SRQ2/Th10.3/KN45 [28718-28877]

³⁹⁹ SRQ2/Th10.3/KN72 [30725-30864]

Those who disagree say revolutionary change connotes revolt, and revolt is undesirable crisis. At any rate, jihad is not limited to use of combat weapons or undertaking suicide missions to kill in the name of establishing Shari'a. This contradicts the sacred books and does not achieve the desired goal of establishing Shari'a. More effective or revolutionary is jihad of proper indoctrination of Islamic teachings, as knowledge is required to adhere to Allah's prescription for jihad. This is the jihad the prophet used, and people with right understanding of Islam still use. Besides, jihad for revolutionary change is only required where Islam is non-existent. Those that think that peaceful jihad of propagation cannot revive Islam are misguided. In any case, physical jihad sparks retaliation, crisis or war and brings negative change. The concept of jihad as an instrument of revolutionary change is western.⁴⁰⁰

Muslims and Secular State

Maududi's political theory of Islam can also be linked with the behavior of Muslims in a secular state. Questions were also designed to test these ideas. The responses are reported in the themes that follow, and as earlier indicated, comparative analysis will be done later.

Islam within a Secular State

Less than 10 interviewees say Islam cannot exist within a secular state. A majority of the interviewees say Islam can exist within a secular state, as long as basic freedoms are maintained, such as freedom of religion, movement, ownership and speech (preaching and teaching) as obtains in Nigeria, and global Europe and America. Some add specifics, which are that Islam can exist within a secular state if Muslims are not harassed, their religion protected and peaceful coexistence maintained with freedom for proselytizing.⁴⁰¹ Some surprisingly add that this mutual coexistence between Islam and the secular state is possible if Muslims do not seek elective office, unless endorsed or persuaded to take up certain positions.

Indeed, Muslims do not have to lead to live peacefully in secular states or worship Allah. Such prioritizing of leadership as a condition to practice one's religion is riddled with evil intention.⁴⁰² Besides, Muslims can challenge unfavorable laws through the Ulama, and Islam even flexibly views this as darura (necessity). However, some argue that this cohabitation of Islam and the secular state is only necessary due to lack of an alternative,⁴⁰³ because whatever religious freedom there is, a secular state still limits the complete implementation of Shari'a.

⁴⁰⁰ SRQ2/Th10.3/ZA20 [22773-22990]

⁴⁰¹ SRQ2/Th11.1/KD29 [17821-18146]

According to those who disagree, the concept of secular is confusing. In fact, Islam would be disadvantaged within a secular state, as Muslims would begin to neglect their true religious conduct. Besides, in some secular countries like Burma, Myanmar and China, Muslims tend to be maltreated and killed on a regular basis. Furthermore, secular states consider their laws superior to any other law, whereas Muslims regard Islamic law above all laws, and this leads to conflicts. In Nigeria, Shari'a is not fully implemented because it is a secular state.

Muslim Obedience to Secular Laws

A simple majority of interviewees believe that Muslims can obey secular laws conditionally, as long as they do not contradict the tenets of Islam, supersede Islamic laws, hinder the practice of Islam, or make Muslims Kafirs. If this is the case, Muslims are duty bound to obey them; otherwise, they are not expected to obey what Allah has not ordained. Where it is impossible to disobey secular laws, hijra (migration) to a more favorable place is recommended. Furthermore, Muslims should obey secular laws while living in a secular state because they have no alternative. It is darura. Allah and the prophet instruct obedience to authorities, since it is Allah who gave power to secular states. In fact, disobedience attracts Allah's wrath, and obedience justifies Islam. Although an Islamic state is and should be the desire of all Muslims, without it, Muslims should bear to obey secular laws. Others see no problem in Muslims staying in secular states and obeying secular laws, as it is not forbidden. They should only protest if their rights are hindered, like Muslim ladies stopped from wearing hijab in public schools.

On the opposite side are those who insist that Muslims should not obey secular laws unless forced to, because the only laws they should obey are the Qur'an and Sunna. Muslims should always prefer to obey Islamic laws above secular laws, because secular laws are haram (prohibited) and not halal (permissible). Obedience to secular laws should only be when “it is a strategy to work through the ladder up”⁴⁰⁴ in order to attain leadership to advance Islam.

⁴⁰² SRQ2/Th11.1/KN62 [42221-42985]

⁴⁰³ SRQ2/Th11.1/KN64 [22368-22547]

Others insist that Muslims should be selective or partial in obeying secular laws, by complying with those in consonance with the teaching of the Qur’an, and disregarding those that are not. Some utterly condemn secularism as an evil that Islamic discourse should eschew, and an ideology that should not cohabit with Islam because it demarcates religion and politics.⁴⁰⁵ A more conservative group believes Muslims should only submit to those who submit to Allah. Those who obey secular laws have strayed away from the Qur’an or the teachings of Islam. It is disobedience to Allah, which is like idol worship or shirk (ascribing partners to Allah).⁴⁰⁶ Indeed, “it is haram for a Muslim to be subdued or subjected to secular powers, like what they are saying now that you should be allowed to practice what you want; like the gay rights acts bill is totally haram.”⁴⁰⁷

Obedience to Secular Laws as Polytheism

There is an opinion which says that whether obedience to secular laws amounts to polytheism depends on intention, which takes it beyond the realm of human assessment. However, there is an overwhelming disagreement that obedience to secular laws amounts to polytheism. The predominant position is that, for as much as the laws do not contradict the teachings or tenets of Islam, stop Muslims from practicing their religion, or deviate from Allah’s laws, it cannot be polytheism. By obeying secular laws, Muslims are not neglecting Islam or worshiping the laws. Therefore, to consider it as polytheism is extreme to say the least. Muslims are not committing shirk by obeying secular laws.

It is alleged that there are some Ulama who explain that a person can outwardly obey but inwardly reject the laws as kufir, especially when a Muslim’s life is in danger, since the worship of Allah is in the heart. Also, happenings during the time of the prophet and his companions reveal that Muslims can obey secular laws without being polytheists. Moreover, respect is not acceptance. Allah enjoins respect to

⁴⁰⁴ SRQ2/Th11.2/KN25 [22030-22201]

⁴⁰⁵ SRQ2/Th11.2/KN52 [29456-30491]

⁴⁰⁶ SRQ2/Th11.2/ ZA33 [13546-13792]

⁴⁰⁷ SRQ2/Th11.2/KN58 [30666-31038]

authority, so Muslims are only worshipping Allah under a secular arrangement. However, there are some who think Muslims are compelled in Nigeria to live under a secular state, when Shari'a is their preferred option.

It is also argued that obedience to secular law is not following another religion. An opinion is expressed that love for country is love for God and has nothing to do with worshipping your country. Interestingly, an opinion says religion and activities are so different, and God will judge them differently.⁴⁰⁸ Besides, there is no Qur'anic verse that teaches that obedience to secular law is polytheism. A question is asked whether secular laws compel a Muslim to worship another God.⁴⁰⁹ A Muslim's prayer and fasting is not to a secular state, just because he lives there. Moreover, Allah does not impose impossibilities on Muslims. What is above a Muslim's power to do, negligence will not be attributed to him or her.⁴¹⁰ It is darura. Obedience to secular laws can be a matter of necessity where Muslims are not capable of establishing an Islamic state, or it is not possible in the interim.

On the contrary, those who agree that obedience to secular laws is polytheism say it gradually affects faith (Iman). It also signifies that a Muslim is following what they are following, when the Qur'an says he who judges by anything other than what Allah has revealed is an infidel.⁴¹¹ To blindly act contrary to the teachings of Islam is polytheism and Kufr.⁴¹² Except there is no alternative, obeying secular laws is prohibited⁴¹³ because secular laws and practices are mostly un-Islamic. Such un-Islamic governance causes Muslims to deviate from Islam. They argue that to obey those who are not conducting themselves appropriately is to be lost and have divided loyalty, which signifies following two religions. People who obey secular laws have divided loyalty. More so, considering secular laws as superior to Allah's laws is the height of polytheism. To obey a law that contradicts Shari'a makes a Muslim a polytheist. To a Muslim, all laws are subject to Islamic laws.⁴¹⁴ Some report that there are scholars who argue that to obey secular laws is not to be a Muslim.⁴¹⁵

⁴⁰⁸ SRQ2/Th11.3/ZA29 [36429-36790]

⁴⁰⁹ SRQ2/Th11.3/KN73 [24153-24538]

⁴¹⁰ SRQ2/Th11.3/ZA39 [41565-41965]

⁴¹¹ SRQ2/Th11.3/ZA3 [18748-19259]

⁴¹² SRQ2/Th11.3/KD25 [77046-77475]

⁴¹³ SRQ2/Th11.3/KD27 [22202-22324]

⁴¹⁴ SRQ2/Th11.3/ZA26 [14084-14254]

⁴¹⁵ SRQ2/Th11.3/KN22 [21457-22060]

Obedience to Secular Authority as Worship

The preceding section appears closely related to this one, but the outcome is slightly different. Interviewees here are almost divided into two halves, although there are more disagreements that obedience to secular authority amounts to worship. For those who agree, most say that it makes Muslims negate, abandon or cease to practice Islam according to Islamic laws, as such it amounts to worship. Preferring secular laws, or viewing them as substitutes to Islamic laws, indicates a shifting of allegiance, and that is worship. Further explanation says that when Muslims obey secular laws that contradict Islam, accept them without resentment, protest or disagreement, and voluntarily or involuntarily abide by them, it amounts to worship. A Muslim will be a mushrik (idolater) if he obeys laws passed by legislators that contradict Allah's laws. It means he is no longer a Muslim and worships a secular authority instead of Allah.⁴¹⁶

In addition, it is worship to elevate a secular government above an Islamic state,⁴¹⁷ as well as Kufr to accept the principles of democracy as the best form of government and submit to it. Islam is about total submission, with no options. To completely and uncritically believe and follow a secular authority is worship, as well as wholeheartedly supporting secular laws that reject the teachings of Islam, especially not out of necessity. Ipso facto, to accept what is forbidden as permissible, or vice versa, from a secular authority is worship. Furthermore, equating somebody with Allah, or accepting laws that mock Islam, and accepting secular authority, not Allah, as the ultimate provider, or allowing them to usurp the position of Allah, is worship. These kinds of Muslims are considered as munafikum. Accepting polytheism from a secular authority is also worship. Some are inflexible that obeying secular authority or man made laws amounts to worship. This includes bowing to someone or to a legislative mace, contrary to the instructions of the prophet.

Conversely, and in some cases reversing some preceding arguments, those who disagree say that as long as Muslims are not hindered from adhering to Islam, and secular laws are not made to supersede Islamic statutes, or Muslims forced to go to other worship places, obeying secular authority cannot amount to worship. It can also not be worship because Islam enjoins obedience and respect to leaders or state authority, no matter their religious beliefs. A lot of times, being under a secular authority is out of necessity, without alternatives or an accident of history, as the case of Nigerian Muslims. And as earlier mentioned, when compelled, Allah overlooks.⁴¹⁸ Moreover, one can hate it in his heart if he must outwardly do it, because Allah sees his heart and such cannot amount to worship.⁴¹⁹

⁴¹⁶ SRQ2/Th11.4/KD25 [78415-78638]

⁴¹⁷ SRQ2/Th11.4/KN11 [22690-22918]

They further argue that Islam acknowledges authorities, including secular authorities, as a means to achieve social order and development, while disobedience has repercussions. In addition, social submission is different from spiritual submission. Furthermore, after the time of the prophet and his companions, due to social evolution, laws have emerged that are complimentary to Islamic laws to address situations that were non-existent then. Most times, Muslims have become part and parcel of these societies through dialogue, negotiation and agreement. Therefore, obeying such authorities cannot be worship. In any case, where laws contradict a Muslim's faith, he has an option to migrate.

Obedience to Secular Authority as Following the Din of the Secular Authority

Although this was a simple follow up inquiry that demanded assent or dissent, the responses further given by some of the interviewees are considered to add value. The idea is overwhelmingly rejected by the interviewees, with the exception of less than 20 of them. Beginning with those who agree that obedience to secular authority is following the din (religion) of the secular authority, they argue that going ahead to obey laws that contradict Islamic principles is tantamount to worshiping the din of the secular authority. Also, complete uncritical agreement with secular authority, or similar following of their cultural practices, is following the din of the secular authority. Furthermore, if a secular authority proclaims what their religion is and a Muslim follows it, he is worshiping the din of that secular authority.

As for those who disagree, they argue that secularism has no religion. Secular authorities just make societal laws to guide the state, and the laws are man made, operated outside Allah's laws, and nothing is bad in them. It is only when the laws are influenced by religion, and a Muslim abandons his religion to follow them, that there is a problem. They further add that usually, secular states are multi-religious and everyone practices his or her religion without coercion, with laws not biased to any religion. Where the laws are anti-Islam, a Muslim can resist or decide what is best for him, except if he is accepting to comply with the laws for the benefit of the Umma, or safeguarding Muslim interests, but rejecting the laws as Kufr in his heart. Under the threat of death, a Muslim can accept a situation by words, but retain Iman in his heart like Yassin⁴²⁰ did. As mentioned by some earlier, this is acceptable in Islam. Other reasons given are that, often Muslims have no alternative because of agreement, like in Nigeria, and Muslims participate as leaders in these governments. Besides, Muslims can selectively obey laws made by secular authorities in order to conform to Islam.

⁴¹⁸ SRQ2/Th11.4/ZA18 [19884-20267]

⁴¹⁹ SRQ2/Th11.4/ZA22 [19597-19914]

Muslim's Quest for Political Office as Contravention of Islam

Only about a quarter of the interviewees agree that Muslims seeking political office are contravening Islamic injunctions while the rest disagree. Contrary to those who agree, those who disagree say they are relying on the injunctions of the prophet for their position. Some of those who disagree insist that there is no injunction or Shari'a from Allah and his prophet stopping a Muslim from seeking elective office. They gave example of prophet Yusuf (Joseph) who sought political appointment as prime minister in Egypt, after interpreting a dream for Pharaoh. It is further argued that in modern times, Muslims need elective office to avoid being dominated, or their rights usurped, and to have representatives to protect Islamic interests, especially to address the issue of discrimination when they are in the minority. It is harming, relegating or a disservice to Islam not to participate in politics.

Others argue that there is a provision in Islam to participate in an un-Islamic act to ensure the progress of Islam. Muslims also need elective offices to implement Shari'a and govern well, to make the Islamic state possible. A Muslim can seek elective office if he considers himself competent and capable. Furthermore, Muslims seeking elective office are not contravening Islam because leadership in Islam is compulsory, even between two people. On the whole, Muslims should always be the leaders.⁴²¹ Thus, for a Muslim to lead he must seek election and it should not be forgotten that Islam, politics and society are integrated.

⁴²⁰Yassin appears to be an Islamic historical character. However, the interviewee did not explain who Yassin is and the researcher through independent research could not establish who he is.

⁴²¹SRQ2/Th11.6/ZA10 [28245-28433]

It is further highlighted that even Islamic scholars serve in governments. In any case, seeking elective office can be considered as a necessity and a lesser evil, since Muslims can be led astray, or find it difficult to practice their religion if they allow only non-Muslims to occupy elective offices. Furthermore, seeking elective office is the only way Muslims can instigate favorable change. It is even argued that the injunction not to seek elective office was more appropriate during the prophet's time when the society was decent.⁴²²

Those who agree that Muslims seeking political office are contravening Islam say it makes Muslims dishonest and unfaithful to their religion. Furthermore, election is not permitted in Islam. Leaders are chosen or appointed and not elected. The prophet enjoins that whoever seeks an office should be rejected, as he did to Abu Zhar, and that only a righteous person should be appointed to an office. Moreover, in an ideal Islamic state, Muslims should not seek elective office. It is those with hidden agenda that do so and are not eligible or trustworthy. Others insist that the Shura council appoints leaders from the people. In an Islamic state, people only serve and allow people to invite them to govern them. Besides, because of the religious burden associated with leadership, true Muslims should be reluctant to seek elective office. In any case, because power belongs to Allah, Muslims should be careful not to interfere or usurp the sovereignty of God in an attempt to claim power.

Political Leaders Usurping God's Sovereignty

The interviewees also overwhelmingly disclaim the view that political leaders are usurping God's sovereignty when they rule, with only less than 15 agreeing. Most of those who disagree maintain that because leaders are only vicegerents, *Wakala*⁴²³ (representatives), Khulafa (Caliphs) or successors on earth, they cannot usurp God's sovereignty. They explain that because Allah cannot come down to physically rule, he allows pious leaders to exercise a part, piece or portion of his power on his behalf, just as the Qur'an says that Allah sent Adam and his sons to be his Khalifa (Caliph) on earth.⁴²⁴ No man has the power to seize, usurp, hold or keep any part of God's sovereignty or power, nor increase or reduce it, because he is supreme, undefeatable and constant. Leaders belong to Allah and must submit to him.

⁴²² SRQ2/Th11.6/ZA20 [18533-19226]

⁴²³ There is a variation for this plural for Wakil which is Wukala.

⁴²⁴ SRQ2/Th11.7/KN56 [13768-14101]

They further submit that it is Allah who destines leaders to emerge, or because of man's vicegerency of God, people are allowed to appoint leaders. However, it should be noted that the sovereignty of men is different from that of Allah. That is why Islam rejects state sovereignty. In an Islamic state, sovereignty belongs to Allah, while in a democracy it wrongly belongs to the people. Islamic state is governed by the rules of Allah, and his sovereignty acknowledged. In addition, Allah's sovereignty cannot be usurped because he ordained leadership even among two or three people, to avoid chaos among them. Leadership is an attribute of God, and to obey leaders is to be obedient to God. It is un-Islamic to say leaders are usurping God's sovereignty when they rule, and a misconception of sovereignty.

However, those who agree that leaders are usurping God's sovereignty when they rule maintain that leaders usually see themselves as small gods and make people to act contrary to Allah's will. That is usurping God's sovereignty. They usurp God's power by assuming they are superior to all. More so, a secular state's claim that sovereignty resides in the constitution and the people, and their leaders deriving power from the constitution, is a usurpation of God's sovereignty, contrary to what Allah has ordained and operates in an Islamic state. No wonder elected leaders think their word is final, contrary to God who has the final word.

No Election and Electioneering in an Islamic State: No Muslim Votes for Non-Muslims

About one third of the interviewees agree that Muslims should not vote for non-Muslims, because in an Islamic state no election or electioneering is allowed, while the rest disagree. Most of those who disagree argue that Muslims can vote for non-Muslims where they are of better character, more capable and competent, especially if they are willing to defend Islam. However, they should not be given religiously sensitive positions like Amirul Hajj (leader of pilgrims). Muslims must participate in election or electioneering in a democracy, so that a leader will not emerge to impose Kufr on them. Even if they are in the minority, they should vote for non-Muslims friendly to their cause. It is only in Dar el Harb (house of war), where non-Muslims are fighting Muslims, that they should vote for Muslims only.

Furthermore, since having a leader is a first requirement in Islam, whatever way a leader emerges, it is a form of election, whether it is by appointment, selection, Electoral College (Majalis Shura) or inheritance. It is just that not all processes involve voting. However, it is argued that a non-Muslim should not rule in a Muslim state.⁴²⁵ Some even go to the extent of saying that Suratul Shura in the Qur'an talks about democracy, and Caliphs allowed election in an Islamic state. In addition, saddled with a choice between a non-Muslim and a competent Muslim, Muslims must vote for the Muslim who will prioritize Islamic activities, no matter his weaknesses. One person was more explicit that Muslims should not elect a Christian in place of a Muslim.⁴²⁶ In case Muslims are in the minority, the choice should be a person with sound morals who will protect Islamic interests.

There are those who have a contemporary view that politics should be separated from religion, and it is wrong and unacceptable to say Muslims should not vote for non-Muslims, since Muslims have voted for Christians in Nigeria. Indeed, such a position is a recipe for conflicts in northern Nigeria. Some insist they have never lived in an Islamic state to be sure that election or electioneering is not allowed. However, Muslims and non-Muslims have the liberty to vote either way, as long as freedom of religion is protected, and those who argue that Islamic state rejects election or electioneering cannot support it from the Qur'an and Hadith. Moreover, Islam is dynamic and modern. It adapts and changes without its teachings being subsumed in people's perception, culture and history. They argue that Iran is an Islamic state and elections are conducted there, but vetted by the Shura council. Perhaps the only difference is vetting of leaders by the Shura council.

The major reason given by those who agree that Muslims should not vote for non-Muslims is that Islam forbids Muslims to vote for non-Muslims above fellow Muslims. A Muslim should always rule and lead Muslims. They argue that the Qur'an advises Muslims to fear and not put their trust in non-Muslims, because their decisions might be unfavorable to Muslims. Indeed, "We were taught [that] instead of voting for a non-Muslim contesting against a Muslim, [it] is better you don't even vote at all."⁴²⁷ It is further stated that a Muslim's allegiance is to the Qur'an and Sunna, not human beings. Muslims represent Allah's interest, while non-Muslims represent secular constitutions based on human ideologies. One person says he will not vote for a non-Muslim,⁴²⁸ while another says if the secular status of Nigeria is different, he will never vote for a Christian.⁴²⁹

⁴²⁵ SRQ2/Th11.8/KN82 [25343-25431]

⁴²⁶ SRQ2/Th11.8/KN56 [14921-15415]

⁴²⁷ SRQ2/Th11.8/ZA9 [29272-29445]

Other reasons given why Muslims should not vote for non-Muslims are that in a place where Muslims are dominant, voting for non-Muslims is attempting to overthrow Islam and accept the supremacy of non-Muslims. In addition, although some modern Islamic states conduct elections, there is no provision for election or electioneering in an Islamic state. But others insist that historically, it is only electioneering that is forbidden, and Ulama can be flexible, depending on the situation. However, and in general, Muslims are not allowed to seek elective office or vote for non-Muslims, since even in an Islamic state it is only knowledgeable and pious people who are appointed. Therefore, not voting for non-Muslims and not allowing election or electioneering is true, according to the Qur'an.

Muslim Reaction without Political Power

There were quite a number of pacifist ways advanced as to how Muslims should react when they do not control political power. Among the ways proffered are that Muslims should be peaceful, calm and tolerant. They should know that power belongs to Allah and he gives leadership to whoever he wants. Muslims should only protest against injustice, but generally be reasonable, because in politics whoever wins leads. They should follow the political channels available and recourse to prayers and self examination, peradventure they have offended God, so as to plead for his intervention. Furthermore, as long as their Islamic way of life is not affected and their right to worship is not hindered, and as long as the government does not go contrary to Allah's ways, Muslims should not react aggressively. They should concentrate on their religion, especially as a minority, and patiently wait for the right time.

It is also added that Muslims should continue to prepare for leadership through acquisition of knowledge, both Islamic and modern, be guided always by the Qur'an and Sunna in their reactions, and respect the prophet's instructions to respect leaders. Muslims should not resort to fighting, violence or conflicts to cause chaos in the society against a democratically elected leadership, nor should they create commotion or engage in irrational activities. They should remember that what Allah has decreed cannot be changed. In addition, they should continue personal purification and proselytization for the numerical growth of Islam, join political parties and participate in all economic, social and political sectors of the state, in anticipation of controlling political power through peaceful, steady and gradual process. In any case, Muslims do not exist for political power only, and they should also accept to be led in a mature way, because numerous Muslims live peacefully in secular states.

⁴²⁸ SRQ2/Th11.8/KD27 [23368-23485]

⁴²⁹ SRQ2/Th11.8/KN6 [27789-28397]

Conversely, some believe that Muslims should work hard to wrestle back power, especially in unfavorable circumstances. They should channel all their power to eliminate the government and restore power back to Muslims⁴³⁰ through organization and mobilization, and should control it if they are in the majority. One important reason given why Muslims should control power is that they are the just Umma or nation.⁴³¹ With intent, Muslims must be tactical and strategic, without endangering themselves, in order to seize power, because of the delicateness and volatility of power. It is the right of Muslims to be autonomous.⁴³²

Muslim Submission to Non-Muslim Leaders as Polytheism

It also emerges that only about one fifth of the interviewees agree that Muslims should hold all political offices, because it is polytheism to submit to non-Muslim leaders, while the rest disagree, although there are a few dual opinions. A minority of those who disagree insist that there is nowhere in the Qur'an Muslims are instructed not to submit to non-Muslim leaders. However, most of those who disagree argue that it is not tenable to hold this position when Muslims live in a multi-religious, multi-ethnic and heterogeneous society. Muslims must work with non-Muslim leaders representing their people, because they cannot hold all political offices. Thus, it is not polytheism to obey such leaders. Fir'aun (Pharaoh) rejected Islam, but Muslims lived under him. Polytheism arises when Muslims worship a leader.

They add that the prophet permitted Muslims to live under Christian leaders in Abyssinia (Ethiopia) and the Byzantine Empire. Even during jihad wars, the prophet lived with non-Muslim societies in peace. The prophet said Muslims should obey leaders, even if they are Ethiopian servants. It is further maintained that since Allah gives authority to whosoever he wills, and instructs obedience to constituted authority, Muslims are just law abiding when they submit to non-Muslim leaders. Furthermore, not all Muslims are qualified to lead and having Muslim leaders in a state does not make it an Islamic state. Besides, even in an Islamic state, non-Muslims can lead, depending on the need. Moreover, when a minority, Muslims cannot control political power and they would not be polytheists to submit to existing authority.

⁴³⁰ SRQ2/Th11.9/KD21 [15213-15349]

⁴³¹ SRQ2/Th11.9/ZA22 [18629-18717]

⁴³² SRQ2/Th11.9/KN41 [11746-11783]

However, there are those who agree that Muslims must hold all political offices because it is polytheism to submit to a non-Muslim leader. They argue that where Muslims are dominant and can control everything, they should do so. Indeed, Abubakar Gumi, the famous Izala leader, is said to have advised that Muslims should ensure they are represented in all institutions of government. Also, there is nothing wrong in Muslims establishing a Muslim party to ensure that all leaders are Muslims.⁴³³ The only way to safeguard the interest of Muslims and Islam, as well as avoid being led astray by non-Muslim leaders, is to hold all political offices. All political systems not Islamic are only tolerated until the formation of an Islamic state.

On the other hand, some argue that it is only in an Islamic state that Muslims can hold all political offices because, naturally, it is a Muslim that should govern the Muslim Umma. It is only in the absence of a qualified Muslim that a non-Muslim is considered, but mostly in a professional position. Otherwise, a “non-believer should not have an office in an Islamic state. He dare not look for an office because he is not Islamic.”⁴³⁴ An Islamic state, by its name, suggests majority are Muslims and automatically all offices should be occupied by Muslims.

Muslims and Implementation of Shari'a in Secular States

Another area related to Maududi's political theory of Islam examines how Muslims handle the issue of implementation of Shari'a when they are in a secular state, as it is in the northern Nigerian context. It is believed that views expressed could have some ramification on the issue of fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts.

⁴³³ Maududi did that by establishing Jama'at-i-Islami (The Party of Islam) in Pakistan.

⁴³⁴ SRQ2/Th11.10/ZA29 [38332-39005]

The Rights of Northern Nigerian Muslim Majority
to Impose Shari'a

Only about a seventh of the interviewees agree that Muslims have the right to impose Shari'a law on non-Muslims, because they are in the majority in northern Nigeria, and the rest disagree. Most of those who disagree argue that because Islam instructs that there is no compulsion in religion, Muslims cannot impose Shari'a on non-Muslims, and Shari'a is only applicable to Muslims, with no historical evidence that Islamic laws have been applied on non-Muslims, even during the time of the prophet. Furthermore, Islam teaches lakum dinukum waliyadin (to your religion, and me to my religion). Only some practices of non-Muslims in public are prohibited, such as sale and consumption of alcohol, prostitution and others. In addition, contemporary Islamic states do not impose Shari'a on non-Muslims living there, because minority non-Muslims have the right of religious expression. Islam is *nasiha*⁴³⁵ (mercy) to all, and not oppression.

Buttressing the argument further, they argue that with non-Muslims and Muslims living in a secular state, it will be a contravention of the constitution to impose Shari'a on non-Muslims, when freedom of religion is guaranteed. The prophet in Medina judged the Jews with their books, without imposing Shari'a laws. Muslims, without taking laws into their hands, should teach non-Muslims to respect Shari'a and not violate it.

The argument of those who agree that Muslims have the right to impose Shari'a on non-Muslims in northern Nigeria is that, since Muslims are in the majority and desire Shari'a, they should have the right to impose Shari'a to avoid further conflicts. After all, democracy is a game of majority, and this majority gives Muslims the right to impose Shari'a, or whatever law they want on all.⁴³⁶ Shari'a laws have provisions to judge both Muslims and non-Muslims, even within an Islamic state. Besides, the constitution allows Muslims to implement and impose Shari'a. If non-Muslims are not willing to obey Shari'a, they can relocate to other places. Moreover, if a Muslim goes to a non-Muslim state, he must obey secular laws. So non-Muslims should also be patient with Muslims since, in the same vein, all should abide by Shari'a laws in an Islamic state. In any case, Muslims endured and are still enduring laws contrary to their religion imposed by colonialists. However, some argue that although it is the right of Muslims to have a Shari'a state, imposing Shari'a on non-Muslims is not.

⁴³⁵ This Arabic word literally means advice or recommendation but is interpreted here as mercy by the interviewee.

⁴³⁶ SRQ2/Th12.1/ZA35 [19322-19513]

Islamic State as a Requirement to Practice Shari'a

As opposed to one seventh of the interviewees who say that Muslims in northern Nigeria can impose Shari'a on non-Muslims, one third of the interviewees say an Islamic state is necessary for Muslims to practice their religion. However, most of those who say Islamic state is not necessary for Muslims to practice their religion insist that Muslims have total freedom to practice Islam without limitations, in tranquility, as constitutionally provided. Furthermore, in view of Nigeria's secularity and the supremacy of the constitution, Islamic state is impossible now. In any case, Shari'a has always existed in northern Nigeria, long before the formation of Nigeria. The call for an Islamic state is to presuppose that Islam has not been practiced properly in northern Nigeria, which is only a political gimmick. What is needed in northern Nigeria is good governance and reorienting people, because having an Islamic state is not necessarily synonymous with true practice of Islam.⁴³⁷ It might even be a recipe for crisis, as it will introduce segregation.

According to those who agree, an Islamic state is necessary for Muslims to comprehensively and ideally practice Islam, be governed completely by Shari'a, allow Islam to thrive and permeate all sectors of the society, which is only possible in an Islamic state. The supremacy of the Qur'an and Sunna or Shari'a is achieved, as opposed to following a man made constitution, while eliminating immoral influences of western un-Islamic acts. The elimination of all un-Islamic practices makes an Islamic state necessary globally to preserve Islam. Muslims must do all to maintain Islam without intrusion.⁴³⁸ Another argument says that the northern Nigerian Muslim majority prefers Shari'a to govern their conduct and businesses; hence, they deserve an Islamic state which is a prerequisite for the development of Islam and protection of Allah's will. Islamic state always advocates and ensures Muslims live according to Shari'a.⁴³⁹ Its creation is also a victory for Islam.⁴⁴⁰ It is reasoned that Muslims'

⁴³⁷ SRQ2/Th12.2/ZA9 [37227-37658]

⁴³⁸ SRQ2/Th12.2/KD12 [35714-35912]

⁴³⁹ SRQ2/Th12.2/KN82 [29649-29814]

⁴⁴⁰ SRQ2/Th12.2/ZA30 [54769-55097]

craving for an Islamic state is rooted in northern Nigerian history, and the lingering desire for the renaissance of Islam.⁴⁴¹

Shari'a Implementation and Muslim Obedience to Secular Government

It is important to note that almost one third of the interviewees either skipped this area of inquiry or the research assistants mistakenly skipped it. That notwithstanding, among those whose responses were recorded, more interviewees reject the notion that Shari'a should be implemented beyond northern Nigeria, because it is wrong for Muslims to obey secular government, and about one quarter of them accept the notion. A greater number of those who reject the claim reject it on the basis that where freedom of religion is guaranteed, it is not wrong to obey secular government, as in Nigeria. However, because of their majority, Muslims should always produce the president, but not attempt to Islamize the country, as it might lead to conflicts. Furthermore, Muslims can disobey if anything contradicts Islamic doctrines or injunctions. As long as total adherence to Islam is not obstructed, there is a claim that Sayyid Qutb says no further action is required. Provided a Muslim knows that the Qur'an is superior to secular government and is allowed to worship Allah well, he can obey secular government without offense.

It is added that disunity and lack of a single leader is a barrier to Shari'a implementation. In any case, Muslims in Christian dominated countries are still Muslims, yet obey the governments there. A reminder is made that Muslims in several nations like Nigeria, live under agreements and so must obey such governments. The only problem some have is the concept of the constitution being supreme, because to a Muslim the Qur'an is ultimately supreme. However, some believe Nigeria is not secular but multi-religious, and Shari'a is applicable anywhere.

The opinion of those who say it is wrong for Muslims to obey secular government insist that Muslims in the majority should govern their lives because they are not secular people, and even outside northern Nigeria they have this right. This is what makes Shari'a implementation necessary. Muslims wish not only themselves but the whole world to live under Shari'a. This is why the Muslim Umma still decries the destruction of the Islamic caliphate by colonialists and desires its renaissance as well as why Muslims agitate for Shari'a implementation today. Other reasons given for Shari'a agitation are the behavior of non-Muslims, the presence of extremists, and belief that secular governments contradict Islamic doctrines.

⁴⁴¹ SRQ2/Th12.2/KN69 [35907-36118]

Implementation of Shari'a across Nigeria

Closely related to the preceding section, the interviewees specifically reject the agitation that Shari'a should be implemented across Nigeria, with only a quarter of them accepting the agitation. A few among those who reject the notion outrightly say except there is supernatural intervention, it is not possible to implement Shari'a across the nation. Even in states that purportedly implemented Shari'a, the execution has been cosmetic. However, most of those who reject the notion say it is because Shari'a is only meant for Muslims, and it is useless to implement it where there are no Muslims. It is appropriate for northern Nigeria because Muslims are in the majority. Moreover, it is even more difficult because Nigeria is a secular state that is multi-ethnic and multi-religious, even across states with Muslim majority. Shari'a implementation is not the locus for practicing Islam, since there is freedom of religion.

Additionally, to pursue Shari'a implementation across the nation would be inconsiderate to non-Muslims who have their own ideology, customs and practices. This agitation has political motives because, in states where Shari'a is appropriate, Shari'a has been supposedly implemented. The agitation is simply propaganda sponsored by western media to create fear or ignite conflict. This agitation is therefore illogical, irrational and unscientific, since even Boko Haram is not agitating for complete Islamization of Nigeria, but their sovereign state.

There are several arguments made by those who agree that Shari'a should be implemented across the nation. One major argument is that Muslims wish the whole world will embrace Islam and all mankind be in Jannah (paradise). This can only happen when all men follow the religion of Allah (Islam). This is why Muslims actively proselytize so that Shari'a will rule globally.⁴⁴² Besides wanting the whole world to embrace Islam, Muslims want Shari'a to govern their total way of life all over the country, in order to gain the blessings of Allah. It is believed that an Islamic state will solve all exploitative injustices of capitalism and immorality, restore peace, justice and equality in place of existing disorder.

⁴⁴² SRQ2/Th12.4/ZA25 [39961-41113]

Other arguments made for Shari'a implementation across the nation are that the constitution gives Muslims the freedom to do so, and there are Muslims all over the country. Therefore, Shari'a should be implemented across the country without restrictions, irrespective of dominance.⁴⁴³ The Zamfara state experience reveals that non-Muslims appreciated Shari'a without complains.⁴⁴⁴ There are those who argue for progressive implementation of Shari'a, beginning from northern Nigeria and extending it to cover the nation. Others argue that, in order to avoid future uprising, Shari'a should be implemented because it is when people are dissatisfied with the way they are governed that revolutions occur.⁴⁴⁵

Northern Nigerian Muslims Still Leaving in Jahiliyya

Considering Madudi's contemporary interpretation of jahiliyya (period of ignorance), one quarter of the interviewees accept the assertion that northern Nigerian Muslims are still living in jahiliyya, even in states where Shari'a is purportedly implemented, while the rest disagree. Many who disagree feel this assertion is prejudicial, insulting, crude, stereotyping and labeling of Muslims as uncivilized, ignorant and barbaric. Most say that with the level of Islamic and western education, as a result of more Islamic schools (Islamiyyah, *Nizamiyyah*⁴⁴⁶) and western based institutions (universities) that have produced Ulama (scholars), *Alarammas*⁴⁴⁷ (meaning teachers in Hausa, but borrowed from Kanuri), it is wrong to say northern Nigerian Muslims are still living in jahiliyya. Even before now, Muslims had their system of administration, were educated in the Qur'an and read and wrote in ajami (Hausa in Arabic writing).

They add that today, more Muslims apply the right principles of practicing Islam in all sectors of the society. Others insist that jahiliyya had been eliminated since the coming of the prophet and the Qur'an. It is further argued that simply because some

⁴⁴³ SRQ2/Th12.4/KN59 [38214-38896]

⁴⁴⁴ This is only the opinion of the interviewees and cannot be empirically proven.

⁴⁴⁵ SRQ2/Th12.4/ZA26 [19419-19661]

⁴⁴⁶ Islamiyyah means Islamic education and is adopted by Hausa to mean an Islamic school. Nizamiyyah is also adopted by the Hausa Muslims to mean schools of higher Islamic education but it has Iranian origin.

⁴⁴⁷ It is also used to refer to people who have memorized the Qur'an by heart and can write it out by heart.

aspects of jahiliyya are seen in northern Nigeria, it is wrong to generalize. Islam has permeated more than ninety percent of the social and economic life of Muslims. What is seen as jahiliyya today is either deliberate disobedience or inability to enforce certain aspects of Shari'a in a secular state. It is ignorance to say that northern Nigeria is living in jahiliyya.⁴⁴⁸ Some say that behind this jahiliyya claim is youthful exuberant expression of supposed new understanding of Islam.⁴⁴⁹

Those who agree say northern Nigerian Muslims are still living in jahiliyya because Shari'a is not being implemented. There is no difference between non-Muslims and Muslims in dressing or eating, and that is jahiliyya. In disagreement with the disagree group, they argue that there is still great illiteracy in northern Nigeria, and it is knowledge that drives away jahiliyya. In fact, they see the pursuit of illicit sex, intake of intoxicants and gambling as more perverse than the jahiliyya period. Furthermore, there are corrupt and depraved leaders exploiting the masses.⁴⁵⁰ Western ways are adopted by Muslims, like having illegitimate children, and there is no Amir leading the Muslims. In addition, people preach jihad as fighting and limit Islam to tribal heritage.⁴⁵¹ Some say eschatological prediction is the reason why there is jahiliyya today. The Qur'an predicted that the laws of the world will overshadow the laws of Allah. However, another person limits jahiliyya to rural areas of northern Nigeria.

Separating Western Culture from Modernization

The anti-western rhetoric of separating western culture from modernization also came into focus. The interviewees who believe that the two can be separated held a slight majority over those who argue against their separation. The argument of those who agree is that culture is a total way of life of a people, but modernization has to do with innovation or developments related to either technology or enhancement of social life. Modernization also means education or general advances in knowledge, science and technology that ease living. Hence, western culture has also been modernized. Thus, western culture is the behaviors, norms, values, traditions, characters, notions and ways of the western people that includes the hegemony

⁴⁴⁸ SRQ2/Th12.5/KN78 [58848-59233]

⁴⁴⁹ SRQ2/Th12.5/KN14 [27192-27288]

⁴⁵⁰ Maududi and later Qutb describe this as Jahiliyya.

⁴⁵¹ SRQ2/Th12.5/ZA5 [29393-30051]

exercised over other countries. Modernization is also seen as being abreast with global happenings.

It is further maintained that Islam accepts modernization, but rejects western culture because it is morally decadent, full of capitalist exploitation and believes in gay marriage. It also allows reckless freedom, considered irrational. That is why it is seen as barbaric, poison or evil. In addition, countries like Saudi Arabia are modern, but not westernized. Muslims are advised not to allow westernization to overthrow or destabilize Islamic culture, like it did to Christianity. Furthermore, Muslims can be modern without being westernized. Indeed, there are innovations that are not western. Some even see westernization as Christian culture, or connoting the old Greco-Christian culture, but modernization is universal and can be found in any culture. In fact, it is argued that western civilization is rooted in Islamic civilization.⁴⁵²

On the contrary, those who disagree say modernization came from western culture, or vice versa, and are inseparable. What is called modern today is actually copied from the West. Western culture and technological advancement are intertwined or interconnected, and elements of one another. It is strongly insisted that it is unacceptable, unrealistic, not feasible and unreasonable to say that western culture can be separated from modernization.

Non-Muslims and Islamic State

Maududi also discussed the relationship between an Islamic state and non-Muslims living within its domain in his political theory of Islam. The supposition is that this might also be a source of friction. The interviewees' views are captured in the following themes.

Non-Muslims' Rejection of Shari'a as Grounds to Leave Islamic State

Almost half of the interviewees agree that non-Muslims should leave an Islamic state if they are unwilling to comply with Shari'a, while the rest disagree. Those who insist that non-Muslims should not leave the Islamic state have a very slim majority. The argument of some who agree that non-Muslims should leave is that Islam guarantees freedom of choice and they can leave on their own volition if they are uncomfortable, and if the depravity of their minds leads them that way. However, there are those who are adamant that non-compliance equals leaving the state. Islam does not force them to accept Islam, but they must comply with the tenets of Islam or face the repercussion. In order to avoid conflict, fighting and bloodshed that will give Islam a bad image or create instability of governance, and for their safety, non-Muslims should leave if they will not comply with Shari'a. They have no grounds to remain in that state/country if they disregard its laws.⁴⁵³

⁴⁵² SRQ2/Th12.6/KD27 [29745-29983]

Furthermore, they argue that just like living in countries like America or the Vatican, a Muslim must obey their laws. In the same vein, it should not be different in an Islamic state. Such non-compliance and unwillingness to pay jizya for protection and use of amenities declares that such non-Muslims are enemies of the state and must leave. It will also compromise as well as corrupt the innocent who are complying, and undermine the cohesive practice and implementation of Shari'a in that state by spreading vices. Some even conclude that it is impossible for non-Muslims to comply with Shari'a, since they desire to consume alcohol, prostitute and enjoy other prohibited vices. Therefore, they should leave.

On the other hand, those who say non-Muslims should not leave insist that Shari'a is not for non-Muslims. They only need to comply with limitations Shari'a places on them. As long as they do so, including payment of jizya and publicly conducting themselves in a morally acceptable way, they can live their normal lives without hindrance. This is what happened during the time of the prophet. Non-Muslims were comprehensively protected, including freedom to practice their religion in Medina. It is propaganda to say Shari'a is anti-Christian. It is revealed that Umar bin Khatab ordered the rebuilding of a church destroyed to build a mosque, when he discovered that the Christians were paying jizya in Palestine. It is only when non-Muslims refuse to pay jizya that they have to leave.

It is added that, although no one can be forced to stay in an Islamic state, if Shari'a is implemented appropriately, even non-Muslims will prefer to live in an Islamic state.⁴⁵⁴ However, their status is captured that “there is provision by Islam if infidels . . . want to live in an Islamic state.”⁴⁵⁵ It is also highlighted that non-Muslims

⁴⁵³ SRQ2/Th13.1/KN32 [8410-8763]

⁴⁵⁴ Again there is not empirical evidence of this claim from non-Muslims.

⁴⁵⁵ SRQ2/Th13.1/ZA26 [12977-13162]

even held political appointments in the caliphate ruled by Mu'awiya Abu Sufyan. A contrasting view is that non-Muslims should stay and be assimilated in the society to experience the beauty of Islam and perhaps embrace it. Another curious view is that non-Muslims have the freedom to stay, without complying with Shari'a, and practice their religion because it is allowed in Islam.⁴⁵⁶

Achieving Multi-religious Coexistence in an Islamic State

There are also views expressed as to how multi-religious coexistence can be achieved in an Islamic state. Some interviewees say multi-religious coexistence can be achieved if there is freedom of religion, mutual respect for each other's faith and each faith practice their religion correctly and appropriately. This is the meaning of lakum dinukum waliya din (to your religion, and me to my religion). However, this religious freedom should be within the law. Others insist that religious coexistence can only be achieved in an Islamic state if non-Muslims are willing to live under Shari'a and respect it. This means to obey the laws, desist from attacking Muslims, pay jizya and avoid being hypocritical towards Islam.⁴⁵⁷ Furthermore, if an interfaith organization is created with all religions represented, multi-religious coexistence can be achieved.

In addition, some believe multi-religious coexistence can be achieved by copying the example of the prophet who lived, protected and entered into agreement/treaty with non-Muslims, as well as negotiated a constitution with them at Medina in Saudi Arabia. There was also multi-religious coexistence during the dynastic reigns. All these should be studied and applied. Multi-religious coexistence is also ensured through sincere implementation of Shari'a by leaders who observe the rights of non-Muslims, and not compel them to follow Islamic laws. Multi-religious coexistence can also be achieved through dialogue, comparative studies of religions, cooperation, fairness, benevolence, equality and justice for all.

Acknowledged also is that multi-religious coexistence is achieved by providing equal opportunity for all in the state, allowing freedom of expression, and recognizing that all people are created by God who decides a person's religion. This will promote trust and unity. Others insist that multi-religious coexistence can be achieved through

⁴⁵⁶ SRQ2/Th13.1/KN60 [22843-22972]

⁴⁵⁷ SRQ2/Th13.2/ZA24 [36394-36904]

Jihad fi Sabilillah, maintaining mutual economic transactions and working for each other without cheating and violating the teachings of Islam. In contrast to the preceding arguments, some argue that multi-religious coexistence is not necessary, as an Islamic state is purely Muslim with nothing to do with non-Muslims, and they are free to leave the state. Furthermore, an Islamic state desires a unified single religion and wants to see non-Muslims embrace Islam. It is also believed that only when qisas is made mandatory will multi-religious coexistence be possible. However, it is believed that multi-religious coexistence will be problematic and chaotic, as other religions will reject the rule of Shari'a over them.

Non-Muslim Political Participation in an Islamic State

About one fifth of the interviewees are categorical that non-Muslims cannot participate in the political life of an Islamic state. They can only maintain a normal life, because there is no provision for voting. Only Muslims can govern in an Islamic state. At best, non-Muslims can occupy the least tangible positions. The Qur'an forbids Muslims to accept non-Muslim as leaders, due to their ignorance of Shari'a. The role of a non-Muslim is to submit peacefully, eschew corruption and be pious, unless he converts to Islam.

However, some make non-Muslim political participation in an Islamic state as conditional to compliance with Shari'a and payment of jizya, which is even considered more important than holding a political office. Another condition is possession of exclusive expertise unavailable to any Muslim, for the benefit of the people and state. In addition, non-Muslims can only participate in the social and economic life of the state and enjoy freedom to practice their religion, or become liaison officers for their people. Such persons will also be advisers to leaders. Generally, non-Muslims serve where they are needed, but do not hold political office.

More liberal are those who say non-Muslims can elect people who will represent them, especially where they have a sizeable minority, although it does not absolve them from paying jizya. Others say they are allowed to participate in the political life of the Islamic state as long as they do not lure Muslims into their religions. There are those who say they should be allowed to participate but subject themselves to Shari'a limitations placed by the state, since they are not Muslims, while the state benefits from their good ideas. Others restrict them to having dialogue or entering into agreement with the state.

Those with contemporary outlook insist that non-Muslims have equal rights to participate in the political life of an Islamic state by voting and being voted for as citizens of an Islamic state. They give the example of Tariq Azeez, a Christian, who served as a prime minister in Saddam Hussein's government in Iraq. Their argument is that non-Muslims might have better competencies, capabilities and experiences required for leadership, and can contribute to the development of the society, especially as indigenes of the state.

Rights of non-Muslims in an Islamic State

The interviewees go further to explain the rights of non-Muslims in an Islamic state. Among the rights mentioned that non-Muslims have in an Islamic state are fundamental human rights, equal rights, or the same rights as Muslims have. However, some say a male non-Muslim cannot marry a Muslim lady, but a non-Muslim lady can marry a Muslim man. There are those who insist these rights are subject to abiding by the Shari'a rules, not interfering or making life difficult for Muslims, and disturbing their peace. In addition, it is also subject to allegiance to the leadership and payment of jizya, which guarantees protection.

Furthermore, non-Muslims have all rights except that of leadership and the exercise of political power or authority, since leaders must be Muslims. Some insist that the rights must be those enshrined in the Qur'an and the Hadith, or the constitution of an Islamic state. Most importantly, the prophet forbids the killing of a dhimmi,⁴⁵⁸ and whoever does that cannot enter the kingdom of God. In essence, non-Muslims have the right to a peaceful normal life, association, fairness and justice, as well as good neighborliness without insulting Islam.

Conversely, some uncompromisingly say that the only rights non-Muslims have is to comply with Shari'a, if they decide to stay in an Islamic state. In fact, they insist that it is difficult to find any rights for non-Muslims other than complying with the basic guiding principles of the state. It is categorically stated that an individual non-Muslim has no right,⁴⁵⁹ or collectively “they don’t have rights”⁴⁶⁰ in an Islamic state.

⁴⁵⁸ This is a non-Muslim living in a Muslim conquered territory and living under protection of the state. It literally means a protected person.

Treatment of Non-Muslims in an Islamic State

Discussions further narrowed down to how non-Muslims should be treated in an Islamic state, with their culture and business practices. A slim majority say that non-Muslims should be treated well in order to see the beauty of Islam. Islam, like the Bible, demands the love for neighbors and treating them nicely. Their worship places should also be respected. Islam instructs that even during jihad, non-Muslim worship places should not be destroyed, and whoever seeks refuge in them is safe. Furthermore, they should be treated with respect, honor and dignity, as well as protected in accordance with Shari’a, as the prophet did.

Consequently, they should practice their religion and culture without violence or disruption of peace, as the prophet and Caliphs ensured in their time. Some are adamant that non-Muslims should be treated in the same way Muslims are treated. It is discrimination that generates conflicts. Despite, divergent scholarly opinions, it is generally accepted that exchange of meals is halal, as long as it does not contain what is haram. What is disallowed is for Muslims to copy or adopt the cultures or follow the religious practices of non-Muslims.

Contrastingly, some argue that if non-Muslims want to be treated well, they must comply with Shari’a if they are residing in the state. They have to modify their activities to conform to Shari’a laws, and stop all anti-Islamic activities such as consumption of alcohol or exhibition of sensual and sexual behavior. These activities contravene Islamic teachings and, specifically, are contrary to the culture and religion of the Hausa people in northern Nigeria.

Non-Muslim Practice of Faith and Building Worship Places in an Islamic State

The discussion also extended to the freedom of non-Muslims to practice their faith and build their places of worship anywhere and wherever they want in an Islamic state. Three groups emerged here. The first group says non-Muslims are free to practice their faith and build their places of worship anywhere and wherever they want in an Islamic state. The second group says such freedom exists, but not to build places of worship anywhere or wherever they want, and the third group says they should not be given that freedom at all. The first group argues that their position is supported by Islam. That is why in northern Nigerian states, mosques and churches stand side by side. Shari'a laws are supposed to be beneficial to all, including non-Muslims. They express concerns that some Muslims are contravening Shari'a injunctions by burning churches. Besides, sometimes these non-Muslims are indigenous to the state, and Islam provides for freedom of religion.⁴⁶¹

⁴⁵⁹ SRQ2/Th13.4/KN84 [16832-16852]

⁴⁶⁰ SRQ2/Th13.4/ZA35 [12745-12769]

They further argue that the freedom of worship guaranteed by Islam makes it mandatory that non-Muslims be granted freedom to practice their faith and build places of worship freely.⁴⁶² The fact that Islam enjoins freedom of worship presupposes it recognizes that non-Muslims would need worship places. Besides allowing non-Muslims to build their places of worship, the prophet allowed non-Muslims in Medina to perform their worship in his Masjid (Mosque). However, some also feel that this freedom is subject to control of noise and disturbances emanating from such worship places. In addition, some believe non-Muslims should be commonsensical or regulate themselves and shun building places of worship in proximity to mosques to avoid tension, or preferably do so where they have more followers.

The second group insists that although the practice of faith is allowable, there were guidelines to building places of worship during the prophet's time, and even in secular states. Even Muslims are not allowed to build places of worship without restrictions. Such unrestricted freedom can create conflicts. Some even decry the arbitrary invasion and obstruction of streets that occur during Juma'at Friday prayers in northern Nigeria, or the use of loudspeakers at night for prayers. People should practice religion within the law. Others add that non-Muslims should be given designated sites, where they will not feel oppressed by Shari'a laws, to avoid possible harassment by illiterates and not to disturb others.

They further argue that designated areas are necessary to avoid potential conflicts, when different religious worship places are close to each other. Non-Muslims should not build or attempt to build places of worship where Muslims are dominant, where there are no non-Muslims, or near Muslim sacred places. For example, Suratul Tauba forbids non-Muslims to come near the sacred mosque in Saudi Arabia. Context determines the freedom to build worship places.

⁴⁶¹ SRQ2/Th13.6/KN72 [30083-30196]

⁴⁶² SRQ2/Th13.6/KN48 [14369-14396]

The third group insists that in a Shari'a state, the building of non-Muslim places of worship is prohibited, as it is in Saudi Arabia, because it is Dar el Islam. This prohibition preserves the Qur'an and Muslim beliefs. An Islamic state is where Islamic practices are truly observed and "when Islamic practices are duly observed, it is expected that there should be no non-Islamic practice in that state."⁴⁶³ That is why the building of places of worship or practice of other religions is strictly restricted in an Islamic state.⁴⁶⁴ However, Muslims are not allowed to destroy such worship places if they are in existence before the Islamic state is established, but no new ones are permitted to be built. To avoid activities that will offend Muslims through non-Muslim disturbances and generate conflicts that would lead to loss of lives,⁴⁶⁵ non-Muslims should not be allowed to build their places of worship in Shari'a states.

Muslims Hindering Freedom of Worship and Building of Worship Places

Interviewees also commented on the notion that northern Muslims are hindering non-Muslims from practicing their religions and building their places of worship wherever they can. Two thirds of the interviewees say it is not true, while one third of them say it is true. Most of those who disagree argue that although northern Nigeria is predominantly Muslim, uncountable giant churches are strategically found in cities everywhere, including ancient cities like Sokoto the seat of the Caliphate. In spite of conflicts here and there, non-Muslim places of worship are still being built where one least expects to find them, including converting residential houses into churches.

Freedom of worship can also be seen in non-Muslim worship places standing side by side with mosques in northern Nigeria. However, it is admitted that in some cases they are restricted out of ancient Islamic locations, and cities that were built before Christians came, or because of cultural considerations, as well as because non-Muslims do not reside in such places. Non-Muslims are not supposed to build places of worship in such places, since it will achieve nothing other than create tensions. It is pointed out also that restrictions arise out of exigency of land administration or town planning that affects every religion, such that a mosque cannot be demolished to build a church. It is also noted that often the deterrent to building places of worship is reciprocal destruction of worship places. However, one person admits that in some cases it is true that non-Muslims are denied the building of places of worship, and in some cases it is not true.

⁴⁶³ SRQ2/Th13.6/ZA29 [42191-42512]

⁴⁶⁴ SRQ2/Th13.6/KN66 [17686-17834]

⁴⁶⁵ SRQ2/Th13.6/KN5 [27901-28298]

Among the reasons given by those who accept that non-Muslims are prevented from building places of worship in northern Nigeria is to stop non-Muslims from getting into predominantly Muslim areas to start proselytization. If not, why is there desire to build places of worship where there are no non-Muslims? It is courting conflicts. A student claims that in his university Christians are denied places of worship, in spite of their effort to have one, even when Muslims have more than twenty mosques, and rightly so because “even me if [I] am opportune[d], I will not allow them to build their places of worship, not because [I] am against any form of their religion, [but] because we say history shapes the future. This school was originally built on Islamic basis.”⁴⁶⁶

Furthermore, non-Muslims are denied or are restricted to designated areas to prevent the corruption, pollution or dilution of Islamic values, because non-Muslims always desire to impose their religions on Muslims. Non-Muslims assume that by building places of worship they can convert Muslims. In fact, this is the perception Muslims have when non-Muslims want to build places of worship where there are only Muslims.⁴⁶⁷ It is also a reciprocal gesture, as the southern part of Nigeria is restricting Muslims from building mosques, since it is a game of dominance. When Muslims are denied these privileges in the South, the Christians are also denied the same privileges in the North.

It is also underscored that present conflicts have imposed self or safety restrictions by both religions on the building of places of worship. Cities are now divided into Christian and Muslim areas, and each will not go to the other area to build places of worship. Some add that non-Muslims are prevented from building their places of worship because they disrespect and relegate the prophet of Islam. It is also because they disturb Muslims with their singing and drumming. It will be difficult for Muslims to allow Christians to build their places of worship if their intolerance of Muslims is not addressed. Moderate views are also expressed: it is contrary to the constitution, not fair and a lack of basic knowledge of Islam to hinder or restrict non-Muslims from building their places of worship. One simply concludes that realistically, the accusation of denying places of worship to non-Muslims cannot be denied. The views expressed in addressing the above research question contain a lot of anecdotes relating to Maududi's political theory of Islam, and they shall be comparatively discussed later.

⁴⁶⁶ SRQ2/Th13.7/FG1 [53967-54465]

⁴⁶⁷ SRQ2/Th13.7/KD19 [41168-41580]

Repercussions of Islamic Fundamentalism⁴⁶⁸

The Sub-research Question 2.1 examines some significant repercussions resulting from the influence of Islamic fundamentalism among Muslims, as expressed by Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano States. It is sufficient through observation and experience to say that religious fundamentalism has interreligious and even intra-religious repercussions. The understanding of these repercussions is helpful in appreciating the implications of religious fundamentalism

General Experience and Reaction to Conflicts

The addressing of this research question begins with discussing interviewees' general experience of conflicts and their reaction to it. There are as many as a quarter of the interviewees who expectedly confine fundamentalism to interreligious or intra-religious clashes, by saying they have never been confronted with conflicts, but some of them say they know those who have experienced conflicts. The rest say they have experienced one form of conflict or another, from once to several times, although some did not give views on how they reacted to the conflicts. How people reacted to conflicts expose the repercussions of fundamentalism. Some say they ignore, avoid, walk or run away from conflicts. Others ignore the people fomenting the conflicts because anger inflames the situation more. But some say they sometimes retaliate because they view it as the only way to achieve settlement, since some people only realize they are wrong through retaliation.

There are those who react by applying restraint, engage in polite educative correction and dialogue with those who are engaging in the conflicts, for them to realize the futility of what they are doing. It is dialogue that doused the tension and saved lives when a Muslim cleric was killed in Zaria.⁴⁶⁹ Some say as children, they were traumatized by the conflicts, but thanked God they survived. Others say their religious persuasion, injunctions and values helped them and their families to remain patient or calm, and even try to understand the other party. Since Muslims are encouraged to be peaceful, some say they reacted through supplication, perseverance and tolerance, because Allah says Muslims will be tested.

⁴⁶⁸ All ideas addressing SRQ2.1 are found in SRQ2/Th14.1-Th14.3. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently in the footnote.

According to some, although they escaped, it was a tough experience because it affected their schooling. There are those who state that they vehemently preached against conflicts and refused to take part in them, while some say they reacted with nostalgic sadness that the past was good, but the present is bad. There are also those who risk their lives to save Christian lives from being killed, in spite of antagonism between the two religions. Delayed punishment for perpetrators makes some to undertake belated revenge or retaliation.

In essence, interviewees reveal that fundamentalism causes some people to react violently and in less peaceful ways, creates trauma or hurts people. This creates tough experiences for people because it can dislocate people when they run away and hide, cause loss of properties and loved ones, while in some cases it affects future careers. It also endangers good relationships and lives of people, including Muslims. A person who recounted his experience of intra-religious conflict says it was a disaster for him. Injustices were perpetrated against them and they experienced psychological trauma.⁴⁷⁰

Effects of Experienced Religious Conflicts

Concomitantly, the interviewees discuss how specifically these experienced religious conflicts have affected them, although half of them say they have never been affected by religious conflicts. One of the reasons given for not being affected by conflict is not engaging or entertaining any religious discussion, while some admit that they have witnessed how it has affected people. Nevertheless, almost half of the interviewees confess that religious conflicts have affected them in various ways, ⁴⁶⁹ The informants did not provide details as regards which group carried the out the killing. It is, however, assumed that within the context of discussion, the Christians did since Zaria is a multi-religious city.

⁴⁷⁰ SRQ2.1/Th14.1/ZA36 [30971-31370]

although one person claims that Muslims are not affected because they are in the majority. However, some indicate that their houses and properties were set ablaze, yet for one person it was by fellow Muslims. There are those who suffered bodily harm or lost loved ones. Some say they were stranded and starved for several days, or forced to relocate. For some, it affected their upbringing and education.

Many indicate that interpersonal and interfaith relationships were affected because suspicion and distrust emerged. During conflicts, all commercial activities and human interactions are affected, including schooling and access to food, because of security curfews. Friends and business partners are lost. There is a general loss of lives and properties among Muslims. Some are traumatized by directly witnessing people killed. Even government developmental projects are stopped or permanently destroyed. More devastating is the recent Boko Haram insurgency that has not only affected them as Muslims, but has traumatized all socially, economically and academically. Dynamics of social environment has been changed from multi-religious to mono-religious communities, thus increasing interreligious distrust.

Some reported psychological traumas such as claustrophobia, nightmares, temperamental changes and depression, not only as a result of interreligious conflicts but with intra-religious conflicts, because some sects terrorize fellow Muslims. For others, when a Muslim is affected they are affected, since Islam teaches al-Muslim ahul Muslim (the Muslim is a brother to a Muslim), and they even engage in a retaliatory attack for that reason.⁴⁷¹ One person admits he was indoctrinated to participate in a conflict and acknowledged that it is indoctrination that turns people into fanatics and extremists to perpetrate conflicts.⁴⁷² Some report being branded as killers or terrorists, and Muslims admit experiencing insecurity due to fundamentalism.

Handling Religious Conflicts

Not all interviewees indicate how they handled the religious fundamentalism or conflicts that affected them, probably because some research assistants did not press further, or interviewees had no experiences to share. Some only gave religious expectations of handling conflicts. However, for those who gave personal experiences, some indicate that they only prayed for Allah's intervention because they could do nothing against the misuse of jihad. Some say they patiently and calmly stayed indoors, sometimes without food, and waited for the crisis to end, while others say they hearkened to the media appeal by religious leaders to cease from violence. Some accepted it as destiny ordained by Allah that cannot be avoided, while others waited for government intervention and the prosecution of the perpetrators.

⁴⁷¹ SRQ2.1/Th14.2/KN14 [30410-30523]

⁴⁷² SRQ2.1/Th14.2/KN62 [58518-58928]

Furthermore, some people first secured themselves before seeking ways to help others. Those in business say they accepted their losses and moved on. One person says he handled the situation by protecting innocent Christians targeted by ignorant Muslims. Some took time to confront their fellow Muslims on the evil of engaging in conflicts. Another person actively participated in a conflict until a friend "gave me enough reasons, real, realistic, cogent, understandable reasons and I, all of a sudden, realized my mistakes and I withdrew from the conflict."⁴⁷³

Muslim Views on Conflict⁴⁷⁴

The Sub-research Question 2.2 examines the views of Muslim leaders and intellectuals on conflicts. It is also important and relevant to understand how Muslims view conflict. This might help in understanding why some embrace it while others reject it. The views given are captured in the themes that follow, beginning with the explanation of what conflict is.

Explaining Conflict

A majority explains conflict as misunderstanding between different parties, either small or big, that can erupt into a fight, chaos or violence/bloodshed. It can also be between ethnic groups, Muslims and non-Muslims, or communities due to their inability to understand each other. Some dissociate conflict from jihad. It is also explained that not every misunderstanding leads to conflict. Others explain conflict as disagreement, opposing views or differences of opinion, which could be influenced by ideological differences between two or more parties, either intra or interreligious.

⁴⁷³ SRQ2.1/Th14.3/KN62 [58969-59632]

⁴⁷⁴ All ideas addressing SRQ2.2 are found in SRQ/Th15.1-Th15.4. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

Also, this disagreement may also not necessarily lead to violence or uprising, although often it does.

Conflict has also been explained directly as a fight or quarrel, either verbal or physical, between two or more parties. It is also seen as public disorder between Muslims and non-Muslims, or even between Muslims and Muslims, either islamically based or not. In addition, conflict is viewed as the absence of peace and unity between Muslims and non-Muslims, which might involve loss of lives and properties. Single one word descriptions of conflict are “violence,” “crisis,” “chaos,” “instability,” “anarchy,” “upheaval,” “disturbance,” “destruction,” “confrontation,” “disaster,” “war” and “killing.” There are those who describe conflict as an internal crisis within the Umma. Conflict is also accepted as social disorder and pandemonium in a society, or between societies. It is also defined as a clash of interests, or a clash of wills or personalities that could result in violence or bloodshed.

Conflict is abstractly defined as creating problems with others, and a state of confusion that disrupts normalcy in the society. It is also described as an altercation resulting from violation or disrespect for Muslim values.⁴⁷⁵ Relationally, conflict is explained as a clash resulting from a breach of contract between a leader and his followers. Conflict is described as a fierce contest between two people desirous of the same thing, or when people take laws into their hands. Struggle for dominance and control of power and resources are seen as conflict.

Necessity of Conflicts

Although a few insist that it is only scholars that can say whether conflicts are necessary, more than half of the interviewees maintain that conflict is necessary, while the rest say it is not necessary. Most of those who accept that conflict is necessary say it is a last resort, when it becomes absolutely impossible to avoid.⁴⁷⁶ Religiously, when all perseverance, understanding and patience are applied to get the will of Allah to be done and resistance persists, conflict becomes necessary; or when there is need for forceful jihad, although jihad is not seen as conflict.⁴⁷⁷ Some aver that conflict is necessary and inevitable when a person needs to protect his rights and dignity where fundamental human rights are denied.

⁴⁷⁵ SRQ2.2/Th15.1/KN2 [41479-41709]

⁴⁷⁶ SRQ2.2/Th15.2/KN49 [29193-29253]

⁴⁷⁷ SRQ2.2/Th15.2/KN27 [26288-26524]

Correspondingly, conflict is necessary when the principles of Shari'a are contravened, Muslims are being drawn into unbelief (Kufr), and Islamic rights, norms and values are displaced, or people deviate from them.⁴⁷⁸ In addition, when Islam is threatened and Muslims are not secure, conflict is necessary.⁴⁷⁹ Serious disagreement or misunderstanding, especially of beliefs, makes conflict necessary.⁴⁸⁰ Furthermore, conflict is said to be necessary where there is cheating and injustice, and when Muslims are attacked without retreat or apology, and the aggression continues. When relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims becomes confrontational, conflict is necessary.

Others add that conflict is necessary when there is general corruption and breakdown of law and order, suffering because of depraved leadership, and when leaders are not ruling in accordance with Islamic injunctions. Some say desire for dominance through proselytization makes conflict necessary. Others add that conflict is necessary in the absence of constituted authority, or to conquer a state and to protect lives in danger.

The opinion of some interviewees who differ is that there is no time that conflict is necessary. Some insist that conflict is not necessary, because Islam is a religion of peace and does not encourage conflicts. Islam allows only self defense. It is stressed that even retaliation is not necessary, because the most unjust peace is better than the most justified conflict. Conflict is not necessary because force does not change people. Conflicts also hinder good governance and advancement. Conflict is also not necessary because it is being misunderstood as jihad and it lives negative consequences.

Conflicts with Other Religions Unavoidable

Again more than half of the interviewees agree that conflicts with other religions cannot be avoided all the time, while the rest disagree. The major reason given why conflicts with other religions are unavoidable is the belief systems of the religions. In fact, they have conflicting views about God, and these disagreements in beliefs and practices generate conflicts. Lack of respect and understanding of each other's religion makes conflict unavoidable. Insulting the prophet of Islam, as it happened in the Zangon Kataf crisis in Kaduna state, makes conflicts with other religions unavoidable. One person states clearly that his humility, gentleness or patience cannot make him endure insult against the prophet of Islam.⁴⁸¹ If it is permitted, it will become incessant.

⁴⁷⁸ SRQ2.2/Th15.2/KN82 [32488-32563]

⁴⁷⁹ SRQ2.2/Th15.2/KN25 [34321-34468]

⁴⁸⁰ SRQ2.2/Th15.2/KN59 [47807-48142]

It is further argued that unbridled and unbearable provocation by other religions makes retaliation unavoidable.⁴⁸² Differences in knowledge, perspectives and worldviews make conflicts unavoidable, especially with religions. Other factors advanced that make conflicts unavoidable with other religions include emerging pro-conflict religious leaders. There is also the misuse, misunderstanding and misinterpretation of scriptures by followers of various religions. Often competition for converts makes conflicts unavoidable between religions. Also, Muslims are always persecuted, that is why conflicts with other religions are unavoidable. In addition, there are temperamental deviants, fanatics and extremists who disregard other religions, cannot withstand attacks on their religion, have selfish motives and personal interests. These people make conflicts unavoidable. Incursion of politics into religion, belligerent styles of preaching, and improper supervision makes interreligious conflicts unavoidable. There are those who say that the Qur'an predicts conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims, and it cannot be changed.

The main argument by those who believe conflicts with other religions are avoidable is that all that is required is understanding, tolerance and accommodation of other religions. This group insists conflicts are not a prophecy, so they can be avoided. Differences in religious beliefs or misunderstanding should not lead to conflicts. They also argue that conflicts can be eliminated by purging negative propaganda on other religions, wrong teaching and degrading the religious values or teaching of other religions. Good leadership and resolute government control over preaching can stamp out conflicts also. Conflicts can be avoided if Islam is not attacked, as this is what elicits retaliation,⁴⁸³ as well as when religious leaders stop instigating their followers to engage in conflicts. In fact, to accept that conflict with other religions is unavoidable is to promote hostility between Muslims and other faiths.

⁴⁸¹ SRQ2.2/Th15.3/FG2 [23970-24421]

⁴⁸² SRQ2.2/Th15.3/FG1 [46722-46811]

⁴⁸³ SRQ2.2/Th15.3/KN66 [24737-25001]

Reaction to Tragedy in Religious Conflicts

Research and human experience reveal that people react differently to tragedy. The way people react or say they will react to tragedy might reveal how they view conflict. Hypothetically, interviewees respond to how they will react if they tragically lose all their properties and some members of their families in a religious conflict. More than half of the interviewees who gave their views say they will accept it as destiny and Allah's will, as Islam teaches them to do. Allah ordains and permits all things, and theirs is to only say inna lillahi wa inna ilayhi raji'un (from Allah we came and to him we shall return). Islam does not permit arbitrary retaliation, but enjoins prayer for forgiveness of sin for the dead. They will grieve like normal human beings, but as believers they will accept the situation as fate. Allah says Muslims will be tested, and accepting destiny is one of the pillars of faith.

Contrary to the above views, a younger generation says they will have a negative view of the religion that attacked them. One of them says, "[I] will try as much as possible to make sure I bring it down."⁴⁸⁴ Some go further to say that they would have much hatred and it would be unforgivable. There are those who say they will tell it to their children, so it will always be fresh and evergreen in their memory. One person states that whenever he sees the people responsible for those heinous acts, it will be difficult not to be unfriendly and aggressive towards them.⁴⁸⁵

More serious is the view expressed by someone that if he is of age to challenge the people, he "will never think of sparing a life."⁴⁸⁶ Some state that it is tit for tat, because it is either they kill or they are killed. Others say they will feel as if the world has come to an end. One person is very clear, saying "I will look for vengeance if it continues,"⁴⁸⁷ otherwise it will be better to die also. This group believes that the reason why youths are picking arms and becoming freedom fighters in Palestine and Pakistan is because they have lost everything.

For some people, they will fight and seek compensation from government for lost properties, and will also expect government or international organizations to assist people affected in the conflict, because it is lingering post conflict trauma that fuels reoccurrence of conflicts in the form of retaliation. However, in spite of this trauma,

⁴⁸⁴ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/FG1 [47495-47560]

⁴⁸⁵ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/KN59 [50234-51014]

⁴⁸⁶ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/FG2 [26518-26675]

⁴⁸⁷ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/KN10 [25772-25926]

they insist on people following the right legal channels to seek justice, but also expect culprits to be punished. It is also noted that it is difficult to determine how one will react until it happens, but acknowledge it is not easy to take it lightly, or to resist the desire to retaliate. One person says God is with the patient ones. He lost everything in a crisis, but he did not react negatively and God gave him more than what he lost.

Many talk more about psychological reactions; for example, they will be depressed, sad, unhappy, sorrowful, disappointed in the society, not be the same again, morose and distressed, especially if they feel they lost everything by a deliberate act of others. Nonetheless, retaliation is still out of the question. However, some simply say their reaction will be bad, not good, and terrible, or they will simply react, all without further explanation.

There are more moderate views expressed also. Some say they will start afresh to seek for new things they have lost, and forgive. Some say they will relocate to another place to avoid the temptation to engage in conflict. Others say they will try to understand the genesis or causes of the conflicts in order to avoid future occurrence. There is a group that insists it is difficult to express how they will react because emotions are involved. Some even refuse to entertain the possibility of it happening because they do not want to comment based on assumption, and are not hoping to find themselves in such a situation.

Summary

In this chapter, data addressing the Sub-research Question Two and its sub-sub-research questions is analyzed. It emerges that interviewees hold similar views on Din wa Dawla to that of Maududi, that embedded in Islam are religion, state, government and politics. It is also reflected in the views of the interviewees that there is a significant number with the understanding and acceptance of the general thrust of Maududi's political theory as regards the Islamic state, its creation, its treatment of non-Muslims, its implementation of Shari'a, its relationship with secular states, and the behavior of Muslims within a secular state. More over, there is an overwhelming desire for an Islamic state. Furthermore, it surfaced that the repercussions of religious fundamentalism are also severe on northern Nigerian Muslims emotionally, physically and materially. In addition, in spite of religious commitment, their understanding of conflict is not radically different from conventional views. Although religion influences how a lot of them react to the effects of conflicts, they also exhibit conventional reactions to conflicts.

CHAPTER EIGHT
CONSEQUENCES OF FUNDAMENTALISM ON CHRISTIAN-MUSLIM RELATIONS

Introduction

In this chapter, Sub-research Question Three and its sub-sub-research questions will be discussed, beginning with Sub-research Question Three. The sub-research question examines how Islamic fundamentalism and religious conflicts have affected Christian-Muslim relations in Kaduna and Kano States. There is the presumption, as discussed in the literature review, that religious propagation or proselytization generates conflicts, since Islamic fundamentalism appears to be more averse to conversion out of Islam. This aversion to proselytization is reflected in the position of Maududi on conversion, as presented earlier. In light of such fundamentalist view, proselytization could be a huge source of relational conflicts. The following themes aggregate the views of interviewees in relation to the subject.

Non-Muslim Religious Propagation within Muslim Territories

It is sufficient to say that the pursuit of interests is the source of diverse conflicts and perhaps why conflicts are seen as normal social occurrences by many. The pursuit of religious proselytization is one such interest, with the potential to generate conflicts. Often, as experience has shown, conflicts do not sometimes originate from the larger majority in the society. Conflicts between two individuals can ignite wide spread social unrest, if one or both are seen to represent group interests.⁴⁸⁸ Therefore, a few people can have a significant influence on the majority towards conflict generation. Such minority influence might be the case, even in religious conflicts generated by fundamentalism. With this in mind, about one quarter of the interviewees who say that non-Muslim propagation should not be allowed within ⁴⁸⁸ For greater discussion on causes of social conflicts refer to Pruitt, Dean G. and Sung Hee Kim (2004) in Social Conflicts, Escalation and Settlement, 3rd ed. New York: McGraw Hill Higher Education.

Muslim territories are significant enough to be countenanced. However, more than half of the interviewees who say that non-Muslims should be allowed to propagate their religions within Muslim territories complain that non-Muslims can be annoying because they disturb people with their mounted speakers at night, when people need to rest. They unapologetically intrude without permission into Muslims' privacy, with no respect for Islamic purdah (female seclusion) in the name of propagation.⁴⁸⁹ Nonetheless, they should be allowed. The researcher senses that even moderate Muslims can become agitated by certain practices of non-Muslims. This thought will be explored further later. In any case, the informants add that in the context of Nigeria, although northern Nigeria is predominantly Islamic, the secular nature of the Nigerian constitution permits all religions to peacefully propagate their religions. What will happen to Muslims in majority non-Muslim areas if non-Muslims are hindered from propagating their religions within Muslim territories? Besides, the prophet allowed non-Muslims to build their places of worship and propagate their religions during his time. What is only expected is that non-Muslims should be sensitive to the environment they live in. In any case, a lot of non-Muslims in northern Nigeria are indigenous to several states, and so deserve their freedom of worship and propagation. Often, non-Muslims are not permitted to propagate their religions in northern Nigeria because Muslims in southern Nigeria are also hindered from propagating Islam.⁴⁹⁰

Nonetheless, they argue that non-Muslims are already permitted to propagate their religions in northern Nigeria. Non-Muslims distribute religious pamphlets and books, as Jehovah's Witnesses do,⁴⁹¹ visit hospitals and shops on Saturdays and Sundays to preach to patients and people, as well as preach through the media such as radio. In fact, to stop non-Muslims from propagating their religions will be contravening their rights. Some even question if there is a Muslim or Christian territory, since they live together all over the country. In addition, they insist that it is un-Islamic to deprive anyone from practicing or propagating his religion. Islam permits everyone to propagate their religion, but Muslims are prohibited from converting to other religions. Allah permitted all religions to exist, so everyone is permitted to accept and propagate what he believes. The Qur'an says there is no compulsion in religion. Besides, propagation does not mean conversion, since the Qur'an says it is Allah that guides people to the right or wrong path, according to his love. In any case, because of social media, you cannot stop anyone propagating his religion. Moreover in an Islamic state, as long as non-Muslims pay jizya, they have freedom to propagate⁴⁹² their religions.

⁴⁸⁹ This attitude reflects a very problematic and insensitive approach by non-Muslims towards their Muslim neighbors. The researcher will also examine this issue later.

⁴⁹⁰ This opinion is the opinion expressed by an interviewee and not the position of the researcher. It is important to note that there is greater freedom of religious propagation in western and eastern Nigeria although the east is a little bit more conservative by my observation and experience. This freedom can be attributed to separation of religion and culture in these places.

⁴⁹¹ Generally, Muslims seem not to draw distinctions between Christian denominations and sects.

However, in a Muslim territory, non-Muslims should be careful not to be provocative in their public preaching, contravene Shari'a, misquote or misrepresent Islam, and cause crisis or conflicts. Nevertheless, freedom of propagation is not the same as permitting Muslims to convert to other religions, since Islam prohibits that. There is the insistence that it is not even realistic to say that Muslims and Christians can be stopped from propagating their religions, since both religions are evangelistic in nature. Followers of both religions insist that their religions require them to convert people. It is suggested that the only thing Muslims should do is to be prepared to rebut every contradictory teaching, such as the Trinity. In such a way, they can even engage and convert the non-Muslim. There is even the belief that positive propagation will help in eliminating perceived differences and reduce the potential for conflict. Some strongly argue that hindering non-Muslims from propagating their religions is cowardice and inferiority complex. Let the truth in each religion market it. If Muslims are well taught, they can stand their grounds against being swayed. In the opinion of some, non-Muslim propagation should be allowed, but limited to their places of worship.

The argument of those who insist that Christians and non-Muslims should not be allowed to propagate their religions in Muslims territories is that it will create conflicts. Preaching to convert Muslims away from Islam is not tolerated in Muslim territories, and is totally wrong.⁴⁹³ Non-Muslims are exposing themselves to risk. They should not attempt to convert Muslims "because it forms the basis of the conflicts that we always encounter in northern societies."⁴⁹⁴ Non-Muslims should restrict their propagation to where they have followers or their territories. Both religions should be hindered from direct human propagation and limited to the use of ⁴⁹² It should be noted that from the views expressed, some Muslims consider the presence of churches and preaching within churches as propagation even without conducting evangelistic activities.

⁴⁹³SRQ3/Th16.1/KN20 [26582-26763]

⁴⁹⁴SRQ3/Th16.1/KD27 [34893-35024]

media, such as television and radio, or just rely on good deeds to invite people as Muslims do, to avoid conflicts. They argue that why attempting to convert a Muslim to another religion will spark conflict is because only Shari'a is supposed to be followed in Muslim territories, and Muslims are prevented from converting from Islam. To stop non-Muslims from propagating their religions in Muslim territory is prevention that is better than cure. It is seen as a vaccine that is better than medication, because “you don’t want to suffer the loss of converts, killing converts as such.”⁴⁹⁵

Furthermore, allowing non-Muslims to propagate their religion in Muslim territories is according them superiority and negating Islamic values and principles. It is the choice of Muslims to go to non-Muslims and listen to them, but they should not be the ones to make direct contact with Muslims. Recent conflicts make it expedient to stop non-Muslims from coming into Muslim territories to propagate their religions, for the sake of peace. There is also the argument that the only way non-Muslims would be allowed to propagate their faiths in Muslim territories is for them also to allow Muslims in the South, East and West of Nigeria to propagate Islam, because Muslims have noted that Islamic scholars are not allowed to propagate Islam in Christian territories.

Operation of Religious Propagation in an Islamic State

Part of the discussion involves how propagation should take place or operate in an Islamic state, since the goal of each religion is to seek converts. Because of mother tongue interference, some research assistants pronounced “convert” as “combat,” which affected the responses of a few interviewees. However, there are those who insist they do not know what the position of Shari'a on that is. However, a majority of the interviewees say that non-Muslim propagation is not allowed in an Islamic state. Some opinions are a bit similar to that of the preceding section, with some additions. For example, those who are against non-Muslim propagation insist that in an Islamic state, non-Muslims are not allowed to propagate their faith in order to convert Muslims. Non-Muslims should be aware that Muslims are happy being in an Islamic state.

⁴⁹⁵SRQ3/Th16.1/KD21 [33607-33896]

Similarly, Shari'a does not allow conversion out of Islam. Muslim conversion out of Islam will generate conflicts. Besides, non-Muslims are allowed to remain in an Islamic state because they agree to comply with Shari'a. Allowing non-Muslims to propagate their faith is to allow them to easily influence Muslims to become non-Muslims. Non-Muslims can live and practice their religions in an Islamic state, but are not allowed to seek converts from among Muslims. One of the duties of an Islamic state is to protect and preserve Islamic faith. In the Islamic state, it is only Islam that is allowed to be propagated to non-Muslims. Other religions are only allowed to exist. It is only non-Muslims that are allowed to convert to Islam. Even if a Muslim decides to convert to another religion, he will be stopped. Proactively, non-Muslim religious propagation should be prohibited to protect the poor and ignorant from being confused and exploited to leave Islam.

Similar to the preceding section, there are those who believe non-Muslims are allowed to propagate their religion in an Islamic state through normal preaching, while conversion is an individual's decision, since Islam teaches that there is no compulsion in religion. In light of the religious freedom in an Islamic state, non-Muslims will see the beauty of Islam. However, religious propagation should be conducted peacefully, within the confines of the law and government regulations. There are those who say that propagation in an Islamic state is through good works or character. It is through the exhibition of exemplary virtues of honesty, good neighborliness, truthfulness and homeliness that the beauty of any religion is seen. That is what attracts people to a religion. This is what is causing conversion to Islam in western countries today.

However, non-Muslims are counseled to apply tact, skills and delicateness in trying to convert Muslims in an Islamic state, to avoid encountering problems. As advised, "Even [if] you want to convert somebody, you have to be doing it tactically."⁴⁹⁶ Propagation through dialogue is recommended. It is even argued that non-Muslims are afraid that their emptiness would be exposed in dialogue, that is why they prefer going through the back door to convert people. Even the prophet used peaceful dialogue or debate with Christians, and allowed people to make their decisions. Where non-Muslims are indigenous to an Islamic state, they have rights to propagate their faiths, as long as they do not mock Islam. The fear of Islam being mocked might have led some to insist that religious propagation should be regulated by the Islamic state government, and public preaching should be censored.

⁴⁹⁶SRQ3/Th16.2/ZA14 [21976-22147

It is reiterated that the prophet permitted freedom of religious propagation in Medina, and so Islamic law in an Islamic state allows Muslims and non-Muslims to propagate their religions.⁴⁹⁷ There are those who say propagation should be institutionalized, while others say propagation should be limited to places of worship or use of media, which are less problematic. Some argue that Shari'a is based on justice; therefore, there should be equal freedom for all in the practice of religion. Contextually, although the nineteen northern states operate Shari'a,⁴⁹⁸ Nigeria is a secular democracy; therefore, all religions have equal freedom for religious propagation. What Muslims must do is to demonstrate the beauty of Islam and remember that there is punishment for conversion. In any case, true Muslims will not allow themselves to be drawn to the wrong path, because in an Islamic state, there is proper understanding of Islam and an intruder will find it difficult to sway a Muslim from his belief. Instead, the non-Muslim will end up being converted to Islam.

There are some who are not categorical in their positions. Some say that religious propagation in an Islamic state is subject to prevailing circumstances. Others say the sacred books should be relied upon for guidance or be referred to Islamic scholars for answers. There are those who argue that interdependence of states will necessitate treaties that allow for freedom of movement and association, which opens the door for religious propagation.

Current Christian-Muslim Relations⁴⁹⁹

Sub-research Question 3.1 explores how the existing Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria can be described. In light of the consequences of fundamentalism, the interviewees describe what they feel is the current Christian-Muslim relations. However, before describing what they believe is the current Christian-Muslim relations, interviewees gave reasons behind the current conflicts between Christians and Muslims in northern Nigeria.

⁴⁹⁷SRQ3/Th16.2/ZA39 [50873-51124]

⁴⁹⁸ It is not factually correct that the nineteen northern states in Nigeria operate Shari'a. For example, states like Plateau, Benue and some other middle belt states do not operate Shari'a. Except if the interviewee is referring to the northern Nigeria Penal Code that contains Shari'a laws operating in Northern Region before it was broken into the present nineteen states.

⁴⁹⁹ All ideas addressing SRQ3.1 are found in SRQ3.1/Th17.1-Th17.4. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

Factors behind the Current Conflicts between Christians and Muslims

The factor with greater mention behind the current conflicts between Christians and Muslims is politics and politicians, with all related political issues. Quest for or the distribution of political offices has polarized people along religious lines and contributes to conflicts. Politicians capitalize on the prejudices of people to instigate conflicts among adherents of different religions. There were more conflicts during the political era than all the military eras. Politicians came with greed and deception and, because of their quest to cling to power, they exploit the emotive nature of religion and ethnicism to generate conflicts in order to achieve their egoistical goals. Often, when they perceive they are about to lose an election, they instigate people into conflict in the name of fighting for their religion. This is contrary to what earlier leaders did. It is concluded that the attitude of northern politicians now is a major contributory factor to current religious conflicts.

The next contributory factor given for the current conflicts between Muslims and Christians is the way scholars and preachers preach. They employ harsh, provocative language and insist Muslims must fight jihad, without explaining what jihad is all about. And illiterates construe this to mean fighting. They argue that the proliferation of preachers who lead people astray on both sides is a recent development. Most preachers lack proper education and understanding of their religions, and so interpret the sacred texts peripherally or tangentially. Most do this for material gains. Some even conclude that it is this proliferation of Islamic extremist scholars that is behind these conflicts because they are not regulated. The situation is compounded by the fact that these scholars or preachers from different sects adopt ideologies and beliefs contrary to true faith and teach them in their places of worship. It is concluded that “the religious preachers are responsible for whatsoever is happening today, and it is killing me.”⁵⁰⁰

Another factor that is related to politics is leadership. Leaders exacerbate situations when there are crises, instead of pacifying people. Bad leaders promote xenophobic attacks, poverty, unemployment and hardship. With nothing to offer, they employ religion and tribalism to influence people to conflicts so that they can continue to rule and embezzle funds. Leaders hide bad governance, corruption and mismanagement behind religion, to instigate conflicts between the two religions. Also related to preachers is a general lack or improper understanding of the religions by followers of both religions. This misunderstanding is within and between the two religions. Such illiteracy or lack of understanding creates conflicts. For example, majority of Muslims and Christians do not know that the Qur'an and the Bible have so much in common. Christians are referred to as Ahl kitab (people to the book) in the Qur'an. A chapter of the Qur'an titled Suratul Maryam contains the story of the birth of Jesus. But due to lack of proper enlightenment, misunderstandings are created, leading to conflicts.

⁵⁰⁰SRQ3.1/Th17.1/ZA29 [51520-51674]

Other factors that help to fuel conflicts between Christians and Muslims are human greed and selfish interests used to brainwash followers, intolerance between religions, segregation and discrimination, based on religious differences by both religions. All these tend to generate conflicts. Some mentioned more specific things like denial of rights, injustice where people are neglected and not taken care of by the leaders and individual differences with respect to quest for power, wealth, status and religious sentiments. Mentioned also are mutual jealousy of each other's progress, indoctrination of children to harbor hatred against the other religion and not to consider them as friends. There is also mutual suspicion and distrust, in light of past and reoccurring religious crises. Sentimental perception of hatred by the other religion, politicization and commercialization of religion, and the fusing of ethnic factors with religion to produce ethno-religious conflict are among the factors influencing current Christian-Muslim conflicts.

It is even argued that zeal without knowledge, considered different from simple lack of understanding of the religion, is a factor. Also considered behind these conflicts are poverty, which makes the poor open to manipulation, desire for religious dominance and lack of proper dialogue and communication. There are those who argue that the divide and rule tactics of the government, which treats citizens unequally, is another factor influencing conflict between religions. And this divide and rule has extended to religious clerics who propagate it in their places of worship. Some feel that the colonial legacy left a rift between the two religions, by creating an impression in the minds of Christians that they are the majority and should not be ruled by Muslims, which creates conflicts even today. However, another reason given for these conflicts is Christians' attempt to convert Muslims.

It is also argued that behind these conflicts are perceived unequal distribution of national resources by both religions, mutual disrespect for each other's religious values, and the importation of foreign ideologies or interpretations of Islam. Due to globalization of media outlets, people adopt conflicts from other parts of the world. Two interesting views are that these conflicts are generated by conspiracies that cannot be explained, and lack of parental care for the male child who, to a large extent, is more energetic and exuberant than his female counterpart. In the end, others argue that, all said and done, there has always existed this undercurrent of conflict. It is only influenced and blown out by the media, especially the social media. They transport what is happening everywhere within seconds, and conflicts spread faster.

Description of Current Christian-Muslim Relations

There are various negative terms used to describe the current Christian-Muslim relations. The terms include "not good," "bad," "semi-tensed," "both nursing hatred for one another," "living in fear," "scared of one another" and "only superficially smile and say hello to one another." It is even categorically stated that they actually have no relationship or cordial relationship. It is like both religions are treading on needles without knowing what will happen tomorrow. Others say the relationship is riddled with suspicion and distrust at all levels. There is mistrust, misconception, misunderstanding and a general lack of sincerity and hypocrisy. The two religions have now segregated themselves into separate Muslim and Christian communities, even within the same city. Now both religions do not live or build houses where the other religion has a majority. The relationship is now sour, with no mutual understanding, and during elections, each religion advises its members to vote along religious lines. Each religion accuses the other of harboring desire for dominance, a hidden agenda, grudges, hostility and religious sentiments.

The relationship is further described with words such as "fractious," "unsatisfactory," "chaotic," "pathetic," "intolerable," "frosty," "very terrible" and "so regretful" as well as "very fragile." There is the lamentation that the relationship is disappointing, uninspiring, deteriorating, narrow and adversely competitive, with nothing to write home about. Some admit that it is visibly discouraging how Christians are discriminated against in the building of worship places. It is seen as unfortunate and unfair by some students, that a university where more than 15 mosques exist, Christians are denied a single worship place. Some describe the relationship as that of a cat and mouse, with each waiting to pounce on the other. Even if there is a relationship, it is limited or polarized by political leaders, who should be blamed for engineering hatred between the two religions. The relationship is now in its worst state, antagonistic, bitter, critical, appalling, very poor and getting out of hand or control. Both religions see each other now as enemies, and have become insensitive to one another, especially non-Muslims being indoctrinated with negative ideas about Muslims.

According to a few, it is not all negative. Some describe the relationship as an on-and-off or sometimes-good-and-sometimes-bad relationship. They acknowledge that even friends fight. Others use some moderate terms such as “fair,” “partially good,” “not too bad” and “not too sour,” to describe the current Christian-Muslim relations. Some nostalgically describe it as not as strong as it was before, and it will take time to repair the damage that has occurred over time. There are those who argue that the relationship is dependent on the location. Places where conflicts have never been experienced live in peace. Other progressive views have been expressed that the relationship is now improving, getting better and more amicable, with dialogue as a result of improved awareness and realization that these conflicts are not religious, but the handiwork of politicians. More and more preachers or Imams are advocating peace and very few non-Muslims believe Muslims are the ones attacking Christians. Those with a more positive outlook insist that the relationship is cordial, good, not bad, harmonious and peaceful. Some even say it is perfect and impressive, probably because, as mentioned above, they have not experienced conflicts. They argue that besides the current insurgency, which affects all, people cannot remember when last a religious conflict took place. In fact, both religions now vote for one another during elections.

Current Relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims

It was deemed necessary in this research to differentiate Christians from the term “non-Muslims,” to examine if that differentiation is made by Muslim interviewees in this study. The interviewees seem not to differentiate the terms and, in fact, many responded by saying that they have addressed this inquiry already, or used the cliché “as I said before.” It is possible that because Christians are the majority non-Muslims in northern Nigeria, the idea of non-Muslims is representationally attached to Christians. The responses given here also contain all the ingredients, or similar descriptions, found in the preceding section, with a few varying or added adjectives. In view of that, only the additions or variations would be presented here.

Therefore, in addition to what has been said in the preceding section, the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims is viewed as not working properly, and they are not doing well. The relationship is cold, lukewarm, frosty, and unfriendly; they are not in good terms. There is no tolerance for one another. It is added here that the emergence of sects and independent religious groups contribute to this unfavorable relationship. An interesting addition here is that the deep rooted suspicion between non-Muslims and Muslims is a generational one, and did not just emerge recently. However, it is strained and aggravated by the hypocritical political class. There is also the perception that each religion is trying to destroy the other. It is also added that the distrust between them has extended to business, social and political transactions, which was not highlighted earlier. There is also the view that this frosty relationship has extended to ethnic lines, even within Islam. The Hausa Muslims do not trust the Yoruba Muslims, and vice versa.

The relationship is now not smooth because Muslims and non-Muslims alike are now subjective in their approach to issues, especially along religious and tribal lines, with both capriciously taking sides. The relationship is now a double-edged sword and requires reshaping to achieve a better society. The relationship is not perfect, and on the scale of hundred, it can only be rated fifty percent or simply average. On the other hand, in addition to all the positive things said in the preceding section about the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims, it is also considered to be interesting and mutually satisfying, especially in business, contrary to what is said above. It is argued here that the relationship is better than some years ago, since now Muslims and non-Muslims work, trade and school together. In fact, they do a lot of things together, although hypocritical tendencies cannot be ruled out. It is concluded that although sometimes it is an unfriendly peace with small conflicts ending up as religious, it is generally now a better relationship.

Perpetual Entrenchment of Conflicts between Christians and Muslims

The two preceding sections make it clear that most of the interviewees believe the current relations between Muslims and Christians are completely fractious. However, only one quarter of the interviewees agree that the conflicts are now so entrenched in the minds of Christians and Muslims that it cannot be definitely resolved. However, even among the majority who disagree that conflicts are not so entrenched such that they cannot be definitely resolved, there are those who believe they are really entrenched; it is only that they are optimistic these conflicts can be resolved. In addition, those who disagree believe these conflicts can be resolved through good government and credible leadership, both political and religious. These leaders must be truthful, pursue justice and equality for all and be mindful of their utterances and what they preach. The government and religious leaders on both sides must promote interaction and dialogue among themselves in order to examine those things militating against peaceful coexistence, and find ways to resolve them.

Besides dialogue at the level of leadership, there should also be dialogue and mutual understanding at the level of followers. This will promote the understanding of differences between religions that will lead to tolerance. There should be diplomatic negotiation, mediation and bargaining that promotes reconciliation. They also insist that conflicts can be resolved through social awareness, employing the media, symposia, and public lectures to enlighten people about the causes of conflicts. It is believed that since these conflicts came through indoctrination, people can be re-indoctrinated. There are those who are simplistic by arguing that whatever has a beginning will have an end, as there is no problem that is permanent. Others insist that the conflicts must first be resolved at the individual level. Individuals must imbibe the virtue of forgiveness and learn to acquire right knowledge about their religions. Some go further to say that resolution of the conflicts must begin from the family level, where parents must help erase the prejudices created in the hearts of their children to hate members of other religions, and give them names like arne (meaning infidel in Hausa).

Furthermore, some believe that the resolution of these conflicts can only be found in the religion itself. Islam and all major religions preach peace. People should go back and imbibe these teachings, and all conflicts will be resolved. For Muslims, it is to go back to the teachings of the Qur'an and Sunna. The 2015 Nigerian presidential election is cited as an example that conflicts between Muslims and Christians can be resolved because even Christian states voted for change and elected a Muslim as president. According to them, this has proven that human beings are dynamic, and change is constant. Time always resolves issues. There are those who argue that these conflicts can also be resolved through establishing and entrenching conflict resolution processes in the society. There should be pursuit of truth at family, religious and social interaction levels. It is further argued that there are global examples where this pursuit of truth has been used to resolved conflicts, such as what happened in Rwanda and South Africa. The feeling is that all conflicts can be resolved. The conflict between western and eastern Germany has been resolved. Another local indication of this is during the Nigerian petroleum subsidy crisis, Muslims and Christians protected each other when praying during the crisis.

The argument is furthered that these conflicts can be resolved if each religion respects and recognizes the other religion. Besides, any society that engages in perpetual war will be destroyed and disappear. Therefore, to say these conflicts cannot be resolved is to admit that northern Nigeria, or even Nigeria, is headed for extinction. The main challenge is to find and eliminate the causative factors, and harmony will be restored. In addition, it is maintained that although conflicts come and go, these interreligious conflicts can be resolved through regulation of preaching, youth education and gainful employment, as well as eliminating insurgency and terrorism across the board.

On the other hand, those who agree with the view that conflicts are so entrenched in the minds of Muslims and Christians such that it cannot be resolved insist that the indoctrination is so deeply rooted in the society that it is irreversible. There are clear indications that each religion views the members of the other religion as its problem and enemy. An example is given where Christians are asked not to vote because the two contenders are Muslims. Discussions even among members of both religions reveal the damage has been done. Members of both religions do not give each other a fair hearing. The brainwashing is so deep that the perception of mutual enmity is accepted as a reality. Furthermore, in view of the adverse effects of previous conflicts, such as colossal loss of properties and lives, deep seated grudges still exist and avenues for revenge are always being sought. Experience has shown that states where these conflicts have occurred have higher rates of reoccurrences as a result of these etched memories and retaliatory actions.

It is further believed that it is impossible to provide employment for the too many unemployed youths in the society today. Therefore, they will always be available to the highest bidder to foment religious conflicts. The unmitigated proliferation of religious preachers, with their careless and instigative utterances fueling and engineering youths to engage in so-called religious conflicts, makes these conflicts impossible to resolve. The ever rising political interests, media propaganda and external instigators are seen as entrenching these conflicts and ensuring they are continuous. In addition, today every mundane action is interpreted religiously. The religious background of the doctor in whose hand a pregnant woman dies during child delivery is verified. One person frustratingly sums up this situation that “this issue of religion has so much entered the minds of Nigerians that today we find it difficult to think something natural could happen without blaming it on the followers of other religions.”⁵⁰¹

Christians’ bad perception of Islam is also raised as a reason why these conflicts would be difficult to resolve. Christians are brainwashed to believe Muslims are terrorists, or Islam is terrorism. Therefore, they become behaviorally intolerant of Muslims, which makes Muslims antagonistic to them. Socio-economic factors, such as poverty, injustice and illiteracy, also aggravate and perpetuate these conflicts. More severe is illiteracy, because it makes enmity in the mind or heart towards the person of another faith difficult to erase. The goodness in the person of another religion is clouded by ignorance, and this ignorance perpetuates hatred. This situation is viewed to be the most prevalent today. Closely related to the preceding is the dogmatic and uncompromising nature of both religions. Each of them believes it is the best. Concomitantly, the greed for wealth and selfish interests of religious leaders of both religions make them aid the perpetuation of conflicts. Many decry the entrenchment of these conflicts, even in schools where teachers and students segregate themselves along religious affiliations. Therefore, the view is that the above reasons indicate that these conflicts cannot be completely resolved, they can only be minimized.

Muslim Relations with Christians under Shari’a

Valid also for this research are opinions given by interviews on how Muslims should relate with or treat Christians in places where Shari’a is operational, as it is perceived to be in most northern states of Nigeria. Most interviewees affirm they will relate with Christians as they will relate with other Muslims in any given circumstance, since the Qur'an teaches love and goodness to every person. As long as Christians pay jizya and are not contravening any Shari'a law, there is no Qur'anic injunction that forbids a Muslim from relating freely with a Christian. It is claimed that they are referred to as Kafiran amana (Arabic-Hausa phrase for trusted infidel). Although they are not Muslims, they are trusted in all transactions, like any Muslim without being cheated. A large number clarified further that they would treat Christians in a Shari'a environment in accordance with the provisions of Shari'a. The sacred texts and Shari'a laws make provisions on how Christians should be treated under Shari'a. Shari'a guides the behavior and activities of Muslims and non-Muslims under Shari'a rule. The rights and obligations of all are stipulated in the Shari'a laws. Subject to conformity with Shari'a, a Muslim should treat a Christian well in all aspects of mu'amalat.

⁵⁰¹SRQ3.1/Th17.3/KD19 [38473-39305]

In more specific terms, some say they will relate with Christians peacefully, harmoniously and in a friendly manner. Some expand further that they will follow the example of the prophet who lived peacefully with Christians under Shari'a, so long as they were not hostile to Muslims. Moreover, Muslims are even permitted to marry Christian ladies. The prophet lived, visited, consoled, helped and transacted business with Christians. The prophet even gave Christians his mosques to sleep in. What other perfect example is needed to show that Islam is tolerant of Christians? The prophet even gave a Jew his jihad shield as collateral to collect food items. In Medina, the prophet signed an agreement with non-Muslims. It is only the ignorant who do not have this understanding of Islam. Closely related to this, some say they will treat Christians with respect. They will respect their opinions, ideologies and interests. And they add that they will encourage conferences and seminars to promote mutual good understanding of both religions, promote tolerance for one another, and mutual cooperation. They will accept Christians as neighbors, and always greet them anywhere they meet, as the prophet instructed, in addition to attending their ceremonies. When Muslims live as good Muslims, Christians will see the beauty of Islam.

There are those who say that Christians should be persuaded, accommodated and encouraged to be part of Shari'a, or as specifically mentioned by some, they will treat Christians well so that they will convert to Islam. Other cordial relational ways interviewees say they would treat Christians under Shari'a are; they would be merciful, diplomatic, nice, fair, truthful, and amicable to them, as well as protect their rights and properties. This is in addition to granting Christians right to practice their religion and certain activities, since there is no Muslim who does not or will refuse to believe in Jesus.⁵⁰² In addition, they will treat Christians with equality, but they will constantly preach to them.

However, there are those who say they will be cautious with Christians, without letting their guards down and always watching their backs, “because an unbeliever is always antagonistic towards a believer.”⁵⁰³ One person comments about Christians: “I don’t see him as my brother because we don’t share the same faith. I cannot tell him some of the secrets we have in Islam, because he can use that and injure me and the entire Umma.”⁵⁰⁴ Although friendships will be developed, “I should not allow myself to be convinced to convert to their religion, because I know that [when I convert] to their religion being in an Islamic state, I know that after three days I will be killed.”⁵⁰⁵

Challenges to Christian-Muslim Relations⁵⁰⁶

Sub-research Question 3.2 examines current challenges to Christian-Muslim relations. In understanding the current relations between Muslims and Christians, it is also significant to appreciate what Muslims consider as the current challenges to Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria.

Muslim Difficulties in Relating to Christians

Almost half of the interviewees indicate that they have not had or are not having any difficulty in relating with Christians. Some of the reasons given as to why they are having no problems relating with Christians include the friendships they have developed with Christians since childhood, also because of their exposure in life and because everybody minds his or her business and religion. In addition, they know ⁵⁰² Muslim belief in Jesus is different from the Christian belief. The Muslims consider Jesus as only the prophet of God.

⁵⁰³SRQ3.1/Th17.4/KN9 [32926-33153]

⁵⁰⁴SRQ3.1/Th17.4/KN58 [48494-48790]

⁵⁰⁵SRQ3.1/Th17.4/ZA24 [51465-51896]

⁵⁰⁶ All ideas addressing SRQ3.2 are found in SRQ3.2/Th18.1-Th18.6 and SRQ3.2/Th19.1-Th19.2. However, direct quotes or reference to significant ideas associated with the themes are cited independently on the footnote.

their roles as Muslims. They also understand Christians, or it is as a result of the caliber of Christians they are dealing with. Some also think it is because they accept Christians as their counterparts. It is also maintained that it is because they avoid the issues of religion in their dealings, and in some cases even encourage Christians to practice their religion. Others say it is because they are free minded, while some say it is because no one has attempted to convert them because they are knowledgeable about Christianity. A number acknowledge that although some Christians can be difficult, hold strange doctrines and are secretive, they have cordial relations with them. Some indicate it is because of meaningful ideological and religious dialogue. Oddly, some say it is because they only relate with Muslims and have nothing or no business to do with Christians.

However, those that signify that they have had or are having difficulties with Christians indicate that the main problem is Christians' lack of understanding, or misconception of Islam, and their disinterest to understand it. Christians have a disdainful attitude, bad perception and wrong notions of Islam as a deceptive and extreme religion. Through their preachers and the social media, Christians say erroneous things about Islam and refuse corrections. They have a myopic view that Muslims want to Islamize or dominate them, and are intolerant of other religious beliefs. Some see Islam as a violent religion. An interviewee recounted that only Allah gave him the grace to control his anger when a Christian blasphemed that Islam is the devil's religion, and Muhammad was a demon. Christians misinterpret and say negative things about Islam, and they do not listen to correct explanation or accept Muhammad as the messenger of Allah (Rasulillah).

Christians are said to discriminate, segregate, marginalize and are prejudicial towards Muslims, thereby making it difficult for Muslims to relate with them. One person lamented that Christians refused interaction with him "just because I am a Muslim, which is hurting and uncalled for."⁵⁰⁷ They are also accused of seeing Hausa Muslims as illiterates, and give them little respect. Christians feel Christianity is superior, or supersedes every religion. In the same vein, like westerners, they believe they are wiser than Muslims. Christians are indicted for being arrogant and strong-headed. They claim to have ultimate knowledge, yet they are immoral. In fact, the culture and belief system of Christians impede relations with Muslims. The open sensuality among genders, contradictory teachings between the Old and New Testaments, and the practices that have deviated from that of Jesus and his followers hinder relations between Muslims and Christians.

⁵⁰⁷SRQ3.2/Th18.1/KN50 [19487-19712]

Although contradicted by some, there are those who argue that relating with Christians is difficult because they easily betray Muslims; they are untrustworthy and cannot be relied upon to alert or safeguard Muslims from harm, especially during conflicts. They do not give honest counsel to Muslims. Some complain that even their appearance of keeping long beard and wearing a raised trouser, which is Sunna to a Muslim, makes Christians uncomfortable, and scares them into believing that a Muslim is a terrorist or an extremist to be avoided. Another challenge mentioned is the mutual suspicion now prevalent between Muslims and Christians. Both fear being double-crossed in all social transactions, believing the other has a hidden motive that could hurt them. It is a fact that trust is critical to any relationship.

It is further highlighted that relating with Christians is difficult because they always desire to convert Muslims to their religion. They want to preach to Muslims, whether they are interested or not, but they are unhappy if Muslims preach to them. Christians see Muslims as simply acquaintances, but not as brothers or sisters. Furthermore, they are inconsiderate of others in shouting when they pray for long hours. This attitude does not augur well for building relationships. Christians also lump personal character and religion. They attribute a Muslim's bad behavior to Islam. Curiously, Christians are accused of politicizing religion or denying Muslims their rights. As a result of this, tensions are generated and relationships are impeded.

Although some accuse both religions of trying to tarnish each other's image, Christians do it in a more grievous way, in that they generalize Muslims as dangerous extremists or terrorists behind recent insurgencies, and should not be trusted. Presently, without interacting with Muslims and understanding them, southerners refuse Muslims entry into their communities because they view them as terrorists. Some interviewees are open enough to accept the blame for not freely reaching out to Christians to understand them. Others blame the politicization of the implementation of Shari'a in northern Nigeria for currently making it difficult to relate with Christians

Obstacles to Interreligious Harmony

Although some interviewees gave multiple obstacles to interreligious harmony, they have been singly itemized. One obstacle mentioned by a greater number of the interviewees is politics, politicians or political elites and political ideologies or agendas. Politicians are said to employ divide and rule tactics, prop up religious and ethnic sentiments and capitalize on people's ignorance through provoking them to react so as to achieve their desire for political power and wealth. Another obstacle that received prominence is that Muslims and Christians lack understanding of their religions and are ignorant of each other's religion. This often leads to misunderstandings that obstruct interreligious harmony. Related to religion is also the obstacle created by religious preaching. Preachers use provocative language, indoctrinate members against the opposite religion and encourage retaliatory attacks. These clerics are often fake, ignorant and extremists. They preach hatred and enmity or discourage interreligious relationships.

Furthermore, general illiteracy and ignorance is also seen as a major obstacle to interreligious harmony. Members of both religions have shallow knowledge in both religious and secular education. Interviewees say that more than forty percent of northerners are illiterates. Therefore, ignorance is blamed for contributing seriously in the spate of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Bad and dubious political and religious leaders are also a serious obstacle to interreligious harmony. These leaders reject dialogue, are insincere, selfish, greedy and oppressive. When they become leaders in government, they promote religious bigotry to attain selfish goals, while they instigate members of their religion to see others as bad in order to hide their corruption, mismanagement and bad governance. Another mentioned obstacle to interreligious harmony is that both religions lack tolerance, patience and perseverance for one another, as well as refuse to accommodate each other's differences.

Other obstacles mentioned that impede interreligious harmony are mutual distrust, suspicion and lack of confidence in one another. In addition to these is lack of dialogue and communication to address misinformation. Also mentioned are lack of respect for each other's beliefs, opinions and practices, and the perception that both religions desire dominance and superiority. Socio-economic factors are also mentioned as obstacles to interreligious harmony. These are poverty, ethnicity, and non-provision of welfare for citizens. Included also are the perceived inequitable distribution of national resources seen to favor a particular religion, the notion that only northerners are Muslims, and aggression due to depression, although the cause or causes of depression are not mentioned. The Boko Haram insurgency that creates fear in non-Muslims is seen also as an obstacle to interreligious harmony.

In more specific terms, some mention political rivalry, religious sentiments and propaganda, politicization and manipulation of religion, denial of religious rights and prevalence of injustice as obstacle to interreligious harmony. Danfodio is credited as saying that “a kingdom can survive by unbelief, but it cannot survive by injustice.”⁵⁰⁸ It is interesting that some see the immoral conduct of Muslims as an obstacle to interreligious harmony. There is also the stigmatization of one another, hypocritical agents of the devil fanning conflicts and insecurity. It is also mentioned that internal and external conspiracies, press or media misinformation and general insincerity among members of both religions are among obstacles to interreligious harmony. Others mention that religious conflicts in themselves hinder interreligious harmony. The historical memory of tribal natives being addressed by Muslims as arna (meaning infidels in Hausa), hell goers and the rest, stands as an obstacle to interreligious harmony, according to some interviewees.

Desire to Convert Muslims as Source of Conflicts

About two thirds of the interviewees reject the claim that desire to convert Muslims to other faiths is a source of conflicts, while one third accept the claim. Most of those who reject the claim insist that Muslim conversion to other faiths is not and cannot be the source of conflict in northern Nigeria, but did not avail further comments. However, some of the reasons given appear similar to the preceding section. Their argument is that misunderstanding, ignorance of the religion, politics/politicians and selfish interests are sources of conflicts. However, it should be borne in mind that in some sections, conversion has been mentioned as a source of conflict. Nonetheless, it is argued that historically, none of the previous conflicts can be attributed to conversion. In fact, some insist that all previous conflicts are not religious.

Since the Nigerian constitution permits freedom of religion, they argue, freedom of conversion is guaranteed and should not cause conflicts. Besides, Islam does not accept coercion in religion. Other sources of conflicts are suspicion, negative preaching or teaching, perception or feeling of being dominated, poverty, lack of dialogue and insulting the prophet of Islam. In any case, because there are conflicts also in Christian dominated areas, does it mean Muslims trying to convert Christians is the cause? It is often minor disagreements, tribal conflicts or denial of freedom of religion due to enmity that are transformed into religious conflicts. Moreover, both Christianity and Islam seek to convert people. Therefore, the assertion that the desire to convert Muslims to other faiths is a source of conflict is a wrong assumption. Besides, a Muslim with deep knowledge and understanding of Islam hardly converts out of Islam.

⁵⁰⁸SRQ3.2/Th18.2/KN37 [25340-25678]

On the other hand, those who accept that the desire to convert Muslims to other faiths is a source of conflict insist that it is truly a source, but not the only source. Sometimes it is and sometimes it is not. Although it might not be the major source, it contributes. This desire to convert Muslims contributes to conflicts in that Christians want to force their beliefs on Muslims by going door to door, house to house, especially the Jehovah's Witnesses, to disturb Muslims mostly on weekends. The disturbance creates irritation that sometimes leads to conflicts. This approach or disturbance, which Muslims never use, also stirs anger because non-Muslims do not care to understand how Islam operates, especially where Muslims are in the majority.

The desire to convert Muslims might also lead to conflicts because Muslims are prohibited or not permitted to convert to other faiths. If a Muslim converts to another faith contrary to the teaching of Islam, he is committing a serious act of violating Islamic Shari'a, and it can generate tension that might lead to conflicts. In addition, in Muslim territories, non-Muslims are only permitted to practice their religion and not to proselytize. Any attempt at proselytization can create conflicts. Muslims are even said to perceive that Christians are sponsored to convert Muslims, and Muslims are apprehensive of such an attempt. There is a strong insistence that non-Muslims should not attempt to convert Muslims in northern Nigeria, because Muslims are the majority. Such resistance to conversion attempt is reflected in the admittance that some Fulani herdsmen attacked some Christians who went to evangelize in their villages in one part of northern Nigeria.

Conversion as a Major Source of Interreligious Conflicts

It is interesting that although two thirds of the interviewees in the preceding section reject the idea that the desire to convert Muslims to other faiths is a source of conflicts, there are more interviewees, in fact close to half, who agree that conversion is a major contribution to conflicts between Muslims and Christians in northern Nigeria. However, those who disagree that conversion is a major source of interreligious conflict give some views that are also similar to the preceding section. They argue that there is no evidence that any previous conflict is related to conversion, and that conversions are still taking place today across both religions, without conflicts. Besides, it is argued that conversions had taken place before the 1980s, why were there no conflicts? It is highlighted that in northern Nigeria, people find members of both religions in the same family living in harmony.

In more specific terms, the sources of conflicts are said to include media propaganda, politics or struggle for power, tribalism, economics, land disputes, mistrust, socio-cultural and communal disputes, poverty, illiteracy, injustice, wrong preaching, Christian disrespect for Islamic values and disobeying the injunctions of Allah. It is a major achievement to convert a person to Islam and it attracts a reward. Incidentally, non-Muslims are the ones converting to Christianity, while more Christians are converting to Islam, and more churches are being turned into mosques without a single mosque being changed into a church. In this regard, there should be no conflicts.

On the contrary, those who accept that conversion is a major contribution to interreligious conflicts stress that the conflicts originate from the family of the converted, who fight for him to return to Islam. It is the aggrieved family's struggle for the converted to return to Islam that often degenerates to conflicts. Often this person is disowned, discriminated against and insulted as an infidel, and this contributes towards generating conflicts. They add that Muslim conversion shown publicly stirs anger among Muslims, which creates crisis. It is accepted that this kind of conversion is the major issue creating interreligious conflicts, especially where Muslims are in the majority. In fact, "a high number of Muslims converting to [Christianity] in a particular place, like in the northern Nigeria, it will be painful."⁵⁰⁹

⁵⁰⁹SRQ3.2/Th18.4/ZA6 [66209-67224]

There are those who assert that most religious conflicts result from the issue of conversion. It is stated that “this is where . . . most of the problems arise.”⁵¹⁰ Or as argued strongly, conversion in northern Nigeria, which has a mixture of Muslims and non-Muslims, “in most cases . . . has brought about conflicts and crisis. Where somebody wants to convert from one religion to another, the [adherents] of one of the religions would raise eyebrows and there will be conflicts. It has been, to a great extent, part of the conflicts in northern Nigeria.”⁵¹¹ Conversion is viewed as underpopulating the religion, and members feel threatened. It is like members are being stolen from the religion and the perceived fear of being decimated generates conflicts. Conversion, according to one person, is “significantly contributing”⁵¹² to interreligious conflicts.

Furthermore, the perception that Christians want to force their religion on Muslims, especially if they target younger people through the tactics of distributing or sharing pamphlets, or inviting Muslims to their churches, generates conflicts. The Umma would definitely react against that because it is alien to them. It is admitted that lack of tolerance for conversion generates conflicts in northern Nigeria, especially in some rural communities where there is little knowledge of the religion. People even engage in armed struggle because of conversion. Conversion, therefore, stirs hatred, particularly where preaching is done improperly. It is also acknowledged that the fear of the convert divulging the secrets of his former religion generates conflicts, especially where there are die hard religious fanatics. However, some dissenting voices say conversion should only generate conflicts in an Islamic state where non-Muslims are not supposed to proselytize. In any case, even if conversion contributes to interreligious conflicts, it is a small contribution and not a major factor. Conversion is only one of the contributors.

Religious Interests of Muslims as above Nigeria and other Nigerians

In the process of identifying the challenges to Christian-Muslim relations, the question of whether Muslims considering religious interest above Nigeria and other Nigerians is part of the challenge, or even a possible source of conflicts. More than half of the interviewees affirm that it is accurate that Muslims do and should put their religious interest above Nigeria and other Nigerians, while slightly above a quarter of them say they do not and should not. Those who consent argue that it is mandatory for a Muslim to put his or her religion above everything. What Allah and the prophet instruct Muslims to do must take precedence and supersede the life and personal interest of every Muslim. The will of Allah is above any man made interest. Allah commands Muslims to accept Islam completely; hence, “Nationalism and other things . . . are some things created to [distract] Muslims from the real teaching of the religion.”⁵¹³

⁵¹⁰SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KN61 [15170-15264]

⁵¹¹SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KN85 [31420-31708]

⁵¹²SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KN82 [28926-29039]

Emphasizing further, it is said that for a true Muslim, his religion must come first. The failure of a secular government is insisting that the constitution is above religion. For a Muslim, it is Allah’s interest before national interest. As indicated, “I am a Muslim first before I become a Fulani man, before I become a Nigerian or a citizen, or indigenous to Kano.”⁵¹⁴ Islamic consideration as a total way of life is supreme to anything else. It is further underlined that “I want always to be accused of putting my religious interest above everything. In everything I do, my religion first, then followed by others.”⁵¹⁵ In light of this consideration, it is impossible for a Muslim to accept anything secular, with a Christian outlook, above his religion. Indeed, “you are not allowed to put any interest above your religious interest, so it is true that Muslims are putting their religious interest above any kind of interest.”⁵¹⁶

The major reason given why a Muslim must put his religion above everything is that he is expected to live within the teachings of the Qur’an and the Sunna.⁵¹⁷ All his life must be guided by the divine books and divine laws from Allah, because Islam came from him. In both his internal and external life, a Muslim must be guided by Islamic principles. The only reason why Allah created man is (for man) to worship him. Hence in all a Muslim’s activities, whatever contradicts Allah’s worship must be contradicted. It is to be lost to put any worldly gain above Allah. There are some who argue that it is not only Muslims who put their religious interests above all things. Even Christians and other religions do the same. The Christian Association of Nigeria (CAN) is accused of putting Christian interest above Nigeria and Nigerians.⁵¹⁸ It is

⁵¹³SRQ3.2/Th18.5/ZA34 [53167-53777]

⁵¹⁴SRQ3.2/Th18.5/KN58 [51453-52113]

⁵¹⁵SRQ3.2/Th18.5/ZA23 [42584-42726]

⁵¹⁶SRQ3.2/Th18.5/KD33 [33104-33352]

⁵¹⁷SRQ3.2/Th18.5/KD25 [100843-101101]

⁵¹⁸ Muslims have an equivalent organization named Jama’atu Nasril Islam (The Society for the Support of Islam) or its initial acronym “The Society for the Victory of Islam” that defends the interest even considered that any person who puts his religion first will be a more law abiding citizen.

Although it was not clear what an interviewee means that it is the culture of Nigerians to put emphasis on intangibles, but it is buttressed that Muslims put their religious interest above Nigeria and other Nigerians because those interests are too important to be ignored, although another person insists that it is not in all situations that the Muslims do this. However, someone hopes that Nigeria should just be a Muslim state. Some other reasons specified why Muslims put their religious interest above all things is that they consider Islam as their culture, which was there even before Nigeria was created. Furthermore, if a Muslim dies for the sake of Allah, he is rewarded with paradise; but he will lose everything if he dies for the sake of Nigeria. In addition, Muslims consider many things in the constitution of Nigeria un-Islamic, and Nigeria is not advocating Islamic principles. However, it is insisted that Muslims should not be seen to be doing this for selfish interest. It is just that all that Muslims do must be ibadat. They cannot please anyone in place of their religion.

Those who contradict the preceding arguments that Muslims put their religious interest above Nigeria and other Nigerians insist that it is only misinformation to stir hatred against Muslims. It is a baseless accusation. It is another misrepresentation of Islam. The reason why they take this position is that Islam teaches obedience to authority. Muslim leaders have not gone contrary to the constitution because Muslims are part of its development. They have not imposed Islamic ideologies on Nigerians, and no Muslim leader has made Islamic religion a priority in his government. It is when they do this that they can be accused of prioritizing Shari'a. Besides, these political leaders consider themselves more than their religion.

It is further argued that the interest of Muslims is the interest of Nigeria, since a good Muslim will not steal Nigerian money and will treat everyone equal. Moreover, being faithful to one's religion is not synonymous with downgrading your nation or countrymen. Besides, Muslim leaders partook in solving Nigerian problems, such as the Niger Delta crisis. Islamic clerics preach peace amongst people. Although there are extreme sects who demand allegiance only to their sects, faithfulness to Islam is not a license for extremism. Some insist that it is only in an Islamic state that Muslims can put their religious interest above everything, but Nigeria is not an Islamic state of Muslims. The question is whether it will also be accused of putting Muslim interest above that of Nigeria.

and so it is not possible for Muslims to put their religious interest above Nigeria and Nigerians. There is even evidence of Muslims loving Nigeria as much as their religion. Besides, no Muslim will put his religious interest above coexistence, since it is “stated in the Qur’an that your society should come first, protect your society to come first, respect your neighbor [and] . . . whatsoever religion he practice, respect him.”⁵¹⁹

Treatment of Muslim Converts to other Religions

Another considered challenge to Christian-Muslim relations is the treatment of Muslims who convert to other religions, especially Christianity. There are some interviewees that deflected this inquiry, or say that the matter should be referred to the scholars. There are those who acknowledge the complexity of reaching a definite position on this issue, and their views are presented first. They concede that scholarly opinions on this issue differ. Some scholars say a Muslim convert to another religion should be killed immediately. Others say he should be given three opportunities to revert back to Islam and, if he refuses he should be killed thereafter. There are those who say that if he oscillates in and out of Islam three times, on the third occasion he should be killed.

Some scholars insist that if the conversion is not against state interest, a Muslim convert should be left alone, while there are those who argue that since Islam says there is no compulsion in religion, killing a Muslim who converts to another religion contradicts this injunction of the Qur’an. Yet some scholars say it depends on the context. If the conversion takes place in a Muslim dominated area, the convert will face a challenge. However, if it is in a Christian dominated area, it will depend on the family. It is admitted that there are many different ways and scholarly positions in Islam for treating a Muslim who has changed his religion. It is stressed that some scholars say Allah instructs this punishment of killing to deter hypocrites and make them realize it is a grievous offence in Islam.

All the above views are captured in the views of those who gave their specific opinions. A good number support the killing of the convert after being given three days to recant. They base their claim on the Qur’an, the prophet in the Hadith and Shari’a. Others say that he should be exterminated or eliminated for committing riddah or murtadd (apostasy), and becoming an infidel. The approach of death should be by beheading, death by stoning or execution. Such a convert is viewed as a hypocrite that does not deserve to live. Some are more lenient, that he should be made an outcast or banished. This law is admitted to be controversial in several societies, because many insist that this punishment of killing is only executable by the authorities and not by individuals. It is acknowledged by some that this is a source of conflict with Christians who try to convert Muslims to their faith.

⁵¹⁹SRQ3.2/Th18.5/ZA38 [48510-48791]

The dialectic indefiniteness on this issue seems to influence opinions also, as some simply say that the punishment for a Muslim who converts to another religion is found in the Qur'an and Hadith, or more generally Shari'a, and it should be followed. Some only say there is a punishment, penalty or repercussion for those who convert out of Islam. Others say Umma frowns at it, and they will face the wrath of the law. The complexity is made clearer in the argument that Muslims who convert to other religions are supposed to be punished in accordance with Islamic rules, but "the problem is this, how . . . we implement the doctrine of the Shari'a is what has remained the major problem in Nigeria today."⁵²⁰

There are other varying treatments for the Muslim convert. For example, he should no longer be considered as a Muslim, his rights and benefits should be denied, his status be removed and he should be treated as an unbeliever. In addition, he should migrate or change territory, live among non-Muslims and, in that case, Islam permits his blood to be shed. Indeed, any Muslim that converts to another religion should be treated "as an enemy."⁵²¹ Caliph Abubakar is attributed to have told his son that if he had met the son in battle before the son converted to Islam, he (Abukakar) would have killed the son in the Battle of Badr. It is added that these converts should not be treated as people.⁵²²

Other moderate, non-violent approaches have been given. For example, the convert can be drawn closer to be preached to. People can explain the truth to the person again, and persuade and convince him or her. They can also educate the person without harshness, and grant him or her equal rights so that he or she will realize their mistake and be enticed back to Islam. The converted should be treated with mercy, sympathy, and be encouraged to return, since it is Satan that has deceived them. They should be shown kindness. Perhaps, it is unkindness that took them out of Islam.

⁵²⁰SRQ3.2/Th18.6/KN65 [31494-31750]

⁵²¹SRQ3.2/Th18.6/ZA35 [16960-16973]

⁵²²SRQ3.2/Th18.6/KN27 [22391-22714]

Others argue that although conversion is forbidden in Islam, the punishment should be left to God. Shedding blood will contradict the Qur'an, which says there is no compulsion in religion, give Islam a bad name and negate freedom of choice. Moreover, it is stated that he whom God has guided would never go astray, and whom God has led astray no one can guide back. If this is the case, they should be left alone, treated nicely and fairly, with respect, and not discriminated against. They are at liberty to choose to return as they left; otherwise, let them face their future fate.

Some wonder why a Muslim who has enjoyed the sweetness of Islam will convert to another religion. However, they recommend that such converts should be treated as the prophet or *Sayyidina*⁵²³Umar Khatab treated them, with justice and equality. Besides, in secular Nigeria, there is no Khalifa to authorize their killing. It is only the family that can be urged to talk, restrict and stop the conversion, or Muslims should just isolate them and treat them as abnormal and mentally retarded people. In a secular state, these conversions cannot be stopped since Muslims cannot take laws into their hands by killing them. The alternative left to Muslims is to educate Muslims about their religion, or report the matter to existing Islamic authority, who will know what to do. Otherwise, the judgment should be left to God. The foregoing could pose a real challenge to Christian-Muslim relations.

Handling Interreligious Challenges

It is logical to try to get the perspectives of the interviewees on how to handle interreligious challenges, since they have engaged in discussing what the challenges to Christian-Muslim relations are. Their perspectives are captured in the themes below.

Addressing Interreligious Relationship Difficulties

A greater number of the interviewees believe that the difficulties in interreligious relationship can be addressed through general awareness, which includes enlightenment, education and passing accurate information through religious institutions, schools and all forms of media. It is only through this approach that interreligious ignorance will be eradicated and cultural relativism developed. Proper education, orientation and awareness will eliminate interreligious ignorance and distrust. For example, a lot of southerners do not know there are Christians in northern Nigeria. Besides creating awareness, interreligious relationship difficulties can also be resolved through dialogue. Dialogues allow for understanding, negotiations and bargains, sharing of ideas, general openness or truthful discussion, and these promote healthy relationships and peace. Dialogue also encourages forgiveness of past offences, and opens the door to mutual appreciation of each other's religion, as well as reciprocal respect for each other's values, culture and beliefs. Closely linked to dialogue are mediation and consultation. All these encourage tolerance and harmonious living. Relationship difficulties emerge when sentiments, bias and arrogance are allowed to prevail. It is commonsensical that if people want respect for their culture, religion and tradition, they should not curse those of others.

⁵²³ This title means our master

It is believed that interreligious relationship difficulties also arise because people do not know their religion for themselves. They rely on what they are told. Interreligious relationship difficulties can be eliminated if each individual follower of a religion will make a conscious effort to have a good grasp of his or her religion, as taught in the sacred books, and stick to them. Such followers should not rely only on what they are told. Interreligious relationship difficulties can also be addressed when those in authority provide good leadership. Leaders, both secular and religious, should unite, be just to citizens, ameliorate poverty, provide basic infrastructure, be mindful of their utterances or preaching, promote trust and respect, and generally ensure economic prosperity. The saying that a hungry man is an angry man is also true, even in interreligious relationship. Furthermore, besides understanding each other's religions, to address relationship difficulties, there must be willingness by all religions to recognize and accommodate each other's differences. This will help each to understand their boundaries.

Another way mentioned that interreligious relationship difficulties can be addressed is to study and learn from the past, to see how Christians and Muslims lived in peace before. While still on the past, members of these religions must reject revisiting past grievances. Additionally, these religions must encourage change at individual levels. They should help members to remove prejudices, make sacrifices for one another, and see each other as brothers and sisters they can trust, as well as treat each other with justice and fairness. There is the conviction that if these religions preach peace and build institutions of change, interreligious relationship difficulties will disappear. Furthermore, the increasing of patience, the using of role models and the ensuring of freedom of religious practice, as well as the building of interpersonal relationships deliberately would diminish interreligious relationship difficulties. Above all, this must begin with religious leaders, because members of the society belong to one place of worship or the other. These leaders must influence their members with the truth and eschew bias and hatred, while explaining the differences between religions.

Interreligious Harmony: Requirements and Possibility

It is encouraging to note that only one person out of all the interviewees and focus group opinions claim that interreligious harmony is not possible. This is notwithstanding all the opinions expressed under several preceding themes. However, it is postulated that for interreligious harmony to be achieved, the requirements are mutual understanding, dialogue and tolerance between religions in all ramifications, especially among leaders. Forums for dialogue recommended include conferences, lectures and establishing interreligious organizations. In dialogue, both religions must be broadminded. Closely related to mutual understanding is mutual respect for each other's religious values, culture and beliefs or convictions. Besides this, both religions should be knowledgeable about the scriptures and teachings contained in each religion. In other words, Muslims must read the books of Christians and vice versa, to understand the teachings and differences.

It is maintained that in all circumstances of relationship, what is also required for interreligious harmony to be achieved is justice and fairness for members of both religions. Political and religious leaders on both sides must not discriminate against members of other religions. No one should feel oppressed. It logically follows that what is also required is good leadership, where leaders pursue peace, mediate between religions with integrity and credibility, and ensure economic prosperity. Some add that all strata of leaders (political, traditional and religious) must rule with honesty and the fear of God. Another requirement for interreligious harmony is massive and general education, in both religious and secular spheres, for members of both religions. Education exposes people to broad social knowledge that includes how to mix and intermingle with people who are different from them. Illiteracy and ignorance create misunderstanding, while education eliminates it. This education should employ the use of role models through the media also.

Other requirements mentioned are love for one another, trust for each other, living by the truth, rejection of sentiments and defending each other's rights, especially religious rights. In addition, both religions must desist from using provocative language, persevere or forbear with one another, and observe both religious and relevant secular laws. It is also stressed that to achieve interreligious harmony, both religions must reflect and learn from how interreligious harmony was achieved in the past. Also required are the creation of communication channels and building of cooperation. Some surprisingly insist that political manipulation must be stopped by separating politics from religion. There must also be change at individual level. On the whole, all social values, such as protecting each other's dignity and accepting one another as brothers, are recommended for achieving interreligious harmony.

Summary

In this chapter also, data addressing the research questions is analyzed. Interviewee views reflect that fundamentalism and religious conflicts have negatively affected the relationship between Christians and Muslims in the areas of interpersonal and business relationships, proselytization and political interaction and participation. In interpersonal relationships, it has introduced segregation, fear and distrust, while in proselytization it has hindered genuine and peaceful propagation of religion. In political interaction or participation, it has introduced voting along religious lines. Furthermore, conflicts between the two are said to be caused by politics, provocative religious preaching, bad leadership and greed, conversion, mutual lack of understanding of each other's religion and disrespect for the values of each other's religion. Therefore, the current relationship between the two religions is completely fractious and distrustful. However, there is overwhelming agreement that harmony is possible if there is dialogue, understanding, mutual respect and genuine practice of religion.

CHAPTER NINE

ANALYTICAL INTEGRATION AND THEORETICAL SYNTHESIS

Introduction

The analysis of data in Chapter Six, Seven and Eight is meant to address the main research question: What is the impact of Maududi's political interpretation of Islam in promoting Islamic fundamentalism in Kaduna and Kano States of northern Nigeria? It is important to reiterate that this research is examining the impact of Maududi's political interpretation of Islam on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts, and not whether all or most Muslims in Kaduna or Kano States of northern Nigeria accept Maududi's ideology. Henceforth, northern Nigeria will be used in place of Kano and Kaduna States, since they are considered representational. The impact of Maududi's interpretation of Islam on fundamentalism and conflicts is not based on majority acceptance of his ideology as the data reveals.

The researcher, in Chapter Four under the section "Why Maududi?" alluded to the direct and indirect influence of Maududi's ideology in northern Nigerian Islam. The analyzed data has affirmed this position beyond the initial expectation of the researcher, as the integration below will show. In this chapter, therefore, the analyzed data will be integrated to support this claim and show how this has impacted fundamentalism and conflicts, not only in Kaduna and Kano States, but in northern Nigeria. Also in the "Methodology" section in Chapter Five, the researcher incorporated the Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA), and its contribution would be discussed. In the section "Sources of Data for the Research" in the same Chapter Five, the researcher also indicated that some form of triangulation of data through content analysis of available materials will be conducted as a way of corroborating the influence of Maududi outside the data collected to evaluate and strengthen the credibility or authenticity of the findings. This will also be brought to bear in this chapter.

The analytical integration will start with the two emerging themes from the data, followed by the content analysis. Both triangulate the level of Maududi's influence. As a foundation for theoretical development, the concept "Selective Adoption" of Maududi's ideas would be discussed, followed by discussion on the relationship between theology and fundamentalism as they emerged from the analyzed data. After this, the impact of Maududi's interpretation of Islam on fundamentalism and conflict in northern Nigeria and the impact of his political theory would be discussed. All these are building the foundation for theoretical synthesis or development, as well as reflecting on the theoretical framework and STA.

Two Significant Emerging Themes⁵²⁴

There are two significant themes that emerge through the various opinions expressed by the interviewees, embedded in the various thematic categories analyzed above. The two significant themes are the contemporary interpretation or reinterpretation of jihad, and the centrality of a single leader in Islam. In relation to the reinterpretation of jihad, it is stressed that violent conflict is not jihad⁵²⁵ and jihad is not against non-Muslims.⁵²⁶ Jihad is "between Islam and any contradicting force that happens to pose a threat to Islam itself, not merely attacking non-Muslims."⁵²⁷ The Qur'an makes no provision to engage non-Muslims in conflict. Jihad is not synonymous to fighting.⁵²⁸ It is also acknowledged that jihad has been variously and wrongly interpreted, while in some cases exaggerated. The term militancy is one such exaggeration used to describe jihad.

The term militancy came in by the improper understanding of the Qur'anic verses that talk about war and jihad. This is a misunderstanding that has plagued both Muslims and non-Muslims, and this requires scholars to dialogue and provide the real meaning of jihad.⁵²⁹ Some Muslims have been led to partake in militant activities in ⁵²⁴ All ideas under this section and its subsequent themes are scattered across different themes. Therefore, the references in the footnotes refer to their thematic locations in the appendix 1.

⁵²⁵SRQ1/Th4/ KD8 [34990-35277]

⁵²⁶SRQ1/Th4/ KD11 [20091-20351]

⁵²⁷SRQ1/Th4/ KN2 [22033-22301]

⁵²⁸SRQ1/ Th4/ KN41 [7847-8291], SRQ1/Th4/ KN62 [29646-30472], SRQ1/Th4/KN80 [26710-27442]

⁵²⁹SRQ1/Th2.1/ KD8 [913-2336], SRQ1/Th2.4/FG2 [15092-15756], SRQ1/Th4/ KN43 [15581-15888], SRQ1/Th4/KN46 [21409-23183], SRQ1/Th4/KN67 [10309-10537], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ FG3 [4217-6572]

northern Nigeria because of this wrong interpretation of jihad.⁵³⁰ Since jihad is now accepted as a “very wide and dynamic”⁵³¹ concept, or an encompassing term,⁵³² this alludes to a contemporary reinterpretation of jihad. It appears the arrival of a new or fundamentalist interpretation of jihad specifically that of Maududi, as seen in the data, has elevated jihad to the fore as a contemporary subject of discourse and forced its interpretation or reinterpretation.

Contemporary Interpretation or Reinterpretation of Jihad

In Chapter Three, it is discussed that there are basically three main interpretations given to jihad: the personal internal struggle referred to as jihadin nafs; a defensive mechanism against aggression; and an offensive mechanism to establish Islam and, for some fundamentalists, to achieve an Islamic state. It is reported that scholars like Bennett (2004, 35) acknowledge these varieties of meaning in the Qur’an. It is also reported that several scholars aver that offensive jihad is a later development, and that some scholars have argued that the modern interpretation of jihad has been divorced from its Qur’anic significance or meaning. Nonetheless, Bennett does aver, and rightly so, that in the Qur’an three interpretations of jihad are obvious, the peaceful (progressive), moderate (defensive), and fighting (offensive) jihads (2004, 43).

In light of the responses of the interviewees in this research, Heck seems accurate that jihad will continue to be reinterpreted, and the Qur’an will always remain the touchstone of any reformulation of jihad (2004, 122), but he insists that context should be considered in all discussions on jihad. It, therefore, appears that in the context of this research, the progressive interpretation of jihad has been given a wider and broader sense than conventionally expected. This is probably in a bid to interpret jihad as the moral life of the private and public order, through the lens of faith, as Heck suggests (2004, 123). The interpretations given by the interviewees to jihad discussed below seem to strongly indicate that.

First, ibadat is now interpreted as jihad. Jihad is now interpreted as total submission to Allah’s will.⁵³³ Jihad is total obedience to the Qur’an and *Sunna*⁵³⁴ and

⁵³⁰SRQ1/Th4/ KN85 [2316-2664]

⁵³¹SRQ2/Th10.2/KD4 [43843-44995]

⁵³²SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN46 [10815-11712]

⁵³³SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD7 [10876-11451], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/FG3 [4217-6572]

⁵³⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD8 [23225-23768], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD18 [9970-10153], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD28 [14795-15102]

believing in the oneness of Allah.⁵³⁵ Jihad is having good faith expressed in a Muslim's five daily prayers and voluntary midnight prayers. It is summarized that jihad is simply the way you worship Allah.⁵³⁶ Further explanation is given that jihad is a struggle to become a good Muslim, strengthen one's faith, and get closer to God for salvation. Jihad is said to be part of the articles of faith which a Muslim must fight for.⁵³⁷ It is total commitment to fear and worship Allah in accordance to Shari'a.⁵³⁸ Jihad is recapitulated to mean "paying Zakat, like going to Mecca, like doing ibadat."⁵³⁹

Secondly, mu'amalat is also interpreted as jihad. Jihad is summarized as "how to live with people."⁵⁴⁰ It is all about building interpersonal relationships with Muslims.⁵⁴¹ Good neighborliness, being one's brother's keeper and taking care of one's parents and relatives are all considered as jihad. Preventing the spread of evil among the Umma,⁵⁴² visiting the sick and attending weddings are all forms of jihad.⁵⁴³ By and large, jihad is "good mu'amalat [with] non-Muslims."⁵⁴⁴

Thirdly, da'wa is interpreted as jihad. Jihad is helping to propagate or preach Islam.⁵⁴⁵ Jihad is wishing, for the love of Allah, that all people embrace Islam.⁵⁴⁶ Jihad is advertising, preaching, spreading and calling people to convert to Islam. It is disseminating Allah's word and making people see the beauty of Islam even through

⁵³⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN24 [7498-7559]

⁵³⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN37 [5966-6065], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN61 [5530-5594], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN65 [12440-12516], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA4 [24910-25575], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA23 [12279-12459], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA27 [5206-5277], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA31 [9265-9431], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/FG3 [27947-28757], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/FG3 [29641-31464], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD4 [5325-5964], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD17 [7690-8949], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN62 [7770-9717], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN63 [9817-11608], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN65 [7427-8373], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN66 [2607-2927]

⁵³⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN66 [2607-2927]

⁵³⁸SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN79 [4943-5233], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA6 [11583-12937], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA11 [6507-7213], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA28 [8235-8907], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA31 [4505-4947], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD17 [16573-17243], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD20 [6270-6445], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN42 [7309-7662], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN63 [18658-19374], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN65 [11799-12117], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA4 [23211-24002], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA31 [8160-8521]

⁵³⁹SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD34 [8289-8821]

⁵⁴⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN36 [3463-3618]

⁵⁴¹SRQ1/Th4/KD15 [14777-16471], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD7 [10876-11451], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA22 [8057-8524], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/FG3 [29641-31464]

⁵⁴²SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN60 [7353-8697], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN63 [9817-11608], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA7 [6425-6866], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA38 [11513-13359], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD12 [13812-14043], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD15 [9122-9705], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD33 [8511-9107], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN42 [7309-7662], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN45 [5852-6135], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN60 [14654-15197], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN80 [15125-16156], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA2 [6809-7304]

⁵⁴³SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ZA8 [20223-22240]

⁵⁴⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN79 [10417-10584], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN83 [8275-8306]

⁵⁴⁵SRQ1/Th4/KD8 [34990-35277], SRQ1/Th4/ KD11 [20091-20351], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD8 [23225-23768], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD12 [15587-15896]

⁵⁴⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD13 [5570-5733]

the social media.⁵⁴⁷ Jihad is fought through preaching.⁵⁴⁸ Islamic jihad is the da'wa of peacefully inviting people to Islam.⁵⁴⁹ This is jihad of the tongue.⁵⁵⁰ It is jihad to share one word of Allah, even to one person as Allah instructed.⁵⁵¹ Actually, “a mallam that always teaches students is a mujahid.”⁵⁵² The first jihad is calling people to the way of Allah.⁵⁵³ As simply put, “da'wa is jihad, jihad is da'wa.”⁵⁵⁴

Fourthly, acts of charity are interpreted as jihad. It is jihad to provide or give alms to the needy, pay hospital bills secretly, provide drinking water or donate blood.⁵⁵⁵ In addition, constructing roads in the society, supporting the yearnings and aspirations of people are also jihad.⁵⁵⁶ Preventing disaster or removing things dangerous to human beings, such as stopping the collapse of a building, sale of illicit drugs, alcohol and criminal activities are all jihad. It is also jihad to make “people see life [as] worthy of living.”⁵⁵⁷ Assisting displaced people, even if they are non-Muslims, is jihad.

Philanthropic jihad is compulsory because Islam cannot turn its back on the oppressed and weak.⁵⁵⁸ Indeed, “it is obligatory to be charitable.”⁵⁵⁹

⁵⁴⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD29 [8156-8318], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN1 [27183-28178], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN2 [17427-18415], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN6 [9833-10471], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN11 [11529-12060], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN39 [4637-4799], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN60 [15560-15945], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN64 [8707-8797], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA10 [14657-15012], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA20 [6588-6660], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA22 [8057-8524], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA32 [21906-25034], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/FG1 [16787-17552], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD1 [12627-14246], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD15 [3966-5293], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD15 [3966-5293], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD28 [7904-8760], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD29 [4193-4529], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD30 [6123-6843]

⁵⁴⁸SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN6 [3490-4008], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN80 [8816-9619], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA12 [3835-4095]

⁵⁴⁹SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA20 [3199-3428]

⁵⁵⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA38 [11513-13359], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD2 [8521-9031], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD8 [19462-20063], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD35 [12976-13446], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN64 [7382-7899], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN67 [5616-6128], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN74 [20993-21090]

⁵⁵¹SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA10 [13280-13614]

⁵⁵²SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA34 [15718-16614]. This term means a jihadist.

⁵⁵³SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN79 [10417-10584], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ZA8 [20223-22240], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ZA32 [25080-26036], SRQ1.2/Th7.9/KN7 [7555-7662], SRQ1.2/Th7.9/ZA34 [13343-14325], SRQ1.2/Th7.11/ZA34 [11360-12347], SRQ2/Th10.3/KD15 [25523-26291]

⁵⁵⁴SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KD6 [38624-39501]

⁵⁵⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN1 [27183-28178], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN4 [23428-24064], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN18 [18140-18608]

⁵⁵⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN22 [9286-9507]

⁵⁵⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD1 [12627-14246]

⁵⁵⁸SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD19 [6848-7858], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN4 [9548-11572], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN6 [3490-4008], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN11 [5110-5691], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN16 [2725-2871], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN46 [5158-5610], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN60 [7353-8697], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA38 [11513-13359], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD2 [8521-9031], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN46 [8956-9708], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN56 [4858-5280], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA35 [5647-6038], SRQ2/Th10.3/KD5 [22006-22522]

⁵⁵⁹SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA6 [24484-25161]

Fifthly, parental upbringing and training is interpreted as jihad. A Muslim giving his family proper Islamic orientation is practicing jihad.⁵⁶⁰ Finding lawful means of feeding one's family is conducting jihad.⁵⁶¹ The methodology a Muslim uses to guide and teach his offspring Islam⁵⁶² and put one's house in order is jihad.⁵⁶³ Sixthly, good conduct or character is also interpreted as jihad. The act of being a good person by avoiding wrong and doing what is good is jihad. Promoting the beauty of Islam to non-Muslims through good character is jihad. Jihad is to avoid corruption, stealing, cheating, fornicating and womanizing.⁵⁶⁴ Jihad is doing what is good without expecting praise,⁵⁶⁵ like obeying traffic regulations.⁵⁶⁶ Generally, partaking in all good deeds or works, actions and living by example is jihad.⁵⁶⁷

Seventhly, donating towards the development of Islam is interpreted as jihad, such as contributing towards the building of mosques, Islamiyya schools and empowering Muslims economically.⁵⁶⁸ To fight for Islam to prevail over other religions⁵⁶⁹ and do anything to uplift or elevate Islamic structures⁵⁷⁰ is jihad. Jihad is using money, wealth or properties for Islam.⁵⁷¹

Besides these seven preceding points, several other ideas have been mentioned as jihad and are summarized below. These include doing things for the benefit of the

⁵⁶⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN27 [4359-4915], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD35 [6623-8089]

⁵⁶¹SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN60 [7353-8697], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD33 [8511-9107], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KN7 [8635-9361]

⁵⁶²SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN27 [8134-8379]

⁵⁶³SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA5 [12870-13229]

⁵⁶⁴SRQ1/Th3/KN20 [9859-10304], SRQ1/Th4/KD15 [14777-16471], SRQ1/Th4/KN41 [7847-8291], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD8 [23225-23768], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD29 [8156-8318], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD34 [10529-10695], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KN2 [17427-18415], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ ZA4 [24910-25575]

⁵⁶⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA7 [11166-11495]

⁵⁶⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD35 [6623-8089], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD1 [12627-14246]

⁵⁶⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN57 [3822-4427], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ ZA6 [11583-12937], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ ZA19 [5697-6360], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA38 [11513-13359], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KD2 [8521-9031], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD5 [6372-6667], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KD15 [9122-9705], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KN56 [4858-5280], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN60 [14654-15197], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ ZA3 [9172-9649], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ ZA24 [13644-15082], SRQ1.2/Th7.9/ ZA34 [13343-14325], Th10.3/KD15 [25523-26291], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ ZA14 [5833-6069]

⁵⁶⁸SRQ1/Th4/ KD8 [34990-35277], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD1 [24568-25108], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD8 [23225-23768], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD10 [8553-8990], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD32 [11817-12121], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN8 [8577-8882], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN18 [18140-18608]

⁵⁶⁹SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD10 [8553-8990]

⁵⁷⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD25 [43939-46120]

⁵⁷¹SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN58 [17216-17246], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA16 [6856-6910], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA18 [9143-9679], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA24 [16058-16448], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ ZA37 [12287-12827], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD19 [6848-7858], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD19 [6848-7858], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN15 [5651-6327], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN27 [4359-4915], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN56 [2693-3068], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN68 [1749-1810], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD5 [6372-6667], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN55 [3827-4102], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN56 [4858-5280], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN60 [14654-15197], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KN67 [5616-6128], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA34 [15718-16614], SRQ1.2/Th7.11/ ZA34 [11360-12347]

Umma, applying democratic principles to achieve results, and engaging in dialogue and persuasion.⁵⁷² Performing one's job with excellence is also jihad. Indeed, "a teacher teaching in a classroom is a jihadist."⁵⁷³ Honoring your office, preventing oppression and corruption, and dressing in an Islamic way are all jihad.⁵⁷⁴

Taking a sword against whoever blasphemes or disrespects God and the noble prophet,⁵⁷⁵ or speaking the truth to an unjust ruler⁵⁷⁶ is jihad. Spiritual war to rid society of moral decadence or fighting against anti-Islamic practices is all interpreted as jihad.⁵⁷⁷ The struggle to acquire and use knowledge⁵⁷⁸ or to achieve academic excellence is jihad.⁵⁷⁹ So also is helping people to overcome ignorance or seek Islamic knowledge.⁵⁸⁰ Striving for general self improvement, discipline or transformation is described as jihad.⁵⁸¹ Voting for a Muslim to win an election is considered as democratic jihad.⁵⁸² It is generally argued that jihad comprises different aspects of Islamic activities. Everything done for the sake of Allah is jihad⁵⁸³ and has a reward.⁵⁸⁴ It is even stressed that books cannot contain the meaning of jihad if expatiated.⁵⁸⁵ Even saying wa iyazu billah (seeking refuge with Allah) is jihad.⁵⁸⁶ Muslims are expected to do everything as if engaging in jihad.⁵⁸⁷ Indeed, the phases

⁵⁷²SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD11 [14174-14558], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN22 [9286-9507], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN51 [38130-40462], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN34 [4549-4905], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD31 [6361-6845], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN19 [7840-8450], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN8 [7431-7788]

⁵⁷³SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD11 [13264-13750]

⁵⁷⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN51 [16944-20648], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA23 [4909-6217], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN26 [7388-8018]

⁵⁷⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN62 [20708-21077]

⁵⁷⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN78 [19618-19734]

⁵⁷⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN13 [10377-10586], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN73 [13313-13732], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN81 [9797-9898]

⁵⁷⁸SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN1 [27183-28178], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN15 [5651-6327], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN46 [5158-5610], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN56 [2693-3068], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN68 [1749-1810]

⁵⁷⁹SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA24 [6748-7927]

⁵⁸⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA29 [13517-16118], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD8 [19462-20063], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN60 [14654-15197], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA3 [9172-9649], SRQ1.2/Th7.9/ ZA34 [13343-14325], SRQ1.2/Th7.12/KD12 [10980-11370]

⁵⁸¹SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ KD33 [10546-10636], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KN6 [9833-10471], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ ZA4 [24910-25575], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA12 [6849-6871], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA26 [7054-7287], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KD17 [7690-8949], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN18 [7367-8674], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN42 [3797-4285], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KD11 [13264-13750], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/KN30 [7678-8156]

⁵⁸²SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD24 [13911-16722]

⁵⁸³SRQ1.2/Th7.2/FG3 [31556-31836]

⁵⁸⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD19 [13423-13669], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/KD20 [7677-7742]

⁵⁸⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD7 [5196-5857], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD13 [2743-2922]

⁵⁸⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD28 [7904-8760], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD32 [5264-6233], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN1 [13337-15966], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN8 [3925-4417], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN16 [2725-2871], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN20 [4200-4682], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN57 [3822-4427], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ KN58 [9013-9566]

⁵⁸⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN69 [6027-6399]

of jihad are so wide.⁵⁸⁸ It is summarized that “there are levels of jihad, personal jihad, individual jihad, community jihad, national jihad . . . there are levels at which jihad can be fought.”⁵⁸⁹

Single Leader: Central and Critical in Islam

Significant for this research is the emergence of the single leader as very central in Islam, especially as it relates to influence on fundamentalism and conflicts. In the literature review, it is argued that Islam encourages the emergence of mujtahidun,⁵⁹⁰ specifically as they are the ones qualified to deduce the law from sources through their effort (ijtihad). Maududi insists that all Muslims are mujtahidun.⁵⁹¹ Such persons automatically assume leadership because of their perceived knowledge of the sacred text, and seen to be capable of interpreting the mind of God from the sacred sources. Such ability is the prerequisite for one who is to lead the Muslim Umma. Hence the interviewees admitted the following.

Confirming the centrality of a single leader, it is said that “most Muslims in northern Nigeria are ardent followers of their leaders and scholars . . . it is what their Islamic scholars preach to them that they take into action.”⁵⁹² In addition, most students “are highly obedient to their scholars in northern part of Nigeria, that is why if anything happens [and] the leader decides to go or become a militant today, his subjects or followers . . . scholars under him . . . will also follow him towards that direction.”⁵⁹³ Consequently, it is argued that most people get involved in militant activities through their leaders. As it is stressed, people go to the mosque and listen to their respected Imam. If he says jihad means slaughtering people and Allah will reward you, followers will simply follow without examining whether that is a correct interpretation of the scripture.⁵⁹⁴

⁵⁸⁸ SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA6 [11583-12937], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA22 [3953-4511], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KN4 [20483-22365], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KN71 [18890-20077], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ZA38 [18155-18484]. SRQ1.2/Th7.10/ZA27 [5900-6517]

⁵⁸⁹ SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN52 [11653-12171]

⁵⁹⁰ Mujtahid also means one who is diligent.

⁵⁹¹ On this issue of single leader, compare this section with Maududi’s position on single leader in the third principle of an Islamic state under the section ‘Basic Principles of Maududi’s Islamic State’ in Chapter Four and the sections ‘The Ruler in an Islamic State’ and ‘Appointment of Leaders in an Islamic State’ to see how influential Maududi’s ideas are on this issue.

⁵⁹² SRQ1/Th2.1/ KN9 [1087-1589]

⁵⁹³ SRQ1/Th2.1/KN25 [2068-2816]

⁵⁹⁴ SRQ1/Th2.1/KN40 [589-826], SRQ1/Th2.4/FG2 [16830-17474]

In Islam, the leader is so central that Muslims are advised to respect and take all their cases to the Friday Imam as part of exercising Shari'a, and under no condition should they rebel against that leader.⁵⁹⁵ The reason is that the Imam will judge by the Qur'an; hence, his instructions must be obeyed because it is dealing with belief.⁵⁹⁶ The current proliferation of preachers is attributed to the absence of an Amir leading the Muslims. A central Amir will caution preachers to remain within the Qur'an and Hadith. Even the current militancy is blamed on the lack of a single leader.⁵⁹⁷

Significantly, even jihad should be conducted under a single leader, an Imam or Khalifa. Even an interpreter of a Qur'anic verse is asked for his Salaf.⁵⁹⁸ Therefore, without a caliphate and a leader, there cannot be jihad.⁵⁹⁹ Although every Muslim should be prepared to fight jihad, there must be a central, respected, learned scholar as Amir (not a sectarian Amir) to lead it and be consulted at every stage. It is not any Muslim that will ask Muslims to follow him to jihad.⁶⁰⁰ The first requirement for jihad is a learned mujtahid.⁶⁰¹ Currently, due to the lack of a central Amir, uninformed Muslims engage in islamically unauthenticated fights. Even if Muslims are oppressed by an un-Islamic government, an Amir is still required to lead Muslims in jihad al-qital (violent jihad).⁶⁰² Basically, jihad "first starts with an ideological leader,"⁶⁰³ and then it becomes a necessity for Muslims. It is when all conditions are met, with a central Amir to which Muslims owe allegiance (bay'at), that jihad can be declared.⁶⁰⁴

The centrality of a single leader is made clearer by the fact that for prayers to be acceptable, it requires a single leader. Under certain conditions, a Muslim's prayer can be incomplete if he prays alone.⁶⁰⁵ A prayer session is rendered null and void if the Imam is not in the front alone, because it sends a negative signal that there is no

⁵⁹⁵SRQ1.2/Th7.6/ KD1 [30141-31108], SRQ1.2/Th7.5/ ZA30 [35874-36209], SRQ1.2/Th7.13/FG3 [38379-39808]

⁵⁹⁶SRQ1.2/Th7.11/ ZA30 [17178-21659], SRQ2/Th9.6/ ZA19 [21086-21818]

⁵⁹⁷SRQ1/Th2.4/FG3 [25813-26340], SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KD6 [3237-4025]

⁵⁹⁸ The Salaf are the first few generations of Muslims that include Muhammad's companions (sahaba), the first generation (Tabi'un) and the second generation (Tabi'al-Tabi'un).

⁵⁹⁹SRQ1/Th4/FG3 [47409-48555], SRQ1/Th4/ZA28 [19954-20984], SRQ1.2/Th7.1/ZA17 [5870-6236], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD6 [5513-7872], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD9 [6993-7647], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KD11 [8477-9379], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN71 [21670-22282], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ZA3 [10836-10902], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ZA16 [6958-7089], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ ZA30 [34215-35729]

⁶⁰⁰SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN47 [7431-8220], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/ZA25 [6958-8046], SRQ1.2/Th7.3/ KD9 [11866-12674], SRQ1.2/Th7.4/ KD24 [31203-34445]

⁶⁰¹SRQ1.2/Th7.4/KN51 [40505-43090]. Maududi is considered as a Mujtahid.

⁶⁰²SRQ1.2/Th7.5/KD9 [15722-15911], SRQ1.2/Th7.5/KN63 [22007-23864], SRQ1.2/Th7.5/ZA25 [14607-16126], SRQ1.2/Th7.6/KD9 [18818-19269], SRQ1.2/Th7.7/KN51 [28163-30003]

⁶⁰³SRQ1.2/Th7.9/KN13 [7666-8291]

⁶⁰⁴SRQ1.2/Th7.14/ZA25 [18369-18706], SRQ2/Th13.3/KD6 [35333-35921]

⁶⁰⁵SRQ2/Th8.1/ZA32 [38855-40532], SRQ1.1/Th5.2/KN3 [13522-16381]

leader.⁶⁰⁶ Even the death penalty has to be sanctioned by the Muslim leader. It is affirmed that “once a person apostates, by law the person is to die, either by hanging or through the sword or anything, whatever means the Imam chooses or the Khalifa chooses.”⁶⁰⁷

The centrality of a single leader extends to a Muslim state. It is explained that the Muslim state must be led by a religious leader. In an Islamic state the religious and political leader is the same person. Since the time of the prophet, the Amir al-Mu'minin (leader of the faithful) is also the political leader. It is claimed that the first important thing in an Islamic state is to have a leader.⁶⁰⁸ Why knowledge of Islam is required is because the leader, whether he is called Imam, Khalifa, Amir, Sultan, vicegerent or supreme leader, is also the spiritual leader. Although all Muslims are caliphs, they must have a pious central leader to guide them.⁶⁰⁹ Hence, the person leading in the mosque is also the leader of the state.⁶¹⁰ Since Muslims believe that the only true religion is Islam, they should have one Amir worldwide.⁶¹¹

The need for a single leader is required even between two Muslims. It is emphasized that this is what Allah requires, because he knows that there is no success in the world without a leader. There must be an intermediary between God and man to ensure justice and equality. This is why an Amir is required first in an Islamic state. It is further stated that the concept of leadership is mandatory in Islam, wherever there are people. That is why essentially, as long as a Muslim is obeying Allah, he is a leader in this world.⁶¹²

⁶⁰⁶SRQ2/Th8.3/KD25 [66602-68460]

⁶⁰⁷SRQ1.2/Th7.9/KD11 [11736-12393],

⁶⁰⁸SRQ1.2/Th7.13/KN5 [12125-12705], SRQ2/Th8.1/KN67 [11179-11383], SRQ2/Th8.2/KN58 [15095-16477], SRQ2/Th8.3/KN13 [19240-20171], SRQ2/Th8.3/KN26 [16709-17312], SRQ2/Th8.3/KN58 [25871-26048], SRQ2/Th9.2/KN42 [21484-22011], SRQ2/Th9.2/KN66 [11704-11910], SRQ2/Th9.2/ZA30 [42164-42344], SRQ2/Th9.3/KD24 [47424-47973], SRQ2/Th9.3/KN5 [16908-17235], SRQ2/Th9.4/KD2 [15407-15625], SRQ2/Th9.4/KD8 [39903-40350], SRQ2/Th9.4/KD9 [24357-24389], SRQ2/Th9.4/ZA25 [24375-24573], SRQ2/Th9.4/ZA30 [41792-41851]

⁶⁰⁹SRQ2/Th9.3/ZA25 [23334-23737], SRQ2/Th9.4/KD17 [32561-32826], SRQ2/Th9.4/KD33 [16711-16753], SRQ2/Th9.4/KN13 [20234-20362], SRQ2/Th9.4/KN56 [11389-11454], SRQ2/Th9.4/KN58 [26106-26437], SRQ2/Th9.4/ZA19 [20944-21036], SRQ2/Th9.6/ZA24 [27891-28424], SRQ2/Th9.9/KD30 [44164-44454], SRQ2/Th8.1/KN17 [17909-18148]

⁶¹⁰SRQ2/Th9.4/ZA19 [20944-21036]

⁶¹¹SRQ2/Th9.9/ZA25 [46388-47001], SRQ2/Th9.5/KD32 [22516-22938]

⁶¹²SRQ2/Th8.1/KD6 [25145-25678], SRQ2/Th8.1/KN25 [14154-14857], SRQ2/Th10.1/KD24 [66623-67369], SRQ2/Th10.1/ZA25 [35083-35724], SRQ2/Th11.6/ KD16 [13582-14177], SRQ2/Th11.7/KD9 [28694-29149]

Content Analysis: Additional Sources Supporting Maududian Influence in Northern Nigeria

Due to the dearth of scholarly and published materials to examine further the influence of Maududian ideology within those intellectual writings or publications, the researcher was only able to get a compendium of Shari'a laws titled Handbook for Shari'a Court Laws and a published book by a former Bayero University lecturer in Islamic studies titled Towards Diffusing Religious Tension in the Polity: Islam and Politics in Nigeria, 1903-1983. And these are from Kano. In Kaduna, despite visiting the apex court severally, only the following titles were obtained, and they are Kaduna State of Nigeria: The Shari'a Courts (Civil procedure) Rules, 2010; Kaduna State of Nigeria: Laws Establishing Customary Courts, Shari'a Courts, Shari'a Court of Appeal and Customary Court of Appeal, and Annual Volume of the Laws of Kaduna State of Nigeria, 2001. Another book titled CAP 89 Penal Code with Northern States Federal Provision Act Cap 345 was obtained from a bookstore, which contained Penal Code with Shari'a Penal Code of Zamafara State integrated. This was found helpful and useful.

The actual northern Nigerian Penal Code was also obtained, titled Notes on the Penal Code Law: Cap.89 Laws of Northern Nigeria, 1963. However, it is discovered that the Shari'a laws obtained from Kano State are quite similar to that of Zamafara State.⁶¹³ A Kaduna lawyer confirmed to the researcher that the situation in Zamfara is the same with Kaduna State. Although these materials are analyzed below, there is a heavy reliance on the data collected through interviews. The content analysis is only employed as a means of triangulation, as the researcher indicated would be done. The analysis of the few materials is considered to provide further elucidation on the issue of Maududian influence.

The Northern Nigeria Penal Code: Seed of Islamic Revivalism

Influence can be subtle or obvious. The person being influenced might perceive the influence or not. In other words, there is direct and indirect influence, or normative and informative influence, which produces public compliance and private acceptance respectively.⁶¹⁴ It is probable that the colonial drafters of the northern Nigerian Penal Code were unaware of the influences brought to bear on them as the Penal Code was being drafted. It seems they lacked perception of the various ideological and theological variations within Islamic tendencies in Africa then. To the colonialists, Muslim laws are simply the “Muhammadan laws” (Notes on the Penal Code, 1). It is also possible that the northern Muslim leaders too were unaware of the influences brought to bear on the Penal Code as they drafted it. They were probably operating under the universality of Muslim brotherhood, although the Zamfara experience seems to suggest otherwise. Probably, they had no understanding of the Islamic philosophies and ideologies behind Sudan and Pakistan experiences, or they simply desired to align with them. In any case, it seems that this interaction with Sudanese and Pakistani Islamic experience opened the door to other Islamic ideologies not indigenous to northern Nigerian Islamic experience, as interviewees lamented in their responses above.⁶¹⁵

⁶¹³ It should be noted that Zamfara State is the first northern state to implement full Shari'a. This perhaps is the reason why Shari'a laws in the northern states simply adopted those laws without trying to reinvent the wheels. In any case, scholars from the Premier northern university (Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria) came together to produce the Zamfara Shari'a laws.

In the literature review, it is documented that Sudan and Pakistan at the period of the writing of the northern Nigerian Penal Code were under the influence of the Maududian revivalist philosophy. In the introduction found in the northern Nigerian Penal Code, in 1958, the government of northern Nigeria accepted the recommendation of a distinguished panel of jurists, who visited the region in September, 1958, for the need to reform the region’s judicial and legal system. This panel was headed by Sayyed Muhammad Abu Rannat, the Chief Justice of Sudan then. Among the panelists was Justice Muhammad Sharif, a retired judge of the Supreme Court of Pakistan, and other distinguished members. Their recommendation was that since northern Nigeria was self-governing, it needs to develop a legal system that will not discriminate against any section of the community, and which will be generally accepted throughout the region. It seems a subtle but plausible way of introducing the reign of Shari’a in the whole northern region.

The major argument was that “since the majority of the people living within the region are Muslims, it was also considered that the new system should not be in conflict with the injunctions of the Holy Qur’an and Sunna” (Notes on the Penal ⁶¹⁴ For more discussion on how people are influenced refer to Compliance, Identification and Internalization by Kelman, Herbert C. (1958), Influence: Science and Practice by Cialdini, Robert B. (2009) and Psychological Reactance: A Theory of Freedom and Control by Brehm, Sharon S. and Jack W. Brehm (1981).

⁶¹⁵ See the theme Imported Fundamentalist Islamic Teaching: It’s Influence on Muslims in Chapter Six

Code, 1), a basic Maududian fundamentalist philosophy. Therefore, knowingly or unknowingly, it appears to this researcher that the seed of revivalist fervor was sown in northern Nigeria, especially since the Maududian revivalist ideology is acknowledged to be prevalent in Sudan and Pakistan at that period. This might be significantly so, as it is stated that “after carefully considering various systems, the panel recommended that the Northern Region should introduce a Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure, based upon the equivalent of Sudan Codes, which had worked satisfactorily in a country in many ways similar to the Northern Region” (Notes on the Penal Code, 1). This probably opened the door also for many northern Muslims to be sent to Sudan and Pakistan for training in Islamic jurisprudence, as is discussed in the literature review. The return of these trainees is acknowledged to have brought changes, even by interviewees. Perhaps even the northern Nigerian leaders then were not aware that they were sowing the seed for this revivalist influence, although the researcher is doubtful, as we shall see.

With hind sight, it seems that the conclusion that majority of northern Nigerians were Muslims was reached without careful consideration of the amalgamation of minorities who were majorly pagans and increasingly Christian, even within the presumed predominantly Muslim enclaves. The colonialists’ infusion of western style Common Law seems to have watered down the Islamic law in the Penal Code, to the dissatisfaction of Muslims. Nonetheless, the draft was submitted to Muslim jurists, presided over by Mallam Junaidu (Waziri of Sokoto) in January of 1959, after its apparent speedy conclusion by December 1958, just three months after the September visit of the distinguished panelists. This seems to suggest that the Sudanese and Pakistani laws simply underwent simple modifications. However, there were protracted negotiations over the law of homicide, lasting until May 1959, before the Penal code eventually became law on 20th September, 1959 (Notes on the Penal Code, 1).

The whole Penal Code is, therefore, littered with references to Sudanese and Pakistani laws. This watered down Penal Code was considered insufficient by several Muslims then and now, even among the interviewees. This possibly necessitated the establishment of modern day Shari’a laws being introduced in most northern states today. The Zamafara State experience gives credence to this assertion, as shall be seen in the next section.

Nevertheless, the Penal Code seems to be aimed at suppressing every other form of law in existence then, and making them subservient to the Penal Code, heavily skewed towards Shari'a. Indeed, it is stated under general notes that “After the commencement of this law, no person shall be liable to punishment under any native law or custom” (Notes on the Penal Code, 10), and added under the section COMMENT that “Subsection (1) of the section provides that every person committing an offense under the Penal Code in Northern Nigeria is liable to be punished under the provision of the Code, irrespective of his race or creed” (Notes on the Penal Code, 10). This provision subjected many pagans and Christians to miscarriage of justice by several overzealous Alkali courts⁶¹⁶ in the north, some cases of which this researcher was privy to. The colonialists appear more interested in maintaining their economic agenda than providing equity to the various nationalities and religions in the north.

A bit of digression might provide more insight into this Maududian influence. The Pakistani influence also seems to reflect in the uncanny similarity between the concepts of Jama'at-i-Islami (JI) Pakistan (The Party of Islam), established by Maududi in Pakistan in 1941, whose aim was to create an Islamic state, and the Jama'atu Nasril Islam (JNI) (The Society for the Victory of Islam currently changed to The Society for the Support of Islam⁶¹⁷) founded by the Sardauna of Sokoto, the first premier of the northern region (Jami'u 2012, 207), and now presided over by the Sultan of Sokoto. This seems to reflect the influence of the revivalist fervor of Maududian ideology then. The concept for the organization of JNI was reached in 1962, after the Sardauna returned from Hajj, having contacted Muslims from other parts of the world, with the aim of having organized efforts to propagate Islam in Nigeria. In fact, in acknowledgement of this revivalist fervor and its possible Maududian impetus, JNI was established “apparently as an attempt to find ways of resuscitating the dying spirit of the jihad of Sheikh Usman Dan Fodio, but in a modern politically subtle way” (Jami'u 2012, 288). The organization now prides itself for achieving success among the Igbo tribe in southern Nigeria.

⁶¹⁶ These are local courts that administer both civil and Shari'acases because most often there were no civil courts provided in those localities except in the cities. The judge is referred to as Alkali in Hausa. This researcher was once taken before one of them accused of slighting the judge as a young man simply by asking to know who the Alkali was, but it was viewed as a slight. It took the concerted effort of distinguished personalities in the locality to resolve the case.

⁶¹⁷ The name Society for the Support of Islam is later day development. Jami'u (2012, 187) refers to the organization with this original name.

This notwithstanding, the overall past influence of the Penal Code with its Shari'a content on northern Nigeria saliently seems to have provided the impetus for the current revivalist clamor for the implementation of Shari'a in northern Nigerian states, and its application in states with Muslim minorities, as advocated even by some interviewees above.

The Zamfara State Shari'a Model as a Revivalist Benchmark

The recent clamor and eventual establishment of Shari'a laws in a majority of the northern states was sparked off by Zamfara State in north-western Nigeria. Although Zamfara State is not within the scope of this study, its Shari'a Penal Code became the benchmark, and was actually copied almost verbatim by subsequent states that followed it. In fact, that is the case with Kano and Kaduna States, with only slight changes in the mode of presentation, as mentioned earlier. The probable reason for this general adoption of the Zamfara State Shari'ah Penal Code could be that 7 consultants, all doctors from Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria, the premier university in northern Nigeria, participated in the drafting of the Zamfara Shari'a Penal Code, thus satisfying the intellectual expertise required to produce such laws.

The Zamafara State's drive towards the introduction of strict Shari'a also became the representational philosophy of the Shari'a implementation movement in the northern states. The philosophy relies on the "imperative to re-model the existing Penal Code to meet the strict test of Islamic Law" (Cap 89 Penal Code, 176), as against mere amendments. Therefore, the introduction further states,

The protagonists on the other hand, made up mainly of Muslims who insist on the full adoption of the legal system, argue, rightly so, that it takes more than mere amendment. They contend that the fact and circumstances of our colonial past, coupled with the multi-ethnic and multi-religious composition of Nigeria, had impacted much on the said Penal Code, as it does not fully represent the stance of Shari'ah Law. Thus, for example, not only were offences defined and punishments prescribed to meet the requirement and standard of the Common Law and its trappings, certain fundamental objectives of the Shari'ah Legal System (like the cultivation and protection of the collective morality of the Ummah and the deterrent objective underlying the penal system, amongst others) were disregarded with scorn (Cap 89 Penal Code, 176).

This quotation affirms the argument above that the watered down Penal Code and the colonial experience with the influences on its development, sowed the seed of revivalism in northern Nigeria, similar to Maududi's experience, or perhaps in alignment to it. The acknowledged inputs to the Shari'ah Penal Code below are very suggestive of this.

It is significant to note that in the process of establishing the Penal Code, which meets the strict test of the Islamic Law, the “inputs include visit to the Federal Republic of the Sudan and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia where we compared notes and shared in their experiences as followers of the Maliki School of Islamic Legal thought and jurisprudence” (Cap 89 Penal Code, 177). Sudan today is seen as a fundamentalist hub, while Saudi Arabia is seen as the exporter of the Wahabist ideology. Therefore, the protagonists “are determined to insist on their fundamental right, which is intended to put an end to the catalogue of sacrifices made for about a century ago with colonial subjugation of the Northern Region and attendant policies and legislation to gradually replace the Shari'ah Legal System” (Cap 89 Penal Code, 177). The consequential output of the preceding is “this Shari'ah Penal Code and the sister Shari'ah Criminal Procedure Code of Law” (Caps 89 Penal Code, 177).

The essential difference between the Penal Code of the past and the present Shari'a Penal Code adopted by Zamfara State, and subsequently by other northern states, is the elimination of all laws that are Common Laws, or rather those aspects of the Common Law not related or relevant to Shari'a laws. They are replaced by the appropriate Shari'a laws with their Islamic terminologies, in other words, the Arabic classifications and nomenclatures. According to the protagonists, “The Codes however are not applicable to non-Muslims, as a crucial ‘accommodation’ (Qur'an 2:256) and a safeguard to question the Locus standing (sic) to challenge the legality of the adoption. But the ‘fear of the unknown’ still persists without basis amongst the antagonists” (Caps 89 Penal Code, 177). The term “crucial accommodation” is noteworthy and seems to suggest a forced concession, contrary to what ought to be.

Although it might not be absolutely conclusive that the Maududian ideological influence is established through the route of the Penal Code, or even the Zamfara Shari'ah Penal Code that came after it in northern Nigeria, it cannot be justifiably and conclusively excluded as an influence, especially considering the sources and inputs to the development of the Shari'ah Penal Code. Essentially, ideas can travel and influence people without specific labels attached to such ideas, considering the earlier discussion about influence. For example, not many northern Nigerian Muslims know that the modern idea of Din wa Dawla and the concept of Islamic state have Maududian origin, but it is an ideology that is accepted as desirable, even among non-fundamentalist Muslims.

Echoes of Maududian Revivalism: Views from a Book

The evidence of Maududian influence seems to go beyond the development of the Penal Code to intellectual writing. Although it is the only relevant material available to the researcher, the book Towards Diffusing Religious Tension in the Polity: Islam and Politics in Nigeria: 1903-1983 by Sulaiman Jami'u (2012)⁶¹⁸ appears representational. However, behind the veil of the book's noble intention is the polemic on Islamic revivalism. The writer of the preface exposes this polemical direction of the author with the following comment: "Working with the fate and interest of Nigerian Muslims, Sulaiman Jami'u takes a close look at the British political manipulation, including discrimination and betrayal, which saw to the success of their hegemony over the Nigerian peoples" (p. viii). This is an apt summary of chapter three. It clearly captures the clamor for the restoration of Islam's past hegemony in northern Nigeria, although the phrase "Nigerian peoples" attempts to give it a nationalistic outlook.

The use of the word "betrayal" is a recrimination on the alleged hypocrisy of Lugard and the colonial government concerning the policy of religious non-interference, and his volte-face to be more pro-Christian (p. 77-81). Contrarily, scholars have revealed the colonialists' paternalistic posture towards Muslims by granting Muslim rulers powers to limit missionary activities, and how Islam enjoyed the greatest expansion not only in English speaking Africa but also in French speaking Africa under this colonial paternalism.⁶¹⁹ Missionaries are reported to have protested this attitude of the colonialists (Walls 2002, 97).

Nevertheless, the nostalgic reminder of the demise of Islamic governance (p. 16) and an effort to expose secularism as a fallacy of the West, all appear as an effort to establish a justification for the restoration or the establishment of Islamic governance, if not across the nation, at least across northern Nigeria (p. ix-x), and betraying a Maududian ideological influence. In this regard, chapter two focuses dogmatically on arguing the workability of the Islamic political system in Nigeria, despite its multi-ethnic and multi-religious nature, on the grounds that Islam rejects separation of politics from religion, another Maududian position, a theme that he also strongly pursues in chapter six. He finds the argument that an Islamic state or establishment of Shari'a is not viable in Nigeria as unfortunate (p. 63). One doubts if this position will help in diffusing multi-religious tensions in Nigeria.

⁶¹⁸ The author is a professor of Islamic Studies with interest in Islamic political thought.

⁶¹⁹ See Kalu (2004, 245), Falola (1998, 27), Hassan (2002), Levtzion and Pouwels (2000) and Triand (2000, 169)

In any case, the author does not contradict the researcher's position and scholarly support that the modern concretization of Din wa Dawla, its contemporary conceptualization, and the pursuit of an Islamic state as the basis for its implementation belong to Maududi, although he hints that the idea is not necessarily completely new to Islam. However, he puts Maududi together with other scholars and calls them scholars with "Traditionist Reformist view" (p. 42). He does differentiate Maududi by saying, for him, "Islam is a unique universal comprehensive system" (p. 47). He also says that Maududi advocates that the Islamic system "provides solutions to all problems of mankind; socio-religious, politico-economic, etc, but the only problem with Muslims all over the world is their failure to put into test (i.e. into practice) the legacy left for them by the prophet Muhammad" (p.297). This is a position the author strongly holds, as reflected in the forward (p. vii). Also, in several pages, he extensively rehashes Maududi's political nature of Islam and the principles of its system of government, and the author believes all obstacles to its implementation should be removed.

However, the author does not prove that one cannot remain a Muslim if he or she accepts secularism or democracy, even in his criticism of those who argue for its tenability (p. 51). He condemns pro-democracy Muslims for erring in such a belief. Clearly betraying the Maududian drive for an Islamic state, he states, "[B]ut it goes without saying that they erred in judgment by deemphasizing the need to be run by the Islamic system as a substitute to another failing system called democracy" (p. 55). He condemns all western democracies and their operators as faulty and bad (p. 55). In an extensive quotation, he elevates Maududi's critique of secularism and democracy as the epitome of clarity (p. 57).

The exposition of the author's acknowledgement of Islamic scholars, Jalal din al-Afghani, Muhammad Abduh, Rashid Rida, Danfodio and al-Maududi, as continuing where Muhammad Abdul Wahab, Hassan al-Banna and Sayyid Qutb have stopped, and that they interrogated the "materialistic/individualist plague in an effort to negotiate a space of the upholding of God and His original message" (p. xi), further subtly buttresses the Maududian revivalist direction of the book, as well as indicates his strong influence in the pursuit of an Islamic state, or in the author's idea, Islamic political system. However, he, like many others, seems unaware of the influence of Maududi over Qutb.

The above notwithstanding, one appreciates the historical anecdotes in the book, especially the analysis of religious factors in Nigerian politics in chapters four and five, particularly the interaction of western Nigerian leaders with Islam, and how Islam arrived in eastern Nigeria and its growth as well as his examples of the politicization of religion. More so is the author's treatise in Chapter Six on Islam and politics in Nigeria, which captures essential information supportive to this research. The chapter further highlights colonialism, the Anglo-Fulani pact that enshrined indirect rule in northern Nigeria, and the killing of Caliph Attahiru I and his about 700 migrating rebel community members who would not submit to colonialism, as conditions that have kept the spirit of Islamic revivalism or resurgence alive. This situation is similar to the colonial conditions that led Maududi to embrace revivalist or fundamentalist Islam, which the researcher postulates might have made northern Nigerian Muslims very receptive to his ideas.

However, the author betrays his passion for Islamic rule or state when he argues that the use of Islamic catch words by political parties, such as NPN's (National Party of Nigeria) Aminci (trustworthiness), or NEPU's Sawaba (rightness), is an indication that such Islamic awareness through party slogans connotes a "need by the majority of people in Nigeria to be governed by Islamic tenets at least in slogans" (p. 281). This use of slogans as evidence that all Nigerians, Christians and non-Muslims alike, desire to be ruled by Islamic tenets is naively simplistic.

Although the acquiescence to military political Islam might find roots in the perceived colonial injustices or repression of Islamic rule by brute military force, its contemporary manifestation, as the researcher also discussed in the literature review, seems to have roots in the growth of Muslim Student Society (MSS), which according to the author, "inspired some Islamic activities to emerge" (p. 294). In fact, in support of the researcher's position, the author says that in the 1970s the leadership of MSS fell into the hands of some radical zealous students anxious to see Nigeria run by Shari'a law, who called for its entrenchment in the constitution (p. 293). The author, like the researcher, acknowledges the influence of Maududi on MSS by saying that "Most of the books written by Maududi were accessible to the new emergent Muslim youths of the MSS of Nigeria” (p. 296), although the author expanded the motivation for this militant political Islam to the influx of other jihadist materials from four external sources, which are Ala Maududi, Sayyid Qutb, Abul Wahabi views from Saudi Arabia, and Islamic revolution of Iran. It should be noted that the researcher had discussed the influence of Maududi on two of the three mentioned sources, and his influence even in Saudi Arabia. In fact, the author also recognizes the similarity between Qutb and Maududi (p. 297).

These radical views split the MSS into two camps of pro-militant and pro-da'wa groups. The pro-militant groups believe that gradual reformation will last forever, unless something concrete is done. Belonging to the pro-militant group is El-Zakzaky, who is credited with saying that relying on gradual reformation is a “mere scholastic and academic romanticism” (p. 301). It is not clear which Muhammad the author is referring to as El-Zakzaky’s chief security man, because he fails to provide the second name. However, it should be recalled that in the literature review, the founder of Boko Haram, Muhammad Yusuf, had links with El-Zakzaky before he went his way.

Essentially, from the above content analysis, Maududian influence on fundamentalism, revivalism and religious conflicts cannot be discountenanced, especially that it corroborates what collected data reveals. This is more so if one considers the number of MSS students that have been influenced by his philosophy and ideology of revolution. These MSS students were dispersed into the society with the belief that “Islamic revolution would be successful anywhere, provided Muslims embark on it” (Jami’u 2012, 301). Even the concept of revolution in Islam is an acknowledged Maududian philosophy highlighted by the researcher earlier, and supported by Jami’u (2012, 47).

If also the intelligentsia, such as the author above, are influenced by this ideology and teach that the implementation of an Islamic state is possible in a multi-ethnic and multi-religious nation like Nigeria, one can only imagine the effect of such an ideology in the minds of less educated and less enlightened people, who follow what they say as leaders. Important also is the fact that these ideas, which can be instigative, are frozen in a book like the one discussed, in which there is evident subtle parochial tilt and penchant towards the supremacy of Islam, hidden behind historical and political verbiage.

Selective Adoption of Maududi's Ideology

As the researcher moves towards a theoretical synthesis, a foundation would be laid by discussing the concept of selective adoption of Maududi's ideology, as it emerged during the data analysis. This concept has a relationship to Leon Festinger's cognitive dissonance and dissonance reduction strategy, as shall be discussed below. The principle of selective adoption, as the researcher will also argue later, is behind the diversity of Islamic opinions expressed by the interviewees. The selective adoption in this research context means that interviewees accepted, rejected, or ignored some aspects of Maududi's ideology, or they adopted all of them.

Perhaps the major reason for this selective adoption of Maududi's ideas is captured in the comment: "I disagree with some of his fatwas because some of his fatwas, it seems, [are] . . . contradicting some of the basics of our Maliki School of Law."⁶²⁰ This could be the reason why another says, "I do agree with some while ignoring others."⁶²¹ Some accept his principle of jihad, but totally disagree with Maududi's advocacy for the use of the sword to achieve a true Islamic state, or his interpretation of jihad as physical or forceful.⁶²² There are those who agree with him that all Muslims must live by the etiquettes of Islam, but reject his methodology of achieving it.⁶²³ Some accept his concept of revolutionary jihad, but reject its interpretation to include fighting or use of arms, killing and shedding of blood.⁶²⁴ They see revolution as change. Some say they would select his works that they would recommend to others. They would even select people to recommend his works to,⁶²⁵ just to mention a few examples.

The ultimate selective adoption of Maududi's ideology is that virtually all the interviewees accept the idea of an Islamic state, but interviewees differ and give several ways by which it would be achieved. This is very clear under the section ⁶²⁰ SRQ1.2/Th6.5/ZA34 [23185-23545]. More of disagreements with Maududi can be found in SQR1.2/Th6.5.

⁶²¹ SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN84 [13781-13827], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN3 [28873-28893], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN8 [15235-15829], SRQ1.2/Th6.2/ZA34 [21998-22221]

⁶²² SRQ1.2/Th6.1/ KD4 [19955-21083], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN18 [28815-29357], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN20 [11923-11983], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/ZA22 [13638-13887], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN79 [17905-18125], SRQ1/Th2.4/KN27 [3879-4188], SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN85 [3989-4282]

⁶²³ SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN78 [30945-31777], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN71 [35123-35617], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN46 [24533-24709], SRQ1.2/Th6.5/KN35 [10942-11040]

⁶²⁴ SRQ1.2/Th7.16/KN2 [10634-10949], SRQ2/Th10.2/KD27 [25121-25409], SRQ1.2/Th7.16/KN2 [11036-11543], SRQ1.2/Th7.16/KN30 [3580-4104]

⁶²⁵ SRQ1.2/Th6.6/ZA22 [13954-13989], SRQ1.2/Th6.6/ZA23 [19229-19284], SRQ1.2/Th6.6/ZA14 [11274-11345]

“Views of Maududi’s Interpretation of Jihad” in Chapter Six and Chapter Seven that dealt with Maududi’s political theory of Islam. Some interviewees even encourage the selective adoption of ideologies and situational or contextual adaptation of ideologies out of necessity.⁶²⁶ The point being made here is to show how Maududi’s ideologies have influenced even people who do not accept all his ideologies, which widen the sphere of his influence. This is significant in the sense that the researcher will explain below how even the craving for an Islamic state increases the possibility of conflict activities.

Theology as Source of Fundamentalism

Towards a theoretical synthesis, it is also important to discuss the relationship between theology and fundamentalism. In Chapter Five, religion is seen as one of the roots of conflicts and that religion relies on ideology for its transmission. There is no doubt that theological interpretations help to shape religious ideologies. These religious ideologies shape emotions and emotions shape actions, which include conflicts. In Chapter Six, interviewees acknowledge that more Muslims in northern Nigeria are getting involved in militancy or fundamentalism. The responses addressing Sub-research Question one also shows interviewees have differentiated the causes of fundamentalism among Muslims and interreligious conflicts.

The causes of fundamentalism among Muslims are attributed to theological pedagogy or indoctrination. The way theology influences fundamentalism in northern Nigeria is through externally imported theology, partly through foreign scholarship⁶²⁷ and internal proliferation of preachers and teachers, partly influenced by imported theology. These preachers capitalize on the ignorance of Muslims in northern Nigeria. They rouse and mislead Muslims towards fundamentalist or militant activities in the name of contending for their religion. It is also acknowledged that this ignorance is not limited to followers alone, but also among the so-called Islamic preachers and teachers, who distort, misconceive, misrepresent and misinterpret Islamic teachings. In some cases, they deliberately and intentionally misguide Muslims for selfish reasons and personal gains. In addition, these externally imported theological interpretations have changed the hitherto Sunni conventional understanding of conditional forceful jihad in northern Nigeria, and tilted it towards violence and militancy, as northern Nigerian Islamic groups seek to fashion their jihadist movements in line with foreign groups. The role of sects and sectarian preaching and teaching is also acknowledged as compounding the move towards fundamentalist and militant Islam.⁶²⁸

⁶²⁶ SRQ1/Th3/KN46 [19515-21199], SRQ2/Th11.6/ZA21 [23004-23663]

⁶²⁷ Maududi’s ideology is one of the major externally imported ideologies.

Although, the interviewees relate the causes of interreligious conflicts to socio-economic, socio-cultural and socio-political factors, in line with previous researchers, majority associate interreligious conflicts to proliferation of Islamic preachers.⁶²⁹ It is even important to note that even among the reasons for the growing interreligious conflicts, theological factors are mentioned. This supports the researcher's claim that socio-economic, cultural and political factors are fodder for theologically or ideologically motivated conflicts, especially where sectarian interests are concerned. As argued, these preachers introduce religious bigotry.

The relationship between theology and fundamentalism is deepened by the fact that many Muslims listen to their preachers without reasoning out the implications of their interpretations.⁶³⁰ The section on "Single Leader: Central and Critical in Islam" in Chapter Eight adds credence to why theological interpretations can influence Muslims to both fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts, since preachers are considered to be mujtahidun (diligent independent interpreters), and Islam requires the following of a leader, and followers are willing to follow their leaders towards any direction. This agrees with the position of Karsh that, whether for sacred or profitable reasons, jihad needs an arrow head leader with ideology to drive it (2007, 24-25), and as one interviewee says, jihad "first starts with an ideological leader."⁶³¹

Therefore, a preacher can influence his followers to see other religions as enemies responsible for their poverty, or denying them religious rights and so on, and it will easily be accepted as the truth by the followers. This kind of theological preaching exploits socio-economic, cultural and political conditions and sentiments to instigate conflicts, as is often seen in the northern Nigerian context. And as emphasized by an interviewee, "No Muslim will just wake up and pick up an arm without having a ⁶²⁸ This is a summary from the views found in all the themes under the major heading Main Causes of Fundamentalism or Militancy in Northern Nigeria.

⁶²⁹ Refer to the section Proliferation of Islamic Preachers: A Source of Interreligious Conflicts in chapter six and Factors behind the Current Conflicts between Christians and Muslims in chapter eight.

⁶³⁰ SRQ1/Th2.4/FG2[16830-17474]

⁶³¹ SRQ1.2/Th7.9/KN13 [7666-8291]

leader who has put him unto that path.”⁶³² Theology, therefore, has influence on both fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts.

Another way theology is influencing fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts is through proliferation of teachers and teaching, which is promoting a high growth rate of distorted understanding of Islam through radical preaching that makes militancy a viable option. It is also these preachers that promote sectarian ideological influences, exploited by politicians to embolden Muslim youths to kill and murder fearlessly.⁶³³ In essence, socio-political factors ride on theological ideologies to foment conflicts. Sanusi is indeed very forthright in linking religious conflicts to the theological agitation for sharia implementation when he says that it is “somewhat a naïve attempt to ignore, at the very least, evidence of a strong diachronic correlation between the two” (2007, 183).

In fact, Suberu (cited in Abdu 2010) agrees that even the 1987 famous Kafanchan riots have a theological origin. Abdu referred to Suberu as arguing that “the 1987 Kafanchan riots was ignited by theological disagreement between Christians and Muslim students” (2010, 131); a squabble between the members of Fellowship of Christians Students (FCS) and MSS students, although Abdu himself does not agree that the riots had religious origin (2010, 134). He is one of the scholars that limit the riots to socio-economic and political factors. This research shows that Suberu is accurate in his position on the origin of the riots.

The Impact of Maududi’s Interpretation of Islam on Fundamentalism and Interreligious Conflicts in Northern Nigeria

In creating a theoretical synthesis, it is also critical to establish the impact of Maududi’s interpretation of Islam on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria, by marrying literature and analyzed data. The preceding section does establish the influence of theology on fundamentalism in northern Nigeria from the analyzed data, and Maududi’s interpretation of Islam is considered a major part of that imported theology.

⁶³² SRQ1/Th2.3/KD21 [2035-2333]

⁶³³ The ideas in this paragraph are summarized from themes addressing the sub-research question 1.1: How is Theology Influencing Fundamentalism in Northern Nigeria?

The Sudan and Muslim Student Society (MSS) Connection

To synthesize how Maududi influenced fundamentalism in northern Nigeria, it is important to draw attention to what Esposito says earlier in this work, that al-Banna, Qutb's Muslim Brotherhood, and Maududi's Jamaat-i-Islami "are indeed the trailblazers or architects of contemporary Islamic revivalism, men whose ideas and methods have been studied and emulated from Sudan to Indonesia" (Esposito 1999, 129). Jami'u makes a similar claim that the major external influence on MSS that propelled its growth to embrace Islamic resurgence are the "Ikhwan al-Muslimun (Muslim Brotherhood) of Egypt, the Jama'at-i-Islami of Pakistan, the Wahabbi views in Saudi Arabia, and Islamic revolution of Iran" (2012, 294).

At this juncture, it is important to synthesize the evidence of Maududi's influence on Qutb, Khomeini and Saudi Arabia to support the argument that they provide an indirect Maududian influence. Jackson (2011, 2) reveals that Khomeini found Maududi's theodemocracy fitting for Shi'a political thought, and translated his works into Farsi. Jenkins (2008), in an article, affirms that Khomeini met Maududi as early as 1963, which led to the translation of Maududi's works into Farsi, and subsequently laced his revolutionary rhetoric from Maududi's writings. The New World Encyclopedia exposes the influence of Maududi on the Saudi Arabian state and universities. It reports that Maududi was on the academic council of the University in Medina from 1962, and a member of the Foundation of the Rabitah al-Alam al-Islami (The Muslim World League) in Mecca. This is the same movement Jami'u reports as having a major influence on MSS also (2012, 297). Maududi's more detailed influence on Qutb is documented in the literature review.⁶³⁴ These movements appear to be heavily influenced by Maududian ideology and coalesced into a heavy influence on the MSS movement.

Sudan the Gateway to Maududi's Fundamentalist Ideology

It is now time to synthesize the Sudan connection and its influence on Nigerian Islam. Sudan has been heavily influenced by Maududi's ideologies since the early 1950s (Osman 2003, 465). The Ikhwan of Sudan and Nigeria took his writings as a major source for the development of their agenda for Islamic social change (Ahmad ⁶³⁴ See 'Maududi's Influence on Sayyid Qutb and Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt' in Chapter Four.

2003, 533, Falola 1998, 10). Jami'u reveals that northern Nigeria had very close ties with the Mahdi movement of Sudan, even during colonial times, and reports the colonialists' attempt to disconnect these close ties the Muslim communities of northern Nigeria had with the Mahdi movement of Sudan (2012, 81). The School of Arabic studies in Kano, attended by Gumi (the famous leader of Izala sect) and El-Zakzaky (MSS leader and founder of Nigerian Muslim Brotherhood now known as Islamic Movement of Nigeria), had a historical relationship with Sudan. Gumi later studied in Sudan also (Falola 1998, 119, 122).⁶³⁵

As documented, and as if in confirmation of Ahmad and Jami'u's claims above, the drafters of the northern Nigeria Penal Code, as early as 1958, came from Sudan and Pakistan. The later drafters of the Zamfara Penal Code also extensively consulted with Sudan. Importantly also, it was Gumi, the Grand Khadi of northern Nigeria then, who advised the Sardauna of Sokoto (Ahmadu Bello) to establish the Jama'at Nasril Islam (JNI) [Society for the Victory of Islam], with its resemblance to Maududi's Jama'at-i-Islami of Pakistan (Jami'u 2012, 288). Remember also that one major influence on Gumi was Rabitah al-Alam al-Islami (The Muslim World League) from Saudi Arabia, where Maududi was a member. It is interesting that Jami'u connects Islamic resurgence in Nigeria to the 1950s and says JNI was established for that purpose (Jami'u 2012, 288). This seems to connect northern Nigerian leaders then to Islamic resurgence. This is alluded to in the section "The Northern Nigeria Penal Code: Seed of Islamic Revivalism" above. Sudan, with its Maududian roots, has been deeply connected with northern Nigerian Islam, with attendant consequences.

MSS and the Radicalization of Maududi's Fundamentalist Ideology

Maududi's influence on fundamentalism and religious conflicts moved from the realm of ideological influence from books to militancy through the MSS. His ideologies, seen earlier, were embraced by MSS leaders and members, especially the creation of an Islamic state through revolution. Through the data analyzed and affirmed by the other sources, these ideas shaped MSS and galvanized them into action. Although, as seen above, Maududi's ideas arrived in Nigeria around the 1950s (Ahmad 2003, 533), interviewees believe it was the 1970s.⁶³⁶ An interviewee reported ⁶³⁵ It is, therefore, safe to say that Gumi had both the Maududian and Wahabbi influence.

⁶³⁶ SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [18347-19443]. This idea is also found in Jami'u (2012, 294).

the influence of Maududi on the MSS that, “Being an MSS member in so many stages, we use to have series of lectures that will tell us . . . about his writings, about his principles, about his views of Islamic politics and what have you.”⁶³⁷ Jami’u (2012, 294) also reports this influence of Maududi’s ideology on MSS students.

The 1970s are probably recognized as the period of arrival of Maududi’s literature to Nigeria by the interviewees because it coincided with what Ibrahim (1987, 71-74) and Clarke (1988, 524) report: that it was in the 1970s that a fundamentalist fervor was noticed among MSS students, and so was the adoption of a more missionary and fundamentalist approach to their activities, a fact also confirmed by Jami’u (2012, 5, 294). The MSS had over 400 branches by this period. Indeed, Ibrahim states that “Since the mid-1970s a hardcore extremist leadership has risen in both MSS national leadership structure and in the centres of Islamic radicalization in the university of Zaria, Kano, and Sokoto” (1987, 73).

The MSS students embraced Maududi’s ideology of creating an Islamic state as a panacea for ameliorating Muslim problems, especially religious decay and moral decadence (Jami’u 2012, 293). Ibrahim (1987, 71-74), Jamiu (2012, 301), Clarke (1988, 524) and Ousman (2004, 77) recognize the role of MSS in embracing militancy and martyrdom as the process of establishing an Islamic state. This militancy is also reflected in the fact that MSS students were accused of carrying out the first interfaith conflict of 1982 in Kano (Crisis Group 2010, 13). However, it is clearly the MSS students who sparked the conflict of 1987 in Advanced Teacher’s College, Kafanchan, which snowballed across the whole northern region and became the benchmark for all subsequent interfaith conflicts.

The MSS acceptance of revolution as the pathway to achieving an Islamic state tallied with Maududi’s ideology that an Islamic state cannot succeed without Islamic revolution (1980, 5, 9, 22; cf Enayat 2005, 102; Nasr 1996, 70; Armanjani 2012, 169-171; Jackson 2011, 146; Haddad 1983, 17-19). However, there was a split within MSS. Some preferred the path of revolution to establish an Islamic state because, as El-Zakzaky said, gradual reformation is a “mere scholastic and academic romanticism” (cited in Jami’u 2012, 301-303). Under the leadership of this radical MSS leadership, the MSS within northern universities, especially Ahmadu Bello

⁶³⁷SRQ1.2/Th6.2/KN71 [34346-34669]

University, had several conflicts and clashes with the university authorities and government over Shari'a issues.⁶³⁸

El-Zakzaky and several MSS leaders were arrested and detained by state authorities severally, and eventually he and several other students were not permitted to graduate from Ahmadu Bello University. This dismissal and detentions made them popular among their fellows, and they gained sympathizers and followers among the youths in the society (Jami'u 2012, 303). El-Zakzaky and several others would eventually form their own movements,⁶³⁹ and the revolution moved from the campus into the society with dire consequences. This also coincided with the Iranian revolution. It stressed the possibility of achieving an Islamic state through revolution, and gave a major push to the movement for the creation of an Islamic state through revolution. It is even safe to say that the Iranian revolution was influenced by Maududian ideology, considering his influence on Khomeini, seen above.

Ibrahim (1991, 123), Sanneh (2003, 240) and Sanusi (2007, 177) reveal that initially these militant reformers were a united MSS, but later split to be composed of educated middle class elements. Many of these became leaders, preachers and scholars that ignited the proliferation of preachers, reported in Chapter Six, to be sources of conflicts. Like El-Zakzaky, they garnered followers and continued disseminating these fundamentalist ideas in the society. This seems to account for the strong presence of Maududian ideologies among interviewees. Considering that the Boko Haram leader was once part of El-Zakzaky's movement, as reported earlier, it is plausible to say that Boko Haram is part of the continuing breakaway of radical groups. Remember also that in Chapter Two, Maududian ideology is identified as part of Boko Haram's philosophy. Interviewees say its leader broke away to start preaching, and that he is also an admirer of Maududi, referred to as jihadist.⁶⁴⁰ According to Falola (1998, 3), the anti-proselytization war, a source of conflict,⁶⁴¹ started also with radical Islamic students in northern Nigeria. Anti-proselytization is a strong Maududian ideology (1981, 32, 73).

⁶³⁸ It is only through this research that the researcher came to understand the influence and motivation behind these conflicts and clashes with MSS students in universities and higher institutions in the late 1970s and early 1980s before they snowballed into the society as a whole in the late 1980s.

⁶³⁹ As reported earlier, Kalu 2004, Alao (n.d.). Sanneh (2003, 237) and Christelow (2002, 197) all acknowledged the role of El-Zakzaky in Islamic radicalization in northern Nigeria.

⁶⁴⁰SRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [20527-21373] see alsoSRQ1.1/Th5.1/FG3 [21377-21875]

⁶⁴¹ See 'Operation of Religious Propagation in an Islamic State' and 'Conversion as a Major Source of Interreligious Conflicts' in Chapter Eight as well as SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KN61 [15170-15264],SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KN85 [31420-31708], SRQ3.2/Th18.4/KN82 [28926-29039]

As it is seen above, fundamentalism starts with ideology and transforms into militancy. Jami'u's position above that Shari'a can be implemented in a multi-religious Nigeria (2012, 63), a Maududian position that a modern state could be efficiently run by Islamic principles (Ushama and Osmani 2006, 96), is fundamentalism awaiting future radicalization. Clarke is right that differentiating fundamentalists and moderates in northern Nigeria, when it comes to the issue of an Islamic state, is difficult. Both groups will love to see Nigeria become an Islamic state (1988, 532). This position is virtually taken by all interviewees. Ayubi is spot on that "The now widely held opinion among Muslims that Islam is both 'a religion and a State' (Din wa Dawla) is a measure of the extraordinary intellectual influence of the modern fundamentalist thesis on mainstream Muslim opinion" (1991, 3).

The Impact of Maududi's Political Theory

The preceding section has addressed how Maududi's ideology has influenced fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria in specific terms. However, it is necessary to give a synoptic view of the impact of his political theory of Islam as a whole in northern Nigeria. In doing so, it is important to note that the views interviewees express in "Colonial Experience and Politicization of Jihad" in Chapter Six, the views in "The Northern Nigeria Penal Code: Seed of Islamic Revivalism," "The Zamfara State Model as a Benchmark" and "Echoes of Maududian Revivalism: Views from a Book" agree with the researcher's position that conditions caused by colonial experience made northern Nigerian Muslims receptive to Maududi's political theory of Islam,⁶⁴² just like it made Maududi embrace fundamentalism in India. Actually, Jami'u reports that these conditions made MSS to embrace Maududi's principles of revolutionary jihad as a means to achieve an Islamic state and reform northern Nigerian Islam (2012, 293 cf 277-278, 287-288).

In addressing the impact of Maududi's political theory of Islam, in light of the data analyzed, there is no doubt that his major ideology with the greatest impact is the concept of an Islamic state, especially if you look at the theme 'Din wa Dawla' and its sub-themes in Chapter Seven. Almost the whole chapter is an analysis of interviewee reactions to various aspects of Maududi's political theory. There is hardly any interviewee across the diverse themes who did not agree that Muslims need an Islamic state, even if the multi-religious condition in Nigeria makes it difficult to be achieved,⁶⁴³ or it is not required for Muslims to practice Islam, or it should not be achieved through physical jihad.⁶⁴⁴ Mostly the divergence is how it should be achieved. Selective adoption has been discussed above.

⁶⁴² See Maududi's Ideology and Its Receptivity in Northern Nigeria

However, there are those who accept Maududi's position that jihad al-qital (forceful jihad) is the path to achieve an Islamic state⁶⁴⁵ and that it is necessary for Islam to prevail.⁶⁴⁶ Islamic state is required to practice pure Islam,⁶⁴⁷ eliminate corrupt practices⁶⁴⁸ and preserve Islam globally.⁶⁴⁹ It is even argued that the existence of an Islamic state presupposes jihad has taken place. The data also clearly affirms Clarke's position that, realistically, both moderate and fundamentalist Muslims will love to see Nigeria become an Islamic state (1988, 532). Largely, the craving for an Islamic state among interviewees is overwhelming, an indication of the extraordinary influence of Maududi's ideology of Islamic state.⁶⁵⁰

Overall, on Maududi's other aspects of political theory, there is no aspect in which some level of acceptance to his ideology is not found. A few examples will suffice. The Maududian claim that Islamic state is universal and all embracing finds acceptance, so is the understanding of Umma as a universal caliphate transcending national boundaries. That Islamic state is not a democracy and that it is a panacea for all Muslim problems is also accepted by many,⁶⁵¹ so also is the acceptance that man is a vicegerent of God. Other principles like who should rule in an Islamic state, Islamic state does not accept election or electioneering, and that it is polytheism to submit to secular authorities, all are accepted by many interviewees. Even his modern concept of jahiliyya finds some acceptance. One needs to compare his ideology, captured under "Maududi's Political Theory of Islam" and its sub-sections in Chapter Four with the analysis in Chapter Seven to see the extent of his influence.

⁶⁴³ See the section 'The Rights of Northern Nigerian Muslim Majority to Impose Sharia' in chapter seven. There are those who say even in multi-religious set up, Islamic state can be established.

⁶⁴⁴ SRQ1.2/Th7.13/KD26 [12467-12832]

⁶⁴⁵ SRQ1.2/Th7.13/KD9 [17714-18733]

⁶⁴⁶ SRQ1.2/Th7.10/KD10 [11276-11638]

⁶⁴⁷ See Maududi 1980, 19

⁶⁴⁸ See Maududi 1964, 11

⁶⁴⁹ See Maududi 1980, 9 and also the section Islamic State as a Requirement to Practice Islam in chapter Seven.

⁶⁵⁰ The variety of these views can be found in the several thematic elements under the section 'Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad' in chapter six.

⁶⁵¹ See the theme 'Jihad and Islamic State: A Solution to all Muslim Problems.'

Another major influence of Maududi is the concept of jihad. It should be noted that as captured in the responses, a lot of the interviewees hold the classical orthodox Sunni Maliki concept of jihad as mainly defensive against aggression, since fighting people because they are not Muslims is contrary to the Qur'an 2:256 (Al-Dawoody 2011, 78). Offensive jihad is only called by the state through consensus.⁶⁵² There is no individual vigilantism, like Maududi advocates. However, across the responses, Maududi's notion of offensive and defensive jihad clearly emerged.⁶⁵³ Reading through the responses, it might appear as if Maududi's position on jihad is not accepted by the majority of the interviewees. However, that might not be the case. Like Maududi, most of the interviewees agree that jihad is obligatory to all Muslims, and their general views on jihad are not contrary to Maududi's summarized view that jihad entails the use of "one's tongue, pen, wealth, life and every other available weapon."⁶⁵⁴ Similar views have been recorded by several interviewees.⁶⁵⁵ This is possibly responsible for the diverse views on jihad. Although Maududi did emphasize the use of forceful jihad, not only for achieving an Islamic state, but to eliminate un-Islamic and non-Muslim practices,⁶⁵⁶ hinder non-Muslims from administering state affairs, and as a corrective force in Islamic society,⁶⁵⁷ among many others, he did not limit jihad to the use of force, as seen above. Therefore, the views expressed under "Contemporary Interpretation or Reinterpretation of Jihad" above, are not necessarily contrary to Maududi's position on jihad. In fact, a lot of views support it. This might just be the contextualization of his views within the Sunni Maliki experience, expanding his interpretation, or selective adoption of his position.

Maududi's influence is not that he emphasized forceful jihad, and that a good number accept it; it is that he popularized jihad and its discourse among Muslims globally, and this is true even in northern Nigeria, including popularizing forceful jihad as a viable alternative, as the analyzed data reveals. In fact, the analyzed data does agree with the initial opinion of the researcher in the introduction of Chapter Four. This opinion is that the passion for an Islamic state is present among Muslims of northern Nigeria, and jihad, both militant and non-militant, seems to be the preferred

⁶⁵² Even during the Abassid period when Jihad became more offensive (Huda 2010, 48), it was a more state expansionist drive characteristic of the that period.

⁶⁵³ SRQ1.2/Th7.2/KN78 [10929-11646]

⁶⁵⁴ Commentary 67 on sura 25:52 in Taflim al-Qur'an

⁶⁵⁵ See the themes 'Instrument of Jihad' in Chapter Six.

⁶⁵⁶ See the theme 'Necessity of Jihad in Modern Northern Nigeria' as additional support of this.

⁶⁵⁷ See the theme 'Forceful Jihad to Eliminate Corrupt and Un-Islamic Practices.'

instrument or route to achieve the desire for an Islamic state. This agrees with Maududi's stance as seen earlier. Since this section is just a summary, it might require comparing the sections "Maududi's Qur'anic Interpretation of Jihad and Fighting" and "Jihad, Fighting and Apostasy in Maududi's Works" with its sub-sections in Chapter Four and the responses of interviewees in Chapter Six under the main theme "Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad" and its sub-themes, to see how Maududi has influenced discourse on jihad.

All the foregoing is not claiming that the data has confirmed that all or majority of the interviewees have accepted Maududi's fundamentalist ideology, although his varied influences cut across most of the interviewees, as the data reveals, especially that more of them know him. As can be seen, fundamentalism and conflicts began with a few MSS students indoctrinated by Maududian ideology, and it spread into the society till this day. Experience has shown that conflicts do not sometimes originate from the larger majority in the society. A few individuals can ignite wide spread social unrest and hold the general society captive. This is the historical experience in all interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria.

Although the researcher has revealed possible institutional influence, through the process of developing the Penal Codes, both past and present, the impact of Maududi's ideology on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria is not necessarily that all Muslims acknowledge his ideas, but that it is critically through individuals or small groups of individuals, sufficiently indoctrinated as in the case of MSS. This tallies with the role of proliferation of Islamic preachers as source of fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts, and affirmed by the views expressed in the section "Single Leader: Central and Critical in Islam." It must be even admitted that Maududi's ideology might not be the only influence on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria, but from the analyzed data and in addition to the content analysis, Maududi's ideology is a major influence.

Clash of Fundamentalism and Orthodoxy: The Root of Selective Adoption

The entire foregoing captures the influence of Maududi's interpretation of Islam, or more specifically his political interpretation of Islam, on fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. This makes it clear that Islam in northern Nigeria has evolved from its Sunni Maliki understanding of Islam. It is safe to say that from history, and if one excludes the jihad wars of Danfodio, Islam in northern Nigeria was generally pacifist before and after colonialism, with only internal wrangles until 1970s when resurgent or fundamentalist Islam emerged (Bala 2006) to introduce militancy and interreligious conflicts. This has been supported by the data analysis presented above.⁶⁵⁸ A number of scholars agree that the Danfodio jihad was conducted more for internal religious reforms, with secondary political and economic motives (Fwatshak 2006, 260-26; cf Falola and Heaton 2008, 12). The major fundamentalist influence is that of Maududi, as indicated above, both direct and indirect, which first exerted its influence on MSS before spreading into the society.

Although the data still reveals that a great number of Muslims in northern Nigeria are adhering, or desire to live in accordance with the pacifist stance of the orthodox Sunni Maliki philosophy, fundamentalist thought has eaten deep into the fabrics of that philosophy. Both pacifist and fundamentalist voices can be strongly heard. In fact, from the responses, many oscillate between orthodox views and fundamentalist views, depending on the subject of discussion, as seen across the themes. This diversity of positions can be condensed into three tendencies. The researcher refers to them as the pacifists, moderate fundamentalists and pure fundamentalists. The pacifists are those with strong attachment to their Maliki pacifist philosophy, except under aggression. The moderate fundamentalists are those who strongly believe Islam can only exist peacefully with others under conditional truce, but can use instant offensive jihad to retaliate in the face of aggressive behavior towards Muslims, or stop defamation and derogation of Islam.⁶⁵⁹ The pure fundamentalists are those who believe that Islam must always be on the offensive, and jihad is the instrument to institute and enforce Islamic rule through the introduction of an Islamic state, with local and global ramification for unification of the Muslim Umma.

There are possibly three reasons why this diversity emerged. First, this diversity could be as a result of already contextualized Maududian ideologies that came from Sudan, Egypt, Iran and Saudi Arabia. As people contextualize, they also bring in their indigenous understanding.⁶⁶⁰ Secondly, it could also be the attempt by these Muslims to contextualize the various positions proffered by Maududi. Thirdly, as mentioned earlier, it could be the process of selective adoption of Maududi's ideas. The data appear to favor selective adoption than the other two. As mentioned earlier, selective adoption goes through the process referred to as cognitive dissonance, a theory developed by Leon Festinger (1957), and still being applied today.

⁶⁵⁸ The interviewees aver in 'Imported Fundamentalist Islamic Teaching: Its Influence on Muslims' in Chapter Six that these fundamentalist teachings are not part of the Islamic history and experience of Hausa land before the 1970s and 1980s.

⁶⁵⁹ See the theme 'Agreement or Disagreement with Maududi' in Chapter Six.

⁶⁶⁰ Coe, Shoki. 1974. Theological Education: A Worldwide Perspective. Theological Education 11, no.1 (Autumn): 5-12 is a helpful source on contextualization.

The theory postulates that people undergo discomfort or mental stress when they are confronted by new information that conflicts with their existing beliefs, ideas or values. This could also occur if a person holds two or more views contradictory to his beliefs, ideas or values at the same time, or performs an action that is contradictory to one or more of his beliefs, ideas or values. The theory expands further that because people seek consistency between their expectation and reality, they engage in a process of dissonance reduction to bring their cognitions and actions in line with one another. The footnote below explains this process of dissonance reduction.⁶⁶¹

The arrival of the Maududian fundamentalist ideology created this cognitive dissonance as one person admits. He says that for a northern Nigerian Muslim, "his [Maliki] teachings are basically the ideal teachings of Islam, but because of imported knowledge . . . it tends to create a rift and it tends to create controversy between what he initially believes in and what he learns from the imported knowledge."⁶⁶² The oscillation between orthodox and fundamentalist ideas mentioned above also indicates cognitive dissonance and the process of dissonance resolution. Selective adoption, therefore, is the process where through dissonance reduction, northern Nigerian Muslims select Maududi's ideas and bring them in line with or modify their earlier held Sunni Maliki ideas. Some quick examples of a variety of these dissonance reduction strategies will help. For example, for some, an Islamic state is necessary, but not through physical or militant jihad. Although it is required, an Islamic state through jihad is not necessary since it is not required for Muslims to practice Islam. Islam is a religion of peace; it cannot engage in revolutionary jihad. The Qur'an says there is no compulsion in religion; therefore, it is contradicting the Qur'an to kill an apostate, and that physical jihad is not necessary because the Qur'an preaches peaceful jihad. This selective adoption produces the diversity of Islamic opinions found in the context of a single state, like it is seen in this work.

⁶⁶¹The ways people adopt to reduce this dissonance is to change their behavior, action or cognition; justify or rationalize the behavior, action or cognition; justify the behavior or action by adding a new cognition or information or ignore/deny any information that conflicts with the existing belief. For example, if a person enjoys eating hotdogs and comes across the information that eating hotdogs will make him obese, he might behave in four possible ways. He might stop eating hotdogs, justify eating hotdogs by saying he is allowed to eat hotdogs once in a while, say he will eat the hotdogs and spend 30 extra minutes in the gym to burn it off or say it is not true that hotdogs will make him obese.

⁶⁶² SRQ1.1/Th5.1/KN9 [2447-2909]. See also the theme 'Agreement or Disagreement with Maududi' in Chapter Six.

From this experience, one can extend this theory to say that when fundamentalist ideology arrives in a context where Islamic orthodox ideology reigns, it clashes with that existing orthodoxy. Orthodoxy in this context is the existing Sunni Maliki ideology. The clash between fundamentalist ideology and orthodox ideology produces cognitive dissonance. Cognitive dissonance triggers dissonance reduction and leads to selective adoption. It is this process of selective adoption that produces diversity of Islamic views. This process also triggers what one would refer to as the fundamentalization or radicalization of the orthodoxy. This is the process where the community through selective adoption begins to internalize fundamentalist ideologies and starts acting on them, as seen in the analyzed data.⁶⁶³ It is possible, therefore, to expect that wherever fundamentalist ideology clashes with orthodox ideology, it will trigger the process of fundamentalization or radicalization of orthodoxy, with consequences on Muslim-non-Muslim relations.

It is interesting that the data reveal that both moderates and fundamentalists agree on the desire for an Islamic state. They only differ on how it would be achieved. They all also agree that jihad is a requirement for all Muslims. They only differ on what is considered as jihad, and how it should be carried out. They also generally agree on the pillars of Islam and the articles of faith. Often, fundamentalist and moderate Muslims pray in the same mosque. However, it is important to note that the data establishes that not all Muslims in northern Nigeria believe in violence or militancy. In fact, more express pacifist views.

Fundamentalist Ideology: The Pathway to Collective Violence.

It is also important to address the theoretical framework developed in the “Methodological/Theoretical Perspective” section of Chapter Five. It is discussed how religion is linked to conflict by the ideology infused into it. Religion as an independent cultural force only holds a tendency to become a threat to other cultural and political powers, but cannot make religious violence inevitable (Wellman, Jr. and Tokuno 2004, 295). As discussed earlier also, it is only when it is infused with values and ideas that it can accentuate the “otherness” of others, as it facilitates prejudice,

⁶⁶³ See the theme ‘Reaction to Tragedy in Religious Conflicts’ in Chapter Seven hostility and violence (Silberman 2005, 535). A religion can, therefore, turn from peaceful to violent by the kind of ideology infused into it, and the kind of emotions it generates.

Azzam (2006, 1119, 1121) believes that fundamentalist Islam has harnessed feelings of anger and sense of humiliation across different ideological and political groups in the Muslim world. This is clearly the situation in northern Nigeria, supported by the analyzed triangulated data. The analyzed data also agrees with Munroe and Kreidie (1997) that there is a cognitive influence to Islamic fundamentalism. The preceding section makes that clear and the fact that theological influence is a cognitive influence. It is seen above that theological influence on fundamentalism has been supported in this research. Therefore, it is correct to say that the analyzed data supports the theory examined in this research that an ideology can create the propensity for collective violence especially when supported by relational and cultural distance, functional independence and inequality. This can happen when an ideology in culture (religion) emphasizes “otherness” and is internalized as an individual or collective system of meaning (Silberman 2005, 535) as well as when it also corresponds with the social and psychological needs of a group or people (de la Roche 1996).

The researcher begins to address this from the last part of this theory. From the literature review and the data analyzed, there is scholarly evidence and research data to support the fact that the social and psychological need of Muslims during and after colonial experience is to restore the purity of Islam and the hegemony of Islamic rule and cultural practices existing before the coming of colonialism in northern Nigeria. The fundamentalist ideology manifested in northern Nigeria, especially the Maududian ideology,⁶⁶⁴ evidently around the 1970s. This fundamentalist ideology eschewed gradual transformation to achieve Islamic rule and restore Islam to its pristine glory. At least that is the path chosen by MSS students. Therefore, it is acceptable to say that this ideology created the propensity for collective violence.

Also the ideology that encourages the rejection of other forms of socio-political order by northern Nigerian Muslims or Muslims elsewhere, such as democracy, definitely supports relational and cultural distance between Muslims and non-⁶⁶⁴ The Maududian ideology is receiving prominence because as mentioned earlier, the so-called Wahbbi influenced Izala sect, although it is shown that it also had Maudidian influence, majorly focused on internal reformation of Islam rather than external interreligious confrontation like the MSS Maududi inspired radicalism.

Muslims. More so, when it insists that Islamic state and Shari'a can be instituted in a multi-ethnic and multi-religious set up like Nigeria in order to achieve Din wa Dawla, a fusion of religion and state. This accentuates functional independence and inequality between the two groups and emphasizes “otherness.” This “otherness” is even aggravated by the concept of Dar el Islam and Dar el Harb and such other ideologies as the pursuit of Shari'a implementation, rejection of non-Muslim leadership, and global dominance of one religion over others.⁶⁶⁵ All these are internalized as an individual or collective system of meaning. Since these ideologies correspond with the social and psychological needs of Muslims in northern Nigeria, it therefore created the propensity for collective violence that has been experienced and is being experienced today in order to meet these needs.

Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA): The Unearthing of Muslim Ordinarity

This research has also been enriched by integrating Kim’s STA (2014, 183). It helped in designing the research enquiry to examine how northern Nigerian Muslims understand conflict and react to it. To implement the approach, the research first examined the sacred texts and scholarly positions on conflict through the eyes of jihad and fighting. Then through ethnographic field interviews, opinions of northern Nigerian Muslims on their understanding of conflict and reaction to it was obtained and analyzed. The researcher used integrative interdisciplinary approach to analyze the themes that emerged. The researcher analyzed the data through the application of social psychology, communication theory, religio-political and anthropological perspectives.

It emerges that the northern Nigerian Muslims’ understanding of conflict is not essentially different from the ordinary conventional sociological or academic understanding of conflict, in spite of their being Muslims.⁶⁶⁶ Even the description of conflict as altercation resulting from violation or disrespect for Muslim values⁶⁶⁷ is not contrary to what is acceptable as source of conflict by the earlier discussion on the relationship between religion and conflict. This agrees with Kim's postulation that,

⁶⁶⁵ Such ideas would be found in themes like ‘Universal Caliphate and its Operation’, ‘Meaning of Dar el Islam and Dar el Harb’, Sharia Implementation and Muslim Obedience to Secular Government, Implementation of Sharia across Nigeria, Separating Western Culture from Modernization, and Non-Muslims’ Rejection of Sharia Grounds to Leave Islamic State’ in chapter seven ⁶⁶⁶ See the theme ‘Explaining Conflict’ in chapter eight.

⁶⁶⁷ SRQ2.2/Th15.1/KN2 [41479-41709]

. . . the ordinariness is common humanness that makes people truly human, and even highly religious or intellectual people possess the same. Their highly ideological understanding and knowledge does not eliminate human ordinariness since it is an intrinsic element of humanness. Ordinariness thus always remains within the person's mind as a common human propensity not withstanding any seemingly extraordinary tendency that has been built and developed through external influences . . . Even committed religious leaders are only the people whose ordinariness has been empowered by religious doctrines (2014, 180-181).

Considering that this research focused on leaders and intellectuals, their responses confirms the quote above. Furthermore, the way northern Nigerian Muslims react to conflict is not also different in the diverse ways people generally have reacted to conflicts. They retaliate, runaway and seek refuge, seek for solution, mediate, are traumatized or hurt, and so on.⁶⁶⁸ It also emerges that the specific ways northern Nigerian Muslims are affected by conflicts are not essentially different from the way all humans are affected by conflicts generally. Muslims are also killed, with their properties destroyed, and they experience starvation and are displaced. Basic socio-economic and socio-political activities are disrupted among Muslims. They also develop suspicion and distrust of other faiths, leading to dislocation of interpersonal and interfaith relationships. They are also affected psychologically as they experience claustrophobia, nightmares and temperamental changes, and so on and so forth.⁶⁶⁹

However, in handling conflicts and tragedy, more Muslims resort to religion than other conventional means. Muslims see tragedy and conflict as something ordained from Allah, which is Qadar (destiny) and cannot be avoided. One of the coping mechanisms they employ is praying to Allah for reprieve. Where loss of life and property is experienced, most will recite the religious dictum inna lillahi wa inna ilayhi raji'un (from Allah we came and to him we shall return) and pray for forgiveness of sin for the dead. However, there are some radical or fundamentalist views expressed by a younger generation of university going age, who will seek destruction of the perpetrators.⁶⁷⁰ Others would not forgive. They will tell their children so as to preserve the memory and would be unfriendly and aggressive against ⁶⁶⁸ See the theme 'General Experience and Reaction to Conflicts' in chapter eight.

⁶⁶⁹ See the theme 'Effects of Experienced Religious Conflicts' in chapter eight.

⁶⁷⁰ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/FG1 [47495-47560]

people responsible.⁶⁷¹ Some are more volatile, that if they have the opportunity they will not spare any life,⁶⁷² but will seek vengeance.⁶⁷³ This might reveal why, contemporarily, younger Muslims are more prone to engaging in conflicts and probably reveal the shift in indoctrination.⁶⁷⁴ The two approaches above agree with what is referred to as positive religious coping and negative religious coping respectively (Travino and Pargament 2007).⁶⁷⁵

Although the term “ordinary Muslims” is not used in this study because it is delimited to leaders and intellectuals, the result reveals that there is a sense in which every Muslim is an ordinary Muslim when it comes to practice of his religion. This ordinariness comes out in the way these Muslims understand, react and handle conflict. The practice of religion seems to make all people, not only Muslims, ordinary people. For example, the reported principle of al-Muslim ahul Muslim (the Muslim is a brother to a Muslim),⁶⁷⁶ when it comes to handling experiences, eliminates class distinction and renders every Muslim an ordinary Muslim no matter what his or status is. Therefore, in application of religious principles, every Muslim becomes equal to every other Muslim, hence, made ordinary.

This is why a graduate, in spite of his qualifications, can become a terrorist as a result of his/her attempt to satisfy hi/her “ordinary” desire to submit to God and fight for him. This is more so if he or she is indoctrinated with a fundamentalist belief system. It is the simple belief that all must work out their salvation⁶⁷⁷ in order to get to heaven or paradise irrespective of status. This is even accentuated in the belief that death makes all equal and in the presence of Allah, there is no social or intellectual status. In line with the immediate past discourse, what the data reveals is a confirmation of Kim’s STA that most Muslims are ordinary people who live ordinary lives and desire to live normal peaceful lives and meet their needs like other human beings irrespective of religious affiliation. The difference perhaps, as the analyzed data also reveals, is the kind of indoctrination that shapes the activities of specific Muslims. This further makes clear the critical role played by theological

⁶⁷¹ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/KN59 [50234-51014]

⁶⁷² SRQ2.2/Th15.4/FG2 [26518-26675]

⁶⁷³ SRQ2.2/Th15.4/KN10 [25772-25926]

⁶⁷⁴ See the themes ‘Handling Religious Conflicts’ and ‘Reaction to Tragedy in Religious Conflicts’ in chapter eight.

⁶⁷⁵ Also refer to Pargament (1997) for treatment of how people use religion to cope with trauma.

⁶⁷⁶ SRQ2.1/Th14.2/KN14 [30410-30523]

⁶⁷⁷ Muslims also use the term “salvation” to mean entrance to heaven or Jannah.

indoctrination in motivating Muslims to violence, without it they are simply ordinary people like everyone.

Summary

In this chapter, it is seen that jihad is reinterpreted by Muslims to encompass all aspects of worship and morality, socio-political relations and responsibility, human and interpersonal relations and physical fight. Single leadership emerges as not only crucial and critical in Islam, but also in fundamentalist or militant activities. Content analysis also reveals that outside the collected data, there is strong evidence of Maududian influence in northern Nigeria. Analysis of data also reveals a selective adoption of Maududi's ideologies by interviewees. Data also reveal that there is a strong relationship between theology and fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. It is also seen that Maududi's ideology or interpretation has a major influence on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria, through the route of Sudan and the Muslims Student Society (MSS), and that, on the whole, Maududi's political theory of Islam has a strong influence in northern Nigeria.

Furthermore, a theory emerges that the clash between fundamentalist and orthodox ideology triggers cognitive dissonance, which through dissonance resolution process leads to selective adoption that produces diversity of Islamic views, and this has consequences on Muslim and non-Muslim relations. It is also reported that data has supported the theory that fundamentalist ideology creates the propensity for collective violence, especially when supported by relational and cultural distance, functional independence and inequality. This happens when an ideology in culture (religion) emphasizes "otherness" and is internalized as an individual or collective system of meaning (Silberman 2005, 535) as well as when it corresponds with the social and psychological needs of a group or people (de la Roche 1996). Finally, it is shown that the Synthetic Triangular Approach exposes the ordinariness in Muslims, including those holding a fundamentalist idea. It has revealed that the way Muslims understand and react to handle conflicts is mostly not different from how other human beings do.

CHAPTER TEN

CONCLUSIONS

Introduction

Some decades ago, Hoover, the then American Secretary of Commerce said, “Research, development and engagement in science is an engagement in the elaboration of truth, the discovery of truth” (1926, 181). This timeless truth about research, including this one, is not contradictable. However, it is also true, as Willits argues, that similar to the Malthusian law which says that “population tended to increase in a geometrical ratio and the means of subsistence only in an arithmetical ratio . . . our problems in the economic and social fields are increasing in a geometrical ratio, man’s means of understanding and meeting them are increasing only in an arithmetical ratio” (1927, 126), global economic and social challenges today, that are almost defying solutions, support his claim, especially religiously motivated conflicts in the world.

The researcher believes this research is a contribution towards the understanding and alleviating of the challenge of religious fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria, and by extension Nigeria as a whole. Efforts at providing solutions to the global scourge of religiously motivated conflicts must begin from local contexts. This research was ignited by a curiosity to understand why despite the presence of socio-economic, political and cultural challenges between Christians and Muslims, Muslims in south-west Nigeria do not engage in fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts as northern Nigerian Muslims do. Conversely, even northern Muslims not afflicted by poverty engage in fundamentalist activities. The premise of the research is that fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria are beyond socio-economic, cultural and political issues. The researcher set out to capture authentic Muslim voices on the subject bearing in mind that they are often seen as the culprits in fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts.

Therefore, in this concluding Chapter, the researcher would first summarize the research work, which supports the claim that there is a strong theological and Maududian influence on fundamentalism in northern Nigeria, and that this influence is beyond socio-economic, cultural and political factors, although they are inflammatory factors. The general implication of this discovery, and its implications for Christian-Muslim relations, would also be discussed. Then finally, recommendations would be made and areas of further studies presented.

Summary of the Study

In the first chapter, besides the background history given, the researcher emphasized that through the indirect rule of the colonialists, the Sokoto Caliphate, created by Usman Danfodio's jihad, ruled the northern region, in spite of the multi-religious nature of the composition of northern Nigeria. Also, through the assistance of the colonialists, a Penal Code, which was skewed towards Shari'a, was introduced in northern Nigeria. Nonetheless, northern Nigeria was ruled as a monolithic unit by the skillful pyrotechnics of the Sardauna, Ahmadu Bello, even after independence until a military coup took his life. All through this period and beyond the civil war that started in 1967 and ended in 1970, the north was generally peaceful until Islamic fundamentalism emerged in the 1970s and interreligious conflicts later in the 1980s.

Furthermore, the researcher reported that several works attribute these religious conflicts to socio-economic, cultural and political factors. The researcher differed and argued that they are likely to be symptoms, since these factors are not peculiar to northern Nigeria. The researcher argued that these factors are secondary factors. The desire to establish the real factors gave motivation for the research especially in the quest for peace and to protect religious freedom. The researcher further explained why the choice of the term fundamentalism was made. The fact that there is strong scholarly support for Maududi as the godfather of modern fundamentalism provided the grounds for using his political interpretation of Islam to investigate the influence of theology on fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. It is also argued that this study has academic, socio-political and religious or interreligious significance. Eventually, research questions were developed and examined to address the research problem. The data collected as a result have been analyzed in Chapters Six, Seven, Eight and Nine. In Chapter One also, the purpose, limitation and delimitations of the study were discussed. The reason for the selection of the locations was given and the assumption behind the study discussed. Finally, Terms significant for the study were defined.

In Chapter Two, the researcher discussed the phases and the changes in the growth and development of Islam in northern Nigeria, beginning with the arrival of Islam through Kanem Bornu Empire and its spread through Usman Danfodio's jihad to become largely entrenched in northern Nigeria, as well as reaching parts of central and western Nigeria. In a brief history of religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, it is also reported that religious conflicts were initially limited to intra-religious conflicts. These gave way to interreligious conflicts in the 1980s, which some argue is connected to the arrival and growth of Islamic fundamentalism in the 1970s, as a result of indoctrination from both within and outside the country. The researcher also acknowledged that discussing fundamentalism in contemporary northern Nigeria cannot be complete without discussing Boko Haram.

Consequently, the researcher discussed Boko Haram and its historical origins. It is argued that Boko Haram contains traces of Maududian ideology in its philosophy. In addition, the researcher saw a similarity between the anti-proselytization rhetoric of Muslims in northern Nigeria and the anti-proselytization rhetoric of Maududi, which the researcher argues might have relations to the conversion war between Christianity and Islam in northern Nigeria. It is also discussed that some scholars postulate that the agitations for and the eventual introduction and implementation of Shari'a in 12 states of northern Nigeria, which has similarity to Maududi's path to achieving an Islamic state, accounts for the accelerated pace of the radicalization of Islam in northern Nigeria.

With this view in mind, the researcher felt it was necessary to discuss how Muslims in northern Nigeria view Shari'a and its relationship to religious conflicts. Since the research was also designed to examine the effect of all this on Christian-Muslim relations, a historical look at the Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria in the global context was discussed. The chapter concluded with the assessment of the relationship between religion and violence. It was argued that there is a connection between religion and violence, especially through the ideology infused into its worldview, although it is not conclusive that religions are intrinsically violent. Finally, a contextual definition of violence was provided.

Chapter Three opened with a discussion on theology, law and interpretation since they are considered critical and central to Muslim lives. Indeed, theology, law and interpretation in Islam are established as central for Muslim understanding and practice of Islam. The researcher discussed how critical interpretations are to Muslims' ibadat and mu'amalat as they seek to obey and submit completely to Allah. It is this quest for correct interpretation of divine laws that led to the emergence of the four major schools of law after the demise of the prophet, the Caliphs and the Umayyad dynasty. During the Abbasid dynasty, interpretation was systematized to rely on the Qur'an, Sunna, qiyas and ijma exercised through ijtihad. The process of ijtihad necessitated the emergence of mujtahidun especially for the development of Shari'a. It is seen that the continued emergence of mujtahidun is contingent on the constant social changes Islam is confronted with and the need for contextualized interpretations. It is this situation, in addition to the fact that mujtahidun are rewarded in the hereafter whether their interpretation is correct or wrong, that led to the emergence of mujtahidun like Maududi.

Furthermore, in this chapter, since jihad is very important in this research, the concept of jihad in the Qur'an and its significance in the lives of Muslims was discussed. Through examining scholarly opinions and what the Qur'an says, it was shown that it is necessary to interpret jihad for Muslims in order for them to understand how it should be undertaken. Traditional and fundamentalist interpretations of jihad were discussed. It emerged that despite the numerous war terms in the Qur'an, it cannot be definitely established that jihad means violence even though it is accepted by Muslims that Islam allows for violence under certain conditions. Rather, it came out that peaceful (pacifist or moral), defensive (repelling aggression), and offensive (militant) jihads can all be supported by some verses in the Qur'an. The researcher argued that in view of this discovery, fundamentalists appear justified to pursue militant jihad as interpreters like Maududi did.

Significantly also, the researcher argued that Umma and apostasy, independently, cannot be sources of conflicts with other religions without added interpretations contrary to conventional meanings. Finally, jihad as a source of culture change was discussed. It is argued that although there is historical evidence that jihad has initiated culture change; it needs an arrowhead leader who provides the ideological content to perform that role. The researcher averred that in contemporary times, Maududi assumed that role of arrowhead in interpreting the role of jihad.

Chapter Four, in light of the above, focused on Maududi and his political interpretation of Islam, as it relates to Islamic state and the principle of Din wa

Dawla, jihad and apostasy, which are considered potential sources of conflicts. The researcher brought out scholarly acceptance that Maududi is the father of modern or contemporary fundamentalism. Strong scholarly support was produced to show he was the major influence on Qutb and Muslim brotherhood of Egypt. His philosophy was exported globally including Nigeria through Sudan although the philosophy is argued to have come indirectly from Egypt, Iran and Saudi Arabia too. Maududi's ideas in the major work of Qutb, Milestone, were sampled. This also formed the basis for the choice to examine the influence of his ideology in northern Nigeria.

It was reported that Maududi emphasized militant jihad as the instrument of revolution to achieve the creation of an Islamic state, eliminate all un-Islamic state systems for global Islamization, eliminate the rights of non-Muslims to participate in politics, and stifle multi-religious existence and conversion. It was also highlighted that colonial experience in India strongly influenced Maududi into fundamentalism as it might have made northern Nigeria receptive to his ideas. A more detailed analysis of Maududi's political theory of Islam, his principle of unity of state and religion (Din wa Dawla) and the basic principles of his Islamic state were made. How Maududi interpreted jihad and fighting from the Qur'an through his commentary Tafhim al-Qur'an was discussed and compared to how he discussed them and apostasy in his writings. The researcher postulated that it is highly probable that this understanding of Islam by Maududi has shaped global antagonism towards the non-Muslim world among Muslims who saliently accept it.

In Chapter Five, the researcher explained the methodology and discussed the theoretical framework for the research. There is a theoretical discussion on how religion, culture, ideology and emotions are related to conflicts/violence and how they can possibly shape it. The researcher justified the inclusion of Kim's Synthetic Triangular Approach (STA) in the study and how it will contribute to the understanding of how Muslims in northern Nigeria view, respond and are affected by conflicts. This will possibly reveal why they might engage in conflicts. The Qualitative Method, as the methodology of the research, was explained as well as the sources of data and the procedure for its collection. The Coding approach adopted for Qualitative Content Analysis (QCA) and interpretation of the data collected was explained. Preference was given to the conventional approach where categories or themes are derived directly and inductively from the raw data. These are guided by the research questions. It was explained that qualitative software, known as Weft QDA, was used for data analysis. At the end of the chapter, some ethical considerations were discussed that took into cognizance the protection of participants, consent by participants, capacity to participate, confidentiality, prejudice, bias and respect for cultural and religious practices. Ethical considerations on the use of data, tampering and manipulating natural and social research environment were also discussed.

Chapter Six addressed Sub-research Question One and its sub-sub-research questions.⁶⁷⁸ The data reveals interviewees have a basic or conventional understanding of the terms “Islamism,” “Islamic revivalism” and “militancy.” According to analyzed data, there is a strong link between theology and fundamentalism or militancy in northern Nigeria. The analyzed data shows that interviewees differentiated between factors influencing Muslims to fundamentalism and factors influencing interreligious conflicts between Muslims and Christians. In the former, the strong influence is theological pedagogical issues while in the latter the influences are socio-economical, socio-cultural and socio-political.

Majorly, analyzed data reveal that interviewees say the way theology is influencing fundamentalism in northern Nigeria is through externally imported fundamentalists teaching and proliferation of Islamic preachers and teachers. Also, analyzed data reveal there is a significant and considerable presence and acceptance of Maududi’s interpretation of jihad especially as instrument for creating an Islamic state although more interviewees reject some of his interpretation of jihad.

Chapter Seven addressed Sub-research Question Two and its sub-sub-research questions.⁶⁷⁹ The analyzed data exposed that interviewees are strongly influenced by Maududi’s concept of Din wa Dawla, which maintains that Islam comprises religion, state, government and politics. Evidently, there is an overwhelming desire for an Islamic state. On the whole also, there is a significant understanding and acceptance of the general thrust of Maududi’s political theory as regards the Islamic state, its creation, its treatment of non-Muslims, the implementation of Shari’a, its relationship with secular states and the behavior of Muslims within a secular state among a good number of the interviewees. The analyzed data also reveals that fundamentalism has a strong and severe repercussion on northern Nigerian Muslims. They are affected emotionally, physically and materially. It is also discovered from the analyzed data that in spite of religious commitment, Muslims' understanding of conflict and their reaction to it is not radically different from conventional ways. However, religion influences how a lot of them handle the effects of conflicts.

⁶⁷⁸ See Chapter one page 12 for the research questions.

⁶⁷⁹ See Chapter one page 12 for the research questions.

In Chapter Eight, the Sub-research Question Three and its sub-sub- research questions were addressed.⁶⁸⁰ The analyzed data discloses that fundamentalism and religious conflicts have negatively affected Christian-Muslim relations in the areas of interpersonal and business relations, proselytization, and political interaction and participation. In interpersonal relationships, it has introduced segregation, fear and distrust while in proselytization it has hindered genuine and peaceful propagation of religion. In political interaction or participation, it has introduced voting along religious lines. Interviewees say that conflicts between the two are caused by politics, provocative religious preaching, bad leadership and greed, conversion, mutual lack of understanding of each other's religion and disrespect for the values of each other's religion.

In light of the above, the current Christian-Muslim relations have become completely fractious and distrustful devoid of understanding and dialogue. This has introduced obstacles and challenges to interreligious harmony. However, there is overwhelming agreement that harmony is possible if there is dialogue, understanding, mutual respect and genuine practice of religion.

Finally, Chapter Nine is where an analytical integration and theoretical synthesis was carried out. The analytical integration began by analyzing the two emerging themes: that is the reinterpretation of jihad and the critical and centrality of a single leader in Islam. Jihad is reinterpreted to comprise all aspects of worship and morality, socio-political relations and responsibility, human and interpersonal relations and physical fighting. The relevance of single leadership in this research is not that it is critical and central in Islam, but that it is the major contribution to the proliferation of fundamentalist or militant activities.

In this chapter, content analysis revealed that outside the analyzed data, there is a strong support for Maududian influence in northern Nigeria. Analyzed data also brought to the fore a selective adoption of Maududi's ideologies by the interviewees. Analyzed data and literature was integrated to establish that Maududi's ideology or political interpretation of Islam is a major influence on fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in northern Nigeria through the route of Sudan and the Muslims Student Society (MSS). And on the whole, Maududi's political theory of Islam has a strong influence in northern Nigeria.

⁶⁸⁰ See Chapter one page 12 for the research questions.

Integrating all these into a theoretical synthesis, a theory is built that the clash between fundamentalist and orthodox ideology triggers cognitive dissonance, which through dissonance resolution process leads to selective adoption that produces diversity of Islamic views, and this has consequences on the relationship between Muslim and non-Muslim relations. The data supports the theory that an ideology can create a propensity for collective violence especially when it is supported by relational and cultural distance, functional independence and inequality. This can happen when an ideology in culture (religion) emphasizes "otherness" and is internalized as an individual or collective system of meaning (Silberman 2005, 535). Collective violence can occur when an ideology corresponds with the social and psychological needs of a group or people (de la Roche 1996). Finally, it is shown that the Synthetic Triangular Approach incorporated in this research has unearthed the ordinariness of Muslims by revealing that Muslims understand and react to as well as handle conflicts in very conventional ways as all humans do.

The General Implications of this Study

The major implication of this research, as the analyzed data has exposed, is that, contemporarily, fundamentalism has grown and is still growing in northern Nigeria. It reveals that conventional Sunni understanding of Islam and Islamic jihad is gradually being eroded by a new understanding of jihad that is more fundamentalist and militant. Fundamentalist teaching and ideology is gaining strong grounds and can be seen in the responses of the respondents. This is supported by fundamentalist opinions expressed across several themes. For example, some opinions expressed under the section 'Reaction to Tragedy in Religious Conflicts,' show younger generations are expressing fundamentalist views. Such fundamentalist views are also expressed on the aspect of jihad. In addition, since the proliferation of Islamic preachers and teachers is still a major issue and it is seen as one of the major causes of fundamentalism, according to interviewees, the implication for the future is dire. Furthermore, as some views under the section 'Non-Muslim Religious Propagation within Muslim Territories' reflect, even moderate Muslims have the potential to be agitated when things go religiously wrong between them and non-Muslims even on issues like the style of worship.

Another implication of this study is that it is either that the political and religious leaders in northern Nigeria, and Nigeria as a whole, are ignorant of the influence of theological interpretation and preaching due to lack of research, or they are aware, but are cautious to address it because of the sensitive nature of religion and religious opinions. The silence over addressing this issue of ideological and theological influence on northern Nigerian Muslims is ominous, not only for non-Muslims, but also for Muslims. If these issues had been addressed, groups like Boko Haram would not have emerged.

This study also has implications on the issue of proselytization. Non-Muslims in northern Nigeria must pay attention to the almost general objection to proselytization and building places of worship close to Muslim places of worship, or where there is a Muslim majority. Although not all, the majority of interviewees appear to desire freedom to proselytize non-Muslims, but generally think non-Muslims should not proselytize them.

A further implication is that although poverty or socio-economic factors do play a part in fundamentalism, they are not sufficient to promote it without theological indoctrination by a Muslim leader. This means that attention must be paid to how leaders emerge within Muslim societies, in view of the role they play in indoctrinating Muslims towards fundamentalism and militancy.

Furthermore, this study has shown that both moderate and fundamentalist Muslims have a desire to establish an Islamic state in Nigeria, not necessarily for dominance, although some express that desire, but majorly as the path to unadulterated practice of religion. The challenging implication is that it is difficult often to differentiate the two groups when it comes to the desire for Islamic state. This is probably why moderate Muslims are silent even when fundamentalists are assumed to take the wrong path in their attempt to achieve an Islamic state.

Finally, one other implication for non-Muslims is that they might not be able to draw a distinction between moderate fundamentalists and pure fundamentalists, as both believe in physical jihad in one way or another. The difference is context, which non-Muslims might not differentiate. This might even make it hard to separate the pacifist Muslims from the above two. This is probably why non-Muslims generalize their views of Muslims. And considering contemporary happenings, Muslims might find it difficult to convince non-Muslims that jihad is not contrary to them.

Implications of the Study to Christian-Muslim Relations

As the analyzed data also reveals, fundamentalism and conflicts have had far reaching implications for Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria, and perhaps Nigeria as a whole. Fundamentalism has led to a near total breakdown of Christian-Muslim relations, with the consequence of introducing suspicion and distrust between the two religions, as reported by the interviewees. It fractured interpersonal relations and obstructed constructive dialogue between the two religions. Even freedom of religion is affected, as both religions created exclusive settlements even within same cities.⁶⁸¹ This has led to a belief by many that conflicts between the two religions are now so entrenched that resolution is almost impossible, although many believe it can be resolved if certain measures are taken.⁶⁸² There is hope, however, since most Muslims pledge that they will relate and treat non-Muslims well, even in a Shari'a state, in spite of the apprehension and caution expressed by some.⁶⁸³

There are a number of implications arising as a result of the findings of this research. First, unless Christians and Muslims become more knowledgeable about each other's religion, building bridges would be very difficult. Tolerance and understanding are difficult when there is no true knowledge of each other. In several places, Muslims have complained about ignorance of Christians as regards the belief of Muslims.⁶⁸⁴ Secondly, unless Christians and Muslims regulate their comments about each other, most especially Christian comments about Islam and the prophet of Islam, frictions leading to conflicts would not be resolved. The researcher considers it very callous and insensitive for Christians to make such comments as "Islam is a devil's religion and Muhammad is a demon" or "Islam is a deceptive and extreme ⁶⁸¹ See the themes 'Description of Current Christian-Muslim Relations' and 'Current Relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims' in chapter eight.

⁶⁸² See the theme 'Perpetual Entrenchment of Conflicts between Christians and Muslims' in chapter eight.

⁶⁸³ See the theme 'Muslim Relations with Christians under Sharia' in chapter eight.

⁶⁸⁴ Good examples are comments under sections 'Muslim Difficulties in Relating to Christians' and 'Obstacles to Interreligious Harmony' religion and Muslims are terrorists.”⁶⁸⁵ This research has revealed that many Muslims are rather pacifists.

Thirdly, attention has been drawn to the inconsiderate and insensitive nature of Christian worship, and the inconsiderate nature of Muslim worship, by using microphones or blocking roads during prayers. Unless these issues are addressed, harmonious relations between the two would be difficult to achieve. Among some of the obstacles to interreligious harmony mentioned are politicization of religion, illiteracy, suspicion and distrust among others. The aggressive proselytization drive of both religions is also viewed as an obstacle to interreligious harmony, as well as a source of conflicts.⁶⁸⁶ All these and many others have implications for Christian-Muslim relations.

The good news however is that in spite of all these challenges created by fundamentalism and conflicts, northern Nigerian Muslims express hope that these challenges can be addressed through enlightenment, education, dialogue, forgiveness, mediation and consultation, especially when members of the two religions adhere to the true teachings of their religions. Interreligious harmony is possible if mutual understanding, tolerance and respect for each other’s religious values, as well as justice and fairness, are added. These will eliminate suspicion and distrust, especially if both religions desist from the use of provocative language and learn from the harmony achieved in the past.⁶⁸⁷

Recommendations

In the section on “Significance of the Study,” the researcher stated that this research would have academic significance, and it is clear that the data analyzed is a testament to that. There is no doubt this would contribute to the study of Christian-Muslim relations. It is also said that this study would be significant for the church and the Muslim Umma by improving Christian understanding of Muslims. There is no doubt that Christians reading this work would improve their understanding of Muslims and Islam in northern Nigeria. The findings of this study will be beneficial to ⁶⁸⁵ See the theme ‘Muslim Difficulties in Relating to Christians’ in chapter eight.

⁶⁸⁶ Refer to the themes ‘Obstacles to Interreligious Harmony’, ‘Desire to Convert Muslims as Source of Conflicts’, ‘Conversion as a Major Source of Interreligious Conflicts’, ‘Muslims Consider Religious Interest above Nigeria and other Nigerians’ and ‘Treatment of Muslim Converts to other Religions’ in chapter eight.

⁶⁸⁷ More details under the themes ‘Addressing Interreligious Relationship Difficulties’ and ‘Interreligious Harmony: Requirements and Possibility’ the churches in Nigeria, Africa and even beyond. The findings will also be beneficial to Muslim communities in Nigeria, Africa and even beyond. This research is also beneficial to the Nigerian government in its drive to achieve an end to fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts in Nigeria.

Recommendations for Government

Interviewees have lamented on how government is lackadaisical in addressing this issue of fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts, as a result of inefficient leadership and politicization of religion, especially jihad. Leaders in government are accused of pursuing their own selfish interests. In view of the important role government can play in eliminating fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts, the following recommendations are made as a result of the data collected and analyzed.

1. Interviewees have blamed foreign scholarship and the influx of external teaching or ideology for the growth of fundamentalism and militancy in northern Nigeria. The government, both state and federal, in collaboration with the Ulama or religious leaders, must set up a mechanism to carefully evaluate and determine countries and institutions that Nigerian students would be allowed to attend. If as a country we must maintain the dominance of the orthodox Sunni Maliki pacifist philosophy known in Nigeria for decades, there must be deliberate steps to set standards for foreign Islamic scholarship. Smoot and Flanigan's comment on setting standards, although related to sciences, is still relevant here. They argue that "different sectors need different standards, and those standards need to be set by those who are most familiar with a particular industry" (1999, 8). This is why government and the Ulama must work together to set these standards.
2. The interviewees also decried the non-regulation of Islamic preachers. The government should, in collaboration with the Ulama, set up a representative board for evaluating and vetting as well as licensing Islamic preachers. Muslims themselves have shown in their responses that they desire such regulation to stem the tide of proliferation of preachers who are not qualified to be preachers.
3. The government should also reevaluate the content of the curricular on Islamic studies in northern universities to regulate what is being taught. Also, Lecturers being employed to teach in these universities should be properly vetted. Literature and analyzed data has shown that northern universities are the bedrock of fundamentalist ideology and radicalization of young Muslims.

4. There is also no doubt that poverty alleviation strategies would contribute towards the reduction of radicalization of young Muslims in the society who have no jobs to do and cannot make ends meet. Poor people are easily influenced by wrong theology and ideology. Although it appears generalized, governments must provide good and unbiased leadership and avoid politicization of religion.
5. Finally, Muslims themselves in this study have decried the absence of punitive actions taken against instigators and perpetrators of fundamentalist and militant activities. Therefore, government must prosecute and punish all those arrested for perpetrating violent conflicts no matter who is involved without discrimination.

Recommendations for Muslims

Muslims in this research have been very open in expressing their views, which is very helpful in dealing with the issue of Islamic fundamentalism in northern Nigeria. Indeed, more Muslims express their dislike, sadness, anger and condemnation of fundamentalist and militant activities. Many say it is un-Islamic and it gives Islam a bad image. Instead of Islam being seen as a religion of peace, it is seen as a violent religion or a religion of terrorists, which ought not to be. This lays the foundation on the first major recommendation the researcher wishes to give to Muslims.

1. Muslims must end the circle of near complete silence about condemning fundamentalism publicly. Silence can be both positive and negative, according to MacCulloch in his wonderful treatise on silence in Christian history. But silence in religion can be “evasion and willful avoidance of truths” (2013, 4). The concerted open and public condemnation of fundamentalism by all well meaning Muslims is probably what is generally lacking in the fight against fundamentalism by Muslims. A general, clear, open and public resolute condemnation of fundamentalist ideology by all, including the educated elite, religious leaders, politicians and the commoners, through exposing and handing over these fundamentalists to the law enforcement agencies for action, is glaringly absent. The vehemence needed to discredit misinterpretations of jihad is not visibly and consistently noticed among those who have the responsibility to do so. Could it be that they are cowed by the sheer potential of violence against them if they do so?

The researcher believes Muslims can become mujahidin for peace by boldly speaking out and also be willing to die to prove that Islam is a religion of peace worth dying for. If terrorism is believed to be giving Islam a bad name and people are willing to die for it, why not openly condemn it and be willing to die for the right cause for peace, and establish that Islam is a religion of peace? If people are willing to die for lies, misinterpretation, misconception and deception, why not be willing to die for truth? Most devout Muslims believe that a mujahid for truth has more reward with Allah than a mujahid who contradicts the will of Allah by killing innocent people. There is a lot of lesson to learn from the famous poem of Pastor Martin Niemoller about the spinelessness of German intellectuals during the rise of the Nazis, which says,

First they came for the Socialists, and I did not speak out because I was not a Socialist. Then they came for the Trade Unionists, and I did not speak out because I was not a Trade Unionist. Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out because I was not a Jew. Then they came for me and there was no one left to speak for me (Niemoller n.d.).

2. To fight fundamentalism, Muslim parents must pay attention to what their children are being taught in the Madrrasah and universities. Often children are radicalized without the knowledge of their parents and as the research revealed, young men in northern Nigeria are radicalized in schools at different levels. In fact, parents should participate in choosing schools that their children attend abroad.
3. Muslims, like people of other religions, must learn the true meaning of tolerance. Islamic preachers and teachers must teach members the true meaning of tolerance. Tolerance of other religions must not be that non-Muslims should conform to the way Muslims worship or practice their religion. Pavlovic, in his critique of western tolerance, argues that “If tolerance is not developed to its full meaning—an effective instrument developing an identity—then it fails” (2009, 62). Tolerance does not insist on the loss of the other’s identity. Tolerance accepts the other as he or she is.
4. Muslims must also learn to desist from using derogatory terms like “infidel” or “Arne” (meaning infidel in Hausa) to address Christians and non-Muslims. They are terms that are not acceptable, and elicit negative reactions from non-Muslims.

Just as Muslims do not accept derogatory terms used to address them, so it is not acceptable to non-Muslims either, even as some interviewees acknowledged.

Recommendations for Christians

The responses also reveal that quite a number of interviewees decry some behaviors and attitudes of Christians towards Islam and Muslims. Some of these views are captured under the sections “Muslim Difficulties in Relating to Christians” and “Obstacles to Interreligious Harmony” in Chapter Eight and other places across other themes. In this light, the researcher makes the following recommendations for Christians.

1. In relation to the ordinariness of Muslims unearthed by STA, Christians must make every effort to relate with Muslims as ordinary human beings who, like them, desire to live ordinary lives. A Muslim thinks, acts and does “all common cultural things as a truly human being. He or she feels awed and frustrated by various life challenges such as sicknesses, death, misfortunes, calamities, and the like” (Kim 2014, 180). In order to build true relationships that would reduce conflicts, Christians must relate with Muslims at this ordinary level of humanness.
2. Christians must also develop religious sensitivity towards Muslims. As an interviewee points out, calling Muslims terrorists and saying Islam is a religion of terrorists is inappropriate. It is also quite unfortunate for a Christian to refer to Islam as a religion of the devil or Muhammad as a demon. This name calling only elicits negative reactions from Muslims. This also defies the Christian ethic that says, “So in everything, do to others what you would have them do to you, for this sums up the Law and the Prophets” (Matthew 7:12).⁶⁸⁸ This kind of negative comment makes dialogue almost impossible and increases the possibility of conflicts. Christians should use polite and respectful comments to address Muslims.
3. Interviewees also decry Christian ignorance of Islam. Christians, therefore, must learn about Islam with its religious and ethical practices. This involves reading the sacred texts of Muslims and several teachings by scholars of Islam. It is even impossible to have a meaningful interaction and dialogue with someone whose beliefs and cultures a person does not know. It is clear that the majority of

⁶⁸⁸ This translation is from the New International Version of the Bible

Muslims in this research would love that Christians understand Islam and what it teaches. The researcher has come across Christians who believe Muslims are against Christians reading the Qur'an. All that Muslims require is for Christians to respect the Qur'an as Muslims do and avoid making derogatory remarks about it. In fact, as it is argued about Kenneth Cragg, who was an Anglican bishop in Egypt and Christian Islamicist during the mid 20th century, he made Christians learn their religion (Christianity) from the Qur'an (Bennett 2008, 191).

4. Furthermore, in order to build bridges with Muslims, Christians must learn the cultural practices of Muslims (festivals, ceremonies, dressing, foods, etc)⁶⁸⁹ and learn how to adapt to them. Culture shapes worldview and worldview shapes perspectives of reality. Indeed, religion is an orienting worldview as argued by Peterson (2001). For example, in the worldview of a Muslim, dressing is part of religiosity. That is why the dressing that exposes female flesh is never accepted by Muslims. Christians who desire to gain attention of Muslims in interacting with them must be aware of this. Adapting to a culture does not change one's belief. Paul says that he became all things to all men so that by all possible means he would save some (1 Corinthians 9:19-23). Interviewees complained of Christians disrespecting their cultural practices in the name of sharing their faith. This becomes an obstacle rather than a channel.
5. Christians must develop relationships with Muslims through dialogue. Haines and Cooley advise that there are many concerns common to both communities although these commonalities often go unrecognized. As they engage in dialogue, "Christians and Muslims would be less likely to assume that all of their problems are caused by the other" (1987, 105). Besides, the Bible teaches that as long as it is within one's power, he or she should live in peace with all men (Romans 12:18). Indeed, Hebrews 12:14 instruct Christians to follow peace with all men.
6. Christians must also overcome ignorance of their Christian principles. One of the Christian principles teaches love for one's neighbor. In the Matthew 22:35-39's account of loving God and loving neighbors as the two greatest commandments, Jesus says that all the law and the prophets depend on these two commandments. All neighbors include Muslims. In his interpretation of this scripture, Accad says that "in these two commandments is enshrined the foundation of our relationship with God (ibadat) and relationship with people around us (mu'malat)” (2010, 157). Love overcomes boundaries and eliminates the potential for conflicts.

⁶⁸⁹ See Parshall (2003, 223-231).

7. Christians must deal with “problematic Christian practices” as Parshall refers to them (2003, 195-210). Interviewees have also raised the issue of evangelistic practices and style of worship that are problematic to Muslims. Within the Muslim context, Christian Pentecostal style of loud Music and preaching over huge loud speakers is doing more damage to Christian witness. It makes Christians appear insensitive and unfeeling. The researcher believes that Christian identity is not expressed or upheld through loud speakers, but it is by exemplary following of Jesus and courageous living of the Christian life in the face of whatever challenges. The researcher admits that Muslims also engage in this kind of practice. However, as the saying goes, two wrongs do not make a right.
8. Christians must also reexamine mission methodologies. They must develop or formulate mission approaches that take into cognizance the social and religious world of the Muslims. In fact an interviewee advises Christians, “Even [if] you want to convert somebody, you have to be doing it tactically.”⁶⁹⁰ Christians must develop new skills; tact and delicateness in reaching out to Muslims with their beliefs since the research indicate the presence of more moderate Muslim neighbors. Nehls and Eric are right that Christians must “meet the Muslim at his own reality, not ours” (1997, 32) especially more at the level of his felt needs. The “ordinariness” presented by Kim (2014) has helped us to see that Muslims are ordinary humans like Christians with a desire to meet the basic demands of realities of life.

A general advice to both Christians and Muslims is to set up an interfaith monitoring agency that will call attention to malpractices and injustices against their members. This agency would call for a dialogue so that ways would be found to address injustices among both communities. Secondly, as much as possible, Christians and Muslims must reduce these apologetically driven disputations. They only tend to accentuate the divide between the two as each group considers victory as the goal and not understanding. Constructive dialogues tend to promote more mutual understanding and more helpful interaction rather than debates. Indeed, as said about Cragg, he pursued a sympathetic and conciliatory engagement with Islam without negating his focus on mission (Bennett 2008, 191). The researcher would want to conclude this section by saying that there is no hard and fast rule about Christian-Muslim engagement. Context and experience shape the approach to the interaction and dialogue between the two communities in order to reduce the potential for conflicts. What should be constant is openness and willingness to sincerely engage with one another.

⁶⁹⁰SRQ3/Th16.2/ZA14 [21976-22147

However, non-Muslims must heed the voice of Turaki when he says that,

The response of non-Muslims can be effective and long-lasting only if it is based on a grasp of the foundations of Islamic theology. To understand the militant resurgence of Islam we need to consider the role and function of jihad, shari'a, the caliph, the caliphate and the umma in Islamic theology and mission. These concepts are inter-related to form a theological system that gives Islamic political theology and philosophy its strength and vitality (2010, 177).

Concluding Submission

It is imperative that in light of all the foregoing, those who examine the factors that influence Islamic fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts must pay attention to theological interpretation, especially within the Nigerian context and perhaps the world at large. This research also makes it imperative to examine the continuing role of the Maududian ideology across the world. This research reveals that, in spite of the demise of Maududi and the emergence of several splinter fundamentalist groups across the globe, his ideology is still very much alive, and influencing radical Islamic and fundamentalist groups around the world, including Boko Haram. The analyzed data indicates that Maududi's ideology for achieving an Islamic state through jihad, revolution and other less radical means is still growing strong.

The reason why this ideology would continue to be very influential among Muslims is the fact that the ideology, as we saw in Chapter Nine, corresponds with the social and psychological needs of Muslims in northern Nigeria, and probably beyond, to achieve the restoration of Islamic rule and identity. Haines and Cooley are right when they argue that "The search for identity means for many Muslims the desire to have a national state in which Shari'ah is normative. Adherence to this body of law, they believe, gives the community its identity as a Muslim community" (1987, 105). This is the basic reason, as seen in the analyzed data, why most Muslims are generally antagonistic to western style political systems and, probably, why the fundamentalist route is still attractive in the absence of more pacifist ways to achieve it, a realization that led Maududi into developing a fundamentalist approach to achieve it.

From the responses of the interviewees, younger generations of Muslims are getting more involved in fundamentalist activities. And in the universities, MSS students are still being radicalized by this fundamentalist philosophy. It means Nigeria as a nation must be more careful and deliberate in its fight against fundamentalism. This is why the researcher's recommendation to government above is pertinent. However, it is important to note that by the responses of the interviewees, the conventional Sunni understanding of Islam with its near pacifist ideology is still influential in northern Nigeria. Nevertheless, this ideology, from the responses of the interviewees is gradually being eroded by fundamentalist ideologies, especially among younger and educated Muslims. However, as seen earlier, this fundamentalist ideology is not necessarily absent within the older intelligentsia. And the Maududian ideology has strongly contributed to this.

Nonetheless, there is still hope, from the responses of the interviewees, that the rise of fundamentalism can be subdued if the government and religious leaders in Nigeria will rise to their responsibilities and deliberately implement measures that would stem this tide of fundamentalism. But overall, it is the belief of this researcher that enduring peace can only be found in the prince of peace, our Lord Jesus Christ or Isah rasulillah as he is referred to by Muslims. This notwithstanding, one will encourage the body of Christ in northern Nigeria to keep the peace of Christ in their hearts and practice it in their relationship with their Muslim neighbors.

Areas for Further Studies

This study has raised newer questions that would need to be explored further than was done in this research. The following are areas that can be further investigated:

1. With a strong scholarly support that Maududi's ideology has global influence, and in light of the outcome of this research, it would be interesting to investigate whether his ideology is influencing other parts of Africa where fundamentalism is present.
2. In this research, the researcher came across Qur'anic translations of jihad as fighting. Has this kind of translation influenced Muslims to embrace fundamentalism or violent jihad?

3. In light of the discovery in this research that interviewees oscillate between orthodox and fundamentalist views, and since this research is mainly qualitative, a quantitative research would be helpful to determine the percentage of Muslims influenced by Maududi's fundamentalist ideology or fundamentalist ideology in general.
4. Muslims have also raised the issue of the attitude of Christians and non-Muslims towards Islam, and accused them of provocation. It would be helpful if a further study investigates Christian-Muslim relations to determine what contribution the actions and attitudes of Christians have made towards the rise of fundamentalism and interreligious conflicts.
5. Finally, although a considerable number of Muslims have voiced their opposition to fundamentalism in Islam, it would be interesting to investigate why there is silence among Muslims towards publicly condemning radical, militant and fundamentalist Muslims, since the general consensus is that Islam is a religion of peace.

Reference List

- Abdu, Hussaini. 2010. Clash of identities: State, society and ethno-religious conflicts in northern Nigeria. Kaduna: DevReach Publishers.
- Abubakar, Muhammad A. 1984. Sayyid Qutb's interpretation of the Islamic view of literature. Islamic Studies 23, no. 2 (Summer):57-65.
- Abu-Rabi', Ibrahim M. 1991. Discourse, power, and ideology in modern Islamic revivalist thought: Sayyid Qutb. The Muslim World 81, no 3-4 (July - October): 284 -298.
- Accad, Martin. 2010. Loving neighbor in word and deed: What Jesus meant. In A common word: Muslim and Christians on loving God and neighbor, ed. Miroslav Volf, Ghazi bin Muhammad and Melissa Yarrington, 157-168. Grand Rapids, Michigan: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company.
- Adams, Charles J. 1983. Maududi and the Islamic state. In Voices of resurgent Islam, ed. John L. Esposito, 99-133. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Adesoji, A. 2010. The Boko Haram uprising and Islamic revivalism in Nigeria. Africa Spectrum 45, no 2: 95-108.
- _____. 2011. Between Maitatsine and Boko Haram: Islamic fundamentalism and the response of the Nigerian State. Africa Today 57, no 4: 98-119.
- Afasaruddin, Asma. 2006. Revivalism and Reform. Notre Dame (September 5). ↵ (accessed November 8, 2013).
- Agang, Sunday. 2012. Breaking Nigeria's Fatal Deadlock: Christians and Muslims Will Find Peace If They Work Together for Justice. Christianity Today 56, no 4 (April 2012): 48-51.
- Ahmad, Anis. 2003. Mawdudi's concept of shari'ah. Muslim World 93, no 3-4 (July – October): 533-545.
- Ahmad, Irfan. 2006. The state in Islamist thought. ISIM Review 18:12-13.
- Ahmad, Khurshid, 1983. The nature of the Islamic resurgence. In Voices of resurgent Islam, ed. John L. Esposito, 218-229. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Ahmad, Mirza Tahir. 1989. Murder in the name of Allah. Rev. ed. Trans. Syed Barakat Ahmad. London: Lutterworth Press.
- Ahmad, Aziz. 1967. Mawdudi and orthodox fundamentalism in Pakistan. Middle East Journal 21, no. 3 (Summer): 369-380.

- Ahmed Issack Hassan, "The Kadhi courts: Setting the records straight" <http://www.commonlii.org/other/KECKRC/2002/11.html> (accessed March 6th, 2010).
- Ahmed, Khurshid and Zafar Ishaq Ansari. 2000. Maulana Maududi: An introduction to his life and thought. New Delhi: Markazi Maktaba Islami Publishers.
- Agbetola, Ade Shitu. 1989. The equality of man and woman in Islam: Sayyid Qutb's views examined. Islamic Studies 28, no. 2 (Summer): 131-137.] [=oo i800
- Akram, Ejaz. 2007. Ummah and its links with transnational Muslim politics. Islamic Studies 46, no. 3 (Autumn): 381-415.
- Al-Farag, Muhammad Abdel Salam. 2007. The forgotten duty. In Islam in transition: Muslim perspectives. 2nd ed., ed. John J. Donohue and John L. Esposito, 417-424. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Alao, Abiodun. n. d. Islamic radicalization and violence in Nigeria. Country Report. <http://www.securityanddevelopment.org/pdf/ESRC/Nigeria/Overview.pdf> (Accessed 27/1/2012)
- Al-Dawoody, Ahmed. 2011. The Islamic war: Justifications and regulations. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Al-Ghazali n.d. The essentials of interpretative autonomy. trans. Abdullah bin Hamid Ali. Lamppost Educational Initiative. <http://www.lamppostproduction.com/al-ghazali-on-the-conditions-of-ijtihad/> (accessed November 22. 2013).
- Al-Turabi, Hassan. 1983. The Islamic state. The nature of the Islamic resurgence. In Voices of resurgent Islam, ed. John L. Esposito, 241-251. New York: Oxford University Press. [-p - =,-a2v00Al-Azzam, Abdullah. 2007. Join the Caravan. . In Islam in transition: Muslim perspectives. 2nd ed., ed. John J. Donohue and John L. Esposito, 425-429. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Ammerman, Nancy T., Jackson W. Carrol, Carl S. Dudley, and William McKinney. 1998. Studying congregations: A new handbook. Nashville: Abingdon press.
- Anderson, Craig A. 2001. Heat and violence. Current Directions in Psychological Science 10, no.1 (February): 33-38.
- Annual volume of the laws of Kaduna state of Nigeria, 2001.
- Ansari, M Abdul Haq. 2003. Mawdudi's contribution to theology. Muslim World 93, no 3-4 (July – October): 521-531.
- Arinze, Francis A. 2001. Arinze: Hardliners make interfaith relations hard. Century Today (December 12): 9-10.
- Armajani, Jon. 2012. Modern Islamist movements: History, religion and politics. West Sussex: Wiley-Blackwell.

- Armour, Sr., Rollin. 2002. Islam, Christianity, and the west: A troubled history. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis Books.
- Armstrong, Karen. 2006. Muhammad: A Prophet for our time. New York: Harper One.
- Atran, Scott and Jeremy Ginges. 2012. Religious and sacred imperatives in human conflicts. Science 336 (May): 855-857. http://sitemaker.umich.edu/satran/files/atran_ginges_science_article_on_religion_conflict.pdf (Accessed October 6, 2014).
- Auerbach, Carl and Louis B. Silverstein. 2003. Qualitative data: An Introduction to coding and analysis. New York: New York University Press.
- Ayoob, Mohammed. 2008. The many faces of political Islam: Religion and politics in the Muslim world. USA: University of Michigan Press.
- Ayubi, Nazih. 1991. Political Islam: Religion and politics in the Arab world. London: Routledge.
- Azumah, John Alembillah. 2001. The legacy of Arab-Islam in Africa: A Quest for Inter-religious dialogues. Oxford: Oneworld Publications.
- Azzam, Maha. 2006. Islamism revisited. International Affairs (Royal Institute of International Affairs 1944-) 82, no. 6 (November): 1119-1132.
- Badari, Jamal. n.d. Is apostasy a capital crime in Islam. www.fiqhcouncil.org/node/34 (accessed 29th Jan., 2014).
- Badri, Malik B. 2003. A tribute to Mawlāna Mawdūdī from an autobiographical point of view. Muslim World 93 (July – October): 487-502.
- Bala, Salisu. 2006. Sufism, sects and intra-Muslim conflicts in Nigeria, 1804-1979. Comparative Islamic Studies 2, no. 1 (June): 79-95.
- Black, Anthony. 2011. The history of Islamic political thoughts: From the prophet to the present. 2nd ed. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.
- Barak, Gregg. n. d. Theories of violence. http://www.greggbarak.com/custom3_2.html (accessed November 7, 2012).
- Barkindo, Bawuro M. 1993. Growing Islamism in Kano city since 1970: Causes, form and implications. In Muslim identity and social change in sub-Saharan Africa, ed. Louis Brenner. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- Baum, Robert M. 2001. The ethics of religious studies research in the context of the religious intolerance of the state: An African perspective. Method and Theory in the Study of Religion 13:12-23.

- Bayat, Asef. 2005. Islamism and social movement theory. Third World Quarterly 26, no. 6: 891-908.
- Belkeziz, Abdelilah. 2009. The state in contemporary Islamic thought: A historical survey of the major Muslim thinkers of the modern era. Trans. Abdullah Richard Lux. London: I. B. Tauris Publishers.
- Bellinger, Charles K. 2003. Theories on the psychology of violence. An address, Association of Muslim Social Scientists 3rd Regional conference, University of Texas at Arlington, August 23. <http://lib.tcu.edu/staff/bellinger/essays/muslim-conf.htm> (accessed November 7, 2012).
- Berman, Sheri. 2003. Islamism, revolution, and civil society. Perspectives on Politics 1, no 2 (June): 257-272.
- Bennett, Clinton. 2004. The concept of violence, war and jihad in Islam. Dialogue and Alliance 18, no.1 (Spring/Summer): 31-51.
- _____. 2005. Muslims and modernity: An introduction to the issues and debates. New York: Continuum.
- _____. 2008. Understanding Christian-Muslim relations: Past and present. London: Continuum International Publishing Group.
- Bond, Michael Harris. n. d. Culture and collective violence. <http://www.humiliationstudies.org/documents/BondCultureCollectiveViolence.pdf> (accessed November 12, 2012).
- Bonner, Michael. 2006. Jihad in Islamic history: Doctrines and practice. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Braswell, George W. Jr. 1996. Islam: Its prophet, peoples, politics, and power. Nashville, TN: Broadman and Holman.
- Brehm, Sharon S. and Jack W. Brehm. 1981. Psychological practice: A theory of freedom and control. New York: Academic Press.
- Browsers, Michaëlle. 2010. Islamic modernism. In Encyclopedia of political theory, ed. Bevir Mark, 712-713. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage Publications Limited.
- Bruce, Steve. 2005. Religion and violence: What can sociology offer? Numen 52, no 1: 5-28.
- Bukhari Hadith. Alim, CD-ROM, version 6.0.11.1. U. S. A.: ISL Software Corp, 1986 – 2000.
- Burton, John. 1990. The sources of Islamic law. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.

- Butterworth, Charles E. 1992. Political Islam: The origins. Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 524, (November): 26-37.
- _____. 2010. Islamic political philosophy. In Encyclopedia of political theory, ed. Bevir Mark, 716-719. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage Publications Limited.
- Calvert, John. 2000. The individual and the nation: Sayyid Qutb's Tifi min al-Qarya (Child from the Village). Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations 11, no 1 (March): 87-103.
- Calvert, John. 2010. Sayyid Qutb and the origins of radical islamism. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Cap 89 penal code with northern states federal provision act cap 345: With Shari'ah penal code. n. d.
- Cash, John D. 1989. Ideology and affect: The case of Northern Ireland. Political Psychology 10, no. 4 (December): 703-724.
- Cederman, Lars-Erik, Nils B. Weidmann and Kristian Skrede Gleditsch. 2011. Horizontal Inequalities and Ethnonationalist Civil War: A Global Comparison. American Political Science Review 105, no 3 (August): 478-495.
- Chapra, M. Umer. 2004. Mawlana Mawdüdi's contribution to Islamic economics Muslim World 94, no 2 (April): 163-180.
- Charmaz, Kathy. 2006. Constructing grounded theory: A practical guide through qualitative analysis. London: Sage Publications.
- Cheema, Shahbaz Ahmad. 2013. Problematizing the religious basis of Maududi's political theory. Studies on Asia. Series IV, Vol. 3, no 2 (October): 52-82.
- Christelow, Allan. 2002. Islamic law and judicial practice in Nigeria: An historical perspective. Journal of Muslim Minority Affairs 22, no. 1 (April): 185-204.
- Cialdini, Robert B. 2009. Influence: Science and practice, 5th ed. Boston: Pearson Education, Inc.
- Clarke, Erskine. 2005. Religion in an age of religious violence. Communio Viatorum 47, no 2: 227-233.
- Clarke, Peter. 1988. Islamic reform in contemporary Nigeria: Methods and aims. ThirdWorld Quarterly 10, no. 2 (April): 519-538.
- Coe, Shoki. 1974. Theological education: A worldwide perspective. Theological Education 11, no.1 (Autumn): 5-12.
- Collins, John J. 2004. Does the Bible justify violence? Minneapolis: Fortress Press.

- Coser, Lewis A. 1996. Some social functions of violence. Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 364 (March): 8-18.
- Costalli, Stefano and Andrea Ruggeri. n. d. Emotions, Ideologies and Armed Mobilization. <http://www.prio.org/utility/Download.ashx?x=430> (Accessed October 6, 2014).
- Coulson, N. J. 1964. History of Islamic law. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press.
- Creswell, John W. 1994. Research design: qualitative and quantitative approaches. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage Publications.
- Creswell, John W. 2002. Educational research: Planning, conducting, and evaluating quantitative and qualitative research. Upper Saddle River, NJ: Pearson Education, Inc.
- _____. 2003. Research design: qualitative and quantitative approaches. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage Publications.
- Crisis Group. 2010. Northern Nigeria: Background to conflict. Africa Report no. 168 (December, 20).
http://reliefweb.int/sites/reliefweb.int/files/resources/880F82BDF4CF7582C12577FF0050EB69-Full_report.pdf (Accessed 27/1/2012).
- Crone, Patricia. 2004. God's rule: Government and Islam. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Das, Veena. 1987. The anthropology of violence and the speech of victims. Anthropology Today 3, no. 4 (August): 11-13.
- De Laine, Marlene. 2000. Fieldwork, Participation and Practice: Ethics and Dilemmas in Qualitative Research. London: Sage Publications.
- De la Roche, Roberts Senechal. 1996. Collective violence as social control. Sociological Forum 11, no. 1 (March): 97-128.
- De Los Rios, Carolina. n. d. Understanding political violence. http://www.umbc.edu/llc/pdf/Understanding_Political_Violence.pdf (accessed November 12, 2012).
- Demant, Peter R. 2006. Islam vs. Islamism: The dilemma of the Muslim world. Westport, CT: Praeger Publishers.
- De Montclos, Marc-Antoine Perouse. 2014. Introduction and overview. In Boko Haram: Islamism, politics, security and the state in Nigeria, ed. Marc-Antoine Pérouse de Montclos, 1-7. Leiden: African Studies Centre.
- _____. 2014. Boko Haram and politics: From insurgency to terrorism. In Boko Haram: Islamism, politics, security and the state in Nigeria, ed. Marc-Antoine Pérouse de Montclos, 135-157. Leiden: African Studies Centre.

- Denny, Frederick Mathewson. 1975. The meaning of "ummah" in the Qur'an. History of Religion 15, no. 1 (August): 34-70.
- _____. 1977. Ummah in the constitution of Medina. Journal of Near Eastern Studies 36, no. 1 (January): 39-47.
- Dey, Ian. 1993. Qualitative data analysis: A user-friendly guide for social scientists. London: Routledge.
- Dey, Ian. 1993. Qualitative data analysis: A user-friendly guide for social scientists. London: Routledge.
- Donohue, John J., and John L. Esposito. ed. 2007. Islam in transition: Muslim perspectives. 2nd ed. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Durkheim, E. 1995 (1915). The elementary forms of the religious life. London: George Allen and Unwin.
- Dutton, Yasin. 1999. The origins of Islamic law: The Qur'an, the Muwatta' and Madinan 'Amal. New Delhi: Lawman (India) Private Limited.
- Eckert, Julia. 2012. Theories of militancy in practice: Explanations of Muslim terrorism in India. Social Science History 36, no. 3 (Fall): 321-345.
- Eickelman, Dale. F. and James Piscatori. 1996. Muslim Politics. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Elaigwu, J. Isawa, and Habu Galadima. 2003. The shadow of sharia over Nigerian federalism. Publius 33, no. 3 (Summer): 123-144.
- El-kadi, Ahmed. n.d. Sayyid Qutb. <http://www.islam101.com/histroy/people/century20/syedQutb.htm> (Accessed August 20, 2014).
- Ellingwood, Jane. 2008. The programme for Christian-Muslim relations in Africa (PROCMURA): An evolutionary perspective. The Muslim World 98 (January): 72-94.
- Elliston, Edgar J. 2011. Introduction to missiological research design. Pasadena: William Carey Library.
- Enayat, Hamid. 2005. Modern Islamic political thought. London: I. B. Tauris.
- Encyclopedia Britannica. Ijma, qiyas and ijtihad. <http://www.britannica.com/EBchecked/topic/282550,297047,297055> (accessed November 8, 2013).
- Encyclopedia of the Middle East*. Abul Ala Maududi. <http://www.mideastweb.org>. (Accessed 25/10/11).

- Encyclopedia of World Biography on Abu-l A 'la Mawdudi.
<http://www.bookrags.com/biography/abu-i-ala-mawdudi/> (accessed 22/2/12).
- Esposito, John L. 1983. Islam and Muslim politics. In Voices of Resurgent Islam, ed. John L. Esposito, 3-15. New York: Oxford University Press.
- _____. 1998. Islam: The straight path. 3rd ed. New York: Oxford University Press.
- _____. 1999. The Islamic threat: Myth or reality. 3rd ed. New York: Oxford University Press.
- _____, ed. 2003. The Oxford dictionary of Islam. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Esposito, John L., and John O. Voll. 2001. Makers of contemporary Islam. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Euben, Roxanne L. 2002. Killing (For) Politics: Jihad, martyrdom, and political action. Political Theory 30, no. 1 (February): 4-35.
- Facchini, Mickael Melki. 2011. Ideology and cultural change: A theoretical approach. Paper presented at the seminar Sepio June 21, MSE (Paris 1, France) and Association for the Study of Religion, Economics and Culture, ASREC annual meeting, Hyatt Regency, Crystal City (Washington DC). April 7-10, 2011.
<http://laep.univ-paris1.fr/SEPIO/SEPIO110621FacchiniMelkiVA.pdf> (accessed November 12, 2012).
- Falola, Toyin. 1998. Violence in Nigeria: The crisis of religious politics and secular ideologies. Rochester, NY: University of Rochester Press.
- Falola, Toyin and Matthew M. Heaton. 2008. A history of Nigeria. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Festinger, L. 1957. A theory of cognitive dissonance. CA: Stanford University Press.
- Flick Uwe. 2011. Introducing research methodology: A beginner's guide to doing a research project. London: Sage Publications Ltd.
- _____. 2014. Mapping the field. In The Sage handbook of qualitative data analysis, ed. Uwe Flick, 3-18. Los Angeles: Sage Publications.
- Foucault, Michel. 1972. The Archaeology of Knowledge. trans. A. M. Sheridan Smith. London: Routledge.
- Francis, Linda E. 1997. Ideology and interpersonal emotion management: Redefining identity in two support. SocialPsychologyQuarterly 60, no. 2 (June):153-171.
- Freedon, Michael. 1998. Is nationalism a district ideology? Political Studies XLVL: 748-765.
- Fuller, Graham E. 2003. Future of political Islam. Palgrave: Macmillan Publishers.

- Fwatshak, Sati U. 2006. A comparative analysis of the 19th and 21st Century religious conflicts on the Jos plateau, central Nigeria. Svensk missionstidskrift 94, no 3: 259-280.
- Galtung, Johan. 1969. Violence, Peace and Peace Research. Journal of Peace Research 6, no. 3: 167-191.
- _____. 1990. Cultural violence. Journal of Peace 27, no.3 (August): 291-305.
- Geertz, Clifford. 1973. The interpretation of Cultures. New York: Basic Books.
- _____. 1993. Religion as a cultural system. In The interpretation of cultures: selected essays. Fontana Press.
- Ghanem, Isam. 1975. The causes and motives of the jihad in northern Nigeria. Man, New Series 10, no. 4 (December): 623-624.
- Gilliland, Dean S. 1986. African religion meets Islam: Religious change in northern Nigeria. Lanham, MD: University Press of America, Inc.
- Girard, Rene. 1989 (1972). Violence and the sacred. Trans. Patrick Gregory. Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press.
- Glaser, Barney G., and Anselm L. Strauss. 2006. The discovery of grounded theory: Strategies for qualitative research. New Brunswick: Aldine Transaction.
- Goddard, Hugh. 2000. Christian-Muslim relations: A look backwards and a look forwards. Islam and Christian Muslim Relations 11, no.2 (July): 195-212.
- _____. 2000. A history of Christian-Muslim relations. Chicago: New Amsterdam.
- Goldziher, Ignaz. 1981. Introduction to Islamic theology and law. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University press.
- Griswold, Eliza. 2010. Christian-Muslim encounters in Nigeria: On the fault line Christian. Century 127, no 22 (November 2): 22-25.
- Gunn, T Jeremy. 2003. Shaping an Islamic identity: Religion, Islamism, and the state in central Asia. Sociology of Religion 64, no. 3 (Fall): 389-410.
- Haddad, Yvonne Yazbeck. 1983. The qur'anic justification for an Islamic revolution: The view of Sayyid Qutb. Middle East Journal 37, no. 1 (Winter): 4-29.
- Haines L. Byron L. and Frank L. Cooley, ed. 1987. Christians and Muslims together: An exploration by Presbyterians. Philadelphia: The Geneva Press.
- Hall, John R. 2001. Religion and violence: Social processes in comparative perspective. In Handbook for the Sociology of Religion. Ed. Michele Dillon. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, (forthcoming).

http://files.wcfia.harvard.edu/569_JHallReligion%2BViolence11-01.pdf (Accessed June 10, 2014).

- Hallaq, Wael B. 2004. Authority, continuity, and change in Islamic law. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Hallaq, Wael B. 2009. An introduction to Islamic law. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Haleem, M.A. S. Abdel. 2010. Qur 'anic 'jihad': A linguistic and contextual analysis. Journal of Qur'anic Studies 12: 147-166.
- Harman, Gilbert H. 1968 Three levels of meaning. The Journal of Philosophy 65, no. 19 (October): 590-602.
- Harmerton-Kelly, Robert. 2004. Violence and religion. Church and Society 94, no 5 (May-June): 35-44.
- Harnischfeger, Johannes. 2006. Islamization and ethnic conversion in Nigeria. Anthropos Bd. 101, H. 1: 37-53.
- Hassan, Farooq A. 1982. The Sources of Islamic Law. Proceedings of the annual meeting American Society of International Law 76 (APRIL 22-24,): 65-75.
- Hassan, Ahmed Issack. 2002. "The Kadhi courts: Setting the records straight." <http://www.commonlii.org/other/KECKRC/2002/11.html> (accessed March 6th, 2010).
- Hassan, M. Kamal. 2003. The influence of Mawdudi's thought on Muslims in Southeast Asia: A brief survey. Muslim World 93 (July – October): 429-64.
- Hassan, Mehboob ul. 2011. Meeting with history: A conversation with Prof. Khurshid Ahmad (An Islamic economist and activist). Kyoto Bulletin of Islamic Studies no.1, vol.1-2 (March): 74-123.
- Haynes, Jeff. 1996. Religion and politics in Africa. Nairobi: East African Educational Publishers Ltd.
- Heck, Paul L. 2004. "Jihad" revisited. The Journal of Ethics 32, no.1 (Spring): 95-128.
- Hepburn, John R. 1973. Violent behavior in interpersonal relationships. Sociological Quarterly 14, no. 3 (Summer): 419-429.
- Holt, P.M. 1970. The Cambridge History of Islam, Vol 2B: Islamic Society and Civilization. New York, NY: Cambridge University Press.
- Hoover, Herbert. 1926. The importance of research. The Science News-Letter, 10, no. 297 (Dec. 18): 181.

- Hourani, Goeroge F. 1985. Reason and tradition in Islamic ethics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Huaco, George A. 1971. On ideology. Acta Sociologica 14, no. 4: 245-255.
- Huda, Qamar-ul. 2010. Crescent and dove: Peace and conflict resolution. Washington, D. C.: United States Institute of Peace Press.
- Hunwick, John. 1992. An African case study of political Islam: Nigeria. Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 524 (November): 143-155.
- Hsieh, Hsiu-Fang, Sarah E. Shannon. 2005. Three approaches to qualitative content analysis Qualitative Health Research 15 no. 9 (November): 1277-1288.
- Ibn Taymiyyah. 2000. Ibn Taymiyyah expounds on Islam: Selected writings of Shaykh al-Islam Taqi ad-Din Ibn Taymiyyah on Islamic faith, life, and society. Comp. and trans. Muhammed Abdul-Haqq Ansari.
http://www.kalamullah.com/Books/ibn_taymiyyah_expounds_on_islam.pdf (Accessed May 26, 2014).
- Ibrahim, Jibrin. 1987. The politics of religion in Nigeria: The parameters of the 1987 crisis in Kaduna state. Review of African Political Economy no. 45/46: 65-82.
- _____. 1991. Religion and political turbulence in Nigeria. The Journal of Modern African Studies 29, no.1 (March):115-136.
- Idris, Sajjad. 2003. Reflections on Mawdudi and human rights. Muslim World 93 (July – October): 547-61.
- Ijma and qiyas consultancy. Meaning of ijma and qiyas.
http://www.ijmaqiyas.com/Definitions_IQ.html (accessed November 8, 2013).
- Isichei, Elizabeth. 1987. The Maitatsine risings in Nigeria 1980–1985: A revolt of the disinherited. Journal of Religion in Africa 17, Fasc. 5 (October):194-208.
- Istidlal. <http://sunnirevivalproject.wordpress.com> (accessed November 8, 2013).
- Jackman, Mary R. 2001. License to kill: Violence and legitimacy in expropriative social relations. In The psychology of legitimacy: Emerging perspectives on ideology, justice, and intergroup relations, ed. John T. Jost and Brenda Major, 437-467. New York: Cambridge University Press.
- Jackson, Roy. 2011. Mawlana Mawdudi and political Islam: Authority and the Islamic state. Abingdon: Routledge.
- Jackson, Sherman. 2007. Jihad and the modern world. In Islam in transition: Muslim perspectives. 2nd ed., ed. John J. Donohue and John L. Esposito, 394-408. New York: Oxford University Press.

- Jamieson, Alan G. 2006. Faith and sword: A short history of Christian- Muslim conflict. London: Reaktion Books.
- Jami'u Sulaiman. 2012. Towards diffusing religious tension in the polity: Islam and politics in Nigeria: 1903-1983. Ilorin: Lavgark Investment Ltd.
- Jān, Tārik. 2003. Mawdudi's critique of the secular mind. Muslim World 93, no 3-4 (July – October): 503-519.
- Jenkins, Philip. 2002. The next Christendom: The coming of global Christianity. New York: Oxford University Press.
- _____. 2008. The roots of jihad in India. The New Republic, December 24: 7-9.
- Kaduna State of Nigeria: Laws establishing customary courts, Shari'a courts, Shari'a court of appeal and customary court of appeal.
- Kaduna State of Nigeria: The Shari'a courts civil procedure rules, 2010
- Kafrawi, Shalahudin. 1998. Methods of interpreting the Qur'ān: A comparison of Sayyid Qutb and Bint al-shāti'. Islamic Studies 37, no. 1 (Spring): 3-17.
- Kalu, Ogbu Uke. 2004. Sharia and Islam in Nigerian Pentecostal rhetoric, 1970-2003 Pneuma 26 no. 2 (Fall): 242-261.
- Kamali, Mohammad Hashim. 1999. Principles of Islamic Jurisprudence. BookZZ.org (Accessed June 27, 2014).
- Kamali, Mohammad Hashim. 2002. Issues in the understanding of jihad and ijtihad. Islamic Studies 41, no. 4 (Winter): 617-634.
- Kane Ousmane. 2003. Muslim modernity in postcolonial Nigeria: A study of the Society for the Removal of Innovation and Reinstatement of Tradition. Leiden: Brill.
- Karsh, Efraim. 2007. Islamic imperialism: A history. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- Kateregga, Badru D. and David W. Shenk. 1985. Islam and Christianity: A Muslim and Christian in dialogue. Nairobi: Uzima Press.
- Kelman, Herbert C. Compliance, identification and internalization: Three processes of attitude change. Journal of Conflict Resolution, no.2 (March 1958): 51-60.
- Kendhammer, Brandon. n.d. The sharia controversy in northern Nigeria and the politics of Islamic law in new and uncertain democracies. <http://brandonkendhammer.com/wp-content/uploads/2012/07/The-Politics-of-Islamic-Law-in-New-and-Uncertain-Democracies-Copy-with-Tables.pdf> (accessed November 7, 2012).

- Khalidi, Omar. 2003. Mawlana Mawdudi and the future political order in British India. Muslim World 93, no 3-4 (July – October): 415-27.
- Khan, Qaramuddin. 1982. Political Concepts in the Qur'an. Lahore: Islamic book Foundation.
- Khatab, Sayed. 2004. Arabism and Islamism in Sayyid Qutb's thought on nationalism. Muslim World 94, no 2 (April): 217-244.
- _____. 2009. The voice of democratism in Sayyid Qutb's response to violence and terrorism. Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations 20, no. 3 (July): 315–332.
- _____. 2002. Citizenship rights of non-Muslims in the Islamic state of hakimiyya espoused by Sayyid Qutb. Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations 13, no 2: 163-187.
- _____. 2002. "Hakimiyyah" and "Jahiliyyah" in the thought of Sayyid Qutb. Middle Eastern Studies 38, no. 3 (July): 145-170.
- _____. 2006. The political thought of Sayyid Qutb. London: Routledge.
- Khair, Bustami Mohamed. 2000. The Qur'an and science: The debate on the validity of scientific interpretations. Journal of Qur'anic Studies 2, no 2 (October): 19-35.
- Kilani, Abdul Razaq. 2000. Islam and Christian-Muslim relations in Niger-Delta (Nigeria). Journal of Muslim Minority Affairs 20, no.1: 129-136.
- Kim, Caleb Chul-Soo. 2001. Supernaturalism in Swahili Islam: with special reference to the therapeutical cults of jinn possession. PhD dissertation, Fuller Theological Seminary.
- _____. 2014. Considering “ordinariness” in studying Muslim cultures and discipleship. In Discipleship in the 21st century mission, ed. Timothy K. Park and Steve K. Eom, 178-192. Euwang Kyonggi, Korea: East-West Center for Missions Research and Development.
- Kimberly, Neuendorf. 2002. The content analysis guidebook. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Kirmanj, Sherko. 2008. The relationship between traditional and contemporary Islamist political thought. Middle East Review of International Affairs 12, no. 1 (March): 69-82.
- Kraft, Charles H. 1996. Anthropology for Christian witness. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis Books.
- Kukah, Matthew Hassan. 2007. Christian-Muslim relations in sub-Saharan Africa: Problems and prospects. Islam and Christian Muslim Relations 18, no.2 (April): 155-164.

- Laboda, Luke. 2004. The thought of Sayyid Qutb. <http://www.ashbrook.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/06/2004-Loboda-The-Thought-of-Sayyid-Qutb-PDF.pdf> (accessed July 27, 2014).
- LaCapra, Domnick. 1988. Culture and ideology: From Geertz to Marx. Poetics Today 9, no. 2: 377-394.
- Lambek, Michael. 2008. General introduction. In A reader in the anthropology of religion. 2nd ed., ed. Michael Lambek, 1-17. Malden, MA: Blackwell Publishing.
- Lambton, Ann K. S. 1970. A nineteenth century view of jihad. Studia Islamica, no. 32: 181-192.
- Lapidus, Ira M. 1997. Islamic revival and modernity: The contemporary moments and the historical paradigms. Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient 40, no. 4: 444-460.
- LeCompte, Margaret D., and Jean J. Schensul. 1999. Analyzing and Interpreting Ethnographic Data: Ethnographer's Toolkit, 5: Walnut Creek: Altamira Press.
- _____. 2010. Ethnographer's toolkit. Vol. 1, Designing and conducting ethnographic research: An introduction. 2nd ed. Walnut Creek, Calif.: Alta Mira Press.
- Lerman, Eran. 1981. Mawdudi's concept of Islam. Middle Eastern Studies 17, no. 4 (October): 492-509.
- Levtzion, Nehemia. 2000. Islam in the Bilad al-Sudan to 1800. In Islam in Africa, ed. Nehemia Levtzion and Randall L. Pouwels, Ohio: Ohio University Press.
- Lewis, Bernard. 2000. The middle east: 2000 years of history from the rise of Christianity to the present day. Great Britain: Weidenfeld & Nicolson, 1995. Reprint London: Phoenix.
- Ludwig, Frieder. 2008. Christian-Muslim relations in northern Nigeria since the introduction of Shari'ah in 1999. Journal of the American Academy of Religion 76, no.3 (September): 602-637.
- MacCulloch, Diarmaid. 2013. Silence: A Christian history. London: penguin Books.
- Marshall, Catherine, and Gretchen B. Rossman. 2011. Designing qualitative research. 5th ed. Los Angeles: Sage Publications
- Marshall, Douglas A. 2010. Temptation, tradition, and taboo: A theory of sacralization. Sociological Theory 28, no 1 (March 64-90).

Maududi, Sayyid Abul A'la. 1960. Towards understanding Islam. Ed. Khurshid Ahmad.

http://www.teachislam.com/dmdocuments/Maulana_Maududi_Towards_Understanding_Islam_%28Translated_by_Khurram_Murad%29.pdf. (accessed August 6, 2012).

_____. 1960. The Islamic law and constitution. trans. and ed. Khurshid Ahmad. Lahore: Islamic Publications (Pvt) Ltd.

_____. 1964. Haqiqat-i-Jihad. Lahore: Taj Company Ltd.

_____. 1980. Jihad in Islam. Beirut: The Holy Qur'an Publishing House.

_____. 1981. Murtadd ki Saza Islami Qanun Mein. Trans. 8th ed. Lahore: Islamic Publications Ltd.

_____. 2000. Four basic Qur'anic terms. New Delhi: Markazi Maktaba Islami Publishers.

_____. 2009. Islamic movement: Pre-requisite for success. New Delhi: Markazi Maktaba Islami Publishers.

_____. 2011. Political Theory of Islam. New Delhi: Markazi Maktaba Islami Publishers.

_____. 2011. Witness unto mankind: The purpose and duty of the Muslim Ummah. Trans. and ed. Khurram Murad. New Delhi: Markazi Maktaba Islami Publishers.

_____. 2011. The Islamic movement : Dynamics of values, power and change. Ed. Khurram Murad. New Delhi: Markazi Maktaba Islami Publishers.

_____. 1939. Jihad Fi Sabuilillah (Jihad in Islam). Trans. Khurshid Ahmad and ed. Huda Khattab. Birmingham: U.K.I.M. Dawah Centre.

http://www.teachislam.com/dmdocuments/Maulana_Maududi_Jihad_Fi_Sabilillah_Translated_by_Khurram_Murad.pdf(accessed August 6, 2012).

Mawdudi and Qutb: two anti-Western intellectuals. <http://www.fsmitha.com/h2/ch28arab3.htm>. (Accessed 28/10/2011).

Mayring, Philip. 2000. Qualitative content analysis. Forum Qualitative Research 1, no. 2 (June). <http://www.qualitative-research.net/index.php/fqs/article/view/1089/2385> (accessed 28/10/11).

McDowell, Josh and John Gilchrist. 1983. The Islam debate. San Bernardino, CA: Here is Life Publishers, Inc.

- McIntosh, D. N. 1995. Religion as a schema, with implications for the relation between religion and coping. The International Journal for the Psychology of Religion 5: 1–16.
- Miles, Matthew B., A. Michael Huberman and Jonny Saldana. 2014. Qualitative data analysis: A methods sourcebook. 3rd ed. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Miles, William F. S. 2003. Shari'a as de-Africanization: Evidence from Hausaland. Africa Today 50, no. 1 (Spring-Summer): 51-75.
- Miller, Jody, and Barry Glassner. 2004. The “inside” and the “outside”: Finding realities in interviews. In Qualitative research: Theory, method and practice, 2nd ed., ed. David Silverman, 125-139. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Mohammed, Abdulkareem. 2010. The paradox of Boko Haram. Kano: Moving Image Limited.
- Mohammed, Kyari. 2014. The message and methods of Boko Haram. In Boko Haram: Islamism, politics, security and the state in Nigeria, ed. Marc-Antoine Pérouse de Montclos, 9-32. Leiden: African Studies Centre.
- Mohammad, Noor. 1985. The doctrine of jihad: An introduction. Journal of Law and Religion 3, no 2: 381-397.
- Monroe, Kristen Renwick, and Lina Haddad Kreidie. 1997. The perspective of Islamic fundamentalists and the limits of rational choice theory. Political psychology 18, no. 1 (March): 19-43.
- Morgan, Adrian. 2007. Who is the true godfather of Islamic fundamentalism? <http://www.islam-watch.org/AdrianMorgan/Godfather-of-Islamic-Fundamentalism.htm>. (Accessed 25/10/11).
- Moten, Abdul Rashid. 2004. Islamization of knowledge in theory and practice: The contribution of Sayyid Abul A'lāMawdūdī. Islamic Studies 43, no. 2 (Summer): 247-272.
- Mozzaffari, Mehdi. 2007. What is Islamism? History and definition of a concept. Totalitarian Movements and Political Religions 8, no. 1 (March): 17-33.
- Mugenda, Abel Gitau. 2008. Social science research: Theory and principles. Nairobi: Applied Research and Training Services.
- Mugenda Olive M., and Abel G. Mugenda. 1999. Research methods: Qualitative and quantitative approaches. Nairobi: ACTS.
- Mughal, Munirn Ahmad. n. d. What is Istidlal. <http://ssrn.com/Athor=1697634> (accessed November 8, 2013).

- Murr, Virginia. 2004. The power of ideas: Sayyid Qutb and Islamism. Rock College Summer Research Project. <http://www.stephenhicks.org/.../murr-qutb.pdf> (accessed May 29, 2014).
- Murtada, Ahmad. 2012. Boko Haram: Its beginnings, principles and activities in Nigeria. al-Qira'at Journal (for African and Islamic Studies), no.12 (April):12-25. Trans. SalafiManhaj.com 2013 (Accessed June 6, 2014).
- Musallam, Adnan A. 1990. Prelude to Islamic commitment: Sayyid Qutb's literary and spiritual orientation, 1932-1938. Muslim World 80, no 3-4 (July – October): 176-189.
- Muzaffar, Chandra. 1986. Malaysia: Islamic resurgence and the question of development. Journal of Social Issues in Southeast Asia 1, no. 1(February): 57-75.
- Nagel, Tilman. 2000. The history of Islamic theology: From Muhammad to the present. Princeton: Markus Wiener Publishers.
- Nasr, Seyyed Vali Reza. 1995. Mawlana Mawdudi's autobiography. The Muslim World LXXXV, no 1-2 (January – April): 49-62.
- _____. 1996. Mawdudi and the making of Islamic revivalism. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Nayed, Aref Ali. 1992. The radical Qur'anic hermeneutics of Sayyid Qutb. Islamic Studies 31, no. 3 (Autumn): 355-363.
- Nehls, Gerhard and Walter Eric. 1997. A practical and tactical approach to Muslim evangelism: Trainers textbook for Muslim evangelism. Nairobi: Life Challenges Africa.
- Nettler, Roland. 1994. A modern Islamic confession of faith and conception of religion: Sayyid Qutb's introduction to the Tafsir, fi Zilal al-Qur'an. British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies 21, no.1: 102-114.
- Nesbitt, Eleanor, and Elisabeth Arweck. 2010. Issues arising from an ethnographic investigation of the religious identity formation of young people in mixed-faith families. Fieldwork in Religion 5, no. 1:8-31.
- New World Encyclopedia*. Sayyid Abul A'la Maududi. http://www.newworldencyclopedia/entry/sayyid_Abul_A'la_Maududi (Accessed August 20, 2014).
- Niemoller, Martin. n.d. First they came for the socialists. Holocaust Encyclopedia. United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. <https://www.ushmm.org/wlc/en/article.php?ModuleId=10007392> (Accessed 14/10/2016).

- Nmehielle, Vincent O. 2004. Sharia law in the northern states of Nigeria: To implement or not to implement, the constitutionality is the question. Human Rights Quarterly no. 3 (August): 730-759.
- Nordstrom, Carolyn, and Antonius C. G. M. Robben. 1995. Fieldwork under fire: Contemporary studies of violence and survival. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Notes on the penal code law (Cap 89 Laws of Northern Nigeria 1963), Annotated by S. S. Richardson, 3rd ed.
- Omar, A. Rashied. 2003. Islam and violence. Ecumenical Review 55, no 2 (April): 158-163.
- Omotosho, A O. 2003. Religious violence in Nigeria - The causes and solutions: an Islamic perspective. Svensk missionstidskrift 91, no 1: 15-31.
- Onuoha, Freedom. 2014. Boko Haram and the evolving Salafi jihadist threat in Nigeria. In Boko Haram: Islamism, politics, security and the state in Nigeria, ed. Marc-Antoine Pérouse de Montclos, 158-191. Leiden: African Studies Centre.
- Olojo, Akinola. 2013. Nigeria's troubled north: Interrogating the drivers of public support for Boko Haram. The Hague: International Centre for Counter -Terrorism (October): 1-18. <http://www.icct.nl/download/file/ICCT-Olojo-Nigerias-Troubled-North-October-2013.pdf> (Accessed May 29, 2014).
- O'Shea, Stephen. 2006. Sea of faith: Islam and Christianity in the medieval mediterranean world. London: Profile.
- Osia, Kunirum. 1993. Resolving religious conflict in Nigeria: A search for points of convergence. Dialogue & Alliance 7, no 1 (Spring-Summer): 41-52.
- Osman, Fathi. 2003. Mawdüdü's contribution to the development of modern Islamic thinking in the Arabic-speaking world. Muslim World 93, no 3-4 (July – October): 465-85.
- Ousman, Abdelkérím. 2004. The potential of Islamist terrorism in sub-Saharan Africa. International Journal of Politics 18, no. 1/2 (Fall - Winter): 65-105.
- Pan – African culture and ideology.
<http://www.panafricanperspective.com/panafricanculcentre/ideology.html>
(accessed November 13, 2012).
- Pargament K. I. 1997. The psychology of religion and coping: Theory, research, practice. New York: Guilford Press.
- Parshall, Phil. 2003. Muslim evangelism: Contemporary approaches to contextualization. Colorado Springs: Biblica Publishing.

- Passarelli, Francesco and Guido Tabellini. 2013. Emotions and political unrest. Canadian Institute for Advanced Research. http://www.cifar.ca/emotions-and-political-unrest/\$file/cifar-iog-2013-emotions-unrest.pdf (Accessed October 6, 2014).
- Patton, Michael Quinn. 2002. Qualitative research and evaluation method. 3rd ed. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Pavlovic, Peter. 2009. Fundamentalism or tolerance: What is the public role of religion in modern society? In Overcoming fundamentalism: Ethical responses from five continents, ed. Heidi Hadsell and Christoph Stuckelberger, 55-68. Nairobi, Acton Publishers.
- Payne, Daniel. 2008. Orthodoxy, Islam and the 'problem' of the West: A comparison of the liberation theologies of Christos Yannaras and Sayyid Qutb. Religion, State and Society 36, no. 4, (December): 436-450.
- Peters, Rudolph, and Gert J. J. De Vries. 1976-1977. Apostasy in Islam. Die Welt des Islams, New Series 17, no. 1/4: 1-25.
- Peterson, Gregory R. 2001. Religion as orienting worldview. Zygon 36, no.1 (March): 5-19.
- Pham, J. Peter. 2012. Boko Haram's evolving threat. Africa Security Brief 20 (April): 1-8. http://africacenter.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/04/AfricaBriefFinal_20.pdf (Accessed May 30, 2014).
- Pruitt, Dean G. and Sung Hee Kim. 2004. Social conflicts, escalation and settlement, 3rd ed. New York: McGraw Hill Higher Education.
- Qutb, Sayyid. 2006. Milestones. Ed. A. B. al-Mehri. Birmingham: Maktabah Booksellers and Publishers.
- Rahman, Asyraf Hj. A.B. and Nooraihan Ali. 2012. The influence of Al-Mawdudi and the Jama'at Al Islami movement on Sayyid Qutb writings. World Journal of Islamic History and Civilization 2, no 4): 232-236.
- Rahman, Fazlur. 1979. Islam. 2nd ed. Chicago: University of Chicago press.
- _____. 2000. Revival and reform in Islam: A study of Islamic fundamentalism. Oxford: Oneworld Publications.
- Ramachandra, Vinoth. 1999. Faiths in conflicts: Christian integrity in a multicultural world. Downers Grove, Ill: IVP Academic.
- Reisacher, Evelyn, Joseph L. Cumming, Dean S. Gilliland, and Charles E. Van Eagen. 2012. Toward respectful understanding and witness among Muslims. Pasadena, CA: William Carey Library.

- Rippin, Andrew. 2005. Muslims: Their religious beliefs and practices. 3rd ed. London: Routledge
- Robbins, Pamela Clark, John Monahan, and Eric Silver. 2003. Mental disorder, violence, and gender. Law and Human Behavior 27, no. 6 (December): 561-571.
- Rodrik, Dani. 2013. Structural change, employment, and growth in Africa. <http://acetforafrica.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/Dani-Rodrik-Structural-change-employment-and-growth-in-Africa1.pdf> (Accessed October 6, 2014).
- Roper, Duncan. 2007. The Islamist challenge to the western view of the human social order: Contemporary Islamism, with reference to Sayyed Qutb. Stimulus 15, no 2 (May): 11-18.
- Rosenthal, E. I. J. 1962. Political thought in Medieval Islam: An introductory outline. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Ross, Marc Howard. 1986. A cross-cultural theory of political conflict and violence. Political psychology 7, no. 3 (September): 427-469.
- Sajid, Abduljalil. 2006. Qur'anic text and violence. Dialogue and Alliance 20, no 2 (Fall-Winter): 33-49.
- Sanchez R., Magaly. 2006. Insecurity and violence as a new power relation in Latin America. Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 606, (July): 178-195.
- Sanneh, Lamin O. 2003. Shariah sanctions as secular grace? A Nigerian Islamic debate and an intellectual response Transformation 20, no. 4 (October): 232-244.
- Sanni, Amidu. 2006. The sacralization of violence in the promotion of religious idealism: The Nigerian experience. Hamdard Islamicus xxix, no 3: 27-33.
- Sanusi, Sanusi Lamido. 2007. Politics and sharia in northern Nigeria. In Islam and Muslim politics in Africa, ed. Benjamin F. Soares and Rene Otayek, 177-188. New York: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Schacht, Joseph. 1950. The origins of Muhammadan jurisprudence. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- _____. 1957. Islam in northern Nigeria. Studia Islamica 8: 123-146.
- _____. 1982. An introduction to Islamic law. Oxford: Oxford University press.
- Schaff, Adam. 1973. Marxist theory on revolution and violence. Journal of the History of Ideas 34, no. 2 (April-June): 263-270.
- Schreier, Margrit. 2014. Qualitative content analysis. . In The Sage handbook of qualitative data analysis, ed. Uwe Flick, 153-169. Los Angeles: Sage Publications.

- Schull, Joseph. 1992. What is ideology: Theoretical problems and lessons from Soviet-type societies. Political Studies XL: 728-741.
- Seale, Clive. 2003. Quality in qualitative research. In Turning points in qualitative research: Tying knots in a handkerchief, ed. Yvonna S. Lincoln and Norman K. Denzin, 169-184. Walnut Creek: ALTAMIRA Press.
- Sedgwick, Mark. 2007. Jihad, Modernity, and Sectarianism. Nova Religio 11, no. 2 (November): 6-27.
- Selengut, Charles. 2003. Sacred fury: Understanding religious violence. Lanham: AltaMira Press.
- Shafaat, Ahmad. 1984. The meaning of ijma. <http://www.islamicperspectives.com/Meaningofijma.htm> (accessed November 8, 2013).
- Shahib, Alwi. 2004 Christian-Muslim relations into the twenty-first century. Islam and Christian Muslim Relations 15, no.1 (January): 65-77.
- Shepard, William E. 1989. Islam as a 'system' in the later writings of Sayyid Qutb. Middle Eastern Studies 25, no. 1 (January): 31-50.
- _____. 1992. The development of the thought of Sayyid Qutb as reflected in earlier and later editions of 'social justice in Islam. Die Welt des Islams, New Series 32, no. 2: 196-236.
- _____. 1998. Islam resurgence re-viewed. Religious Studies Review 24, no. 1 (January): 13-16.
- _____. 2003. Sayyid Qutb's doctrine of "Jāhiliyya." International Journal of Middle East Studies 35, no. 4 (November): 521-545.
- Shorter, Alyward. 2000. Practical fieldwork methods in social anthropology. Nairobi: Paulines.
- Shrimali, Krishna Mohan. 1988. Scientist religion, ideology and society. SocialScientist 16, no. 12 (December):14-60.
- Siddiqi, Muzammil H. n.d. How and why the different schools of Islamic law emerged. Islam for Today. <http://www.islamfortoday.com/madhab.htm> (accessed 22/2/12).
- Silberman, Israela. 2005. Religious violence, terrorism, and peace: A meaning-system analysis. In Handbook of the psychology of religion and spirituality, ed. Raymond F. Paloutzian and Crystal L. Park, 529-549. New York: The Guilford Press. <http://azhartomorrow.al-fath.net/multmedia/bookes/anther/body/12.pdf#page=548> (accessed 18/1/12).

- Silverman, David. 2004. Introducing qualitative research. In Qualitative research: Theory, method and practice, 2nd ed., ed. David Silverman, 1-8. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Simmel, Georg. 1955 (1908). Conflicts and the web of group affiliations. New York: Free Press.
- Sivan, Emmanuel. 1985. Radical Islam: Medieval theology and modern politics. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- Smart, N. 1969. The religious experience of mankind. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.
- Smith, C. 1998. American evangelicalism: Embattled and thriving. Chicago, IL: University of Chicago Press.
- Smoot, Oliver and Matthew J. Flanigan. 1999. Setting Standards. Issues in Science and Technology 15, no. 3 (Spring): 8-10.
- Soage, Ana Belén. 2009. Hasan al-Banna and Sayyid Qutb: Continuity or rupture? Muslim World, 99 no 2 (April): 294-311.
- Spradley, James P. 1979. The ethnographic interview. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston.
- _____. 1980. Participant observation. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston.
- Stake, Robert E. 2010. Qualitative research: Studying how things work. New York: The Guilford Press.
- Stark, R., and R. Finke. 2000. Acts of faith: Explaining the human side of religion. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press.
- Staudigl, Michael. 2007. Towards a phenomenological theory of violence: Reflections following Merleau-Ponty and Schutz. Human Studies 30, no. 3 (September): 233-253.
- Straus, Anselm. 1987. Qualitative analysis for social scientists. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Strauss, Anselm L., and Juliet M. Corbin. 1998. Basics of qualitative research: Techniques and procedures for developing grounded theory. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Tafhim al-Qur'an-The Meaning of the Qur'an*. Trans. and Comm. Sayyid Abul Ala Maududi. www.english tafsir.com (Accessed February 14, 2014).
- Talal, Prince El Hassan bin. 2000. The future of Muslim - Christian relations: A personal view. Islam and Christian Muslim Relations 11, no.2 (July): 163-166.

- Talmage, C. J. L. 1994. Literal meaning, conventional meaning and first meaning. Erkenntnis 40, no. 2 (March): 213-225.
- Taylor, E. B. 1958. Religion in primitive culture. New York: Harper and Brothers.
- The eighth principle: The principle of Istishab (presumption of continuity).
<http://bewley.virtualave.net/usul9.html> (accessed November 8, 2013).
- The Hadith, Alim, CD-ROM, version 6.0.11.1. U. S. A.: ISL Software Corp, 1986 – 2000.
- The handbook for Shari'a courts law.
- The Holy Quran. trans. Yusuf Ali. In Alim, CD-ROM, version 6.0.11.1. U. S. A.: ISL Software Corp, 1986 – 2000.
- The Islamic Seminary. The definition of qiyas.
http://www.theislamicseminary.org/articles/article002_2.html (accessed November 8, 2013).
- The Noble Qur'an. Trans. Muhammad Taqi-ud-Din Al-hilali and Muhammad Muhsin Khan. <Http://www.imaanstar.com>. (Accessed January 7th, 2013).
- Thomas, David. 2007. The past and the future in Christian–Muslim relations. Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations 18, no 1 (January): 33-42.
- Thomas, David. 2008. Christian doctrines in Islamic theology. Leiden: Brill.
- Thornberg, Robert, and Kathy Charmaz. 2014. Grounded theory and theoretical coding. In The Sage handbook of qualitative data analysis, ed. Uwe Flick, 153-169. Los Angeles: Sage Publications.
- Thurfjell, David. 2007. Islamism's alternative arena. Council of Societies for the Study of Religion Bulletin 36, no. 4 (November): 91-93.
- Tibi, Bassam. 1998. The challenges of fundamentalism: Political Islam and the new world disorder. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Travino K.M. and K. I. Pargament. 2007. Religious coping with terrorism and natural disaster. Southern Medical Journal 100, no.9: 946-947
- Triand, Jean-Louis. 2000. Islam in Africa under French colonial rule. In Islam in Africa, ed. Nehemia Levtzion and Randall LPouwels, 169-187. Ohio: Ohio University Press.
- Turaki, Yusuf. 2012. Historical Roots of Ethno-Religious Crises and Conflicts in Northern Nigeria. Istanbul (unpublished).

- _____. 1993. The British colonial legacy in northern Nigeria: A social ethical analysis of the colonial and post-colonial society and politics in Nigeria. Jos: Challenge Press.
- _____. 1999. Theory and practice of Christian Missions in Africa: A century of SIM/ECWA history and legacy in Nigeria, 1893-1993. Vol. 1. Nairobi: IBS Press.
- Turaki, Yusuf. 2010. Tainted legacy: Islam, colonialism and slavery in northern Nigeria. Mclean, VA: Isaac Publishing.
- Umberson, Debra, Kristi Williams, and Kristin Anderson. 2002. Violent behavior: A measure of emotional upset? Journal of Health and Social Behavior 43, no. 2 (June): 189-206.
- Ungureanu, Daniel. 2010. Sayyid Qutb's ideological influence on contemporary Muslim communities across western Europe. Cultural International Journal of Philosophy of Culture and Axiology VII, no. 2: 181-187.
- Ushama, Thameem, and Noor Mohammad Osmani. 2006. Sayyid Mawdudi's contribution towards Islamic revivalism. IIUC Studies 3, (December): 93-104.
- Usman dan Fodio and the Sokoto Caliphate*. <http://countrystudies.us/nigeria/9.htm> (accessed 26/10/11).
- Valentine, Simon Ross. Sayyid Qutb: Terrorism and the origins of militant Islam. <http://relijournal.com/islam/sayyid-qutb-terrorism-and-the-origins-of-militant-islam/> (Accessed October 25, 2011).
- Van der Dennen, Johan M. G. n. d. Theories of political and social violence. <http://rechten.eldoc.ub.rug.nl/FILES/root/Algemeen/overigepublicaties/2005enouder/A-VIOL/A-VIOL.pdf> (accessed November 12, 2012).
- Van Engen, Charles. 2011. Biblical theology of mission's research method. In Introduction to missiological research design, ed. Elliston, Edgar J. 113-118. Pasadena: William Carey Library.
- Van Nieuwenhuijze, C. A. O. 1995. Islamism: A defiant utopianism. Die Welt des Islam, New Series 35, no. 1 (April): 1-36.
- Verobej, Mark. 2008. Structural violence. The Canadian Journal of Peace and Conflict Studies 40, no. 2: 84-98.
- Voll, John O. 1983. Renewal and reform in Islamic history: Tajdid and Islah. In Voices of Resurgent Islam, ed. John L. Esposito, 32-47. New York: Oxford University Press.
- _____. 1986. Revivalism and social transformations in Islamic history. Muslim World 76, no. 3-4 (July-October): 168-180.
- _____. 1994. Islam: Continuity and change in the modern world. 2nd ed. New York: Syracuse University Press.

- Waines, David. 1995. An introduction to Islam. 2nd ed. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Waldman, Marilyn Robinson. 1965. The Fulani jihad: A reassessment. The Journal of African History 6, no. 3: 333-355.
- Walls, Andrew F. 2002. The cross – cultural process in Christian history: Studies in the transmission and appropriation of faith. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis Books.
- Weber, R.P. 1990. Basic Content Analysis. Newbury Park, CA: Sage Publications.
- Wellman, Jr., James K., and Kyoko Tokuno. 2004. Is religious violence inevitable? Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 43, no. 3: 291-296.
- Westerlund, David. 1997. Review of Christian-Muslim relations in Africa: The case of northern Nigeria and Tanzania compared, by Lissi Rasmussen. Journal of Religion in Africa 27, Fasc. 4 (November): 439-441.
- Wheatcroft, Andrew. 2003. Infidels: A History of the conflict between Christendom and Islam. New York: Random House.
- Wiktorowicz, Quintain. 2005. A genealogy of radical Islam. Studies in Conflict and Terrorism 28: 75-97.
- Wilkinson, Sue. 2004. Focus group research. In Qualitative research: Theory, method and practice, 2nd ed., ed. David Silverman, 177-199. Thousand Oaks: Sage Publications.
- Willis, John Ralph. 1967. Jihad fi Sabil Allah – Its doctrinal basis in Islam and some aspects of its evolution in nineteenth-century West Africa. The Journal of African History 8, no. 3: 395-415.
- Willits, Joseph H. 1927. The importance of research in economic and social problems. The Scientific Monthly 24, no. 2 (February): 126-129
- Winter, D. D., and D. C. Leighton. 2001. Structural violence. In Peace, conflict, and violence: Peace psychology in the 21st century, ed. D. J. Christie, R. V. Wagner and D. D. Winters. New York: Prentice-Hall.
http://comp.uark.edu/~dleightn/writing/downloads_files/SVintro.pdf (accessed November 12, 2012).
- Winters, Clyde Ahmad. 1987. Koranic education and militant Islam in Nigeria. International Review of Education 33, no.2: 171-185.
- Wood, Simon A. 2011. Rethinking fundamentalism: Ruhollah Khomeini, Mawlana Mawdudi, and the fundamentalist model. Journal for Cultural and Religious Theory 11, no 2 (Spring): 171-198.

- Woodberry, J. Dudley. ed. 1989. Muslims and Christians on the road to Emmaus.
Monrovia, Ca: MARC Publications.
- Yin, Robert K. 2011. Qualitative research from start to finish. New York: The Guilford Press.
- Young, Nick. 2008. Culture as ideology: Will today's youngsters buy into constructions of Chinese culture? China Rights Forum no. 3: 15-21.
- Yusuf, Hajiya Bilkisu. 2007. Managing Muslims-Christian conflicts in northern Nigeria: A case study of Kaduna state. Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations 18, no.2 (April): 237-256.
- Zakaria, Rafia. 2010. Islamism. In Encyclopedia of political theory, ed. Bevir Mark, 720-724. Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage Publications Limited.
- Zhang, Yan, and Barbara M. Wildemuth. n. d. Qualitative Analysis of Content.
https://www.ischool.utexas.edu/~yanz/Content_analysis.pdf (accessed October 2, 2014).
- Zubaida, Sami. 1993. Islam: the people and the state: Political ideas and movements in the Middle East. London: Tauris.

APPENDIX 1

Transcripts of Coded Themes

SRQ1: What do Muslim leaders and intellectuals in Kaduna and Kano states say is the main cause of Islamic fundamentalism in their areas?

Th 1: Understanding the Terms Islamism, Islamic Revivalism and Militancy

FG1 [592-664]

Islamism is putting things or doing things based on Islamic principles.

FG1 [790-876]

To revive Islam that is what I think the word means, it is an attempt to revive Islam

FG1[947-1042]

Islamic militancy it is just like agent of social control, or deviation of Islamic activities

FG1 [1081-1197]

Maybe they serve as a moral, what do you call it, moral dissent, just for example like the hisbah in Kano state.

FG1 [1198-1293]

To me Islamic militancy, like now when amm, it simply refers to that Islamic group Boko Haram

FG1 [1295-1383]

Any movement either for or against Islam it can also be regarded as Islamic militancy

FG1 [1384-1549]

to me the case of book haram you cannot regard it as Islamic military because they are not recognized in a formal way, they are just terrorists, criminals, touts

FG1 [1654-1995]

For me Islamic revivalism and Islamic militancy have differences because Islamic revivalism may take the form of a revolution, like the revolution of Usman Shehu Danfodio. That may be Islamic revivalism. And Islamic militancy simply refers to these outcast militant groups such as Boko Haram all those can be referred to as Islamic militancy my understanding the word Islamic militancy stands for the sect who claim to be Islamic sect fighting for other mission or objectives which is best known to them.

FG2 [273-438]

FG2 [440-546]

When we say Islamism refers to the situation whereby a society is governed according to Islamic teaching

FG2 [2092-2419]

I think it is a term used by some organizations. They might be Muslims they might be a combination of both the Muslims and the non-Muslims but I can't really call that jihad or anything to do with Islamic provision because they are using it to execute whatever they feel is the right thing or whatever they feel they have to do.

FG3 [417-1259]

Let me give it a short, the term Islamic militancy which so many people let's say they are for instance so many people misuse it in the terms of when it comes to the area of jihad. In Islam jihad means holy war. Some people misuse it or kind of want to use it as militancy. As we all know militancy has to do with kind of unrest in an area may be when it comes to issue that has to come with let's say agreement between may be government and two other states. So when there is no agreement it can result to militancy. To my own understanding so many people have kind of use that idea of militancy as relating to Islam may be when someone says something that is not correct about Islam and someone decides to fight for his religion and says this is wrong, this is what is right and someone decides to say it is militancy. That idea is wrong.

FG3 [1261-3115]

Well in addition to what he has just said, I think Islamism means may be we go back to the scriptures. Its ehh Islam means, I could remember there as a hadith in Annawawi collection by which angel Gabriel came to the prophet (SAW) asking him to tell him more about Islam. So he made mention of that five pillars of Islam, that it is testifying that there is no deity but Allah, accepting the prophet Muhammad (SAW) as the prophet of God, then performing salat, Hajj and Zakat. So these are the five pillars of Islam. So as long as somebody believes in these ones that is the meaning of that Islamism. Then revival of Islam we can put in a way that like the way Islam came into Nigeria, it came through traders, there are not ulama, there are not learned they just have the Islam and they propagated it, they are here the main purpose is for their own business but in the way the propagate Islam. So they just give you the Shahada and then go away, they did not educate you. So our people then before the Jihad of Usman Danfodio, you will see somebody having mosque, performing prayer and beside the mosque also he has where he is performing Bori . I don't know what bori in English is. So he has a shrine beside. The people have been doing that up to the coming of Usman Danfodio in this our Sudan Savannah. So when he came he tried to pass knowledge into people to show them the actual teaching of Islam. So that one I can say is revival. That is bringing people into the actual teaching of Qur'an and Hadith. Then militancy is may be is the way we are witnessing it today. What we are witnessing today. This Boko Haram, ISIS in the east, and we have Boko haram in Nigeria here with the name of Islam. They think maybe they are doing jihad while let me just put it the way militancy mean, you know what militancy mean. I think that is what I can say.

FG3 [3903-4012]

When we talk of militancy there is kind of selfish interest. Selfish interest to want to acquire something ...

FG3 [4013-4181]

Interjected, people trying to express their grievances and use religion as a way of gaining some kind of sympathy from the people that they are sharing the same faith

KD1 [369-2091]

Actually, I grew up to know about the case of Islamism, Islamic revivalism and militancy all through the media. But on my own, I have tried to find time to ask questions from my religious teachers to know what they mean. But to my little understanding, I have come to realize that it depends on what divide you look at it. If you are from the western point of view where we have the Europe, Europeans, and the Americans, in most cases, when they look at a militancy, they just anything that any racter that wants to come from the Islamic end or Muslim end, they just name it militancy or Islamic revivalist, just to, in a way of putting "giving a dog a bad name so that to hang it" but me as a Muslim, when I say Islamic revivalism, I see it as a way of in the sense of those that actually renew, as in transform the religion, in the sense of bringing religion back on track when its comes to the real teachings of the prophet (SAW). Because, I see to it as those people that actually, who brought to themselves the responsibility of seeing that our people move on the right track and do the right thing as regard the teaching of Islam and in the way many people will look at them that they are violent, maybe due to the way they take up their activities or maybe the way they come offensive, but one of the thing I notice that most of them have in shortage is actually the real time knowledge, most of them they actually jump into activities without getting the full time knowledge of what they are going into. But all in all, Islamic revivalist to me is just those that actually of the opinion of getting the Islamic renaissance of getting the full respect, the ...of Islam. That's my opinion of the Islamic revivalism.

KD2 [358-1208]

Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy, to me, these words are not like, Islamic revivalism or Islamic militancy, I don't think they do exist because Islam is not an old religion or something you can say is old that you need to revive it except, it is always in practice except if people are forgetting some of the teachings or some of the doctrines about Islam. Then, you need to remind them or tell them what they don't know about it, but not that it is being old that you need to revive it, and Islam, Islamic militancy, no, just the word militancy but not Islamic. There is nothing like Islamic militancy to me, that's my own understanding and this is because Islamic militancy is being used by the media and being ah as propaganda by the Europe and the West. But there is nothing like Islamic militancy in Islam, that doesn't exist actually.

KD3 [378-949]

My understanding of the word Islamism. Islamism simply means an ideology to the adherents of the total submission to the way of Islam that is sharia law. While Islamic revivalism or militancy is just a revolutionary, revivalism or militancy is just an act or a way in which maybe the auto standing to bring back, to bring back Islamic, to bring back the teachings of Islam in areas in which may be we think or a particular place, may be ehm, may be way life of the particular, of Muslims in a particular area as changed or been dominated by either culture or traditions.

KD4 [381-1099]

Let me start by the term Islamism, totally I will say Islamism is the totality, is an ideology, total submission to the will of almighty Allah. That is the rule of Islam. That is what I understand by Islamism. Islamic revivalism to me, I will say it is the returning or rehabilitating of the old tradition of the true Islamic teaching and the word militancy is where I have a very much thought because the English translation of the word militant can be categorized into so many ways. But for the purpose of this research, I will just say militancy is a word which is classified as been aggressive or being forceful or using violent means in achieving something. So I think this are what I understand by those terms.

KD5 [295-568]

Islamism, revivalism, or militancy. Islamism, I think is the act of bringing back the norms and values like which some scholars in Islam believes they are the neglected or been forgotten. So, I think Islamism is not militancy but rather reviving the Islam. Yah, that's it.

KD6 [384-993]

What I understand, on my own understanding about militancy in Islam. Ah militancy in Islam, it's in two ways. People call it militancy jihad, people say militancy is out of Islam. Truly militancy is out of Islam, it's not Islamic if it is militancy, but jihad is part of Islam, but what is the meaning of jihad? People don't really understand jihad and militancy in Islam. Jihad in literal Arabic meaning means to strive in the path of Allah, but militancy means to force things that is not may be is Islamic on Muslims or non-Muslims. That is my own understanding, you need to understand militancy in Islam.

KD7 [451-855]

I understand Islamism to be concept of Islam that is just it. The awareness of Islam, the practice of it, the way we, the way Muslims run their lives as Islam states. That is my own understanding about Islamism. Militancy is a term that is used to describe a situation by group of people or community that take of arms in order to force their own point of view on others.

KD8 [299-781]

Islamism is a concept that was actually introduced by the west. It is from Islamism that we get Islamist. Now it's like a movement that has to do with promoting Islamic values. But it did not actually emerge from the Muslims. It emerged from the West. So, going by that, you can say Islamism is a process of, you know, bringing out or complying with Islamic values and ideals, establishing Islamic state, and making sure that the lives of people are guided by Islamic principles.

KD9 [379-839]

Well A'uzubillahi mina shaitani rajim. Bismillahi rahmani rahim) Ahm your question Islamism ah the little way I can explain it is the activism or youths, you know, ah are trying to take Islam to the next level the way they used to say, you know, understanding Islam and trying to, you know, bring their youthfulness to propagate Islam or to show that they are Muslims. This is the little I can say about Islamism. I don't know if I have answered the Question.

KD10 [640-1181]

Alhamdulillah, Islam ah the scholars of the sharia they have give the definition on what Islam means that Islam, you see, literally it means peace, but in the sharia, it means submission to the will and the commandment of Allah (Jallah wa'allah). This is the meaning of Islam, you know, we should submit to the will of Allah (SBUH). What Allah has commanded us, we make all effort to see that we do it and what he has prohibited us from doing, we make all effort to see that we abstain form it and as well one is going to avoid polytheism.

KD11 [242-2523]

Well when you talk about ah Islamism or Islamism revivalism is a period of ah is a period which characterized or which is marked by the resurgence and I think I specifically I can't remember the year, but am sure before revival or before this idea revivalism or what do you call it? Insurgency, you understand, in Islam and Islamic ah and Islam entirely. There was a stage or there was a period which was marked by lethargy and inertia and I think to be specific it would be around that was around the colonial period. There was lethargy in most of the Islamic ah because due to colonial influence on most part of the developing countries or most part of the Islamic world. Due to that influence, the sharia which was the fundamental principle was negated, relegated to the background ah there was, another great feature of this period was lack of research. There was no...backwardness, you understand, in research ah the madarasa was virtually, what do you call it? Virtually in extent after this period ah there was, this period marked, after this period or before I even go after this period you understand. what am saying is that this period there was lethargy and inertia both on the part of the umma and on the scholars of that time, meaning there was no much research on Islamic, not even in the spiritual world, but even in the material world of the Muslim Umma generally as a result of the colonial influence and I think this is the last stage, this is one of those, though this is not the only time, you understand, we have such lethargy in Islam, but I think in the 18th century, I think in the 18th century or let say 17th and 18th century was marked by colonialism in most part of the Islam world. When you come to Africa even in the Arabian world virtually everywhere was colonized like Germany, Belgium and so on and so forth. So this had great impact on the practice of sharia. I think that is what created this religion ah and then there came another period towards the end of colonialism, you understand, that period marked, what do you call it, resurgence in Islamic affairs that was when you will see people al-Maududi, scholars like al-Maududi and then, what do you call it? The emergence of this Muslim brotherhood in Egypt ah and so many other revivalist scholars.

KD12 [462-1660]

Ah we thank you...for choosing this particular course because it an exposure ah to the world what Islam means and ah Islamism or what we can call eh the way we are going to eh project Islam principles to the whole world in fact so far its our own making it is the making of the almighty Allah that has brought Islam to the whole world and then he has set up the principles for human beings to follow ah accordingly Alhamdulillah in fact ah so in essence sir we thank almighty Allah that almighty said he has created this religion ah (recites in Arabic) what he has created, what he has made the principles of this religion is that he wants everybody to know him and worship him and then the propagation of Islam depends on this one that nothing should be worship except Allah. So being the sole originator of everything and then the sole provider of everything in this world, so far we have not gotten any substitute eh in this world that can say that he is capable of doing anything apart from what almighty Allah has done, so in this essence he wants, he has placed every religious principles, religious worshiping on everyone of us and he wants all of us, everybody to abide by worshiping him.

KD13 [311-546]

Islamic revivalism or militancy, at least to my own knowledge and understanding the issue of militancy in Islam, I think I will say ends up with the time of prophet (SAW) because for the now, we don't have anything like this in Islam.

KD14 [328-993]

my understanding of the terms Islamism,. Islamic revivalism or militancy first Islamism is just an ideology or the true practice, putting into practice of the Islamic law that is the teaching of Islam which is what Allah, which is adhering to the teachings of Islam while Islamic revivalism is an act to bring out the lost practice of Islam in a particular community or a state or a nation while Islamic militancy have to do with ah I don't like using the word Islamic militancy, militancy is a body on its own while Islamic is another body. There is nothing like Islamic militancy but militancy is just an aggressive way in which people use to get what they want.

KD15 [280-582]

Hmm actually the world Islam, literal meaning means peace and ah hmm the fact that it means peace you need to devote your total submission, and all your activities to Allah, believe in God, believe in his messenger, his prophet, his books I think literal meaning that is what Islam really consist of.

KD16 [326-342]

I have no idea

KD17 [255-1331]

o be make it short and precise the little knowledge I have of Islamism is ah or Islamic revivalism or militancy is maybe taking arms maybe coming together saying you want to bring laws, force the law of Islam on everybody that's to revive Islamic law, sharia on each and every people using arms and not using maybe through teaching and other things maybe using arms especially. That is the little I can say that I understand about Islamic militancy or revivalism.

I think it should be revivalism of course because by the time you look at the environment or the society today you will see that even the Muslims are start losing touch with the teachings of Islam itself, so if you will say revival maybe you will say revive the teachings of Islam, but I don't think that word of militancy, because I feel militancy is taking arms against people, you understand, may be killing people just to uplift the call of Islam, I don't think it's militancy I think it is revivalism, to revive the Islamic teachings.

KD18 [296-351]

I have never come across of the word called Islamism.

KD19 [361-937]

Okay ah Islamic revivalism means bringing back all the old values or rather the values of Islam. It is quite different from Islamic extremism because Islamic extremism refers to holding tight to certain tenets of the religion which somebody is not willing to hold them in lighter terms, so when we say Islamic revivalism, we are referring to somebody who thinks certain tenets of the religion are forgotten and he wants to bring them back, quite unlike Islamic extremism that is when you are hold hard views on certain aspects of the religion and you are not ready to change.

KD20 [346-371]

I have no idea about it.

KD21 [318-795]

I think the term Islamism goes to the modern day saying of practicing Islam as a religion.

Yes, Islamic revivalism has to do with reviving some Islamic laws that has been lost with time and culture. And then Islamic militancy goes with the recent uprising of Muslim youths picking up of arms to fight government or people in order to profess their own kind of believe and ideas.

KD22 [316-1465]

Well, ah if we are to answer the question Islamism, it could be said to be the word Islamism a derivative word. It must have been derived from the word Islam and when we say Islam we know that it's a religion that is being practiced by the Muslim Umma across the globe, ah it is actually a universal religion that is not peculiar to a particular region country or group of people or community ah Islamism could be said to be the act of practicing the religion of Islam, then the word revivalism could be said to be giving life to something that has been dead for quite a while. For instance the Usman Dan Fodio jihad of 1804 which found its roots from the Islamic cause ah has the characteristics of revivalism. It is not that, it is not that Usman Dan Fodio is introducing Islam for the first time, but rather he is reviving after it has been weak for some years or decades or centuries as you may like, and then the revival, the revival of the religion of Islam now give it a strength and as a result of which Shehu Usman Dan Fodio called for the jihad between 1804 to the year 1830 yes. So this is the word Islamism and revivalism in a nutshell.

KD23 [646-927]

Well my understanding of the terms Islamism Islamic revivalism or militancy, so first ah let me start with the militancy. Militancy is all about ah some group of people ah will be ah will group themselves and ah normally committing a crime or violence illegally so against the law

KD24 [427-625]

Toh based on the eh three terms which you've asked Islamism, Islamic revivalism and eh militancy well I don't have eh any anything to say concerning these maybe we should move to the next question.

KD25 [431-883]

ah the word Islamism is a word that ah connotes the act of practicing Islam according to the teachings of the Qur'an and the Sunna which are the two basis of Islam so in as much as a person a Muslim practices you know his rights as a Muslim based on the ordinances of the Qur'an and the hadith he is an Islamist meaning he is practicing Islam, Islamism is the act or process of practicing Islam according to the teachings of the Qur'an and the Sunna.

KD25 [939-1470]

Well Islamic revivalism has to do with a period in which the eh Muslims seem to be dormant not really being proactive almost ah letting Islam to perish or die so now when you say revivalism you are trying to revive it you are trying to bring it back into life because as if it was no more in existence before because of the ah lackadaisical attitude of the Muslim to learn and to impart eh the knowledge unto others maybe that is what led to Islamic revivalism that is trying to revive, trying to bring back its status right, yes.

KD25 [1505-2521]

Well the militancy has to do with the, you know, ah the act of carrying a terrorist attack or onslaught on you know ah ah ah you know ah eh ah civilians that have not you know even carried anything on them so ah from the Islamic perspective that is a that is a taboo. It is Islamically forbidden for a Muslim to carry a sword or a spear or a knife or any dangerous you know, equipment ah or weapon in order to harm another, whether a Muslim, whether a Christian, whether a Jew, whether an atheist, whether a polytheists, all it is haram. Where Islam said a Muslim should protect Islam himself is where somebody just came from nowhere with the sword or with the knife trying to harm him or trying to even see to the end of his life, in that case Islam permits him, as a Muslim, to protect himself even if in the process of trying to protect himself he now harm the other person or even kill him, there is no fault on him because he is trying to defend himself. He is on the defensive side not on the offensive side.

KD26 [442-906]

ah I think what Islamism actually means is extremism. Those who believe ahm everything about Islam should be guided politically, socially and personally. Islam should guild everything I think that is what it means to the extent of them going to use physical or physical means to achieve it. It all in the same line it means they are all related. They all have to do with extremism which brings about terrorism.

KD27 [103-694]

Ah Islamism to me it means eh being adherent, adherent to the tenets of Islam. In another way you could say revivalism is the awakening of Muslims towards adhering to the tenets of Islam, militancy on the other hand to me that does not have the place in Islam. Militancy is just an expression of the anger by the youth, Muslim youths. Anger relating to how Islam has been used by the so-called ruling class to oppress them. The anger at that has led to militancy because they feel that that is the only way that they can go about making amends, making corrections to the current situation.

KD28 [392-874]

First and foremost you have to understand what is the term Islam, when we talk of the term Islam you know what Islam is then you know what really is the motive of this Islamism, then what did you understand by the word Islam. You know by the term Islam is just an Arabic language that means seeking peace once you understand this one first before you know that if it is militancy or whatever revivalism it is a way you can just seek your self within you community and your creator.

KD29 [458-992]

Ah based on my own understanding ah is Islamism is ah a means of ah being so extreme in the angle of conduct of the religion of Islam ah this is my shallow understanding about ah the term. Ah Islamic revivalism to my own personal understanding is a means of ah preaching, preaching and ah trying to reenact the Islamic values, teachings and practices. Ah by militancy is trying to be reactional ah based on a thought that your religion has being somehow insulted or harassed.

KD30 [454-788]

Ah Islamism is eh I think the true adherence to the Islamic conducts while Islamic revivalism is the act of bringing out the beauty or the true teaching traditional of the religion ah I think militancy should be the act of ah applying maybe force where the party might even decide to take on ammunition in order to pursue their need.

KD31 [698-2004]

Islamic revivalism simply means eh it could be the revival of Islam as in within the umma you know we are in an era that things have changed people don't take religion as something very important as an ingredient ah very important ingredient in their lives they like fail all of them just feel among so in trying to like make people remember that yes they belong to a particular religion on this earth the teachings of the religion or the practices yes that they should just try and make their life they live their life according to the teaching of their religion. Ah militancy in Islam simply means the rising up of some parts of maybe the Muslim umma on eh people that don't believe, the non-believers as in people that don't practice, don't believe in Islam anyway let me put it this way militancy there's no room for militancy in Islam except for there might be a sect, there might be a sect in the Islamic religion that doesn't have that much understanding of Islam, now those kind of sects might just rise up and say eh they want to do jihad and that is not how it is done in Islam because there is no militancy in Islam just the rising up against the non-believers, but in a very, very wrong way that's what I understand by Islamic militancy.

KD32 [257-897]

Ah Islamism as the dictionary meaning of the word is just people that are extreme Islamists, so people that are practicing Islam to an extremes goes beyond level but to me Islamically there is nothing Islamism. So this is a western understanding of Islam that are defining some people are taking Islam to an extreme so that's extremism, Islamism all other things they are new forms of Islam or European ways, western ways of understanding of Islam, so mostly people that are that are engaging in like militancy acting so many bad things, so this is the way I understand it but islamically we don't have anything like Islamism or extremism.

KD33 [409-634]

Well emm to me militancy or Islamism is just emm people that misunderstand Islam and take it to the high level or misinterpretation of some verses or emm some of the hadith or some of the sayings of the Ulama that is just it

KD34 [348-894]

My understanding about militancy and Islamic revivalism, the way I am going to put it is that the way people see it or the way they interpret their own intention and their own activities towards Islamic revivalism, but in a modern world now some people are taking it as a group, calling themselves Islamic militants as a dependent of a Islam that they are trying to protect and defend Islam while they are, what they were doing if you look at it critically is that they are destroying and tarnishing the image of Islam. That is what I understand

KD35 [415-1326]

Alhamdulillah my understanding with Islamism let me start with the word Islam first, the word Islam means submission to the laws of Allah, the laws and regulation of Allah, the dos and the don'ts means Islam when you submit to God you believe that there is God you have to you submit totally to his words then that that is the word Islam. Then Islam ahh revivalism is it what do you call it revivalism, revivalism means to some people to revive Islam from its worst to its best, but the way to do it is what matters. The way to revive it is what matters, when you go out of the laws and regulations of Allah, you said they are reviving Islam then they are doing the wrong thing. So to me reviving Islam is you making your heart pure, you submit to God and only God, you preach then you are reviving Islam. So militancy means going out of Islam control to fight other people against Islam going out of the way.

KN1 [655-1349]

First and foremost I would like to start by saying the word Islamism or Islamic revivalism as it is practiced now a days is more of the issue of those that are ignorant about Islam, because if you are talking about reviving Islam, In the first place you have to examine who are reviving the Islam. What is their motive? Islamically, are they qualified to revive Islam? Because in Islam whatever you are doing it has to be strictly based on the holy book and the tradition of the Holy Prophet Muhammad (SAW), and do they know the Qur'an, do they know the hadith of the holy prophet, are they knowledgeable and are they pious enough. That is the main question. And this is what you need to know.

KN1 [1641-1856]

One, if you ask me as of myself as a person, I will tell you politics is involved, tribalism is involved, economic jealousy is involved, that are the three main issues that are determining the so called revivalism.

KN2 [233-1817]

The issue of Islamism, Islamization, Islamic revival, Islamic militancy is generally divided into two. One a misconception, Two the one formally called Islamic jihad. I will start with the second one. Jihad in Islam not in the literal Arabic word means a defense mechanism that Muslims should employ to ensure the safety of their intellect, their rights to religion and their rights to freedom. It does not in any way mean conquering and forcing Islamization on any individual because it has been explicitly being described in the holy Qur'an that there is not compulsion in religion meaning every human being is entitled to his or her own belief. So jihad happens in Islam during the prophet's period solely as a defense mechanism to protect Islamic intellect and the rights to religion. Militancy in Islam came to be a new issue after the demise of the prophet. New groups as in the case of group dynamics sprang up with a number of perspectives and various understandings of the interpretations of the verses of the Qur'an concerning jihad. It was after that sprang that we had several groups agitating for a number of issues each one attaching itself to Islam. Fast track to contemporary days, new groups emerged and which were so wonderful when they are being attached to Islam. The ISIL, the ISIS, the Al-Shabab, the Boko Haram, all these groups claim that they are fighting in the cause of Islam. The first one is a good concept; the second one is a misconception because the manner and way in which they make their advancements clearly contradicts the Islamic injunctions.

KN3 [1780-9428]

Well as far as I am concerned, right from the beginning Islam recognizes all religions of God. (Quotes a Qur'anic verse in Arabic to support his comment). We make no distinction in the holy Qur'an in the first chapter or second chapter suratul Bakara the last verse says that we believe in Allah and what he has revealed and his angels and what he has revealed in his books. We also believe in all the messengers of God and we make no distinction between them. We make no distinction between them. So in fact a Muslim is a Christian, a Muslim in a Jew, a Muslim is a Muslim. A Muslim believes in all the divine religions, original not the adulterated. A Muslim saint Yusuf Nabahani once said I see myself as a Christian and sometimes as a Jew, in my heart is Islam, but love is my religion, love is my faith. So a good Muslim or a real Muslim believes in all the religions and he wants to live in peace with everyone. All the religions of God even though they may have different ways of worship have the same objective, the belief in one true God. That is why the holy prophet of Islam, was the last prophet and messenger of God, came with this message that we believe in all the books revealed, in all the messengers and we make no distinction between the messengers. All the moral values taught by these religions of God are the same. Christianity says peace with your God, peace with your mind and peace with your fellow man, fellow man not fellow Christian, everybody. In Islam after the belief in one true God, the most important aspect of our worship is the salat, at the end of your prayer you say assalamu alaikum to everybody, not just the Muslims alone, to everybody. I will live with you in peace, I will not harm you, I will not cheat you, I will not be unfair or unjust to you; Everybody, Christians, Muslims, Jews, the rastamins, every father of the true religion and everybody including the free thinkers. Assallamu Alaikum. So it is the same teaching. Love thy neighbor as thyself is another teaching of Christianity. Thy neighbor has not been qualified. That neighbor may be anybody. The holy prophet of Islam (SAW) said the angel Gabriel emphasized the importance of good neighborliness so much so that I began to think that there might be a revelation that a neighbor could inherit a neighbor; the same teaching. Being your brother's keeper is common teaching to both Christianity and Islam and indeed it is common to all the religions of God. And every religion of God says there is no compulsion. There is no compulsion or coercion or force or pressurization. The Christians say if you go onto them and preach the word of God and they refuse to listen, pick up your shoes, dust them and leave them in peace. Islam says la iqra fid din-there is no compulsion in religion. It is a matter of conviction and of course the essence of every religion of God is love. The Christians are taught it doesn't matter how much you may worship God even if your worship can move mountain you will not enter the kingdom of heaven unless you have love in your heart. So these are the teachings. These are the moral values taught by all the religions of God. They are the same. They are the same. Indeed Islam as the last religion of God has come to corroborate and correct any interpolations in the past religions. It has not come to condemn the previous religions. No wonder therefore there are two types of Islamic governance or government; Dar el Islam and Dar el Harb. Dar el Islam is purely Islamic state or government. Dar el Harb is a combination of different religions, different cultures and so on. It is an agreement between different peoples with different faith and different cultures and so on. Dar el Islam when all the people are Muslims and they form a government that government is Islamic and their rules, their laws, their constitution are all Islamic. If however, different people with different faiths are living in the same state or the same country they can enter into agreement to live with one another in peace respecting one another or each other's faith that is dar el harb. Islam has allowed for that. When the holy prophet (SAW) first received his first revelation, he was in Mecca, he was preaching, the vast majority of the people in Mecca were pagans. He preached, they molested him, they abused him, they did all sort of things, he did not fight them, he kept preaching until finally he was ordered to leave Mecca for Medina which he did. And when he got to Medina he met people of different religions; Christians and Jews, what did he do? He entered into agreement with them that they will live in peace with one another, didn't he? And he lived with them; the Christians and the Jews as well as the Muslims. He lived in Medina at first respecting one another, doing business with one another, being neighbors to one another and indeed it was only when the Jews started to betray, to break the promises or the agreement that they were expelled from Medina. For even when Medina became almost all Islam, they respected those who did not belong to Islam. They were not discriminated against. Now, so there was...there is this provision in Islam, you can have dar el Islam and dar el harb. You can have a totally Islamic state or a state in which there are different religions, but with agreement that people will live in peace with one another and respect one another. I think it is European colonialism. When Europe conquered Islamic countries all over the world they tried to impose their culture and they tried to introduce their religion also even though they did not succeed, but they succeeded to a large extent in adulterating our culture or at least in confusing us and making us sometimes out sorts everywhere and at home nowhere, we are neither here nor there. Yes they did. They exploited us. They built their economy at the expense of ours. Eventually, for some reasons, they were forced to give us our independence. Although they gave us independence they introduced neocolonialism. They still wanted to control their former colonies and exploit them in a very clever way. Some of the people in the former colonies in the Muslim countries understood that after having been colonized they are now being re-colonized in a different way and they started to react against this. What is happening, this militancy, to me is a reaction to neocolonialism. Many of the leaders are saying that they will not have it a second time. They had it before, but not now. Even the so called terrorism is not part of Islam. Terrorism is not part of Islam because Allah says (Quotes a Qur'anic verse) – fear trouble for it will not stop, it will not stop or stay with those that have perpetrated it will extend and affect the innocent. The holy prophet (SAW) said (he quotes another verse from the Qur'an). Fitna-trouble is asleep and Allah has cursed whoever wakes it up for it will affect the innocent. So a good Muslim is not a terrorist. Terrorism is not part of Islam. And people who are associating terrorism with Islam are merely doing so in order to achieve their own selfish aims, but those people who have resorted to terrorism are doing it because they want to react against neocolonialism. That is all.

KN4 [95-1227]

Owk, what I understand with the Islam or Islamism is the eh the Muslim religion based on the believe in one God and the religion is revealed through prophet Muhammad (SAW) which is preaching and its practicing has been extended to many generation and to date that we are, that people are still practicing the religion that is Islam and the Islamic revivalization or revivalism (amm) Islamic revivalism we can say that is the practice, the practice of using ideas or preaching to enlighten people and tell them more about the religion, the importance of the religion without rancho and the practice and the good characters and behavior of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) that is the word revivalism to inform the people about his history, about his ideology, about his concept on how the Islam has been before and to date. Also, when we talk of Islam militancy, in Islam there is no militancy, there is no revivalism, there is no rancho in Islam. All this thing are just an authority or group that want to be identify in this digital world. That is what I understand with the militancy if there is but in Islam there is no ah militancy.

KN5 [92-437]

The term Islamism means the application of Islam in practice and all activities. And when you say revivalism, Islamic revivalism it is talking about restoring what has been negligent with the rest respect to the Islamic institutions, restoring them and putting them back the way they supposed to have been is what we refer to as the revivalism.

KN6 [92-306]

Ok this word is an offensive word because it is against the teaching of Prophet Mohammed (Saw). There is no Islamism at all, so Muslim you can't call them Islamism. It is similar to the Christianity ok, thank you.

KN7 [90-466]

Uhhh, thank you for the opportunity given to me. The term Islamism it's an ideology or let me say, yes is an am way of calling people to the way of Islam or Allah in general. Islamic ehm revivalism ba, I guess ehm its ehm a way let me say scholars or divergent ehm ehm stakeholders in Islam have ehm, have followed in reviving Islamic traditions.

KN8 [95-425]

The concept of Islamism can just simply be described as the process of adopting some Islamic tenets into the practice of Muslims while Islamic revivalism can be described as the process of reminding people and bringing the Islamic tenets into action while militancy is an act of applying force or coercion into someone's action.

KN9 [94-812]

Well, Islamism has to do with putting into practice the ideas of Islam that is ah, Islam is peace they say. or Islam is peace as it is. So, it is the practice of peace in all human endeavors. While ahh, Islamic revivalism has to do with efforts or struggles of ah am, some scholars, or some eminent Muslim leaders to ah to revive the culture of Islam as it occurred at a period of time. Islam was a relegated backward in history. So it was the struggle by these scholars to revive Islam. So what was the third question? Ok, Islamic militancy has to do with ah, am it has to do with ah, more of ah radical view or, or radical portion or radical sect who are not in conformity with the ideas of Islam.

KN10 [93-502]

Ammm Islamism is just the ahm let me say application of ah application of teaching and principle in the society Islamic revivalism. Revivalism is the process in which Islam ah can be, in which Islam can be ah is made to be more popular in the society. Militancy is the act of using force ah ah to achieve something.

KN11 [92-404]

Islamic revivalism according to my understanding is when we say revivalist that is those who revive the Islam as it was during the time of the prophet (SAW). Militancy that is the word revivalism or militancy to my own understanding, I mean they are the same words, they are synonyms.

KN12 [96-375]

Well, the term Islamism is the application of principles and teaching of Islam to the society while Islamic revivalism from the word revivalism is when something fall and you are trying to bring it up that is revivalism. Militancy is the act of using force to achieve something.

KN13 [92-928]

Hmmm, Islamism is just like ah further conceptualization of the word Islam which means a religion of peace, and ah, following the doctrine and practices of Prophet Mohammed (SAW) while Islamic revivalism is actually those traditions that actually occur after the death of Mohammed (SAW) that led to Islam being divided into different sects whereby you have this Qadiriyya sect, you have this Shi'ites. So they actually started bringing series of doctrine by trying to revive the traditional doctrine of Islam. While militancy, this are the people that are actually using Islam to propagate their own interest for example, we have the Al-shabab, in Nigeria we have the Boko haram sect. So these are militancy, although their practice is not in line with Islamic tradition, but they are trying to use Islam as a way to achieve their aim.

KN14 [99-246]

Well, to some people is ah an act of ah thing that ah to some other people is ah terrorism but some argue that it is ah an act of defending Islam.

KN15 [99-828]

Uhhh Bismillahi Arrahmani Arrahim what I understand you know from the term Islamism, is that from the word Islam it means peace, so when you say Islamism you know is directly referring to Mohammedanism that is you know being following the right path of prophet Muhammad (SAW) on what he says and views of Islam. On Islamic revivalism, I think ever since you know when the victory or victory of Mecca was achieved, I have never heard you know even once that Islam has gone down and maybe someone else will come and take it back to existence so it continues growing rapidly each and every blessed day right from the time of our holy prophet Muhammad (SAW). And on militancy I think, militancy is not Islam, militancy is not Islam.

KN16 [99-437]

Bismillahi Arrahmani Arrahim Islamism is the application of Islamic teachings and principles into practice. Islamic revivalism is the process of reminding people and bringing the Islamic teaching into practice. Militancy is the process of using force to achieve some things.

KN17 [210-1394]

Uh, actually, Islamism is a construction, is like a reconstruction of the word Islam which involve the the eh which encompass the whole Muslim umma practicing the sacred religion of ah prophet Mohammed (SAW) may the peace of Allah be with him. Islamic revivalism these are the ah I will call it these are the occurrences or the traditions or aspects of practicing Islam that emerged after the death of Mohammed (SAW) where it led into some sects like we have the shi'a like now you come to Nigeria now where we have the Qadiriyya, we have the Tijjaniyya we have series of sects that is Islamic revivalism. Militancy are those people using Islam to portray some particular image and sometimes this term militancy they are actually being set up by the western society, for example, look at example like ISIS, the al-shabab, they are using Islam to portray their image so as a matter of fact what they are fight for is not in line with Islamic tradition or Islamic doctrine because most of the things they are doing is not even accepted by the holy Qur'an, so I think this is the short explanation.

KN18 [289-1712]

Is nothing but the idea of Islamization of things, you follow Islamic way of life, you are practicing a religious of ah a religion of Islam and you are following the teachings of Islam and that these actions and these processes is Islamism. Islamic revivalism is reviving this culture, decaying culture of Islamic teachings, those decaying practices good practices, teachings of the prophets what the Qur'an depicts as the true practice for a true Muslim to do, reviving them in a kind of a vicious environment where there are vices, there are, there are deviations in the way of Allah therefore a revivalism comes. A revivalism is coming in many forms. Some take it as if it is jihad that is the most unacceptable notion because I don't accept that notion because those people taking revivalism, Islamic revivalism as only jihad but it's about ah it's about encouraging the good deeds and ah discerning from the bad ones. Militancy is any activity by which people carry arms in actualizing their goals, where people will take arms for them now to actualize their own aims and objective being them Muslims, Christians or any group they are engaging in militancy, if they are Muslims carrying arms to achieve certain, certain Islamic order, then if it is not in confinement with law and order and Islamic teaching is militancy is not Islam.

KN19 [250-1750]

Actually, to my own understanding, the concept of Islamism has to do with the process of embracing and adopting the elements of the teachings of Islam into the way of life and the processes of activities of an individual, the process whereby you will embrace the teaching of Islam teaching of the holy Koran, the word of the holy prophet where you put it into practice and you make it your daily activities I think if that is put in place to some extent, the concept of Islamism is justified. Islamic revivalism to my own understanding is just the process of bringing into action and into existence some aspects of Islamic tenets and aspects of Islamic teachings that are getting weaker a process of bringing them into reality, making them to come into consciousness into people's activities is an act of revitalising that concept of Islam, teaching people what they have forgotten about the concept of Islam, about the sunna of the holy prophet about the teachings of the holy Qur'an about the guidance of the word of the Khalifs that process of remembering people letting them to know what they've dropped that they should put into practice is known as Islamic revivalism. Militancy is just an act of involving into the is an act of involving. Now the concept of militancy from the word military is just an act of ah making use of force coercion, adopting sanctions to achieve ones aim or objectives.

KN20 [191-525]

Islamism is the process of practicing Islamic religion. Yah Islamic revivalism I can say is the process whereby people are called into Islam. Militancy is an illegal possession of firearms or any other dangerous weapon in order to achieve their aims.

KN21 [222-661]

Islamism has been defined as the belief that Islam should guide social and political as well as personal life. It also has to do with the movement of supporters of government in accordance with the law of Islam and who view Qur'an as a political model. It has to do with bringing Islam back to its normal position. Is the act of using forceful or violent means in achieving a particular aim.

KN22 [153-1254]

Ah you say my understanding of the term Islamism, Islamic revivalism and Islamic militancy isn't it? Yah, Islamism is the process of the applicability or practice of Islamic ideology in a particular society. Islamic reform sorry revivalism yah revivalism still means reform because we heard in the past revivalist, Islamic revivalist like the Shehu Usman bin Fodio, the like of Shehu Abdullah bin Fodio. They are Islamic revivalist, the likes of Maududi, is an Islamic reformer. Islamic revivalism means a reform, to reform the religion in a way that will go in tandem with the Sunna, the Qur'an and Sunna of the prophet (rasulallah SAW). Yah militancy- the word militancy has been conceptualized by so many Islamic movement scholars or political commentators. It's all depends on the sociological ah militant generally is an act of carry arms by the Islam or Muslim youth in order to protect the said right they are pursuing. So the using of arms and ammunition in order to achieve something by the youth or by Muslim in general is what is termed as Islamic militancy.

KN23 [359-1207]

Islamism is the promotion of peace within people. Well, amm Islam has lost a lot due to misconception of the term Islam by educated illiterates because I can really call them illiterates. Well in the past years, Islam has lost it's glory due to this educated illiterate people which is causing harm, chaos in society. Well me as an individual I will always encourage study, proper Islamic understanding and there should be a kind of platform for Islamic awareness. Revivalism yah bringing back the glory of Islam. Militancy is not an act in, it doesn't have a space in Islam. Or may be going by the word militancy it means people that are causing problems or chaos that is affecting a larger population of the country or state or whatever.

KN24 [158-789]

My own view of Islamism is the putting of the practice of Islam that is Quran and the hadith which is brought by the prophet (SAW). My understanding of revivalism is the putting of all-revivalism is the putting back the struggles and the effort to bring back the history of Islam which was brought by our scholars? Militancy can be seen as the inappropriate may be to those that do not understand the real meaning of Islam. We can say inappropriate understanding of Islam of the real Islam inot practice we can call them revivalism which can be categorized into boko haram.

KN25 [168-1689]

Islamism is the act of putting the practicing Islam into pure practice and mind you Islam is peace, Islam is a religion preaches nothing other than peace. So Islamism is the act of putting this into practice that is propagating peace in all spheres of human life and endeavors. Well Islamic revivalism, it is the conscious activities of some of the Muslim who thought it is necessary to revive Islam. There came a period in time whereby Islam ruled the entire world. After that I think ah it was after the Muslims lost the war of Spain, Islam went backward in history, Islam was relegated in history, Islam was turned into a mere practice not a religion. So the conscious activity of some scholars who were worried at that time to restore the high nature of Islam is termed as Islamic revivalism. Some of these scholars are Abul Ala Maududi, Al-Afghani and other scholars. They were only worried that their time, they were worried that at their time that Islam wasn't the religion that their forefathers left for them. So I think that is Islamic revivalism. Well militancy as the concept implies it is an act of rebellion going against some of ideal teachings of Islam. You know they say interest is the governing principle among men. So there emerged from among the Muslims some who hold a different opinion than what was initially given to us by our prophet (SAW). So militancy is a form of rebellion by some faction, you understand, of the Muslims.

KN26 [247-793]

For the concept of Islamism, simply put, is a practice of Islam by the teachings of the holy Quran and the teachings also of the hadith of the prophet (SAW). However Islamism if I may say or rather Islamic revivalism is largely a new concept one can say based on some of the distortions I will say that have become part of Islam that some of those that believe that the faith Islam actually practiced that can be seen or described as militancy or so, but largely speaking this are distortions according to the religion that is the present state.

KN27 [182-665]

Alhamdulillah rabil alamin. The term Islamism I will say is the ideology or the processes put together to put in practice Islamic activities. Revivalism let me say is the steps or let me say the procedures different Islamic scholars or stake holders in Islam have been putting in place to bring about let me say the washed away Islamic practices and culture. Militancy in one word I could say is related to something crisis.

KN28 [159-561]

Ehm from my own understanding of Islamism I believe it is a set down rules and regulations which is laid down by Islam itself. While Islamic revivalism could easily be notified as the architect or let me just say as the pioneers who are trying to make a clear cut of what Islam is all about while militancy as a I can easily say could just be a form of standardizing the norms and objectives of Islam.

KN30 [156-703]

Islamism actually just from the word Islam, it might be a kind of going into the teachings of Islamic jurisprudence or just Islamic teachings. Islamic revivalism that is when we say revivalism that is like renewing or reintroducing the teachings of Islam. Everybody knows militancy is about those that carry arms against may be sometimes they might be doing that in protecting their interest or against the government or the institution that is ruling them.

KN31 [171-1088]

ah what I understand by Islamic revivalism it is just like ah it is a new way; it is a highly discussed phenomenon in the context of the world that we live in today. So I see it as something new just like modernism, like Islamic modernism which gave birth to, I think, different Islamic movements. Islamic revivalism, I think, these are set of ah Islamic movements who try to revive Islam because if you see in the world today, Islam has lost its values, we are more westernized now than living with Islamic injunctions. Ah militancy, well I see the western world blacklisting mostly the Islamic world may be as the movements they call them, may be, terrorists or militants and they said may be they are trying to fight for their own rights may be from their governments or from the nature of how the Islamic society has changed.

KN32 [62-419]

Islamism we can simply say is the act of putting in place the practices and the principles of the religion of Islam. Well this can be seen as the process of bringing back the glory of Islam. Well militancy we can say is the situation of putting in play possible means to achieving one's aim.

KN33 [89-349]

Islamism is the process of application of Islamic principle to all aspect of human life. And Islamic revivalism is the struggle to bring back the former statutes of Islam. The word militancy I think is by using violent activities to achieve a group objective.

KN34 [89-364]

Well when you look at the context of the word militancy or revivalism is simply denoting revolutionary force that wants to establish an Islamic state through either authoritarian or the democratic way or means. That's my view or perception with regards to the definition of...

KN35 [89-1363]

I think Islamic revivalism is like an ideology from the Muslim world in order to bring back the Islamic heritage back to revival because of the, I mean, the clash between the western superpowers power and the Middle East. Some of the revivalists started to come up in order to project the image of Islam in order for the Muslims to know that Muslims also have something that is even more far better than that of the west in order to make the competition reliable. Hmmm the concept is a system, you understand, just to adopt that is the way of doing things that is Islam itself is a system that is it has its own way of doing things in accordance to the way which it cannot go and copy any other civilization because itself is the beginning of civilization. Militancy simply means a case of taking arms against the so called oppressor simply because the Muslims are being oppressed, in the Muslim world, they are being oppressed by the western due to the clash of this so called civilization or whatever, and since you know that when somebody is having upper hand against one or the other, so everyone in the process will try to subdue, understand, in order to make sure that it gives relevance on that very occasion. That is that about that.

KN36 [89-679]

Islamism mean a way of applying Islamic tenets to cover the activities of the society or the whole society will live in Islamic way. Islamic revivalism means a way to recall the lost glory of Islam or to reapply the weakness, where the weaknesses are being given priority without Islamic injunctions. Islamic revivalism means to reinvigorate the Islamic tenets in the society. Islamic militancy means process of using the violence, process of using the arms, ammunitions to achieve their target, to achieve their mission in selfish ways.

KN37. [89-648]

You see the term Islamism simply means the process or act of putting in place the principles and the practice of Islam into play. Islamic revivalism simply means a situation or the process if you like of bringing back the honor and glory ok the practice of Islam into play as it has lost its glory and the present century we are today. Militancy is a situation or rather an act in which a particular group of people try to put forward their interest, their aims and objectives through violent and forceful means.

KN38 [89-217]

To me I view Islamism or revivalism and militancy as a kind of a move whereby people tend to make the society of Islamic virtues

KN39 [89-452]

The word Islamism it refers to a situation whereby a country is governed by Islamic rules and regulations that is Qur'an and Sunna. Islamic revivalism is a situation whereby Islam is being practiced in the society. And militancy refers to a situation whereby arms are used in ruling or governing a country or a society.

KN40 [103-344]

Thank you very much. When you say Islamism or revivalism or militancy, we mean a set of ideology about the social and political aspect and personal life of the Muslim while revivalism mean fundamental of the Muslims or the Islamic religion.

KN41 [285-694]

Islamism simply means the religion system of the Muslims while Islamic revivalism is viewed as a voluntary force whose aim is to topple the established order in the Muslim world be that authoritarian or democratic while activism simply means or I said is the process of achieving political or social change while militancy on the other hand ah is willing to use force or strong pressure to achieve your goal.

KN42 [246-580]

Islamism is referred to the Islamic system of Muslims and Islam in particular. Islamic revivalism is a quest to revive Islam's religious Islamic beliefs and militancy is for people to believe that this revival shouldn't be taken through peaceful means, but through the process of taking weapons uhm to fight for what they believe in.

KN43 [262-1042]

Yah, my understanding of ah Islamism, Islamic ah revivalism and the Islamic ah militancy is ah multi-dimensional. According to my own perception Islamism, Islamic revivalism and the Islamic ah militancy are concepts and terms created, invented and manufactured by the western world to give a kind of negative image to Islam. As far as I am concerned, there is nothing like Islamism because Islamism is about violence, about conflict, and about, you know, chaos but ah Muslims as I know are peace loving people and in terms of Islamic ah revivalism the one that we African scholars ah define is about reform. This reform does not necessarily involve the use of violence or ah the use of force. It is about the use of, you know, education as a peaceful means to reform the society.

KN44 [253-676]

I can only talk about Islamic revivalism and ah perhaps the militancy ehh, revivalism I think it is ehh implied in the attempt by the Muslims to go back to their roots in terms of ah implementing Islamic injunctions in its total or rather in its totality while militancy I think it has to do with attempt by some maybe I can say some Muslims to use arms to ensure the, the implementations of all the injunctions of Islam.

KN45 [258-446]

Islamic revivalism is like ehh the idea of reviving the good, the good old days of Islam, I think that is the central idea of, of ah about Islamic revivalism at least to my understanding.

KN46 [252-1312]

Ok, Bismillahi arrahmani arrahim ah I have to seek for your maybe pardon, forgiveness, because my English is not very well, I wish I can answer the questions in either Arabic or Hausa but I would try to respond in English and I hope my answers would be understood, ah this three terms to my understanding are different. Islamism, Islamism means ah relating whatever activity ah one is engaged with Islam, I hope you understand, while Islamic revivalism means ahh an effort to revive the Islam, the Islamic ah practice in a way that should reflect the true teachings of Islam maybe there are things that are being done ah in a wrong way and you want to call people, you want to get them to practice them in a correct way, that is Islamic revivalism while militancy is, I think is very clear, is eh related to kind of violence. So I think the three are, are maybe Islamic revivalism and Islamism has something in common, which means are ehh leaning towards relating whatever activities with Islam, that is to interpret ah life or activities in Islamic ehh way.

KN47 [267-715]

Ok I think Islamism is I kind of connotative word used to refer to the activities of extremist Muslims ahh and eh Islamic revivalism is also another term I can call a coinmate which may mean an attempt by Muslim groups to bring reformation or transformation in the society and then militancy again I know is term related to the activities of some people who use weapon to issue threats to the society for them to be recognized by the authorities.

KN48 [249-680]

Hmm, Islamism, Islam it portrays peace a religion of peace and submission to the will of Allah which is God and militancy it mean ok Islamic revivalism, Islamic revivalism it means nothing or Islam doesn't associate itself to anything militancy but the term, that term militancy depend on the way you you are practicing your own Islam, but I don't think there is any relation, they are not having any relation at all. That is all.

KN49 [258-896]

Actually these terms are under a very broad category, you cannot define a particular meaning to them, but Islamism is, has to do with a process of Islamization and the concepts of Islam as an entire entity and its application to everyday life. Okay ahm in terms of Islamic revivalism we are talking about reviving or bringing back the core values of Islam and applying to our day to day life and militancy has to do with force or cohesion or in some cases violence just like we are seen in different parts of Africa, things that are springing up and eh it has to do with, in some cases, armed conflicts between forces on opposing sides.

KN50 [252-494]

Ah actually, Islamism is the religious system of Muslims while revivalism is the act of reviving the laws, principles of Islam, back to its founding doctrines. Then lastly is the, is the application of force, coercion, hostile or warlike act.

KN51 [265-867]

ah Salama alaykum wa rahamtullahi ta'allah wabarakatuhu. The terms Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy mean, Islamism means upholding the creed or the fundamentals of Islamic teaching or Islamic religion while Islamic revivalism means an effort by learned Muslim to reactivate or to reform or to revive the teachings of Islam which has been corrupted or adulterated and militancy as far as Islam is concerned is not even a term which is to be considered because in Islam there is no militancy. it is only applied for defensive purposes but apart from that nothing like militancy exist in Islam.

KN52 [330-960]

Well I (Laugh) I don't know but I think it is very difficult for one to be very clear about some of these terms because they are concepts and isms and you could have different interpretation of what ah Islamism means or Islamic revivalism, but I think

Islamism is an attempt to define Islamic movement in terms of an ideological you know to give a sort of ideological interpretation just like you have other ideological movement like communism, socialism, capitalism, but Islamic revivalism is ah the attempt by Muslims who think that Islam is oppressed or subjugated by other more powerful ideologies, an attempt to revive Islam

KN53 [280-748]

To my own understanding, Islamism arrive from the meaning Islam which Islam is known by me as a religion of peace and this Islamism you're asking is the act of the application of Islamic principles in observing our day to day pilgrim, while Islamic revivalism is the act of reviewing the falling Islamic principles back to its founding doctrine. Then when we talk about the militancy is the application of war equipment's used by the militants to archive their aims.

KN54 [177-312]

Islamism is following the ideals of Islam and Islamic revivalism is trying to revive Islam, there is nothing like Islamic militancy. KN55 [137-434]

Islamism and Islamic militancy are almost the same. They are terms used to show that Muslims and Islam is a religion of terrorist and all what we know in Islam is that Islam is not a religion of terrorist. Islam is a religion of peace and harmony while Islamic revivalism is Islamic resurgence.

KN56 [135-494]

OK actually the terms Islamism and Islamic militancy I can say are negative terms. They are terms coined by the western world to portray Muslims and Islam as a religion of terrorists. Talking about Islamic revivalism, Islamic revivalism may mean Islamic resurgence or trying to bring back the old ideals of Islam after its contact with the western world.

KN57 [149-622]

See these three words Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy are three identical words, but each one stands on its own. When we say Islamism it is a religious system of Muslims and the term Islamic revivalism also is spiritual...of religion or militancy. Militancy is a quality of being militant, its acting in an aggressive way in support of political and social causes. So you see the definition is different but in a broader sense it would give you one meaning.

KN58 [151-1799]

Azubillahi mina shaitani rajim, Bismillahi rahmani rahim. First of all let's start with the meaning of Islam. Islam as a religion is derived from the word salama which means peace. So as such, Islam is a religion that preaches peace. Islam equally believes or means total submission to the ways of Allah that is, as a Muslim, you are expected to worship Allah in totality. Worshiping entails obedience to what Allah says you are supposed to do as a Muslim. Now Islamic revivalism is a period in history or time where Muslims around or across the globe are trying to revive the original teachings that were practiced or preached by the holy prophet Muhammad (SAW). In essence, what I am trying to say is that Islamic revivalism simply means a situation or a period in time where Muslims are trying to uphold the Sunna of the prophet. While Islamism, to me, is a wrong connotation because there is no such thing as Islamism, Islam is not derived from the name of anybody like Christianity that is derived from Christian or Buddhism that is derived from Gautama Buddha or Zoroastrianism that is derived from Zaros rather Islam is a religion that is coined or derived by the terms Salam which means peace. So there is no such thing as Islamism. So Muslims can only engage in confrontation with other either religion or individual because of the fact that Islam means peace. Islam is at peace with you if you are at peace with it. I don't owe anybody an apology because Islam believes that if you are at peace with it or if you want peace, you get peace, but if you want conflict yah Islam is ready to face you. So there is no such thing as Islamism.

KN59 [153-509]

Based on my understanding, Islamism is I think the system of worshipping, you understand, actually it is a term which means total submission to the din of Allah that is the oneness of Allah, I think that is what I know or my little understanding about Islamism. In the other way militancy I think is the opposite of Islamism, based on my understanding.

KN60 [142-801]

Azubillahi mina shaytani rajim bismillahi rahmani rahim. My understanding of the word let me use the word militancy, my understanding of it is that it is maybe a form of resistance put forward by some group of people probably they may be claiming to be doing jihad while in the actual sense of it they are doing the opposite. So in fact we can say that this is the meaning of militancy though it can be in various forms, sometimes we have religious militancy as we are having now in Nigeria and so many other parts of the world like Iraq and other places. I think in a short form this is the shortest meaning of how I understand the word militancy means.

KN61 [197-422]

Ok, ah to my understanding, when you are saying Islamism or militancy ah you are talking of those ah Muslim who are deep ah who think ah they are devoted, they fear Allah more than any other person. That is how I look at it.

KN62 [246-1631]

Ahh, azubillahi...Mallam ... in the first place I think I ehh, I would say that eh this very term is one of the let say misconstrued terms, because I don't believe that there is anything Islamism, or Islamic revivalism or militancy, in Islam we don't have such kind of things, it is only a kind of propagation ah ehh if you like made by the western world, Euro-American world in particular in order to tarnish the image of Islam and Muslim universally, so ehh maybe if you look at it from another perspective you can say that this is something that has to do with Islamophobia especially as we currently ah witness a kind of phobia, islamaphobia in India ah and Belgium. We know of what this Hindus are doing to our fellow Muslim brothers and sisters there in Ruhinga. We know they are killing Muslims brutally. It's about ehh two months now, more than 300,000 Muslims have been killed there, just because of a certain phobia there and ah another thing is there in Belgium I just read it in papers yesterday that ah some ah 30 Muslim women students were just sent back home just because they, they, they wear long skirt, that is the only reason. So I don't believe in this Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy. Islam has been the same for decades, for years, for ages. This is a precise or the precise answer I can give to this question. I don't know whether I am right or wrong.

KN63 [207-1136]

Islamism there is nothing like that in Islam, even though we have it in some other, some other areas there is nothing, there is nothing like Islamism, you know Islam that has been existing right from the time of the prophet, our own prophet that is Muhammad up till now it is the same Islam that is still existing today. Huh, it is the same thing huh, you know, something like Islamism or whatever word, there is nothing like that in Islam. Islam will still be the same Islam right from the time of the prophet right till the day or till the final day it will still be the same Islam. The only time that you may notice that maybe in the understanding of Islam, you know, the way people may understand it maybe they don't have adequate knowledge of this or that, maybe they may not practice according to the laid down rules. That may be a little difference in terms of that but nothing like that, there is nothing like Islamism.

KN64 [184-879]

What I understood about these terms, I think Islamism and Islamic revivalism or militancy are different meanings, about the Islamism and revivalism or militancy. To me Islamism is for in order to transform or to propagate Islam like Islamic revivalism, revivalism is to make effort in order to reform some error that Muslims are making in order to put them on the right path. This is Islamic revivalism and Islamism, but militancy is not Islam. We have no other concept we call it militancy in Islam. Therefore, this term we didn't use it in Islam, but Islamism, Islamic revivalism is something that you can make in order to help Islam to be above of other religions and other things.

KN65 [239-1201]

Okay, eh in my own understanding Islamism is a belief whereby you want a country or a state to have an Islamic strength or dominance or other coalitions. So in a nutshell that is just my little understanding on Islamic revivalism and Islamic revivalism. What I got to understand like when you look at about the word revivalism you are thinking of as a way or a process of bringing something back into popularity again, trying to revive I mean as to refashion it or to redesign it in order to bring it into limelight; so Islamic revivalism simply is a process of making Islam popular again. So that is my own understanding and Islamic revivalism, what I would call militancy is just simply using or willing to use a force in order to achieve your aim, you understand, the aim we are talking about is using military power or any other force in order to achieve social and economic benefits so this is what I understand by Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy, yes.

KN66 [191-573]

Hmm to my understanding, Islamism is a sub-word, sub-word that is derived from the word Islam and Islam is an Arabic word, which means, really peace and believing in the book of Allah and the five pillars of Islam. So Islamism is an act of practicing Islam that is what I believe by Islamism, while Islamic revivalism in short is just the act of reviving Islam to my understanding.

KN67 [187-434]

My understanding is that these terms are not the same. As for the issue of revivalism I think is something that has a positive Islamic connotation to Muslims but the other ones, militancy and Islamism are only seen in the negative perspective.

KN68 [224-394]

Islamism is a western coinage to portray Muslims as terrorists, there is nothing like this in Islam. Islamic revivalism is trying to bring back the whole ideals of Islam.

KN69 [728-1160]

Well in the first place when we are talking about the term Islamism this simply comes to observance of fundamental principles of Islam by the Muslim Umma and Islamic revivalism it simply means reformation that is to reform the Islamic principles so as the Islamic Umma to strictly adhere to that reformation. Militancy, this is an illegal taking of weapons in an Islamic state which is an illegal, not legal by some group of people.

KN70 [437-1049]

Islamism is the conscious effort by some Muslims in trying to re-assert their political identity. Islamic revivalism in the other hand is almost the same in a way, but is like having long your identity, now you are now trying to do some re-thinking and trying to come back to the original touching of whatever you use to believe in but in this case, Islamic ideas, Islamism, Islamic revivalism and what, what, what?

Q: Islamic militancy

Ans: Islamic militancy well in Islamic revivalism, Islamic militancy is if we agree with the terms is taking of arms to struggle in order to establish an Islamic state in quote.

KN71 [526-1690]

Azubiillahi mina shaytani rajim, bismillahi rahamani rahim ... I think the first two almost mean the same thing or at least they either overlap or inter, inter-woven when you say Islamism, Islamic revivalism I think it is the same word only that with different approach. But Islamic militancy is something that will put forward, so from my understanding of what is Islamism that is an act or an act that is or a movement towards Islamizing the society in particular and all state in general that is making Islam as a focal point, making Islamic opinion, Islamic leadership, Islamic sharia or what have you, to be the ruling bodies of that very society. And when you say Islamic revivalism is like awakening of somebody who is asleep there is Islam already, but there may be here or there is certain loop holes that somebody is now trying to put together to bring it back to normal, so you can see that the two are almost the same thing. But when you say Islamic militancy if the real word of- if we are going to take the meaning of the real word militancy, I think it connotes maybe somebody taking arms or firing arms to fight in the course of defending Islam.

KN72 [546-1838]

Yes, in my own understanding, the term Islamism can simply be explained as the practice of Islamic teachings or Islamic code of conduct as it was revealed from the God to the prophet. So a good Muslim must follow the whole teachings of prophecy as when as his companions that is what can clarify the Islamism. So Islamic revival or Islamic reformations is a strengthening of Islamic practices when there is mixing between Islamic practices and non-Islamic practices so such can be reform to strengthen the practices. For examples, as in the case of Usman Dan Fodio (rahimatullahi taallah) observed the most of the Muslims were mixing practice of non-Islam and this is not good for a good Muslim to combine the Islam and the non-Islam practices. So he try and strengthen such occurrences that is why most of the people know him as an Islamic reformer. In Islam there is no word militancy. Militancy it is not an Islamic activity, but today the Muslims Umma or the people of the Muslim find themselves in hard conditions that can involve in this activities, but it is not an Islamic practice. It is western practice because according to the Islam there is no any militancy, no any militancy. So it is the western that comes with the militancy.

KN72 [2004-2436]

So, the militancy, I can define the militancy, we can define the militancy as a struggle or illegal Islamic struggles through arm confrontations or use of arms to claim the life and properties of people, claiming lives and properties of the people is prohibited according to the Islam because life is very important, life is very important in Islam, so no one is allowed to kill anybody whether he is Muslim or not Muslim.

KN73 [464-1096]

Ahm Alhamdulillah... the term Islamism refers to the movement that Muslims or some group of Muslims to proceed or to inculcate the creed and Islamic practice, the sayings of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) to Muslims and non-Muslims. That's the word Islamism means. Islamic revivalism is the term where this term means the group of people that have in their minds to revive the Islamic practice on one community or country or other. Militancy or activities of some Muslims or organizations that they think the only way to revive the Islamic creed in the minds of the people is by force. That's the word Islamism, militancy or activism means.

KN74 [597-2146]

Now Azubiillahi... before I say anything I would start with saying (recites a prayer in Arabic) the word Islamism, I think is the first of your questions, the word Islamism based on my understanding simply means is the process or is the way in which someone or group of people understand how they are practicing their religion Islam, but in some cases, some people use to call it

Islamic extremist, ehh extremism, that is good, and the word Islamic revivalism simply means is in collection of people or group of people coming together and find that they are serving in a place that the Islamic activities were slacking such a way that the people use to understand, they might think that the activities of Islam is going into a certain. very slow or something like that and they want to make it cleared or to revive it in order to make the people understand what exactly is Islam and how that people is supposed to practice their religion. And thirdly, is the Activitism or the militancy. In this our modern world there is a lot of words that we're using in order to attack some religions or some group of people or some meeting like that. But let us take the word militancy; the word militancy simply refers to the group of people that are taking arms weapons to attack other people without any authentic reason. Whatever happened they were taking the arms to attack people, killing people, fighting people, taking their goods and whatever it is. That it is the word militancy or activism. That is all what I can say about this three different things.
KN75 [557-2318]

Hmm ... All praise, thanks, glorification and adoration are due to Allah the lord of mankind things and all that exist, may the peace blessing salutation be upon our noble prophet Muhammad (SAW), his companions, his household and those who follow the right guided till yawmal kiyamat so the term Islamism, Islamism or Islamic revivalism or militancy, militancy, so this is a concept that man need to emphasize on. First and foremost we need to take what is Islamism, from the word Islam we get Islamism, from the word Islam we get Islamism. First and foremost what is Islam before we come to Islamism? According to layman definition, Islam is a way of life. Islam is a religion of peace obedience and total submission to the will of almighty Allah. That is what Islam is all about, total obedience, obedience to the will of Almighty Allah. Then when you come to Islamism, Islamism is known as a political Islam, is a set of ideology holding that Islam should guide social and political as well as personal life according to some scholars of Islam. But in the old, according to the orientalist, people like Robin Wright, they define Islamism as what, terrorism, you understand, they define Islamism as terrorism because of what is happening in the countries like Iraq, Pakistan, Iran, Afghanistan, Sudan, Algeria and the rest of the country and the rest of Muslim countries. That is why they define Islam as a religion of terrorist now. So from the Islamic perspective as I told you according to, according to Islamic scholar also Islamism is an ideology that demands man's complete and adherent to the sacred law of our Islam. Islamism is the total transformation of traditional Islam it serves as a vehicle of modernization that is what Islamism is all about.
KN75 [2518-2842]

By my own understanding, Islamism according to some, according to my own perception, Islamism is a way of life also again based on how you see Islam is because when we are trying to define Islamism, but for other people to understand maybe very difficult to them, but to us, Islamism is the total way of life of the Muslim.
KN75 [2894-3231]

Islamic revivalism is a process or it can be referred to a way how Islam can be extracted from the disease that are being affecting Islam, let me use that word. It started from during the time of Wahabism, Wahabiyya who try to extract the actual context of Islam from the dirtiness of some other Islamic scholars, put Islamic in to be.
KN75 [3278-3767]

Islamic militancy, when you talk of militancy you are talking of the issue of ehh issue of, how will I put it, militant, all those ehh anti-Islam. In Islam there is nothing like Islamic militancy, this militancy you are seeing today is being formed by western Europe, to fight against Islam is an is an avenue or you say process by which the enemies of Islam use to advantage to fight Islam by sponsoring some hypocrisy, the hypocrite among the Muslim to fight the religion of Islam.
KN76 [471-1331]

Well ahh actually to me they connote different meaning. When you talk of Islamism, you are talking about movement, movement within the Islamic societies to promote the standard of ah to promote the practice of Islamic religion among the Muslim society. And when we are talking about revivalism, you are talking about a system that there is a noticeable decay within the society or within the Islamic society then that revivalism may take a different dimension whether by taking ahh maybe through preaching, maybe through education and many other things like that while when you talk of militancy, even those in militancy, Islamic militancy may have some similarities per se with revivalism and Islamism, but it is quite fundamentally different because when you talk of militancy, it talks of struggle by taking weapons and arms to establish an Islamic state.
KN77 [564-3732]

Alhamdulillah bismillahi rahmani rahim, in the name of Allah the most gracious, the most merciful, peace, blessings and the benediction be upon our holy prophet (SAW) his children, his family, his companion and all those that follow their footstep of righteousness till the day of judgment, ahh Salamu alaykum once again ahh as the question thrown to me as Islamism and Islamic revivalism or militancy, indeed the word Islamism is the word that refers to a kind of movement which reform the Muslim's manners, values in reflecting to the regulations of Allah (SBUH) and at the same time the teachings of the holy prophet (SAW). The word Islamism that is what is ahh it is referring to that is a way in which the Muslims reform their system, their lives, their values from those values which are contradictory to the regulations of Allah, those values who were prescribed by Allah (SBUH) and his prophet (SAW) that is what ahh Islamism is all about. And the other word or term Islamic revivalism is also having a linking relationship with Islamism because it refers to a way in which a Muslim or Muslims in general transform their worldly affairs, actions and inactions in line with the regulations of Allah, that is Islamic revivalism and at the same time, sometimes when the word revivalism is being referred to, is indeed reflecting to a situation in which the Muslims try to regain back their dignity and at the same time to re-establish an Islamic state. That is state in which there is ahh the sovereignty of Allah or the rules of Allah and teachings of the prophet (SAW) is strictly abided by. So it is sometimes referred to revivalism that is Muslims to change their system and way of life from all other contradicting theories to turn or to return back to what and how Allah (SBUH) regulated their life to be under the teaching of the holy Qur'an and at the same time the prophetic traditions (SAW). And sometimes this very word militancy is somehow being linked with the term Islamic revivalism by some people because some people think that if in a case in which some people or class of people who proclaim to be Muslims take arms and ammunitions to fight against their rights, to fight in order to regain back their rights, sometimes the word militancy is being used in referring to them. Though in any case if a person intended or a Muslim intended to regain back his right in a normal, in a normal way at the same time in the way which Allah (SBUH) regulated, then such should not be regarded as Militancy because militancy sometimes people do regard it to be an act of being rebels, to be a rebel, to be acting against maybe a given government or a given ahh ruling sect, do you understand, so sometimes when they say militancy, that is what it means, but in general Muslims do regard any act of regaining back their power, their freedom, their right by following strictly to the way Allah (SBUH) regarded. If, in any case, some people use their own ideology, their own way of thinking, their own way of understanding by carrying arms and ammunitions to engage in killing or attacking, such is indeed is contradicting to the teachings of Islam, yes, okay.
KN78 [480-1497]

Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy, I think this are modern terminologies ahh which are certainly ahh is really foreign to the Islamic worldview, but by the way, for the sake of the ahh better conversation, I think ehh, I would like to use my basic understanding on the word Islamism as to what conscious effort by some group of conscious Muslims to reassert their political identity calling for the ideal Islamic state where the entire Umma will have a central authority of command and coordination in a political, Islamic political structure. While the Islamic revivalism as the word implies, to revive simply means to come to terms with some certain virtues in the past, in other words, trying to leave, trying to restore the old legacy, the ideals of an Islamic ahm way of life, if you like. The militancy on the other way, my humble understanding of militancy is simply means going to the extreme of trying to implement or trying to entrench an Islamic ideals using all available means through violence.

KN79 [502-1033]

(Recites a prayer in Arabic) Once again, the term Islamism is the movement among Muslims to sustain purity of Islam, in a short form is the adherence to the Islamic creeds and the Islam revivalism is another movement among Muslims as a result of losing their identity or Islamic values in a particular area and they want to reform it and the Islamic ahm militancy it is about denial of operations by Muslims, for instance, a Muslim taking arms to confront what he regards as an anti-Islamism or anti-Islamic, that is a militancy.

KN80 [482-1205]

Okay as far as my undersetting is concerned the term Islamism means the following of the divine commandment sent from Allah (SBUH) to prophet Muhammad (SAW) those who submit themselves into this divine religion are called Muslims. Islam is the name of their religion. But revivalism to my understanding means a kind of revolution or repairment. So there is some certain ahm point in the history of Islam where Islam one time, you know, one time or the other started to decline with glory, so the act or the process of making it more standard, more standard is what are called revivalism. Okay Islamic revivalists are people who have the zeal of improving the standard state of Islam when it comes to declining state okay

KN80 [1251-1768]

So Islamic militancy, when we say Islam is separate word with its own separate entity. Militancy also is also another word with its own meaning and ah explanation. So to me there is no any relationship between Islam an militancy because Islam is a religion of peace, its name is peace and it is comprehensive in nature never for once Islam encourages emm dispute, so why the so called militancy. So I don't know where it got its origin in Islam. There is no any room for militancy in Islam, they are separate both.

KN81 [499-1435]

Okay well ahm Salamu alaykum in the name of Allah the most gracious, the most merciful, all praise to be to Allah the creator, provider, protector and the curer of all of them. All praise is be to Allah, all praise is be to Muhammad (SAW) his family, his companion and those who follow him and those who will follow him until the day of judgment. Well based on this question, to my own understanding or opinion, Islamism is movement among Muslim to purify the fundamental Islamic teaching within the Muslim area. This is my little understanding and the term Islamic revivalism is also a movement by Muslims to reform Islamic norms and values as a result of decline of such values. It looks somehow the same with Islamism. Then the term Islamic militancy is an act of taking arms by Muslims to fight for political reasons in a particular area which islamically is in admissible because Islam does not encourage any militant activities.

KN82 [399-1640]

The term Islamism Islamic revivalism or militancy are three words that have different meanings. Islamism means total submission to the will of Allah that is belonging to the provisions and dictates of Islam while Islamic revivalism is a concept or an idea that is denoting to refurbishing or may I say is all about, I have forgotten the, yes is about reformation. Revivalism is reformation is a kind of reformation. It is saying that something is existing, but due to some factors, something intervenes that is maybe suppress the effect of Islam. So there is need of new action that will reform, that will ensure the existing of the Islamic teachings. That is what Islamic revivalism is all about. The third one militancy, militancy, as I said earlier, is quite different from Islamism and Islamic revivalism because Islamic revivalism as we have seen in several occasions can be possible in two ways. It can be done through preachings, it can be done possibly through teaching and other means or ways that are non-violence, for example, while militancy is by force through use of weapons or terrorism or something of that nature. There are some scholars with that view that you can only reform Islam through a violence strategy or means.

KN83 [460-1224]

Okay ahm initially Islamism is an Islamic movement by Muslims in group to preach the core teaching of Islam based on the Qur'an and Sunna as a result of some religious diseases that attack Muslim community and the term Islamic revivalism is the reformation of Muslim ahm Muslim Umma as a result of some religious decay. Example of amm Islamic reformation of Usman Dan Fodio in western Sudan is an example of Islamic revival more or less. In another ahm Islamic militancy or militancy in Islam is an act of violence movement by group of so called Muslims. They take arms or weapons to kill Muslims and non-Muslims. They are anti-Muslims and their movement is un-Islamic because it is resort to killing some innocent people.

KN84 [484-1927]

What I, in my point of view, I think Islamism is an Islamic struggle by Muslim to reawake the Muslims, to reawake the Muslims to the fundamental teaching of their religions and the significance of the of their anti-Islamic behavior means we Muslims in a group. I mean insignificance of their anti-Islamic behavior, so it means Muslims in group will gather to remind their fellow Muslims for their fundamental teaching of Islam. Well as you said the term Islamic revival, Islamic revivalism is another Islamic struggle or movement to revive Islam in an area, to revive Islam in an area where Muslims are in the majority who lost their identity. This groups of revivalists they use da'wa or arms to revive Islamic community and there are times you need to... I think the term militancy or Islamic militancy is an arms struggle that is by so called Muslims that they are pretending they are potential of establishing Islamic state or independent of Islamic state. They are anti-Islamic. They are only tarnishing the image of Islam. So they are so far away from what we so called Islam. They are so far away from Islam. Their teaching and struggle is not Islam.

KN85 [110-533]

Ahm Islamism should be the application of all the principles of Islam in all aspect of human life while Islamic revivalism is the effort towards bringing Islam to its past glory due its degeneration as a result of colonialism, secularism and the rest while activism or militancy ahm could be referred to the use of arms or violence in order to ahm bring about strong adherence to Islam or to establish Islamic principles

ZA1 [229-486]

This what you are talking about Islamism and revivalism, this are the names that orientalist western orientalist given to a , not a Muslim that given for themselves, so now you have to go and ask them, but it is not part of anything that stand for Islam.

ZA2 [395-745]

You are saying what is Islamism, Islamism, when you view it by the term and taking care of that first sentence that first word Islamic. We refer it to that religion of peace and when we are talking about Islamism we are referring to emmm that practice of that Islamic religion, so that is I think what am going to just give you towards that aspect.

ZA3 [126-675]

Hmm to my understanding, I don't know, the terms Islamism, it doesn't have any serious meaning except that emm they may be describing Islam while revivalism or militancy is emm in the way the author or the person asking question has referred but it could Islamic revivalism could be as in many people getting aware of their religion or many people that ought naturally have been complacent of their religion coming to support the din their religion and this term militancy as in those that are of opinion for jihad, it could be defined that way.

ZA4 [704-2081]

Alhamdulillah emm from the references from the Qur'an and the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) and if you go to most of this kitab Tauhid, there our great scholars in UlumulTauhid defined Islam. They said Islam is an (al-istislahu lillahi bit-tauhid ...) that the meaning of Islam is the total humility or total submission to Allah bitauhid. It is oneness monotheism. You should submit yourselves totally to Allah that you are going to worship him alone (recites in Arabic) and you are ready to follow every guidelines that has, that he has stated in the Qur'an and also in the Sunna of prophet Muhammad(SAW) total humility, total obedience to all the guidelines of the Qur'an and the also the directive of prophet Mohammed (SAW) (recites in Arabic) and you should negate yourself, separate yourself from every worship that you will worship other things besides Allah and you also have to negate yourselves with those that engage themselves in worshipping other things ,other idols besides Allah with hikma, with methodology of the way you talk to them, the way you admonish them and you behaviors towards them, how you can invite them to the right path. So this is all the concept of Islam is worshipping Allah alone separating yourselves from associating partnership to Allah and total obedience to the guidelines of the Qur'an and also the Sunna of prophet Muhammad (SAW).

ZA5 [399-1173]

Thanks you very much my name is... I am a postgraduate student. My understanding of the term Islamism or revivalism or militancy, first of all I have to like we have to understand what is Islam itself, what we simply understand by the word Islam. Islam simply means peace, you understand, Islamism is the way of maybe Islamizing everything that you are doing or when we talk about revivalism that is to say in Islam to revive, you understand, that is the way our prophet or the Sunna of the prophet or the Khalifas or the companions of the prophet, the way they do things eh they want to revive it in the modern day Islamism. And militancy in Islam, I don't think we have anything like militancy in Islam, emm because there is nothing like militancy in Islam emm that's all.

ZA6 [595-685]

Hmm from my understanding of the term Islamism it means emm an absolute believe in Islam.

ZA7 [506-1406]

Well from sources and research work of some scholars, I believe Islamism is simply the definition of what Islam is and from various definition of and school of thoughts Islam, Islamism is simply the region that preaches about peace while Islamic revivalism from the word revivalism one should believe have this motion that has to do with something that has been done in past and how we want to inculcate that past activity in our present modern society. So I think it's just the ways of and lives of and thoughts of Prophet Muhammad in the past and how we want to practice it in our modern life. Then militancy, from the word militancy, it has to do with sects of people or group of people that have a particular interest and wants the government and a particular ruling government at that time to help them be able to achieve that interest with or without the government willingly wanting to that.

ZA8 [373-531]

Islamic Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy ahm honestly I don't have knowledge of this, but I don't think Islam encourages militancy or what so ever.

ZA9 [312-963]

Islamic, Islamic revolutionism or what do you call it? Revivalism I think that means, is just trying to like wake up the awareness on the religion Islam on a state where the religion, the practice of the religion is going down or depreciated. That is my own understanding of it. And Islamism is the process of practicing practicing Islam according to the teaching of the prophet and the holy book and militancy is a totally different thing and militancy, in my own opinion, is holding government to ransom by doing some kind of criminal activities so that the government will yield to your, to the things you need and that is my understanding of it.

ZA10 [495-1457]

Islamism as we all know or according to dictionary definition is all Muslims and their civilization and the multism of their beliefs of God is one and believing Muhammad (SAW) as the last messenger and that's the last and sealed messenger and prophet of God and Islamic revivalism, as we all know Islam is a religion of God and right from the time Islam came to Nigeria through the northern part of the country, there is no time that Islam has ever had any like Islam is down or ever falling so reviving it, I don't know maybe it should not be termed Islamic revivalism or that way instead it should be Islamic jihad. Yah, militancy is a term, the English term that simply means illegal act of ahh illegal protesting for something or illegal seeking of things from the government of that country or that nation that they are taking the law into their hands and doing some or exhibiting some acts that are illegal.

ZA11 [364-718]

From the little understanding of the English I have Islamism to be the act and the way you carry out Islam as a religion and militancy with the way the world have taken it now is an act of rebellion or there about and Islamic revivalism, is it bringing back the Islamic ethics or terms to the actual meaning of it or there about so that's a bit of that.

ZA12 [423-661]

Well, Islamism I think is just the practice of Islam then Islamic revivalism, I don't have any idea about that and that of militancy is the use of maybe force or to brainwash, to use some particular people to fight in the cause of Islam.

ZA13 [445-842]

Well Islamism simply means the act of practicing Islam and Islam means peace while Islamic revivalism, if you are to take another part, it simply means ahh I think between Islam now and Islamism they are all the same because there is nothing that you revive Islam has been, has come to stay while Islam militancy is being that people being forced, being deviating from the main teaching of Islam.

ZA14 [378-1031]

Ah good evening I still remain my humble self yes assalamu alaykum wa rahmatullahi taallah wa barakatuhu. I give thanks to Allah (SBUH) for bringing these questions to me I really appreciate and I pray that Allah will give me the wisdom and capacity to answer all the Questions, I the first place you asked me about Islamism, Islamic Revivalism and militancy. First let me first define what is Islam itself? Islam simply means peace, Islamize simply means to Islamize a community or to bring that community into a way of Islam, to revive all the deeds and action of the prophet (SAW) and militancy, there is nothing like militancy in Islam. Thank you.

ZA15 [511-2150]

Based on my own opinion on the term Islamism or should I just break it down or should I pick one and explain? (you can talk briefly on them) ok, if you look at the word Islamism or it is gotten from Islam that is when you total submission to the will of the almighty Allah that is Islam itself. Then Islamism the act or should I say the processes, you know, people go I, example, people feel as if okay and they want to strive to achieve a particular mission, so I look at it as also Islamism, then Islamic revivalism or militancy that is when people try to bring back or to revive or let me not use the word revive, when people try to maybe Islam is no longer in a particular place so they want to bring it back. For example, places like, places that there is no sharia law or sharia law is not practiced in those particular places. So people will try to okay let's do something to bring back that sharia law, so they are trying to revive Islam. Then let's say Militancy, militancy depends on how people view it, like the way I view militancy is as the word implies militancy, people also strive to achieve a particular mission. We have example, the Boko Haram people particularly in Nigeria, according to, you know, you cannot say particularly their mission because it is the media that is carrying and the media you cannot give them 100 percent. If they want to achieve what they want to achieve, maybe they use the media to achieve what they want to achieve because now militancy, I will just say when people strive or when they want to achieve what they want to achieve then they form a group and decide what they want to achieve.

ZA16 [158-865]

Ok do you want me to answer them differently? (yes) ok the term Islamism, the way I understand it is that one that practice Islam in the right, correct way. That is the correct way of practicing Islam that is Islamism, and I can defined it or I can, yeah I can define it as somebody as a person that accept Islam and is practicing the correct way of teaching Islam that is practicing Islam as it is taught by the prophet (SAW). Islamic revivalism is that the way Islam is been revived because nowadays, not for giving as a example ooh the same militancy, ok revivalism that is the reviving of the teaching of the Islam, reviving the teaching of Islam.

ZA17 [273-579]

ok Actually to my view, it is not Islamic because the issue of ah to bring weapon, it has not come to that extent because if a Muslim is denied to pray, is denied of his right to perform his religion very well that is where the issue of bringing weapon or raising jihad will come up, I think I answer you.

ZA18 [308-834]

Islamic militancy or Islamic revivalism, well to be candid when you talk of militancy, I wouldn't precisely say Islam has something to do with militancy, I think what you mean by militancy is, you know, in some places you find people carrying all sort of things that are, you know, that are not in correlation with the actual tenets of the religion, you understand, maybe some will just form a gang, go and do this, carry out some kind of violent something, this kind of and, you know, Islam has nothing to do with militancy.

ZA19 [302-802]

Well ah based on my understanding of the term Islamism,, Islamic revivalism or militancy, well actually Islamism could simply means a process of bringing people or a group of people into a Islamic religion while revivalism is actually talking about a passionate or a passionate enthusiasm particularly spiritual enthusiasm while the other concept militancy is actually talking about aggressive use of force in spreading either ideological, religious or any kind of actually morals in the society.

ZA20 [318-631]

Well in actual sense Islamic militancy are those group of cliques of like mind group of individuals especially the youths who came together and share the same ideology, the same belief on the causes they understand to their own definition as Islamic movement, which in the actual sense it is not an Islamic act.

ZA21 [261-429]

Well to me I can say Islamic revivalism is connected to the way and manner some Islamic sects think Islam should be the focus or should dominate the world so to say.

ZA22 [293-494]

In my understanding, Islamism is may be somebody expressing his religion to the best of his ability, practicing everywhere he finds himself be it in the midst of his fellow Muslims or other beliefs.

ZA23 [380-716]

he term Islamism to my understanding is just a term that people are using just to indicate the Islamic activities what the real Islam is, how are you supposed to go about on your Islamic activities. Anything that has a link to Islam we are call it Islamism, Islamization or something like that. That is to the best of my understanding.

ZA24 [437-1205]

So to my own understanding Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy refers to terrorists those that are using Islam, they are dodging under the umbrella or Islam to tarnish the image of Islam. Or they are doing something more than what is expected in Islam. So they are either terrorists and so on and so forth, so all those things are called militancy. They are enforcing somebody to do – because Islam says there is no compulsion- you cannot force somebody to do Islam so Lakum di lakum waliyya din. If you are forcing somebody that he must do this he must do that therefore you are in militancy, you are terrorizing others to do what is not supposed to be done. Those that are not in Islam you just need to pray for them you don't need to force them to do Islam.

ZA25 [334-784]

Though I am not all that versed in these concepts but I can make an attempt. Islamism is concerned with strict adherence to Islamic injunctions as regards the provisions of the main sources of sharia which is al-Qur'an and Sunna. While Islamic revivalism or militancy is concerned with ensuring a rebirth a rejuvenation of Islam as a holistic culture after a period of perceived dormancy or non-adherence to called adherence. I think this is what...

ZA26 [382-579]

This word is a myth because Muslims does not call this word; it is coined by the western orientalist. It is not by Muslims it is western orientalist that call them Islamization or Islam militant.

ZA27 [260-349]

To the best of my understanding these are words using by western culture to dent Islam.

ZA28 [543-1936]

Well first of all I would like to thank the almighty for giving me this opportunity to go through some of these questions and I pray that almighty will see us through to answer the questions that we know, those that we know we leave it to him to assist us and among the people that know much about what we are going to discuss. Well first of all I will like to start with the first term which is Islamism. Well I would like to briefly define what Islamism is and well not all about but little that I know about it. Islamism is I think is a set of ideology that says that Islam should guide both the political and social and other aspects of Muslims. So I think briefly that is what Islamism I think is all about. And secondly, I don't know which other term after Islamism? So well based on my own opinion I think I will briefly define what Islam is all about. Islam as we know and we are expecting other people to believe is that Islam is a religion literary and there are set of people who believe in this religion and Islam is nothing but a religion of peace. And militancy well I don't know but amm well when we say militancy I think it is amm it is a set of amm ideas erupted by some set of people well I can say basically for their own interest I will say worldly interest I don't know whether they attribute it to their own hereafter interest.

ZA29 [428-2583]

Well assalamu alaikum in the first place the terms Islamism, Islamic revivalism and militancy are stated there, what I say to my own view amm to the definition I can give so far when we say Islamism actually is a form of you know, you know, Islam Islamism is a form of as in let me put it this way like define the term Islam first, like when we say Islam, it is a system put in place not just by group of people but by the God himself because if I may quote a verse from where the Islam got its own name from if I may quote a verse that said al-yawma aqamalta lakum di lakum that is today I have completed your din that is your religion this is the talk of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) may God be with him. Now (he quotes a Qura'nic text) to the end of the verse that today I have completed your hadith that give the hadith the name Islam you understand so If I may say when you say Islamic revivalism from you say revival, let's say reviving you understand Islamic reviving, revivalism. So to me there is no much actually to say there but the word has explained itself so far that is the little I can say

Well when you talk of militancy you know when you say militant and the word militant English definition of the word militant. When call someone a militant is just a person that belong to a group, a group of people you understand, striving, fighting for some certain needs or for some certain things or beliefs. So when you call me an Islamic militant you are calling somebody like that is fighting or striving for that very religion you understand and with the people that have the same belief you understand the believe that what I am doing am right and they give me their total support. When you become an Islamic militant, but mark you in some instance, calling someone an Islamic militant, militant can assume an offensive word, it can assume an offensive word, it can be an offensive word, if I call you a militant is like doing it in a way that you don't care whether it hurt other people's feelings and ideas or views so far it pleases you, you have no problems with that. To me that is how I see it.

ZA30 [1296-1894]

Islamism, So, I can't go contrarily to the teaching or to the book that we are following ehm and an angel came to Prophet Muhammad (SAW) and asked him can you brief me about Islam? What he mentioned specifically about Islam is those five pillars of Islam. So, he mentioned those five pillars to him that is where he stopped. So, Islamism means that some means he doesn't go out of those five pillars almost, I know everybody knows five pillars, fiver pillars of Islam. That is testifying, the oneness of Allah, believing in Prophet Muhammad, ehm Salat, Zakat, and hajj even (he recites in Arabic).

ZA31 [553-915]

The definition of Islam, Islam itself is not a religion that is created with the group of people, it is a religion of God and there is no any relationship between Islam and militancy. Islam by definition means peace while militancy means violence caused by group of people. So, you see there is no difference; there is no relationship between Islam and militancy

ZA32 [324-1755]

Ahhh, my understanding to the said terms may be as follows, Firstly, Islamism. Islamism is a religious system of Muslims that is how I understand it. Though some people who are having misconceptions about it, they are say that it is a way which Muslims follow to seize the power or to Islamize everything in the universe or in the world, but to me, what I understand is just the religious system of life based on Islam and Islam means total submission and absolute surrender to the ways of Allah (SBUH). Islamic revivalism, Islamic revivalism, as I understand it to be an act of religious revival; it is to renew the practices or I can say it is a struggle of the resurgence of Islamic religion. It is also a struggle to renew the religion of Islam, it's believes and the practices and this includes enjoining the good and forbidding the evil, calling for the regulations of the affairs of the people, and the establishment of justice among them that is the people, supporting, supporting of the thoughts against falsehood, provides the Sunnah and suppressing innovation and renounce bad customs that is revivalism), the ehhl Islamic revivalism. And the militancy, militancy is the quality of been militant active in like to act in an aggressive way in supporting of something, in supporting of something, it can be political, the issue can be political or religious, but it is not the, it is not what we call revivalism actually.

ZA33 [246-623]

The terms Islamism, Islamic revitalization or militancy is the use of extreme words by some Muslims in order to exploit their selfish interest in the cause of Islam. But in the real sense it is not Islam they are practicing but their selfish interest, which can lead to most of them having ideology which leads them to carry arms that makes them to fall into militancy group.

ZA34 [252-732]

Azubillahi mina shaitani rajim, Bismillahi arrahami arrahim Salallahu alal nabiiyul karim Ah my own understanding by Islamism in a nutshell is the awareness and progress and proliferation of the knowledge of Islam more especially in our area, in our states, in our local governments, our countries and the entire world. Ah nowadays Islamic education is more faster especially to the youths and even the old people so that is in a nutshell is my understanding about these terms.

ZA35 [194-480]

Good morning, I am by name... what I understand by the term Islamism, first Islam itself is an act of worship, a submission to the will of Allah, then Islamic revivalism or militancy is the act of, is a revelation of Islam from the times of the prophet down to the era we are right now.

ZA36 [711-1055]

Ahm that word revivalism reminds me of one course when I was doing my B.Ed program. Ehm to revive is to reform, to reform, to bring changes into things or to make amendments, yes. To revive ah Islam is like to bring changes to what has being spoilt or mixed up with culture or ah superstitions, to make it pure Islamic, that is reviving Islam.

ZA37 [492-661]

My understanding under this one is just how to create awareness about the teachings and about the good teachings of Islam that is my best understanding on these terms.

ZA38 [551-1206]

Basically Islam itself it just means peace, you understand, so when they said Islamism or Islamic revivalism or militancy we have diverted from the real teaching of peace to the other activities, you understand. One or two scholars or people that are extremism in the aspect of religion, if I say extremism it does not mean that people that are fanatics in terms religious aspect, but extremism on the other side they feel that there are some things that we are supposed to observe in terms of religion that we neglected, they feel that it is obligatory that each and every Muslim would be able to do it. That is the aspect of the revivalism I understand.

ZA39 [587-1245]

Ok actually Islamism, Islamic revivalism or militancy, actually Islamism, to my own understanding is anything that is considered to be, is the concept, let me start with, is the concept of believing on anything to be Islamic that is the meaning of Islamism. It is just like a word with a suffix added to the word Islam, it is derived from the word Islam. Islam simply means the total submission to the will of Allah that is when a person submit himself to be bound by the laws setup by Allah then he is become a Muslims. A Muslim is a person who is practicing Islam. So Islamism is the concept of believing on everything about Islam that is the meaning.

Th 2: Main Causes of Islamic Fundamentalism

Th2.1: Reasons Why More Muslims are getting Involved in Militant Islam

FG1 [2555-2677]

Let me disagree, I may agree with what you have just said but the problem is that the reason behind it is illiteracy yes

FG1 [2679-3098]

To me it will be based on protection, protection of the religion. People strive hard in order to protect am I don't know those who are trying to get it wrong. The information is there and it is intact and correct but people are trying to translate it based on the way in which it favors their desires. So those Islamic militants now trying to prove it wrong or try to fight against such acts. So that is what I think.

FG1 [3171-3199]

(A chorus of yah they are)

FG1 [3201-3231]

Yes they are getting involved

FG1 [3298-4088]

For I may agree that presently in northern Nigeria as a case of study, I may say our youth Muslims are getting involved in this militancy mercilessly because they have the largest population of youth and youth every youth in religion, the moment a person is above 18 he usually build this impression of him being active in all religious activities. So being an active somebody in religious activities may lead to extremism and this extremism may be populated to the society which I may view it different from how you view it, so I may go contrary to your ideas. And looking at yourself very active in that religion you may say that just this small guy for example can't say I can't do this in my religion so he may just take that as a form of being extremist so this militancy may evolve.

FG2 [841-1347]

(F) Bismillahi, I do agree because most of them are getting furious over these attacks and insurgency so in order for you-trying to protect yourself so you decide you think like there is no way I can protect myself so it is better for me to fight for my own life too so they decide to join. Meanwhile instead of them like to know the reason why they are joining they decide to act just like the ones that are going the wrong direction. So that is why they decide just to join according to my own opinion.

FG2 [1349-1668]

I disagree with her based on the reason that most of the people involved in this militancy most of them are not Muslims, but they are using the name of Islam due to the fact that most of them know that Islam always encourage jihad. And to their own understanding jihad has to do with killing other people unreasonably.

FG2 [1670-2026]

I will just add to his opinion that yes most of the people that are engaging in militancy they are using the name of Islam but they are not Muslims most of them and what takes them there is that they limit the definition or the concept of jihad to only killing of people, but it is beyond that in Islam. There are many concepts of jihad not only killing.

FG3 [6890-7237]

I disagree because the question says more. And if you take the statistics maybe when they use the word more on anything means there are some with higher number. So I could remember now in actual sense when you find ten Muslims around I don't think you can find one and as long as there is no one percent, one over ten so you can't call it more.

FG3 [7274-7809]

I will also disagree with it in the sense that if you try to see that issue of ahhh let's take what is going on within the country, north eastern part of the country, the issue of Boko Haram, you will notice that people that tend to say western education in the religion is forbidden they are kind of very insignificant population compared to the larger population even in the north. When you now talk of the whole Nigeria they are very significant that you can do away with them. It doesn't really count when it comes to like that.

KD1 [2341-3819]

One of the things. Actually, I agree with those that say more Muslims are going into militant activities, that's even a world wide challenge. Is a worldwide challenge because, we can see in several places we see series of Islamic sects, Islamic states. We are seeing cases of Sunni versus Shiites, in Yemen and in Syria and other parts of the Arab Spring and of course, back to Nigeria here, northern Nigeria particularly. One of the challenges that is causing militancy in northern Nigeria is case of ignorance and case of people been misled and that short, lack of foresight because a lot of people they don't even count their life as important, they don't value the life of their neighbor and even the family and the thing is like a good number of people don't know, they don't even know what it means like to love. So, when you don't experience love, you don't even know how to even give people love, show people love, so that sanctity of the human life, they don't even value itself in most cases. That's why you see most case of militancy coming up and principally ignorance because, ignorance is a big disease, is a big problem in fact ignorance is and in a case of like conspiracy and brainwashing but ignorance is the major problem because when somebody tell you something and you take it hook line and sinker it is a big problem and ignorance is the major problem I think that is causing this besides, aside poverty, but ignorance is the major problem causing it.

KD2 [1340-1622]

Actually I don't agree and my reason is simply is, my reason is simple, within our own, within our neighborhood, you can hardly find a single person that is into such groups in terms of militancy or something like that. People don't partake in militancy. So to me it doesn't exit.

KD3 [1079-1098]

I agree with that.

KD3 [1229-1670]

The reason why more Muslims get involved in militant activities in northern Nigeria, one has to do with shallow knowledge of Islam and may be lack of awareness. Some just read just the main phrase of contents of either the Qur'an or the hadith without going into more research to know what and what to take, and what the hadith entirely entails or brings, the main teachings of that. So with that they just pick it and start acting upon it.

KD4 [1350-1917]

From the word militancy as I told you earlier on, militancy as a word has a very variety of meanings. Bringing from the word as I defined it earlier on, looking at the aggressiveness or the using of violence to achieve a particular thing, I will say that Muslims are not involved in militant activities; more Muslims are not involved in militant activities. Rather I will say that some part of Muslims and non-Muslims can be aggressive as well be violence. So I will not deprive it of or particularize it to only Muslims. I think that's my opinion on that assertion.

KD5 [819-1110]

Yes I agree, there is slight rise in engagement of youths in militant activities in the northern part of the country. That is the Islamic state within the country. And I think the reason behind that is may be unemployment, poverty, and lack of education I think also contribute, that's all.

KD6 [1224-1960]

I agree that people are joining militancy why, they wanted to show their grievances against the government. They think the government is not doing the right thing, they think the government is not taking them along with them. So, what they need is...to militate against the government of the day not Islamic militancy. They just see a road, a way to come against the government, to my own understanding, that is why. And secondly, there is other things that prompt them to do that, for example, there is poverty in the land it's part of it and there is no knowledge, for example, our government has faile us already, so it is part of the militancy we are facing is not about Islamic perspective of militancy it's poverty militancy to me.

KD7 [987-1218]

Yes, I agree. We see a lot of people who by accident have come into contact with people who are able to distort the true meaning of Islam through their teachings and their deeds to attract this young men and women into militancy.

KD7 [1304-1381]

Ahm bottom line is the lack of Islamic education and lack of practice of it.

KD8 [913-2336]

Well militancy has become a kind of global issue. It depends on the way you look at it. Militancy could be found not only in Islam, it could be found in other spheres of life. When people are denied their rights, they tend to agitate for those rights and they normally called militants or agitators. Militancy in Muslim is a new thing because there is nothing like militancy in Islam, but the emergence of certain groups that are using the name of Islam to in quote 'fight for either Islamic state or Islamic values.' There is something that is to certain, to a very large degree, in complete defiance of Islamic in junction. Because like I said, there is nothing like militancy in Islam. What we have is jihad, we have jihad in Islam, every Muslim believes in jihad, but jihad can be interpreted in different ways that's something that we will discuss probably later. But the issue of militancy, there is nothing like militancy in Islam. We don't have any word like that, but there are some people that are agitating for the establishment, probably they are used or we just believe that this are people that did not, they are not really Muslims. They are probably formed by certain interest, global interest in order to now, I mean bring about problems in Islam or to a kind of lead to ...of the Muslims so that they can be seen as, you know, agent of violence. But to cut it shot, there is nothing like militancy in Islam.

KD9 [971-1646]

Hmm I agree to some extent if you look at the trend of the situation of Nigeria today especially the activities of the Boko Haram, you know, even though there are a lot of skirmishes ah unexplainable issues as far as Boko Haram is concerned, but you will realized that Boko Haram is made up of youths and from the little we know we are told that it started from an Islamic sect, they call them Islamic sect and they started as an Islamic sect that is not involved, you know, ah this what is happening now. So if you ask me that people are saying Muslims are getting involved in militant activities, yes Boko haram is a good example to show that yes they have a point there.

KD10 [1315-1873]

More Muslims are getting involved in militant activities, that is they are causing violence. Yes I don't actually agree with that because anyone who understands the teaching of the sharia is not going to involve in this violence. You know, it is not the Muslims, sometimes it is not the Muslims that are causing this violence, they are not the Muslims. Like this Boko Haram of a thing, I don't believe that it is the Muslims that are causing the violence, causing a lot of causing disturbance in the town whereby a lot of lives and property are being lost.

KD11 [2772-4143]

Well I would not want to say that more Muslims. I wouldn't want to say it that way, but for the few who are into it. The issue of more Muslims getting into, I think it is a bit ah out of it. But current situation as we have it is ah when you look at the nature of militant activities or terrorism or insurgency is a unconventional warfare in which very few people could strike with great impact and verocity, you understand, come to talk of it when you look at the recruitment or when you look at the foot are solders of the so called Boko haram in northern Nigeria, you will begin to see that these people that are very few, when the movement started initially, they were very few and ah not just very few, they had little this thing, but as the time goes on, as they become growing mostly I wouldn't say, as time goes on there recruitment became a thing of force, you understand, they started recruiting people their foot solders through the use of force. It is no longer a voluntary movement as it started, you understand, it was by force and then ah that was it, but looking at the causes now I think the main cause is the unconnected with material well being of the society at that time or at this particular appointed time. In a society where there is poverty, employment ah lack of education and even the Islamic education has not been encouraged and the rest.

KD12 [1903-2651]

ah In fact am not agreeing with that principle that more Muslims are involved in militant activities. Ah what should have been said is that more Muslims are now involved in way of ah in way of awareness that people should know their rights and then people should inculcate the rightness everybody into the government principles. The militant activities that is going on in the north is not Islamic, is not Islamic and then no good Muslims supports what they are doing because Islam does not give way for killing people or destroying their property or doing whatever will cause havoc to human being because after all Islam calls everybody to religion and then he doesn't place any way of destroying those who are going to do this religion again.

D13 [689-711]

I disagree with this

KD14 [1120-1129]

I agree

KD14 [1257-1461]

The reason why I agree that more Muslims are getting involved in militant activities mostly in northern Nigeria are usually Muslims that have shallow knowledge of Islam. They don't know much about Islam.

KD15 [730-1006]

Hmm actually Islamically militant activities ahm is okay by Islam because if we check out the meaning of that militant activity let just say its jihad or something as in fighting in the cause of Allah, so I think militant activities is okay if you can do it in the right way.

KD16 [499-573]

Actually I had not conducted any research on it. So I have no submission.

KD17 [1459-2079]

Hmm in this instance I will just say actually it seems so because if you see in Nigeria especially here in the north you see the recent ah militant activities or so called they want to uplift the sharia using arms, bombing places before earlier there was no cases of this earlier so I think okay we getting issues like this is maybe due to the, I think more youth especially because by the time you hear may be what you will see, you see that it is the youth that take the bomb or other things. I think more youths are getting involved it seems that statement is true that more youths are getting involved in militancy.

KD18 [477-487]

I agree.

KD18 [616-1278]

Yes, more Muslims are getting involved in militant activities in the sense that if you look at what is happening in our society today especially ah between the Muslims and non-Muslims, that is Christianity yes if you can see you will see some discrimination you will see some discrimination among the Christianity especially those that are called CAN so if there is any post, if there is anything that they are going to, that they are going to offer, I mean, to the public, so they use to discriminate and try to select their people and they will try to abandon the Muslim, I think that is why Islam they are trying to get involved with the military activities.

KD19 [1064-1068]

Yes

KD19 [1193-1831]

Yes I quite agree with that view because I feel some people are especially the youths are into extremism because in the name of religion they do a lot of things which is not synonymous with the religion take for example killing in the name of religion, if you are a Muslim, the term Islam means peace. So you find it difficult to align with the fact that you are killing people and yet you call yourself an Islam. Part of the reason that ah there is growth in Islamic extremism has to do with maybe the spread of the gospel by the people who are not too enlightened, people who call themselves Mallam whereas they are not well educated.

KD20 [486-499]

Yes I agree.

KD20 [523-956]

Because ah Muslim brothers, they are not in the military before and the other religion they are there, so if there is any opportunity or if they are trying to look for any position there so those other religions used to put their own candidates there, so the Muslim brothers decided to allow their own children to be attending that to be going to military training, so that they will have the same opportunity like other religions.

KD21 [1093-1452]

Well I will go with the positives, I will say Muslim youths are going into Islamic militancy. You can see from the rising of the groups, let's go back to 1980s during the Maitatsine era now going back to the Yusufiyya going back to the boko haram, Shekau and co. These little examples you can see that, they are quite number in the rise of Islamic militancy.

KD22 [1592-2435]

Ah that's not true, because militancy as a word is derogatory to be attributed to a particular group of people and if you ascribe it to the Muslims alone you are not being fair to the Muslims really. If you also ascribe it to ah another group who are not the Muslim, you too you are not being fair to them because militancy could be said to be the act of bearing arms unlawfully and when you so do, you are committing an offense that contravene all the international norms. Ah if you say that Muslim or Islam is militancy then you are doing something unfair and unjust to the group really. You can't say that militancy has relation with Islam or Islam is militancy, if you say that you are wrong because Islam in its literal sense it means peace. So if one is peaceful or he imbibes peace ascribing militancy to him will be derogatory of him.

KD23 [1173-1666]

Well, I'm not of the opinion that ah more Muslims are getting involved in militant activities, so because I am ah I'm not of that opinion because ah it's not ah only the Muslims are engaging themselves in all these ah militant activities, so even the people ah in the other parts of the country are normally ah participating in ah in militant activities. So ah for anything they say militant ah so it is not supposed to be camouflage it in the side of the Muslims, so I'm not of that opinion.

KD24 [902-4430]

Actually I agree with this point and eh there should be many reasonable reasons for this. Poverty should come first eh the Muslims in northern Nigeria since we are talking about the Muslims specifically I will just focus on the Muslims sections ah I mentioned poverty because it is one of the things we are faced here in northern Nigeria and this poverty or if person is not good in taking care of himself one way of the other, in one way or the other he will easily find himself in one habit which he was not into it before, he has not been practicing it before, with some little amount of money some people can convince him, deceive him give him some money, give him arms so that they can engage in practicing some of these militant acts or habits which at the same time he is not part of the militant military, military, but due to these some amount of money that he may think he doesn't have business, he doesn't have any work to do because government did not provide anything for him even though he is educated, there is no job ah vacancy here, they are faced with this much problems, so people are just thinking of the way to survive with this, most people find themselves in accepting such callings from individuals which are from various sections in the country ah sometimes you will find yourself thinking how is this person, for example, these people are just killing people, behaving as if they are part of the military and they are not why because if you see the arms which they are using things like that, you will actually know that definitely there is someone who is sponsoring them. This person, there is someone who is sponsoring them this person or group is sponsoring them is eh even though we can't really say, mention names we can't mention names because we don't have good quality proof in our hands, but things like that cannot happen without the knowing of some people or people that have rich in wealth so to say. Secondly ignorance, we mentioned poverty first and the second one is ignorance. Why did I say so I say so because ignorance makes someone to behave abnormal even though if you are educated and you do not practice and you do not act and you do not participate in the community the way a learned person supposed to act, you are ignorant because all your knowledge which you gained from school is of no use. How could someone use you with just little amount of money because no matter how the amount of money is, to us it is little, give you arms to go and kill people, to go and stay on the way, shoot people maybe even to death, maybe even students in schools, maybe people in the mosque praying or in the church praying, things like that. See this shows that there is ignorance, lack of understanding. Thirdly mutual misunderstanding, there is mutual misunderstanding between the Muslims and the Christians which some years back it wasn't like that, so this is the third one. The fourth one is politics, politics has given a huge amount of contribution to this because the politicians actually, they are always looking for a way they can move forward no matter what the case may be, they can use an illiterate person or a person in a poor state, they will just give him money to go and put bomb kill people at the end what they want is to achieve what they need so they doesn't care what will happen, how many people will die concerning that if they know that children, their children, their family their relatives are not involved in this accident or in things like that they don't care.

KD25 [2778-6311]

Well to some extent I don't agree. It's only few amongst many that seem to be tilting to that eh ah ah ah ah thing ah and I believe what is making them to do that is you know ah being idle, not doing something and ah there is that issue of also ignorance, when somebody is ignorant of an issue, you shouldn't blame him no matter what he does because to him that is the right thing. So I believe, I will not believe that eh most of you know the youths in the you know from the northern part of this country Nigeria of ours that ah eh really, but what, but you know the Shiites, the Shiites already they have been in existence for more than 40 years even in Nigeria here it's more than 30 years, I remembered when we were in secondary school when these eh there was this eh ah ah ah islam only in ABU that was when El-Zak zaki was, you know, active in, was a student, he was one of the you know fore frontiers of eh trying to say that Islam only, you see there are hiding under that umbrella. When somebody says Islam only there is no Muslim that will not accept that yes Islam only because he is a Muslim, but that is not the real thing, there is a hidden agenda behind that. Islam only trying to call upon the youths to win over the hearts of the youths so that you, you know, you try to put them, you know, to a kind of a terrorist way so that eh it will come to an extent that they will not be afraid to die. Some of them are even looking for death somewhere just as we often say. So I don't believe that most of the youths in the north are engaging or associating with such with the, you know ah ah ah terrorist or militants, but to some extent there are some, some, and those some are, you know, they are ignorant and ah they are unemployed, they have nothing to do, I just said that the English man said said the idle man is the devils workshop. When somebody is idle he has nothing doing and there is nothing forthcoming definitely the devil will start ah, you know, whispering unto him, you know, trying to distract or beguile him from eh, you know, right path of Islam to carrying an insurgency or onslaught or like eh you know eh eh ah conducting ah militant attacks on, you know, even the Muslims and the non-Muslims eh people you know at large, so that in the Islamic perspective is not accepted because if you look at the Qur'an, there is no place in the Qur'an that Allah told, you know, instructed us or gives us a command that we should go and fight the Christians or fight the Jews no, no, no, there is no verse like that in the Qur'an. What Allah is always saying in some of the places in the Qur'an is that (he recites in Arabic), the Muslims are always on the defensive side, if you look at the Qur'an. The Qur'an in its entirety, there is no verse, there is no chapter in the Qur'an that Allah just says okay the Muslim just go on killing the Christians or the, you know, the Jews because they don't, they refuse to accept or embrace Islam. That is why the Qur'an says (he recites in Arabic), in another verse he said (he recites in Arabic) that fight in the path of Allah those who fight you, but don't start meaning don't transgress, don't start, don't be the people that start ahaa because in an hadith the prophets was reported to have said (he recites in Arabic) he that starts the attack is the most wrong person, so therefore we can see that ah from the Islamic perspective there is nothing being encouraged towards militancy. It is even discouraged, it is even doing away with, eradicating it. Yes.

KD26 [1149-1582]

I agree that more Muslims are getting into the militant way of life and I believe it is due to poverty because most of this people that are being used, most of them don't have, they don't have the education I think it is part of illiteracy, poverty and poverty has to do with them not having what to do so they are easily misled and then not really understanding what the din is all about. They are easily guided into the wrong part.

KD27 [942-1315]

Well it goes back to my last answer. You see this militancy has its roots in ignorance, in oppression, in poverty. Now the weight and the levels of this ignorance, poverty and oppression are growing and because they are growing more people are being affected by those three evils, so to say, and thereby making it fertile ground for recruiting the youths into militancy.

KD28 [1120-3074]

In northern Nigeria presently if you say the more Muslims are getting involved in this militancy. I will agree in one aspect and I will not agree in one aspect. In the sense, my agreement in one aspect is in the sense that the way we understand Islam to be, you know some people understand that Islam as a religion of sword which it is because of lack of knowledge, seeking the knowledge properly to understand what really is Islam and what is sword. If you understand what Islam means then you can know if it is possible to even, is it a religion of sword you know because it is the knowledge acquired that is the way the knowledge is, you know the knowledge if you go versed in the knowledge you can mislead yourself because the understanding you have in the knowledge will let you know what really you are after, because you know knowledge as it is it is very wide and it is divided into many sectors. So you know if you go into a particular sector then you can understand your knowledge, your knowledge will take you that way, so Islam, in the sense that some use, yes because the knowledge you've acquired thinking that yes by sword whereas it is not like that. The prophet of Islam (SAW) even if he fought jihad, all the jihad that he fought during his own time is a defensive not it is not the one that he initiate war. If wherever you are, you are defending yourself, I don't think it is anything you may term it to be militancy because you seek your protection from any of this who at logger head with you. You know there are enemies who don't like what you are doing because they don't have the understanding. If you understand Islam properly you know you are to be in cordial relationship with your neighbors and everybody because Islam has its own role within yourself, within your neighbor and even within all that are within you, if you have the knowledge of Islam it will be difficult for you to tamper with anybody's life or property.

KD29 [1241-1553]

Well I ah to a certain extent I tend to agree, ah but from the angle of the rural base ah rural base Islamic preaching, there are those with shallow understanding about the teaching of Islam ah they easily get convinced with a view that they are practicing what the Islamic teachings about jihad is all about.

KD30 [1040-1878]

Ah I think you cannot deny the fact that more people are involved in militant activities in the northern part of Nigeria because of the recent scenario with boko haram in the northern part of Nigeria (clears throat) sorry, presently ah I think what bring this is ahm the tension maybe the ah the economic distress in the nation have given the people less option but to look up to other places to have ah for satisfaction or you can easily ah lure someone to engage in a criminal activity or whatsoever thing for as long as it's not economically active in the economy and that ah when the economy is poor you will see that mostly the youths are not educated, the society are left left and then people can easily take advantage of their ignorance and lack of education to engage them into criminal or rather militant activities.

KD31 [2192-3354]

actually I disagree with that and my reason for saying I disagree with that is this, you don't, the reason why the youths most especially the youths are rising up ah involving themselves into such activities is just that if you look at what is happening in the world today everywhere you go if you are a Muslim people look at you, try to look at you as someone of eh a person who should not live a free life, who should not practice his religion because they feel Islam is a true religion that has that has to do with fighting against the oppressors, the wrongdoers and the likes. So people or the youths feel the western world are trying to like or trying to scrap or trying to like bring down, tarnish the image of Islam, I think so ah and the youths feels it shouldn't be so that's why the they try as much as they can to rise up to see that they defend their religion even though some are being brainwashed like in the northern, like in northern Nigeria, there are a lot of things going on which is un-Islamic is un-Islamic is part of brainwashing by some enemies of Islam to just use those youths, aggrieved youths to achieve their own personal interest.

KD32 [1060-1510]

Well eh as I can agree with that because with the rate of growing of militancy in some part of the world ah some people are associating themselves to Islam even though we don't know their origin, we can't ascertain whether they are Muslims or not, so they way of increasing of terrorism in the world, I can say yes there are some people who are not, who may not be purely Muslims but they are using the image of Islam, so they may be, there may be.

KD33 [887-1243]

Yah some people I agree that some people more Muslim are engaging in militancy activities in Nigeria because most of the scholars are getting it wrong to interpret, as I said the earlier, some of the verses that came with the word jihad and some of the understanding of Islamic teachings, so that leads to what we call militancy in Muslims community okay

KD34 [1146-1823]

I disagree that more people are joining the militancy and the reason why I disagree is that there is, now we are in the world of social media more of the activities that is happen in a far away some people will take it somewhere and advocate about it and some others that are waiting to have something to tarnish the image of Islam, they are taking that stories and taking it as if it is happen everywhere because I as a Muslim living in a northern Nigeria I never come or witness somebody who is a militant, who call himself a militant, yet I never witness that, but I know it is happening and I know it is in existence but more people getting to it, no, I disagree with it.

KD35 [1575-2045]

I disagree simply because Allah has made things clear that you preach there is no force in Islam or any religion. The moment you preach you have done your own ah to my understanding there is only ahh is only ... in Islam there is no compulsion in Islam and is only Qisas that is compulsory, he who does wrong should see the wrong, but ahh in trying to force people to abide by Islamic injunctions is wrong, so whatever you do you see it in the hereafter that is my believe.

KN1 [2031-2567]

I tend to disagree with that, because the issue is if you are looking at the percentage, if you say more Muslims, of course more Muslims... the world is evidencing more Muslims. Now let's assume in the last ten years if you compare the population of Muslims or the current populations of the Muslims of course it is on the increase and if you compare the percentage of the so called ahhh those that are calling themselves that jihadists or whatever names they give themselves, if you compare the percentage I doubt if it is increasing.

KN1 [2961-3591]

concerning the view of Muslims to have a Muslim society, yes each and every Muslim wants to have a Muslim society because Islam is a complete way of life that is why most of us to understand, in Islam everything is supposed to be done in an Islamic way, but however there is difference between those that are engaging in physical struggle in the name of jihad, there is quite difference between that and those that are willing and have the zeal for Islam to prosper and for Islam to have, to be more I don't know I don't have the right of what to call it but for Islam to be practiced in a proper way. There is difference.

KN1 [3825-4413]

Well, usually younger ones are agile, secondly, economic issue, if somebody is not engaged or employed definitely he will find a way to make himself busy, so this is part of it and secondly, probably the level of the knowledge about Islam and Islamic jihad is another factor. So you see the younger ones are not as knowledgeable and enlightened as the older ones and probably the older ones have seen it and they understand the system better than the younger ones. So the younger ones a times are misleading although there are ones that have a clean intention, so that is it as of my view

KN2 [2040-3255]

You see there is so much a problem in Islamic societies. These problems directly related to Ignorance of Islam itself. I believe a number of these militants are being taken for granted because their ignorance of the real pure orthodox Islamic injunctions. That is why most of them are taken for granted believing that of course they are fighting in the name of God. But the question is, are they on the right path of fighting in the name of God? That is the question we are raising because if they are on the right path they wouldn't have killed fellow Muslims who have already ascribed to the faith. They would have made observations and corrections because fighting in the name of God means emancipating people from going contrary or going astray and in the consequence are getting into the wrath of the God. So you are now trying to emancipate these people and change the course of their direction to the right path where they will be able to get salvation. It is not just killing people. So if there are people who have already Islamized themselves, converted to Islam, were ascribed Muslims born as Muslims, the only thing you need to do is to make corrections for them to continue to be on the right path.

KN2 [3359-4403]

People are getting involved in this as a result of many reasons. Number one, the West has made itself be misunderstood by a number of Muslims. The way the western countries are making advancements into Islamic societies and becoming mischievous directly interprets that Muslims should do something to protect themselves. So the west has become synonymous to Muslims with a threat towards Islamic intellect. So that is why, one of the reasons why these militant groups are grouping and regrouping and getting more members into their groups. Two, apart from the western society, the western culture itself has posed a lot of threats towards Islamic culture. See how young women are changing from wearing hijab and Nikaf to wearing skimpy dresses, see how clubs are springing up with people bearing the name of Muslims, see how you know a large part of Islamic religion in a number of places people are only Muslims by names, but they are not Muslims by practice. So a number of Muslims felt something should be done and the need for force.

KN2 [4459-4669]

...is in danger, the religion itself. Number three, Sheer ignorance. Most of these militants are not aware that they are not on the right path. They may have the right faith, but they are not on the right path.

KN4 [1489-2112]

No no no, I do not agree that there is (ah) this of the opinion that Muslims are involving in militant activities. People are we say a good Muslim is always preaching peace, that is why we say that Islam is peace, is preaching peace, good morality, good behavior. When somebody, a good Muslim you can only understand it by his attitude, by his deeds, by the way that is interact, that is the teaching and the practice of the Prophet Muhammad (SAW) who is the highly respected mentor and his doctrine is also what the most of the people of the northern Nigerian are using. I don't agree, I don't agree Islam in militancy.

KN5 [682-712]

I disagree as they are not.

KN6 [552-826]

So, if it is in northern Nigeria I can't agree with this idea because if you say more Muslims are involved into ahh activities of this ahhh of this activities because you can find some cases that some Christians are involved in this case. So I don't agree with this issue.

KN7 [717-1685]

Hmm ehm, well ehm people you see the term ehm ehm ehm militancy, militant activity. Militant activities can be perceived in different ways, but people is unfortunate let me say its unfortunate that ehm more Muslims, I agree that more Muslims do ehm participate or let me say or do get involved in militant activities because ehm if you look at northern Nigeria, as you have asked me now, you will ehm notice that in recent times we have been encountering series of crisis, series of bombings, series of killings, series of as in series of atrocities by the Muslims or let me say the people, the so called ehm Islamic sects that are calling themselves Muslims. Because as a Muslim I don't think killings or or or bombings of life is ehm, is a kind of way of calling people to the way of Islam. So well ehm, its, I do agree, I do agree that yes Muslims as or let me say the so called Muslims, the so called Muslims do ehm get involved in militant activities more, yes.

KN8 [675-821]

I think the simple answer to this issue of insurgency. The majority of the Muslims are willing to protect the interest of their fellow members.

KN9 [945-959]

Yes of course

KN9 [1087-1589]

Well am, am most Muslims in northern Nigeria are ardent followers of their leaders or scholars. I would say in this context and it is what their Islamic scholars preach to them that they take into action and most of our scholars nowadays are having diverse views on how or the nature of Islam. So basically, I think yes, the teachers in northern Nigeria, the Islamic teachers are the ones sending the wrong message across and that is why most people in the northern Nigeria are, you understand.

KN10 [755-1324]

I can agree but I can also say disagree because, you see, in your statement you mentioned more Muslim. You can-more Muslims, I can't agree, I disagree that more Muslims are getting involved but ah people, I can say people, if you just ah ah eliminate the some, people are getting involved in ah Islamic militancy in northern part of the country because ah some certain reasons like they lack the knowledge of Islam. And also lack of poverty. They don't have anything to do, so someone can easily snatch their mind and for them to have the opinion of getting involved.

KN11 [659-834]

Yes, I agree to some extent, some people engage themselves in militant activities as you have said maybe some are ignorant of the Islam or what the Islam means actually, yes.

KN12 [630-878]

Well, I don't agree with this because Muslims would never engage in militant activities because it is only some people that are hiding under the shadow of Islam that are so called Muslim that are getting themselves in those activities, that is it.

KN13 [1170-1185]

I do not agree.

KN14 [566-834]

Yes ah some Muslims of course engage ah, engage in doing these things, but what is happening is because of the ah unemployment and misunderstanding of Islam because some misunderstood Islam upside-down they are doing things without the actual knowledge of the Islam.

KN15 [1079-1576]

Yah, some people, you know, are often involve in militant activities, I agree yah and ah my reason, you know, is that in the northern part of Nigeria you know in a place like, let me say Maiduguri that's Borno state and Yobe state that is where the situation, you know, is somehow critical or worst. So the reason is that what is fuelling the situation there is that illiteracy and poverty is highly, you know, hitting the affected states, like I mentioned earlier, so its illiteracy and poverty.

KN16 [690-832]

Well, I disagree because true Muslims will not engage into such activities; it is only some people that are hiding under the shadow of Islam.

KN17 [1670-1674]

No.

KN18 [1860-3124]

Well militant militancy activities if you say more Muslims are engaging in engaging in militancy activities or militant activities, I don't know how scientific this statement is, if it is a scientific study that reveal that there are justifications for the study, there are facts, there are statistical figures which reveals that you could say yes but just by mere saying if it is because of the Islamic state militancy or the boko haram militancy that we will conclude that people are engaging in militancy, Islamic militancy then we will say, we would say it is unscientific because it did not look at Islamic militancy from a wider scope, because what of the Faq rebel group are they not militant group? That is the most serving longest serving rebel group in the world, they are militants. There is also the eh the ETA movement in in Spain the IRA in England, are they not militant? Were they not even more heinous, more catastrophic than even the present day eh eh boko haram they were engaging in all sorts of, all sorts of militant activities so if it is a clear study of all conflicts and wars which reveals that Muslims are engaging in, which I did not do that study then I will accept then because it is a study a scientific study which could be verified

KN18 [3191-3217]

I did not agree with that.

KN19 [1864-2015]

Eh actually, looking at the recent problems ah within the environment I think it's true that majority of people are getting involved and in militancy.

KN19 [2115-2454]

Uh. Because ah majority of the insurgencies and problem of economic and political instability are common in the northern region, so as a result of this, probably to protect the lives and the properties of the people of the northern region, one of the major aim why the majority of people in the northern region are involving in militancy.

KN20 [645-955]

Eh to some extent yah, some Muslims are getting into militant activities because of the the the level of insecurity that is going on in the country generally, so everybody is forced to protect his or herself so that's why people think as if eh Muslims are engaging in terrorism or terrorist activities.

KN20 [1062-1174]

No it is a global issue. It is not as if it is related to only the Islamic world or the Muslims world alone.

KN21 [846-886]

Oh yes Muslims are getting involved in

KN21 [1007-1155]

Muslims are getting involved in militant activities because they believe that is the only way they could prevent western influence, you understand.

KN21 [1191-1229]

Oh yes even in the northern Nigeria.

KN22 [1378-1406]

Yes, I agree to this fact,

KN22 [1508-2302]

There are lots of factors that actually lead to this phenomenon, ah because when we look at it critically from the angle of the politics in Nigeria, we will see that we are yet to have a kind of responsible and representative of government. When I say a responsible government, a government that will ah adhere to the people's yearning and aspiration, a government that would provide sound education, a government that would provide kind of job for the teeming youth. So therefore, as a result of this, youths are carrying arms in order to protest, in order to riot for their right because most of Nigeria or as said by one of the NDP reports, over 30% sorry over 70% of Nigerians are living below the poverty line, and this is as a result of lack of responsible representative government. So...

KN23 [1338-1350]

Yah I agree

KN23 [1471-1637]

In northern Nigeria there are lots of factors contributing to Islamic militancy. We have lack of education in both western and Islamic knowledge itself and poverty.

KN24 [1003-1022]

No. I don't agree

KN25 [1871-1948]

Yes I think more Muslims are getting involved in the militancy, yes I agree.

KN25 [2068-2816]

Well northern part of Nigeria happens to be a place where Islamic knowledge schools or Islamic schools are more. So here in the north there are different kinds of teachers, Islamic teachers and each holds his opinion different from the other. So I think basically the more reason why some Muslims are getting more involved is lack of understanding, you understand, they hold different opinions, they hold different opinions and most of the scholars, most of the students, they are highly obedient to their scholars in northern part of Nigeria that is why if anything happens if the leader decides to go or become a militant today his subjects or followers, no not subjects, his scholars under him they will also follow him towards that direction.

KN26 [915-1328]

Well like I said earlier on it is largely a recent phenomenon to be frank with you if you are talking from the global perspective since the September 11th the twin tower attack in the US, you know this whole concept of terrorism, extremism and the rest came to light that is speaking Nigeria to some extent yes it is something that is practical yes the present insurgency is the testimony towards that direction.

KN26 [1451-1694]

Well this is actually as a result of a conglomeration of factors both within Islam as practiced in Nigeria and also Islam as practiced outside Nigeria viz-a-viz also some certain political, social and economic factors within the Nigeria state.

KN27 [786-1091]

Well I should say more Muslims do indulge in militancy activities because in the recent times when we look into, in recent times, we can see that there are more Islamic extremists that have put Islamic preachings in place but those preachings, let me say, they are based on sentiments. That is why yes.

KN27 [1188-1383]

Well I should say the main reason why more Muslims get involved in militant activities in northern Nigeria is the lack of not only exposure but the lack of Islamic orientation is also inclusive.

KN28 [696-723]

Yes I agree to some extent

KN28 [845-1010]

Taking a look at a clear issue like that of the Hisba, we could just say it is or a semi military work because it is just an assignment to Islamic guidance rather.

KN30 [844-857]

No I don't

KN31 [1213-1241]

I quite disagree with that

KN32 [539-542]

No

KN33 [593-660]

Yes I agree and this is because of different perceptions of Islam.

KN34 [489-525]

To some certain extend I may agree.

KN34 [636-674]

Actually I attribute it to injustice.

KN35. [1488-1573]

Yah the question is yes and it cannot be answered through yes or no question but yes.

KN35 [1708-1767]

The reason may be that they feel they are being oppressed.

KN36 [804-811]

Agree

KN36 [936-1153]

Why more Muslims are getting involved in militancy is that is from those that are imparting the knowledge of Islam and some people do not allow their people to get the exact thing that is inside the tenets of Islam.

KN37. [773-871]

I cannot say either but I think for the purpose of this interview let me just say I don't agree.

KN38 [349-369]

I totally disagree.

KN38 [567-578]

Politics

KN39 [578-591]

No actually.

KN40 [589-826]

I disagree with that because I believe people that normally involve or people are getting involved in their militant activities through their leadership as in through their mallam because of their misunderstanding of preaching to them.

KN41 [931-1025]

I agree and on the view that they neither want to lag behind nor authorized by non-Muslims

KN42 [828-1332]

I agree but it is lack of what you call ehm, they don't have any, they don't have orientation to the peaceful side of Islam everybody believes their idea should be mixed to what Islamic is actually saying and there is no peace, there is no tolerance and there is no understanding of Islamic or the real Islamic perspective. What is Islam saying for you to do, what you shouldn't do and people are actually-some know but they misinterpret what things are actually said in or Islamic doctrines are saying.

KN43 [1289-1737]

I don't agree with this ah notion. It is another conspiracy against Islam and the Muslims. What are their yardsticks that this people use the measure whether Muslims are getting involved in conflicts and in violence? How sure are we that people you know get involved in all this kind of, you know, approach the chaos and the conflicts are Muslims? We don't know their identities. We are only assuming. So as far as I am concerned this is not true.

KN44 [923-1024]

I wouldn't like to commit myself. I don't have the statistic on that. So I cannot really answer it.

KN45 [692-1045]

Yes, I can say I agree to some extent because it is a fact on the ground and part of the reason, to me, is the way Islam is being thought to some people. A different interpretation of Islam, if you like, a radical interpretation of Islam may be part of the reason that cause this, yes but it is not ehm part of the moderate Islam or Sunni Islam, yes.

KN46 [1558-2460]

Well, ah I think it is true the assertion that Muslims are getting involved in militant activities. Its true because this is what we are going through now and I think there are a number of reasons, there is a number of reasons one of which is that some of the preachers are, are doing their preachings in a way that, I mean in a wrong way, the preachers. I hold the preachers responsible for ahh leading the youths toward the militancy because ahh they tell them what is not ahh in their interest because they want to exercise control over them. So they knew that youth by their nature are agitant, so they play on that feelings of the youth ahh some of them, not all of them. Some do it out of ignorance, even the preachers, some of them you can ahh say that about them, but some are not doing it ah out of ignorance, they are doing it deliberately to achieve their ah worldly ah some worldly gains.

KN47 [962-1956]

Yes this is a clear indication that there is a clear indication that ah more Muslims are becoming engaged into ah activities of ahh they are, they are engage getting involve into militant activities in northern Nigeria, yah this is just the order of it, you see we have seen the cases of Boko Haram in Maiduguri, Adamawa and Yobe, you know, most especially in the ahh north east and then we have seen the spread of the activities in Kano and other towns. So we can simply see that what has began in in 2007 with few number of people who were fighters then, then today we see that the activities is growing up to the extent that they can confiscate a whole territory, you know, a particular territory in Borno that is why we can say that yes there is increase involvement of the number of people in the activities, you know, in northern Nigeria. But according to the reason for the reason, you know, I can simply say there is lack of education; there is low economic productivity in the region.

KN48 [927-973]

I disagree or should I give any reason to that

KN49 [1144-1600]

Actually I think, it has to do with the concept of how people feel. People feel they are being marginalized ahh their rights are being-not catered for and I think they feel they are being very, very much oppressed. So there is a feeling of disaffection and dissatisfaction and people explore avenues of getting what they feel is theirs and if they fail to get it, they go into conflict, they go into armed struggle to get what they feel is rightly theirs.

KN50 [741-1070]

Actually I can't say more Muslims are getting involved but in the other hand I can say it is the both two side, both the Christian and the Muslims are getting involved, why because some are misunderstanding the word Islam for Muslims so why because we don't know their identity so I can't say more Muslims are getting involved.

KN51 [1114-2244]

We can't say more people, what we must say is a number of youths are getting involved in militant activities. This is because of the frustration in which they find themselves. A number of them are not properly taught about Islam and Islamic teachings and there are some confused and self acclaimed ulama who interpret or misinterpret the text of the Qur'an or Hadith to this youth which they understand to mean militant activities. You see one problem which we must understand is this. There is a difference between Muslim scholars who are truly learned and who are half baked or even ignorant Muslims who claim to be Muslims, learned ulama. So most of the problems we are facing today is emanating from those ill informed Ulama. The people who are not properly thought in Islamic perspective, they are not properly guided in Islamic teachings and they are not in the true ahm perspective of the Islamic teachings because of this a number of them involve in militancy or militant activities in northern Nigeria. But most of the learned Muslims and their followers that constitute the vast majority don't participate in that one.

KN52 [1218-1682]

Well in northern Nigeria I don't want to believe that more Muslims are getting involved in Islamic militancy because if you are referring to boko haram, I think it is very difficult for you to say that people from northern Nigeria are involved in that because nobody can tell you precisely what the identities of those involved in boko haram involved in boko haram are. So I wouldn't agree that ah more people are involved in Islamic militancy in northern Nigeria

KN53 [997-1769]

In northern-Nigeria presently, actually I can agree on one condition, I myself I am a Muslim not from this northern land, I am born and brought up in this northern land and the perception of this religion to some people in this area is quite different to my own understanding. Some people in this Northern Land they don't take the Holy Qur'an as in to follow it the normal way. Their own perception of joining this Islamic militancy is that they want to reform the religion the way it is expected to be, but Annab Muhammad (SAW) said before we can worship him we should understand everything that is expected to know before serving, him but here in the northern part of Nigeria, their perception is not straight forward let me just say its positive that is just the fact

KN54 [538-546]

No, no.

KN55 [659-678]

No I do not agree

KN56 [740-1105]

Actually I don't agree, but I can't deny everybody his right to believe what he believes. We have individual differences and everyone has the right to believe what he believes but for me I don't believe that Muslims are getting involved in militant activities. It is only that some people hiding under the name of Islam and Muslims are perpetrating this conflict.

KN57 [849-1205]

Of course I agree with this, of course I agree with this yes. You see what happened is there is what we call lack of knowledge and proper orientation or proper socialization from our people. This makes them to be involved in whatever system comes to them without asking or knowing what does that mean, what is the content of the doctrine of that system.

KN58 [2051-2066]

No I disagree

KN58 [2135-3270]

I disagreed because of the fact, as I said earlier, there is no such thing as Islamism. There is no such thing as Islamic fundamentalism or Islamic militancy. What happened is that, what is happening or what is obtainable in other parts of the world either in the Middle East or in Europe and Asia is that some people would now impinge on Muslims and then expect Muslims not to retaliate back. It is not possible. Islam is at peace with you if you are at peace with it. If you want conflict, yah Islam is ready to face you. So the problem or the issues of this militancy in Northern Nigeria is a fallacy. It is a creation of the west. Western countries are trying to delude people of the original teachings of Islam thereby instigating them to now start attacking people. You don't expect a true Muslim to go and put bombs in a Mosque. You don't expect a true Muslim to go and dynamite a Church. You don't expect a true Muslim to go and kill people incessantly without any genuine reason. Those are not true Muslims. I don't know which religion they belong to as far as I am concerned, but what I believe is that they are not Muslims.

KN59 [756-942]

Actually I don't agree with that, it is just a perception that most Islamic people engage themselves in militant activity, but to me, I strongly disagree with that perception actually.

KN60 [1046-1569]

It is a known fact that many Muslims are joining this act of militancy and you are saying why do I agree? It is an open something, as I have said, and you can see many things, many factors are used as pull factors that are dragging this youths especially the youths as the category of people that are joining this act of militancy. They use money, they use influence, they give them weapons. These are some of the reasons and some of the factors that are pulling this people toward involvement in this act of militancy.

KN61 [550-573]

No, I quite not agree.

KN62 [1764-2080]

No, I don't believe in that, I don't agree, I disagree ah that ah more Muslims are getting involved in militant activities. I believe all the people that are being ah somehow subscribing to this very militancy or militant activities eh I think I believe that they are not true Muslims. yah I will explain that later

KN63 [1269-2080]

Ehh, really I can't deny that even if you are the one that listen to international news you must have heard of something like that. ISIS, boko haram ,whatever, whatever, and most of them do inclined that maybe they are fighting for Islam or maybe they are fighting jihad, but really to me all these things doesn't exist in Islam. They are just using that as a yardstick or maybe they are just using that as to cover up huh, as a cover up. There is nothing like that. Islam doesn't preach violence, doesn't preach terrorism, huh. They are only using that as a cover up and such thing doesn't exist in Islam. If they really have the adequate knowledge of Islam, they will never go on to kill lives without reasons or you know they can't, they can't take arms to be killing innocent people, something like that.

KN64 [1006-1026]

Hmm, I agree, hmm.

KN64 [1152-2130]

I agree, but there is something I want to add here. Muslims, if you say Muslims are getting involved in militant activities, it is not only Muslims that involve, this is the reason why I say I agree. I agree because there are Muslims who are taking arms and do something but we do not say this is ah Islam permit them to do this, because you take arms and do what you like, is not Islam that permit you do it, but you can say it is your own, by your own sake you did it, not by Islam or for the sake of Muslims. Eh because there are some group of people, many group of people who are taking arms and do whatever they like in Nigeria, therefore, you will not say only Muslims are taking arms because it is a problem of-is a general problem in Nigeria. Ehn you know this ko? It is a general problem, not only Muslims. Muslims are taking arms, it is not only Muslims even the non-Muslims are taking arms to kill people. Therefore, this is a problem, a general problem in Nigeria.

KN65 [1327-1514]

I agree that the yes, in my own opinion, more Muslim in these days and in our contemporary society are becoming more military, are involving in some military activities, yes I believe.

KN65 [1629-2181]

It is for two things, one is to get, gain ah political power, you understand, so in order for you to become somebody in our society now or for your voice to be heard, you have to resolve into violence, some kind of violence, you understand. So that is why you see the issue of militancy is becoming more prominent within our contemporary society. And ah secondly again is because of our lack or inadequate informed knowledge, inadequate informed knowledge. Those are the two factors that leading to more militancy in the northern part of Nigeria, yes.

KN66 [707-719]

I disagree.

KN66 [913-1065]

The reasons between the instability between the Muslim and the non-Muslims in the north is simply conspiracy, to my understanding, is just conspiracy.

KN67 [563-594]

Well eh I think I don't agree.

KN68 [526-541]

I disagree.

KN69 [1416-2264]

No. I disagree with these assertions because Muslims are expected to have knowledgeable, knowledgeable in the sense that for a Muslim to be a true Muslim he accepted to see that he understand the principle of Islam and this could only be possible by subjecting himself to Islamic school which means that in another sense we could say that this assertion could be true in the sense that nowadays you find out that, that more Muslims are involving themselves into this activities because of the fact that Islam is a religion whereby a Muslim is expected to learn Qur'an and Sunna in accordance with interpretation of the prophet Muhammad (SAW), but the problem is that nowadays Muslims use to feel that understanding of Qur'an and Sunna based on their own analogy is suffice for them that is the reason why they get involved into this activities.

KN70 [1188-1202]

Yah, I agree.

KN70 [1330-1997]

Well in the case of Boko haram, we discover that ahm the substantial number of youths who are involved in that act of violence we cannot deny the fact that they are not increasing or decreasing, but in all sincerity, they are increasing in number if not because they are increasing, how on earth will you take a struggle between a whole state and some group of Militia or some group of people who are discontented with the arrangement of the Federal Republic of Nigeria who are taking arms to fight against that government. I mean looking at the, considering the numbers of years it will really convince you that they are in the increase and they are growing stronger

KN71 [1825-2920]

Well it depends on how we look at it, because if you say, I believe some are getting involved, but many no. The majority are not getting involved, but you as you can see, I don't know whether you can say, if you look at the Nigeria society in particular and most especially the northern part of the country where we have the majority who are Muslims and some minority who are non-Muslim inhabitants, eh habitant too, so you find that like in places of Kaduna, Jos, ahh some part of southern Kaduna, some part of Bauchi like say Tafawa Balewa and some other places like that, you will, you will at times it is communal classes that people will call Islamic militancy because maybe, he maybe because the attacking party are non-Muslims put together, so and the ones attacked are Muslims. So instead of us to understand the initial root of the cause, we say is Islam and at the end, they would say Islamic, maybe the Muslim or the Muslim band or whatever are attacking the non-Muslims and that thing is not many people that are getting involved, but definitely it use to happen here and there.

KN71 [3051-3800]

Yes, too many factors has to be considered. One is the total ignorance of the religion, both two religions that is both Islam from the Muslim sides and the Christianity. One is this issue of divide and rule by the politicians and the other I believe is the inability of the state, I mean Nigerian state to mobilize or to orientate each citizens that we are destined to live as one nation and Allah in his eternal mercy put it that definitely some of us must be Muslims, some of us must be non-Muslims, so these three factors particularly are the main reasons behind or whatever you call Islamic militancy. Ignorance of the religion, the bad rule of the politicians and then of course, lack of orientation and three if I should add, that is poverty.

KN72 [2688-2739]

I can't agree with that, I can't agree with that.

KN72 [2761-2857]

but because it is not only the Muslims that engage in militant activities in northern Nigeria.

KN72 [2962-3403]

Okay, the Muslims that participated in militancy most of them are not well known Islamic practices. They mislead what Islam means at all. Some of them they are not to even go to the school, the primary even in primary that is the preliminaries eh principles of Islam they were missing unto them that is why they engage in militancy, but the true speaking the well known Muslims cannot engage in militancy activities. That is the sincerity.

KN73 [1355-1931]

Eeh, I don't really agree that more Muslims are involved in militant activities. My reason is that this militancy we are now seeing is some are claiming that they are Muslim and they are not. As it has happens or if you are really current, you will find that some Christians were involved in these activities and even those who are claim that they are the heads by mere looking and the activities are really contrary to Islamic practice and there is no really any Hadith or any verse of the Qur'an or ah any practice of khulafa that shows them this way of militancy in Islam.

KN74 [2485-4425]

Okay, these things we can look at it in a two different dimensions because the nature or the structure of the questions how it looks like. First of all the question starts, the question were bold in what, in a wide range, wide in the conclusion of the question is restricted within the northern Nigeria, and generally if we are looking at the opinion that more Muslim are getting involved in the world, in globally, in the globe, in globally. The problem is that there are many factors that generalized this kind of activities because most of the Muslim or the Muslim world ah find themselves in a certain situation where whenever you find a Muslim, you find out that there is a poverty and illiteracy there, this is what is reflected in our Nigeria, in our northern Nigeria. Let me give you an example now. Many things had happen in Nigeria and if you look at the places in which that incidences are happening is a places where there is high level of eh poverty and illiteracy because we know that in the northern Nigeria there is North East where a lot of things happen, but if you look at the genesis of that crisis or the factors that influence such kind of crisis you find out that there is a lot of poverty and illiteracy because most of the youths that were living there, they have nothing to do for their life or for their activities. Therefore, such kinds of things are things that affect the involvement of youth in such kind of militant activities, but the reason behind that is that we know that there is something of, there is a lot of things that use to initiate or to create in the people to make them to change their activities whether within ehh poverty or illiteracy or something like that. I think this is the thing that, but the conclusion is that, the word that I can use short and precise to show that the Muslims are getting involved in this kind of activities is just two things, poverty and illiteracy, yes.

KN74 [4618-5916]

Okay, ehh previously I have answered the question about the, the involvement of ehh Muslims in northern Nigeria about the militancy. Let me give you an example before I start with this question, if you can remember during prophet Muhammad (SAW,) he always trying to show his companion that make sure that you have something for you to ahh make something authentic that will help you in your life. There is one of his yes, therefore if you look at the teaching of Prophet Muhammad (SAW) to his companions in always try to show them how they are depend on their selves, I think there is one, there is one day that one of his companion come to him and ask him about something that he can do for his life, he just gave him a rope and an axe and ask him to go to the bush to cut the sticks and take them to market in order to sell them for him ahh to solve his problem. Now we are talking about ahh you say can you repeat the question for me?

KN75 [4452-6388]

Yes, I agree that more Muslims are getting involved in the militant activities because Islam you see today is not everybody you see that are Muslims yah, among the Muslim inside, there are nominal Muslim, they are just a Muslim by mouth, but in heart they are not a Muslim. They are Muslim in tongue, in practice they are not a Muslims. Why in the northern Nigerian things are involved? There are three concepts, six concept that man need to look into. First and foremost you look at the religious sects in the northern Nigeria or in Nigeria in particular. We have the Qadiriyya, the Tijjaniyya, the Izala, the Shi'a and then al-Qur'aniyun. You find between the Qadiriyya, the Izala and then the Tujjaniyya, we have some little element of religious gathering, assembly, little element of religious assembly maybe from intermarriage, we enter the same mosque and other things, but three of them they are very dangerous to the Muslims, but those are the fundamental problem that we are facing in the northern Nigeria. First and foremost, the Shi'ites who say that according to their doctrine, anybody who is not a Shi'a member is a kafir, his blood is allowed to be killed. Secondly, we have Ahmadiyya who took Ahmad Gulam as the last prophet, not Prophet Muhammad (SAW), Kuma anybody who is not part of their member, to kill him is not haram. Kuma the Al-Qura'niyu which we use to call the kalakatum that they believe in the Qur'an nothing like believe in the hadith of the prophet (SAW), the saying of the prophet (SAW). So those are the three sects among the Muslims, they are dangerous to the Muslim themselves. That is why the western orientalist or the western people do, western Euro-Christians, use this advantage to foresee Nigeria that there is a problem in Nigeria led to, since there is no cooperation between the Muslims, let us use some sects to destabilize and disorganize the religion of Islam in Nigeria. You understand.

KN76 [1623-2994]

Well actually I believe ahh more Muslims are getting involved in militant activities in northern Nigeria for a number of reasons. Well there are many reasons actually, some are social, some are economic and ahh when we talk of social reasons, we talk of the level of education of the people, the exposure about the religion itself. We can say there is a high level of ignorance among the teachings of Islam and the understanding of Islam and even in the understanding of what is an Islamic state. So that way I can say that many people are ignorant about it and many people are also ignorant about the modern setting of modern ahh nation state and how they keep up and ahh I can say that ahh actually the reason about this militancy can be traced to 70's when there was Islamic revolution in Iran. So as a result of that, it has some spill over all over the Muslim world. Many people come to see it as an opportunity for Muslims to establish states, to establish authorities where Muslims are in majority. So that one led to brotherhood movement in northern Nigeria by El-Zak zaky and ahh later on it transform ahh there was a problem of ahh ideology even within that group. The result of that was what led to Shi'a and Sunni. The Shi'ites took to their own path and the Sunnis also adopted their own methods and procedures with regard to establishing an Islamic state.

KN77 [3978-9649]

Alhamdulillah ahh indeed in this very question that some more Muslims are indeed engaging or participating in militancy in this very part of the country where we are living in. it is somehow, I can agree with it somehow and on the other hand I disagree with it. Why, because as we are all hearing or we are all experiencing or seeing practically what is going on in this very part of the country. Those people that are carrying arms and ammunition under the umbrella of Islam, in reality they are not indeed true Muslims, they are not true Muslims why, because a Muslim, a Muslim or a true Muslim is whoever testify that there is not God but Allah and that prophet (SAW) is the messenger of Allah and all his wellbeing, all his affairs, all his actions and inactions must be in line with the teachings of the prophet (SAW) and at the same time the teachings of the holy Qur'an which was revealed to the prophet (SAW). So those people that are carrying arms and ammunitions commonly known as Boko-haram, they are indeed contradicting the teachings of Islam, why, because all their actions, all they, the way in which they attack is indeed contradictory to the regulations of Allah and also the practical teachings of the prophet (SAW) because in history or in the Islamic history we learnt prophet (SAW) spent thirteen years in Mecca suffering, he has been tortured, his companions were tortured, they were persecuted, they were tribulated, all sort of harassing, killing, it happened to them, but prophet (SAW) was exercising patience and at the same time calling upon his companions to continue exercise patience up to the time in which he was given an authority by Allah (SAW) to migrate to the holy city of Medina. After his migration to the holy city of Medina, those pagans of Mecca continue attacking the Muslims at the outskirts of Medina. As a result of that, Allah (SBUH) gave the prophet (SAW) an authority to fight back, to retaliate so that they can regain their rights and freedom as human beings. Do you understand? So at the same time prophet (SAW) commanded the Muslims, commanded the Muslims as Allah (SAW) stated in the holy Qur'an (he recites a verse of the Quran) what the verse is saying is that those that were being transgressed by their enemies, they are giving authority to fight back so that they can regain back the authority. So prophet (SAW) took some majors so that he can be able to regain back the rights and freedom of the Muslims while they are there in Medina. So as a result of that, it happens that prophet (SAW) took some of his companions about 313 in number as he had that the Meccan caravan are coming back from Syria from their business engagement and on their way back to Mecca, they must pass across Medina. So he said, commanding his companions that they to go to the plain of Badr to plan and ambush against the caravan of Mecca. He said his aim, his primary aim, as stated by the scholars of Islam, was not to fight the Meccans, but two things or three. First to make the Meccans to know that yes Muslims are human beings, they have rights and they must be respected. This is number one. Number two, to regain back part of the loss which the Muslim suffered because those pagans of Mecca do attack some villages outside the city of Medina and they will take away or loot their wealth, they run away with it, so prophet (SAW) planned to attack that given caravan, but at the same time, it was unfortunate, the leader of the caravan diverted his way, instead of him to pass across Medina, he diverted his way to a far distance to Mecca and at the same time he wrote a letter, you should be aware you the people of Mecca that Muhammad is planning to attack your caravan. So the letter was sent, you understand, so you see this is how Islam is. Whenever Muslims were being tortured, their freedom is being taken from them, there is an appropriate way in which they can follow to regain back their rights and freedom. Do you understand? But for somebody who claims to be a Muslim, because it is a claim, claim to be a Muslim, to be attacking both the Muslims and non-Muslims and at the same time to be regarding them as unbelievers, such is not an Islamic idea. It is indeed contradictory to the teachings of Islam because prophet (SAW), there are different hadiths in which he clearly showed us, he showed that Islam is a religion of peace, is a religion of simplicity, do you understand? He even said in one of the hadith that a prostitute, a prostitute was granted to the hell fire ahh was granted to the kingdom of God because she fetched water to a dog, a dog, just an ordinary animal. That given prostitute was thirsty, she went and fetched water to take, to consume and after that she came up from the Well, she said dog, the dog was also suffering from thirst, so she decided to fetch the water for the dog and give it to it, so prophet (SAW) told us that, that given prostitute was granted to the kingdom of God because of the same pity she showed to the dog. And at the same time a given woman who tied a cat, she has a cat, and tied the cat, she didn't allow the cat to go out and find its food, she tied it, she did not give it its food until the cat died. So prophet (SAW) said that that woman will dwell in the hell fire because of the way she maltreated a cat. So how can such injunctions from the holy prophet (SAW) showing us how Islam is given even rights to animals, giving rights to animals, how can such or a person who proclaims to be a Muslim be acting contradicting to this very teaching? You see, it is not Islam, it just a conspiracy which was planned, established to tarnish the image of Islam yes.

KN78 [1799-3351]

Hmm, well it is true, it is true, but again ahh I would have a problem, let me say this with all honesty. We employ certain terms with those terms having what we call barbed wire meaning. I think we have to be very careful in using those terms. They are essentially modern in the usage and of course it is replete with quite number of biased opinion by them. But as I said, for the sake of conversations, for the sake of convenience of these conversations, well let us agree, there are a lot of people, there are numbers of people who are really engaged into or involved in militant activities these days. That I agree with and ah well I think there is no one way explanation as to why people are involved are really in militant activities just as there are other factors you would like to take into consideration in explaining why, but for me, I think one, there is consciousness to have trying to assert political identity from certain quarters, there is certain group of Muslims who believe that an ideal Muslims, a conscious Muslim should live by Islamic ideas. This is very important that we have to understand it and of course the colonial legacy has left no choice to people who have that consciousness than to really participate in available options to really re-assert their political identity in all spheres of their human activities. That I agree and on the other hand, we have economic reasons. On the other hand, we have ignorance, misinterpretation of the religion itself out of poverty, quite a number of things are expected to happen.

KN79 [1328-1639]

The first question is I agree with this idea and the reason people involve in militant activities for me ahh is for many reasons, the first one is poverty, ignorance, imported ideology, poor democratic leaders, politics, preaching differences, retaliation, and political domination and many more reasons.

KN80 [1895-1928]

So I disagree with this notion.

KN81 [1678-2043]

Hmm I can agree with you, but ahh I really agree Muslim involves into militant activities in northern Nigeria because they misinterpreted the fundamental teaching of Islam. Then also there are many factors that cause this problem such ahh such factors include one, unemployment by some youths, then second, poverty among the humanity and illiteracy and the rest.

KN82 [1885-2570]

I agree that some Muslims or more Muslims are getting involve in militant activities for the following reasons; number one, misperception or ignorance about the religion itself because of the discrepancies or the misunderstanding or misconception we have, the sects that exist within the religion that compel people to take the teachings of Islam different from where it is, different from how it supposed to be. In that case you find out that the verses of holy Qur'an or the provisions of traditions of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) are being translated from their original content, so in that case some may perceive that it is compulsory or it is necessary to engage into such acts.

KN83 [1474-1697]

Ahh honestly I disagree. A real Muslim cannot engage in any militant activities, but only corrupted Muslims can involve. I think this is a struggle, I think this struggle is an Islamic pure Muslim cannot do this.

KN84 [2039-2054]

Yes I do agree

KN84 [2181-2443]

Yes most of the Muslims engage in the struggle because of the religious ignorance and inability of government to provide basic necessity to all Muslims. Most of the people are what, are jobless no employment, people must struggle to do what, to earn their living

KN85 [776-1022]

Well actually yes, there are instances in which ahh many Muslims are getting involved in militancy and ahh one of the reasons is misconception of het teaching and principle of Islamic most of them are misguided and mislead into such activities.

ZA1 [735-1461]

You have two questions. Now you say that part involving Muslims that is you are just talking about the global one. And secondly you are talking about the northern one. Now if you are talking about that more Muslims are involved in this kind of crisis, so there is a certain question that a research sir should ask himself. One, we have problem now in central Africa, they are not Muslims. We have problems that happen in Rwanda, are they Muslims? We have IRA in northern AHH in London UK, are they Muslims? So on the issue in the northern Nigeria, definitely what the researcher come about that the problem is purely political. Some politicians just hide under Islam just to achieve their aims, but not anything like Islam.

ZA2 [877-1012]

No, it is no. I disagree because the leader does not teach anything that deals with em act of peace keeping, so it is never accepted.

ZA3 [920-2438]

Emm the word militancy could be define according to the author hmm who may define what, is not all that is termed militancy could actually be militancy, but emm as regard this question pertaining to the northern Nigeria. Islam is religion of peace and had always preached peace. if you see a Muslim that emm is showing the signs of militancy, you should check out. First of all it may be as a result, because Islam too does not permit cheats and does not allow one to be cheated upon, so in a situation where there is injustice meted out to Muslim and he decides to react in other to fight whom is demand, so some other places may term it as militancy, but is not actually, is actually fighting for you right or for the right of an individual. And the militancy as they, you have asked concerning the northern Nigeria, northern Nigeria has been known to be very peaceful all this while, it is served as accommodating, is the most accommodating region of the country where you will see virtually all tribes, all races from other part of the country come and comfortably will be allocated land settle and build, but of recent all this emm this some signs have shown that if some of our few individuals that find themselves here especially the southern eastern part of Nigeria are not allowed to, you cannot identify well with your religion and maybe as a result of reprisal attacks, the northern part of the country may have developed that too and also aversion to Christianity which ordinarily before was not in place.

ZA4 [2210-7258]

Yes, you know emm with some of the guidelines we receive from the prophet Muhammad (SAW) there is going to be the signs of the last day that if the last day is approaching there are going to be signs that will tell you this are the signs that you will know that yawmal Kiyama the day of judgment is closer. He said one of the greatest fitna that we are going to be experiencing, calamities and problems that we are going to be experiencing, first of all, you will get different types of understanding, different types of ideologies, ideology from those that are claiming that they understand the Qur'an, they understand the Sunna, but they are understanding this thing wrongly because the way they understand, you know the Qur'an is the word of Allah, so there is no how you can understand the meaning of the Qur'an or the interpretation of the Qur'an unless you have the total guidelines of the prophet Muhammad (SAW). That is why he is saying that the Qur'an is there, but the best person that understand the Qur'an is he that they reveal the Qur'an to that is prophet Muhammad (SAW) and the only way because Qur'an is metaphorical, there is a language that we have ayas in the Qur'an that we call muhikimat, aya that is very simple everyone can understand it. And we also have ayas that we call Mutashabihat you think is this and it is not unless you have to get the guidelines and also the directive and explanation from the Sunna and prophet Muhammad. So prophet says it is one of the signs of the last day that different type of people, people that will call themselves Muslims, they will be getting wrong ideologies, ideology, understanding from the concept of the Qur'an and why because they neglect the principles and the guidelines in terms of how you scan understand the Qur'an and how you can interpret the Qur'an. And most of these problems, most of these Muslims, most of them, they are going to be ignorant, they don't have deep knowledge. Some of them will be disturbed by youthful exuberance, you understand, higher zeal and higher determination without the knowledge and also the procedure to do it because they know that they have feet, they have the power, they don't have that enough understanding, guidelines of the Qur'an and they don't even have some good attitudes and also behaviors. So they tend to understand this Qur'an negatively. So without you getting the guidelines from the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) you can just sit alone and buy, if you go out, you can buy any, take up any Islamic book, any book that you are reading on your own, you will be thinking that you have the knowledge or you can interpret Islam on your own. So you not going to the scholars so great scholars that we are having that are very deep in knowledge, you can just buy text book alone with also internet, you are exposed to the technological world, what you listen in the internet what you can browse, you just thought this is how people, especially we they northerners here we have different types of scholars you are exposed to internet, you are exposed to all these English books and all that. So there is no how you can understand the truth aspect of this Islam, is when you have to get your scholar that is very deep in knowledge, everyone knows about it, he is very kind in behavior, he does not, he does not promote extremism, you understand, he has that good concept, good relationship with people, you understand, and also good understanding of the Qur'an, so because of youthful exuberance that is one of the reason. Two, they don't have deep knowledge about the Qur'an and Sunna. Three, arrogance, you understand, arrogance, and four, [they are they think they are they have every power] yes arrogance, they can manipulate, they can do anything they want to do, and again fourth, bad scholars that are giving them this ideology because if you have a bad scholar that is misinterpreting the revelations of the Qur'an and also the Sunna, giving this ideology to the youths, you know, it causes a very big problem. So extremism in Islam is something that prophet Muhammad is against. Up to one of that that they said whosoever made this Islam to be a very heavy thing, there is no how we can compete that day will be heavy for him. Islam is very simple and if you make it very heavy you they are not going to be successful at all because you find it you find it very difficult, you understand, and again anything that you are doing that warrant the killing of people, you understand, giving, making life miserable for even those that do not believe, painting Islam as a very evil religion, rebellious religion, all this things are against the teaching of the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW). That is why I use word of the Qur'an that is saying (he recites verse of the Qur'an) Allah is willing to make this Islam easy for you, he is not willing to make this Islam a burden for you and he doesn't what to paint this Islam as an evil thing, but everyone should appreciate Islam with its conduct and behavior and doctrine.

ZA5 [1418-2734]

Thank you very much, this is a very interesting question emm as you can see in Nigeria today when you say Islam, if you say Islam some people misunderstand what is really Islam, you understand. Why people are involved into all this problem, if you look at the issue of boko haram today, they will say that it is Islam, but to me what is happening is un-Islamic, is un-Islamic because is not the way Islam lay down the rules and regulations, you understand, and is not the way of Islam. Ehn toh because of that amm I don't think we-I disagree that people involve in militancy in Islam, you understand. Sorry, I can like, what really contribute to what you just said it just most of the-we have some half baked Ulama. Who are those Ulamas am talking about? Those are the scholars eh everybody wants to be a scholar now, you understand, everybody want to be a scholar and have followers. That is why people are involving in all those militancy, is just like me and you, today if I say that I don't have money and I will have back up from government or some other people outside and I will organize crowd, do some other things eh. If you look at the rate in which Shi'a is growing in Nigeria, is very high because they having support from other places, you understand, that is just it.

ZA6 [933-1574]

Emm I will agree with that. I will agree with that, looking for ahm looking g at that the activities and the recruitment and the multiple in numbers the boko haram militancy in the North East part of Nigeria. I believe many Muslims are getting involved and why, to my opinion, is basically the lack of knowledge, the lack of Islamic knowledge is the number one factor pushing them to join the militant group. They are easily deceived by the notion of you getting to heaven if you die in the act, but they are not taught the repercussion of, they are not taught the main tenets of their Islamic teachings on hurting your fellow being, yah.

ZA7 [1652-2029]

Sincerely I don't agree, but the truth is lots of people have, under the name of Islam done a lot of bad things and some people have emm been involved in violence and cover it up and cover this violent activities with the name of Islam like the present problem we are facing in northern Nigeria of boko haram Muslims are not do things and those people claim to do as Muslims.

ZA8 [657-1313]

Hmm I can't say for sure because have never met any militant Muslim before. So what I only will say is anybody can be a militant because of lack of knowledge. So now if they say Muslims are engaging more in militancy in the northern states, people are of the opinion that the north is basically more Muslims than Christians, but this is not true, you go to state whereby they are both 50-50. So in a state like that, if there is like terrorism or militants or whatsoever, you can't say it's just basically Muslims because some people will just raise a terrorist group claiming they are fighting for Islam and that is not true because they kill everybody.

ZA9 [1209-1616]

Well I think the main reason behind this militancy is illiteracy. You will never find or rather you find it very difficult to find learned Muslims involving themselves in militancy. Illiteracy, illiteracy is a very, very poor disease. Most of them have been brain washed, they have been taught that that are not in the holy book as such they are using them as instrument to perpetrate their evil act, yes.

ZA10 [1702-2010]

Yes, I will say yes to that because ahm our past governments are actually corrupt and they use that as a medium to penetrate some uneducated northerners so that they will spoil the name of Muslims in general. So I just think is a political way of blackmailing Islam, let me use that word, blackmailing Islam.

ZA11 [968-1767]

Well, if you look at, before the international eyes, it is understood that Islam itself or all Muslims are terrorist in some aspects, so and with that perspective, it has hurt and given some kind of insight to general public and at the same time that hurt within the Muslims, few of which are youths and other this thing, and they are trying to like in head, they are trying to express the hurt as in not hurt that they are trying to hurt people, but they want to understanding, they want people to understand what Islam is. They have the hurt of the condemned of the religion. So and in some point some people view it as terrorism, well in that aspect I could say the expression, the manner at which it is been expressed to some point, is a bit violent to some point, but I don't see it that way.

ZA12 [910-1191]

Well I agree, the reason being that some people are not knowledge, so they try to form a group, from forming a group, they try to use some verses of the Qur'an to which they don't have the in-depth knowledge of it to brain wash them thinking that is the best way to practice Islam

ZA13 [1094-1502]

Yes I think the first break I think we need to understand between this thing is that those who are deviating from the main Islamism ahh they do that because they do not have the knowledge and the understanding of Islam and out of that they didn't have adequate knowledge of what Islam means, so they deviate from it and when a strong hand who give one or two words of advice they go out of the way of Islam.

ZA14 [1281-1413]

Yes. I agree with you that more people are getting into this militancy why because of the poverty level of the people that is why.

ZA15 [2405-2886]

To be sincere I do not agree, why? Because if you look at the percentage of those that are getting into militancy now, you will see that it is very few, minimal, it is very few that is why I do not agree and though you may say why people are getting into militancy maybe the few numbers and so on. One, maybe they don't have the knowledge towards militancy, then number two, maybe poverty and because of the cases that maybe make people to go into those corrupt things and so on.

ZA16 [1104-1141]

I do not agree with this statement.

ZA17 [830-843]

I disagree.

ZA18 [1078-1210]

Look a real Muslim that follows the actual Tenets of the religion will never engage in himself in any kind of militancy whatsoever.

ZA19 [1043-1625]

Well actually I could not agree with this assertion because if really more Muslims are involving in militancy or militant activities so also the other religions because involving in militancy or gangsterism or in other words, depends on the individuals. There are certain factors that actually motivates one to actually get involved in any ah irresponsible act in the society. Some are being influenced by social factors, economic factors and political factors. Therefore, Muslims could not just be termed as most, as people that mostly involve in militancy or militant activities.

ZA20 [878-1079]

I don't think there is any justifiable statistics or data that has justified this. There is no report in actual sense that has justified this. Had it been there is one then I will have a word to say.

ZA21 [668-837]

Let me say I disagree because there is no doctrine in Islam that says you should take arms or you should go into militancy. Islam is all about peace and peace loving.

ZA22 [731-1103]

Yes, the reason why, particularly youth among the Muslims are joining militant groups or if I can say insurgency, it is because of a lack of proper understanding of the religion. If somebody understands the religion he wouldn't have joined such a group. There are ways to do everything in Islam. So I think the major thing is ignorance of what the religion really means.

ZA23 [964-2092]

Militancy has no base in Islam. In Islam there is nothing like militancy. To my understanding militancy is just people to come out and fight for their own rights be it rightly or wrongly. More especially if it involves-if it will go into violence. They call it militancy. In Islam everything has its own base. In Islam you have ways of doing everything. So to the best of my understanding there is nothing like militancy so the issue of people or Muslims in northern Nigeria are more engaging into militancy, I disagree with this simply because Islam does not teach militancy. You may see people going into it becoming militant but they are doing it on their own. Now people a times more especially the present dispensation, people use to leave the teachings of the religion and they will go by their own way thinking that that their way will be the best way for them to solve their own problems not the teachings of the Islam. So if one will go against the Islamic teaching then for you to be just, you will not judge the religion by the actions of some that call themselves as Muslims. You are to judge them by the religion.

ZA24 [1453-2216]

I am not agree because Islam is a religion of peace. Those are terrorists in Islam and they do not understand the concept of Islam. if they understand the concept of Islam they will not force anybody because Allah says in the Qur'an (he recites) or even in suratul Bakhara Allah says you cannot force somebody to do Islam. So Islam is a religion of peace, so those that are forcing or terrorizing people they don't know or understand the concept of Islam. I do not agree that many Muslims are- if you are well knowledgeable in Islam you cannot be militant. Now Islam is a religion of peace it didn't preach that you should kill somebody or to destroy people, people's houses either they are Muslims or Christians. Islam is a religion of peace so I do not agree.

ZA25 [1054-2056]

Ahhh The problem here is ah that concept of Muslim there that, the opinion that more Muslims are getting involved in the militant activities, yes I agree partially in the sense that majority of the militant groups especially in the Islamic northern Nigeria, they claim to be Muslims no matter how much no matter how far some of their ideologies and practices deviate from the mainstream Islamic ideologies. So as regards why I think, if you agree what do you think, one major one of the main reasons is the lack of in depth understanding of Islam on the part of those that are involved in it. And the other aspect is imposition of manmade systems of government on the people such as democracy. Muslims are not given, are not allowed to practice their sharia up to fullest as they want. Directly or indirectly, democracy and other forms of western systems of government is imposed on the Muslims and hence those that do not know the correct and Islamic way of dealing with such issues tend to go extreme
ZA26 [829-1130]

I don't even believe in militancy of Muslims whatsoever because all this issue of terrorism, even the other countries, the western countries there is something like terrorism. We know, so it is not only Muslims. They just ahh make this name to be on Muslims but not only Muslims that are terrorists.

ZA27 [674-784]

Yes I agree. I agree with that but this is bad teaching they are different from other Muslims, bad teaching.

ZA28 [2106-3157]

Well this is an interesting question which I would like to briefly go through. Some people are of the opinion that more Muslims are getting involved in militant activities. Well based on my own opinion, Islam as a whole should not be linked to what is termed militancy that is based on my own opinion because as I earlier mentioned Islam is a religion of peace and militancy or yes militancy is actually a set of ideas adjudicated together by a set of people mainly for their I would say if am allowed to use this word I would say selfish interests. Selfish interest not basically for the masses to benefit but may be for the little number of masses to benefit. Islam is a religion that makes sure that it ensures equity among others be it a Muslim or a non-Muslim. Islam is a religion of peace as I mentioned and it does not accept a Muslim faith to cheat against another that is not a Muslim. So basically I don't think Islam allows militancy should be linked together. They have no link. They are far away from each other based on my own opinion.

ZA29 [2703-4003]

Well when you say people, the ideas that people are getting involved in some militant activities, you say some Muslims right not all Muslims. Likewise if you take it now if you go to India where Buddhism is practice and you be asked that some Buddhas you understand, likewise when you go to Chinese and other parts of the country or take for example in Nigeria when you say Muslims you call the Christians likewise you say some Christians. You can't say that. Hundred percent of the religious followers are absolutely perfect. They can never and they cannot be and wherever you go in an environment or community there must be this black sheep among them so those kinds of people you cannot control but you can only advise them and you cannot change them and you only tell them what is right but you don't force them to do what is right. You understand, so what I am saying here is that when you say some Muslims actually I won't tell you no; because I am a Muslims saying no. Definitely, of course yes some Muslims are involved in that because mark you they are not doing it for the religion because if you look at the rules and the regulations of the religion, the religion does not give you the chance or the freedom to perpetrate or to do anything that will harm you or anybody around you.

ZA30 [2067-2875]

Yah, I agree. Some people got themselves into such activities as a result of ehm inadequate Islamic knowledge. So, when they got themselves involved or close to some people that ah also understand or came across any book. Like this person I don't even know him may be when somebody lay his hand in any book and he read through and may be the person expand more on the aya or some verses that ehm may be they are talking more on that aspect. So, it might happen that the person might be vocal so when he met them, he might be happen to convince them and he show them that is the actual interpretation of the Islam and they will be take it and they will be carrying it and they will be doing their own activities thinking that they are doing Islam, unknowingly to them that they are already gone out of Islam.

ZA31 [1053-1548]

I disagree and I will have my own reasons, I have my own reasons. You know nowadays, there are some people or some religions that see Islam as terrorists, as religion of terrorist, religion of destruction, terrorism, while it is not so. Why I say that is that, you know there are some people, that will, that will stay or stay in the umbrella of Islam and make chaos in order to spoil the name or the religion, but to be sincere, Islam is not a religion of violence, it is a religion of peace.

ZA32 [2006-4367]

And the response to this state, all this points would be I can say I disagree with that because you say more it means a large the number that is the number of Muslims and that is not true. Even if you can get some and the some, even the some self are claiming to be Muslims, but actually in considering the rules or the pillars of Islam, actually you can say they are not Muslims. They only claim to be Muslims and even if you say that they are Muslims, if you compare them with the remaining Muslims, the other Muslims living in the northern Nigeria you can say they are very few. So the, the factors or the reasons behind the growing conflicts along the two religions, religious members or yes and what is fuelling it is the first, first point is the essence or the causative agent of that is as I understand it, is lack of following the right teachings of the both religions. For example, some few Muslims, I can say especially the ignorant ones are not following the exact way of living together with their neighbors that is Christians and other non-Muslims and also Christians, in other hand, they don't want, they don't follow the real teachings of Christianity. I see, I consider this as the major or the causative agent of the conflicts, what causes the conflict between the two and ah what is fueling it is, I can say, is politics, the struggles of being in the power and when one has been in the power, he is trying to favor his side, he is trying to favor his people. If a leader by now is Christian he is trying, even in a hidden manner very physical, I can say, indirectly, in a hidden manner he will try to support and assist the Christians, financially and educationally because things are happening in Nigeria and if you consider it, if you look at it well, critically, you will see that it is part of injustice because in both religion people are expected to be treated equally, both of the religious members or the followers are expected to have the freedom to observe their religion, religious practices basically, not with disturbance to each other that is I can say, by that I can say it is a political issue that is fuelling the conflicts.

ZA33 [871-1281]

Yes I agree with this because Muslims nowadays especially in northern Nigeria they involved themselves in militant activities due to the propaganda and the activities of some spoilt Muslims and Muslim groups as well as preachers that propagate their own selfish behavior their own interest which leads to them to become, to participate totally and wholly in the militant activities in northern Nigeria.

ZA34 [980-2029]

Actually there is this term indoctrination. I agree that there are more Muslims, more youths that are involved in militancy and which is against the laws of Islam. Actually this indoctrination is one of the major problems that we have that do encourage that are half baked in knowledge to undergo these acts. Ah we can may be trace some history in northern Nigeria like the Maitatsine crisis of the 1980s, late 70s and 80s then the present Boko Haram idea and other movements within northern Nigeria. What actually brought this problem is that some of the youths are anxious and are engaged, more anxiously engaged in knowing the religion but yet they do not go to where they will acquire the knowledge of the religion because you have to get the knowledge of the religion before you practice the religion well. So they do engage themselves in the part of the Ulama who are also having their own selfish desire so they indoctrinate the youths using such their desire so they get involved in this militant activities. That is my own understanding.

ZA35 [706-1146]

Well, some Muslims are, Muslims are getting involved in the militant activities, yes I agree that more Muslims are getting into the militant activities because the present era we are in now due to the corruption coming here and there in Nigeria especially in the northern part now, so the killing of the Muslims and even the non-Muslims make them push the Muslims to get into the militancy to enable them to fight against the non-Muslims.

ZA36 [1235-1694]

I don't agree with that why because fighting as in the sects among Islam, Islamic sects, for example, the shi'a, ahl sunna, ahm partially because ahm some part of their Islamic sect, for example, the shi'a, they are trying to bring other changes into Islam because they see even the real Muslims as if they are not Muslims, they see us as pagans. It is as if they are the only Muslims existing, the Shi'as, so that is why they are trying to fight everybody.

ZA36 [1812-2108]

Honestly the way I see it, it is as if it is illiteracy, illiteracy and poverty because I observed that, for example, this our people, our neighbors I can say, this shi'a people, most of them I look at them as illiterates. They are illiterates and most of them are poor and they are very young.

ZA37 [790-806]

No. I disagree.

ZA38 [1338-1360]

Yah I agree actually.

ZA38 [1488-2901]

Actually basically, you know, this religion of Islam over a period of time is undergoing some prominent revolution or if I didn't say revolution I may say reformation, you understand. Basically in Nigeria, we have being doing only on side of sects, this Tijjaniyya brotherhood, the one Usman Danfodio, the reformer brought. Now presently many Nigerians, many people from the northern part of Nigeria started travelling to Arabian countries, places like Sudan, places like Saudi Arabia any one or two in search of religious knowledge, when they came back home, they came along with this knowledge and with this they started expanding this knowledge to people and most people said ah there is more to do in terms of religious this thing, awakening in religion, but they see it in form of reformation or revolution and as a result of this, it started becoming clash of power between the old sect and the present new sects that they brought along into the northern part of Nigeria. Right now you see even the aspect of religious crises and other things, it becomes unabated because some of them that brought this sects into Nigeria and northern Nigeria in particular, the teachings, they didn't know how to put the teaching in perfection that ordinary men would be able to understand or a lay man to be able to understand and use it in his immediate society. That is the major challenge that they have about that.

ZA39 [1373-1419]

Yes, I can say yes and I can say no because...

ZA39 [1525-3382]

Ok to start with, there are, actually it is true there are more people that are getting themselves into militant activities under the banner of Islam and the reason why this thing is happening is because of the total misconception about the Islam. If those people really understand the meaning of Islam, definitely they won't have engaged themselves in that. And particularly in Nigeria why this think is becoming so rampant is because of the misconception, like I said and this misconception is originated from the poor economic system coupled with the impact of this economy to our people, people do not have the opportunity to be in school to acquire sound education so as a result of this they are simply misguided because of their ignorance about Islam. So it is not only in Islam, a lot of people are misconceiving, it is a problem that is, I agree that it is a problem that is associated with the northern Nigeria, so also there are also activities of militancy in the southern part of Nigeria like we have Niger-Delta people, but even though the cause differs, this one they hide under the banner of religion to practice what is not Islamic. So also those people that are in the southern part of Nigeria that engage in the militant activities are also militants, but the cause like I said differs, but they do it in order to promote their own goal. But if you put them together, they all engage in taking arms, engaging in illegal activities, the only difference is that this one they hide it under the banner of religion while those ones they are hiding under the banner of poor environmental degradation of their environment. But all in all they are all doing something that is not allowed. So be it whatever they call it, it is not restricted to Islam or Muslims alone. There are other people that share the same opinion that is why I said so.

Th2.2: Reasons for Growing Conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims

FG1 [4329-4681]

One, to me it will be illiteracy and then lack of tolerance. If there is tolerance, when there is tolerance illiteracy tends to escape or tends to disappear. When you tolerate someone you tend to discuss together and try to iron issues out but when there is no tolerance there will be no issues like that and things will be going from better to worse.

FG1 [4683-6114]

For me the reason will be political, economical and social. Political in the sense that for example now when we talk about this Islamic militancy you could refer back to 2011 election. We all know we all witnessed what happened during that time when the election was announced many people start organizing and killing people just off head. Islam has some standard, ethics in doing revolution or whatever because if you look at what happened in 2011 we can say that the governor was not involved, even the Islamic revolutionaries or Islamic leaders were not involved in such activities. It is just the mob the illiterate people or personnel who are jobless, illiterate who have never been in school. For example now what happened, a researcher someone like you, Mallam Abdul Hadi was telling us in Kaduna in a road traffic some guys blocked the road and if you are a non-Muslim they will kill you if you deny and say you are a Muslim they will ask you to recite some verses in the Qur'an and when you recite the verses the person that is asking you to recite the verses he does not know what you are saying. For example he said that someone asked one person, he asked him are you a Muslim he said yes I am a Muslim and said ok recite suratul Iklas and after the person finished reciting it he was asking someone baba da gaske yake- baba is he correct? You can believe that it is illiteracy and misconception for political reasons.

FG1 [6116-6737]

Then in a country like ours, where we have multicultural diversity, people from different ethnic groups. Then to feel like most people from northern Nigeria are Muslims. The Muslims now feel that they are capable of ruling the country that creates disagreement between non-Muslims and the Muslims. The Muslims feel that we are much and we will strive hard in order to get what we want with our population while the non-Muslims feel that we are poor we are few and then but we are educated so since we are few we can't allow those that are many to rule us with that illiteracy of theirs. That is what is causing tensions.

FG1 [6739-7897]

There is also the factor of religion manipulation because the leaders for example just yesterday one doctor from political science was telling us that during 2005 Obasanjo and Atiku regime. They did a promise that when 2011 election comes Obasanjo will transfer power to Atiku Abubakar and before then Obasanjo started changing, changing his activity and changing his behavior that he want to deny that promise. And when Atiku was now sure that Obasanjo is going to betray him and deny their promise then he now came out publicly and announced to the people of the north that northerners Arewa ga naku nan, Arewa sai mai sallah –northerners here is your own, a Muslim must govern the north and so on. Atiku was just praising himself that he is from the north and from Hausa Fulani community, he is a Muslims so the northerners should support him. Prior to that when the promise was taking place he did not think of that. So it was when Obasanjo wanted to break the promise that he now use religion to manipulate, to opiumize the mind of the people. Then people will now start shouting Nigeria sai mai fitsari a tsaye and all this stupidity and nonsense.

FG2 [3030-3366]

Politics, in my opinion it is politics. Normally if you look at back then before there isn't much of these conflicts than are today. And most of the politicians around are using religious sentiments, laying of demarcations to achieve their aims is what is fueling these conflict in northern Nigeria or Nigeria as a whole-it politics.

FG2 [3372-3784]

Yes I think with regards to that it starts from homes, our various homes, in the sense that even among the junior ones like in the nursery schools we realize that the Muslims kids they will sideline themselves away from the Christians that is it is like just built in them. They grow with it so once they get into the society instead of them like to approve or like discourage it they continue, so it is inborn.

FG2 [3786-4312]

In addition to what she said, I think too that illiteracy plays a part in this because most of our brothers here in the north some don't have this western education and they just believe that based on the provision of the Qur'an they should fight the cause of Allah that means those that are not Muslims they should fight against them because they don't believe in our belief. But to me I don't believe it is supposed to be so because it says you should only fight your brother when you feel they are being a threat to Islam.

FG2 [4314-5202]

To me I vehemently disagree with him on the issue of saying that the north entirely or the north has most of the people that are illiterates. Now when it comes to the part of illiteracy, I believe northerners are literates. I believe by the meaning of literate does not limit to only western education. It goes beyond that if today someone can acquire, if there is a Muslim who graduate Qur'an if somebody is a Christian and goes to Bible studies I believe either of them is literate. To me the causes of these crisis is right from the adverse religion I believe that I am from Plateau state and I know what is going on in Plateau state. Most of the non-Muslims they have this believe that the Muslims are part of those who us to slaughter and kill even the disciples of Jesus when Jesus was alive. So they don't have settled minds to relate with the Muslims freely. There is suspicion.

FG2 [5208-5664]

I think besides that there is lack of cooperation in the sense that you see this tribalistic issues, sentimental issues like this is my sister we are from the same state and this one is from the other place so she is my sister and we speak the same language, same religion or like I tend to draw her close to me more than the other one. So anything that may arise we put this one aside as in we will develop some hatred for her. So it is also part of it.

FG2 [5670-6125]

Religious sentiments and availability of natural resources has led to superiority complex. Thinking of people from the southern region of Nigeria, they feel like yes we have this so we are more superior to other part of the country especially the northerners and they are solely dependent on what we have so they feel they are superior and coming back to the north we feel yes majority of us are Muslims and we are more closer to God than the Christians.

FG2 [6131-7228]

Mine is I think it is misunderstanding. When I say misunderstanding, let's take politics for example, the political leaders most of the mayhem happening around here starts around here or is due to them but do we put the blame on them? No. We turn the blame into like ok it's not politics or the politicians, it is jihadist. Let's take for example this Boko haram we all know it is a very indirect political mayhem but everybody is just turning it into a Muslim-Christian issue and if we take the illiteracy, can you see where the misunderstanding comes from. Let's take the literacy, did you say literacy or illiteracy? There are a lot of illiterates, some might be like partially literates some absolutely completely illiterates, but whenever you sit them down like come to talk with them discuss some issues even the literal issues just in a simple language you get to know that this people know what they are doing, but due to like some, I don't know, because they are illiterates we don't have, why will you listen to that, he has not literacy he is this this he is that so all this bring bias

FG3 [7999-9065]

Well ah first of all I will like to say democracy is one of the factors that has caused problems within or conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims and most especially the Christians. You see before the coming of democracy there was nothing like conflict or either any other problem between the Muslims and non-Muslims because there was no any other interest in between them. But when democracy came, with the system of election that I have to vote so and so person to be there I have to vote so and so person to be there. Now you realize that I am never a Christian or he was never a Muslim, you get to the situation that let me take a decision of voting this particular person into a particular position and then he got there, when he got there decisions were brought in inside the government which particularly do not suit your interest as a religion on the opposite side definitely conflict will come in. You will say because I am not a Muslim or because I am not a Christian that is why so and so thing has been implemented. You see democracy and politics.

FG3 [9067-9405]

Another reason that I can try to explain is that innate tendency that I am better than another person is another reason and this is simply because some parents they indoctrinate some bad bad things against the counterpart that are of different faith. This is another reason that I can say is responsible for these conflicts.

FG3 [9406-11498]

In my own opinion I think that most religious leaders contribute to this because what they impart to their followers, you know they want to impart some knowledge to them to gain more attention from them, to gain, I think that is selfish interest because one of the articles of faith in Islam said you must believe in all the prophets and Jesus Christ is a prophet that is Isah. So if you are a true Muslim you must believe in him. If you don't believe in Jesus Christ you are not a Muslim. So I think what confuse most people is that, most people like Christianity if you say Jesus Christ is Isah they will say no. I say that is what the Arabic word, the name in Islam is Isah he is a prophet. And if you say like Solomon is Suleiman they say ah how is it Suleiman because they don't know even for Christians if they see Arabic word in the Qur'an they will say what is the meaning of this Isah we know the meaning because it is an Arabic word an Arabic word. They thought is like when they are praying some Christians when they are praying they say they do speak in tongues they speak in tongues. You know for them they said if you ask this one that what is the meaning of the speaking in tongues they say maybe she or he does not know the meaning. They think that is the way our own too is like we don't know the meaning. I think maybe everybody is trying to fight for his own religion and most things come from the religious leaders. Because the prophet said don't condemn other people's religion so they will not condemn your religion too let them do their own and you too should do your own. Anybody that have interest, the way you do your religion if they see you are doing it fine peacefully as it is said Islam is peace, if you are doing it peacefully, they will have the this thing to come to your religion to learn about your religion from then as it is earlier mentioned that is jihad. From your heart they will come to your religion. So conflict arise when you talk about my religion is better than yours. My religion is better than yours is from the religious leaders in fact.

FG3 [11550-12913]

Yes because I want to combine what they have just said somebody made mention of democracy and the other person mention leaders. So what I want to say because we are trying to trace the source. The source I can say of this growing conflict I can say has been happening because of inadequate knowledge of both the followers of both Muslims and Christians. You can just see somebody practicing the religion without knowing the actual teaching of the religion. Then politics come in, politicians use the religious leaders to impart politics into them so that they keep on dividing us. That is just it. But as long as Muslims will continue will make sure that he knows the knowledge, he knows the religion, Christian will make sure he knows, in Christianity it says if someone slap you, you should give him another place to slap you in the other place. In Islam, Islam means peace I can tell you where will the conflict come between those people. Somebody who can hit and he gives you another place to hit him, this one is calling peace how somebody calling peace will come and beat somebody up to the level that you can kill somebody. So there is need for both the Muslims and the Christians to know their religion very well and there is need for them to caution heir leaders to go away from politicians so that they shouldn't put politics not democracy but politics.

KD1 [4010-5939]

One of the factors that is fueling this conflict is mistrust. The Christians are assuming that the Muslims don't want to see them in the eye, that the Muslim is bound to kill them, they are infidels. The Muslims are feeling in the eye that there is no trust, that the Christians, if they have opportunity, they will counter and kill them. This is a thing that has been there right from past because if you look at history, if you have a case of the renaissance, we have the case of the crusade, we have several cases where the Christians have taken offensive against the Muslims and of course, we have cases of Jos, where the Christians are in the majority and they take offense against the, offensive attack against the Muslims. Of course, we also have similar cases in where Muslims have taken offensive against the Christians like in the sharia conflict in Kaduna and some other conflict regions. Of course, such things are just the case of mistrust. So, when there is mistrust in the society, I don't trust my neighbor, I don't trust the Christians because I don't know what he can do, because when he go to the church, I don't know what they tell them. So I have that feeling that, maybe the spiritual leader has put some misinformation in them that they should kill me whenever a challenge comes. And of course it is a question of experience. When they say bad news spread faster. When for example, one person comes want to kill his neighbor because of religious conflict, it grows faster, it spreads faster, but you hardly hear the news that somebody actually save the life of a Christian or a Muslim save, a Christian save a life of a Muslim by hiding that person in his room, in his bedroom, in his toilet, or under his bed. You hardly hear such cases, but actually such cases exist. In fact, I assume that even more than cases of those that actually take offense as in, violent offense against the opposite religion.

KD2 [1813-2556]

The factor fueling these conflicts is just greed among the people in the region. It's just greed because or maybe they are being, we are not been taught how to love one another both the Muslims and the Christians. If to say we are being taught how to love one another, for the Muslims, you should know that there are things you need to do to your fellow Christians as you live together with them, and for the Christians, they too they need to know what they are supposed to do to their fellow Muslims in which they reside or live together with. We live together in the market, in hospitals, within our neighborhood, we live together. So there are things we need to do together. So the factor following this conflict is just greed and nothing.

KD3 [1862-2215]

The growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims especially the Christians in northern Nigeria mostly are political, it has nothing to do religion. It is just may be some politicians deciding to, in search of powers, insight you, they even, they don't use actually the learned Muslims, they use those that are not learned to cause these conflicts.

KD4 [2109-2608]

Look my brother, when you are talking about the conflict that is existing in the Muslims and non-Muslims especially in the northern Nigeria. I will just tell you that it has a very wide outlook. You have to look at it beyond your nostrils, you have to look at it beyond what you can see because to me, I see that conflict as being political, having a political outlook, social outlook or even economical outlook especially putting it in the realm of Nigeria politics. That is what I can say on this.

KD5 [1301-1578]

I think there is a lot of or rather there are various factors that contribute towards the growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in Nigeria and I think that factors include lack of tolerance, lack of understanding among Muslims and non-Muslims. I think that is it.

KD6 [2150-2629]

What I can say about that is understanding. We don't understand ourselves again because Al-Qur'an told us (he recites the Qur'an) that you Muslims and non-Muslims should come together and talk about what really joining you together that you will never worship any God except Allah. But our own problem now, I don't want to understand my own neighbor, he doesn't want to under me. We don't sit down to dialogue, if we sit down to dialogue, I think all this will not be happening.

KD7 [1573-1974]

That conflict, I think if am been fair, I should say that it's a conflict that has been fueled by our politicians. They use that kind of conflicts because it favors them wherever from whichever side they come from to promote whatever standing they wanted in the community. So, I think that is what bottom line and has been the backbone behind the conflict that has been coming up, of recent that is.

KD8 [2486-4596]

Well we have to look at the history of conflicts in northern Nigeria not the remote one, but the immediate one that can be traced to Kafanchan Crisis of 1987 where there was a problem during preaching, a Christian preacher was preaching and he was alleged to say something negative about the prophet (SAW) of which any true Muslim will not be happy, in fact, he can do anything when the prophet is insulted or any, something bad is said against him. Any good Muslim can or react because you don't care to lose your life because your prophet is insulted, if you die in that process, you may not bother. So, that one was not actually a religious fight, but that was, it started form there in 1987 when there was serious crisis. The fight was not actually Islamic, but the cause was that spiritual issue of insulting the prophet, but the war in itself, the crisis in itself was not Islamic because it was not a jihad, you understand, it was just a conflict as a result of either misunderstanding or trying to disregard the faith of another person, you understand, so it actually started from that period, 1987 particularly in northern Nigeria. Prior to that, even other tribes, they just feel that they are, they behave like Muslims, they feel as if they are Hausas and all that. But from that time the crisis started, it led to the 1992 Zangon Kafaf crisis and other part of the northern Nigeria too, began to experience of their crises. But that was actually the beginning of crisis in northern Nigeria and the people that actually created the problem were not properly punished. So, it now gave room to other people, other tribes to at the slightest provocation, they try to to now unleash terror on other people which continued to be, since people are not been punished when they, they unleash terror on people. A small thing in any community, they will just try to react and fight their opponents. It could be on spiritual basis, it could be on, on, issue of land, it could be on issue of other resources, you understand, but that was actually the beginning of, I mean crisis in northern Nigeria.

KD8 [4705-8303]

There are economic issues like there are people that are not, there are some people that are naturally hardworking, they go to different places and earn a living like most Hausa people are Muslims. They go to different part of Nigeria, when you go to Auchi, you see them they have already become part of people. When you go to Lokoja, that is Kogi state, you find them there. If you go to the southern Kaduna, they are there, they are hardworking people. So, they work, they have traders, they have farmers and all that. When the other people are not, they are not enterprising, they normally go to school and get western education so and the other people or the other Muslims, Hausa whatever, they engage in trades and they have economic base of which the other people are lacking in that. So the other people, their people used to term them that they are, the Muslims are responsible for their situations. They are responsible for their poverty situation, so as a result of that, envy to grew up, you understand. They are feeling that they are responsible for their poverty level, you understand. Therefore, a small, the moment there is a problem, they will just try to destroy their properties, if they have cars, they will destroy them, they will destroy their shops and all that. This is to show that it's not necessarily the issue of religion, but it is the envy of the, the wealth that they are having because normally they just target their, their cars, they target their businesses, the same thing with Jos. The moment there is crisis, they will just go and see a car company and burn all of it, you understand. They will destroy their houses, you understand. So there is issue of struggle in terms of acquisition of resources. So, this is one of the reasons that is one, economic reason, social reasons too because they, Muslims seem to be free. They are free, when they have money, they enjoy it, I mean they are generous, you understand. So, that one too should have create a good relationship between the Christians and the Muslims particularly in the southern Kaduna or in northern Nigeria, but it's like breeding enmity, you understand, which is quiet unfortunate. So, this is another reason, I mean these are some of the factors that are attributable to the crisis. Apart from the fact that some preachers too, they don't preach, you know, according to the principles of the religion. Sometimes openly people will be preaching peace, but when they go to the other side or when they go behind the scene, they will be preaching a different thing. They will be instigating their followers if it is election, don't vote for this, don't vote for that, you understand. If you look at even the president election, it happened like that. In the southern part of Kaduna even though the, the Jonathan government has not done anything for them, but because of that factor, you understand, they didn't vote Buhari which if you compare Buhari and Jonathan clearly, you cannot compare in terms of their integrity, in terms of their patriotism, but because of that thing, that thinking, that sentiment, that spiritual sentiment, they didn't vote for Buhari, they voted Jonathan even though Buhari is a northerner, he's closer to them, whatever their problem is, he has more, he is more likely to accept them than the other person that is vying, but because of this thinking, this religious sentiment, you understand, they didn't vote him. So this is a clear case of, you know, lack of may be understanding I may say which came up later that is responsible for all this kind of crisis.

KD9 [1796-2840]

Well hmm conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims have always been there especially as far as northern Nigeria is concerned. It is just that ah if you want to say it is growing, it's being publicized now, there are activities that have taken place for long, you know, between Muslims, Muslims being killed and situations where you cannot even explain those kind of killings, political killings especially. If you look at history, look at what happened to Sardauna for example and Tafawa Balewa, these are political killings and there are insinuations that these are orchestrated by non-Muslims. so at that time you can imagine when it happened, the 50s and the 60s, so these things have been happening for a long time, but now I think the awareness is much, the CNN, the BBC they carry it, as far as am concerned it is a biased way of propagating it or telling the world what is happening, but I don't what to agree that it is actually increasing, it has always been there, just the major hype that is making it look that it is increasing.

KD9 [2917-4003]

Okay ah lack of understanding, lack of education, very, very important. Education in the sense that Muslims need to really know Islam, Sunnatic Islam and far above that the Christians should understand the Islamic point of view that northern Nigeria is typical Islamic, you know, enclave. So for you to come and say you want to Christianized the country because if you want to look at the activities that is happening, the Christians concentrate building churches and trying to call people to their religion by coming to the north and then they do this in ways that can definitely cause conflict, ways that may not really go down well with the person that is from the north that Islam is like a culture to him. So ah education in Da'wa in how to propagate your religion is very, very important. You can't force me to come to your church or become a Christian, so if you try to do that of course definitely there will be backlash, there will be conflict. So in a nutshell there can be more, but you know this is one of the point, this in one of the major reasons why we have conflict.

KD10 [2033-2110]

The causes of this conflict it could be lack of understanding and tolerance.

KD10 [2159-2205]

It is ignorance and self desires, tribalism.

KD11 [4332-6142]

Well as an individual, when you are looking at it, as an individual or let me say from whatever perspective you want to see it, I would not want to believe that it is the religion itself that is causing this thing. It is not the hatred of Islam, a Muslim hating Christian or Christian hating Muslim, rather I see it as the dearth, you understand, or the scarcity or this kind of fierce competition, you understand, as to who will have control over the national resources or what. This is the main reason and I think in Nigeria, one of those great things that ah really cause this, what do you call, hmm this kind of social segregation or awareness, I won't say awareness, this kind of religious segregation should not be unconnected with the emergency of democracy where so many people would want those who fell marginalized, you understand, the national resources and couldn't find better way of thinking about how to get what we call it ah share of national resources, those who fell marginalized and couldn't find any other better way of thinking about how to get their own share of the national cake, resorted to religion. A very good example is of this thing is ah was what happened during the sharia, you understand, But you , politicians were using Sharia as a means to garner support and of course in 2011 when this thing, I think the presidential campaign in Nigeria was mostly I think this is the ah I think was mostly, when you look at the sharia, politician were using sharia not just religion, politicians were using religion, Christian were using Christianity for identifying themselves ah I think this is one of the first instances when we see a president worshipping outside ah the church of the Aso Rock and all sort of things like keeping beards by politicians and trying to gather support.

KD12 [2811-4809]

It has to be so. It has been a way of, the way Islam calls because Islam does not enforce anybody to accept the religion and then Islam stands alone, it doesn't want any attachment or any enforcement of any law or any etiquette on him, so far what has been happening in Nigeria is that most of the laws that are made are made by Kufur people those who doesn't understand, they base their law or on what they think, you see. But when Islam comes, Islam said this is the way things has to go, for example, in slaughtering of animals which has caused problems in the north, people said the abattoir must be used for slaughtering only lawful animals, but so far most of the areas in the north it has been a nature of where they kill cows, kill pigs, so when they say that those who want to kill pigs they don't ah they don't ah go against them killing ah pigs for there own pork to eat, but the government should provide a separate abattoir for that area. It was when the government wasn't involved and then killing animals, killing lawful animals with unlawful animals that one everybody knows that whatever maybe the forbearance of the people, it has led to conflict. So that is one. The other one again is the mode of dressing, the mode of dressing, the mode of dressing in some ways. Some people, some Muslims that have their own private establishment, there is no way the government can impose law, dressing code on them. But so far that we have governmental establishment like hospitals and so on where in fact it was made lawful or it was banned on woman to wear skirt that can expose their body, the Muslims said no, they can't, dressing cannot disturb there medical treatment. So it was when they want, they indirectly and most of this people that are heading this department are, most of them are non-Muslims, so it was when the principles, the Muslims said dressing properly does not disturb their work. So it was when they didn't hear that people, Muslims they fought to such principles.

KD13 [901-1394]

The only thing fueling this conflict is that the two scriptures, the scripture of the Christians and the scripture of the Muslims are two different scriptures, you see and Islam as you know want to revert to its din. Then Christianity as you know they also want people coming to their din, but the conflict that is always there is that the creed, the centered creed, the Muslims believe in Allah (SBUH) while the Christians believe that there is an intermediary between him and Allah (SBUH).

KD14 [1661-2039]

The reason between the growing conflict between Muslims and Non-Muslims especially Christians in northern Nigeria still has to do with shallow understanding between the Muslims and the Christians because no religion agree with conflict and the factors that are fueling these conflicts mostly are political just some particular set of people that just want to get what they want.

KD15 [1167-1545]

Ah hmm the conflict between Muslims and Christians in northern Nigeria I believe is lack of, misunderstanding because ah if there is no understanding in a state or community there will be conflict or this tribalism stuff or ethnic whatever. So I believe the main point of conflict between the Christianity and Islam nation is just misunderstanding, so I think that is just it.

KD16 [724-814]

It just misunderstanding or misconception about Islam, it is misconception about Islam.

KD17 [2275-3183]

The major thing I can say is that it is politics. It is politics. Most times you see okay before election they just try to be polite ah vote for Muslims, vote for Christians ah and there in the church they say vote for your fellow Christian and in the mosque they say vote for fellow Muslim, so by the time everybody come out they start arguing from little argument, argument becomes attack, this one touch this by the time start fighting it becomes the issue of religion, but I think it is just politics, just the leaders trying to use the people for there own selfish interest and maybe I can just say ok maybe due to lack of understanding and non adherence of the two faith that is the Islamic faith and the Christian faith also because by the time you follow the books the holy books of these people I don't think this is encouraged and in fact fighting each other maybe into politics and other things.

KD18 [1601-2314]

I think it's lack of understanding, they are not, the understanding is not there and there is this eh this thing that we call a selfish interest because when the, we are not understanding ourselves most especially in the north because according to the story I heard before, they said that was the for the last century, they said the Muslim when the Muslims people will go to the mosque the Christianity will be the one to be monitoring what they are saying, and when Christianity when Christian people were going to the church the Muslims will be monitoring them so that they will not be attacked by anybody but now the reason behind the their conflicts is lack of understanding and selfish and selfish interest.

KD19 [2020-2831]

Well, let me start with the second, the factors that are fuelling those conflicts is basically just one that is intolerance. You discover that people who are in conflicts with each other in the name of religion are not tolerant of each other's view. Before now you discover that people live in peace with each other, we tolerated each other before the advent of ah the Islamic revivalism, so we tend to not to tolerate each other. Everybody, religion is in the mind allow everybody to preach what he likes, now eh I believe there is a lot of conflicts between Muslims and adherents of other religion in northern Nigeria, why, because the northern Nigeria is a complex society you discover, within a household, you discover there are people of different religion. So basically these are the, that is my opinion.

KD20 [1148-1279]

Okay, I think the reason is that the fail to understand each other. And lack of tolerance. And that is what I think the reason is.

KD21 [1652-1872]

I believe the main reason so far is politics. Politicians have succeeded in dividing Nigeria along religious and ethnic lines. They have succeeded in financing some groups just to profess their ideas. I think that's it.

KD22 [2626-4952]

Ah ah a lot has happened in this country in particular Nigeria between the year 2000 till date. There has been a lot of crisis and hullabaloo all over in different states of the country. There are a lot of factors really that contributed to these ah conflicts if you may like, which happened between the various factions, Islam and Christians and one of the factors could be said to be lack of tolerance by both religions' adherents. If the two religions could exist or the two adherents of the religions could exist side by side there won't be any conflicts. Muslims do exist, Christians do exist, there is no compulsion in attributing or imbibing one religion over the other. You can choose to practice Islam and you can choose not to that is to say you have been giving the liberty or leverage to practice the religion that you want. Nobody will impose a particular religion on you. Ah during the time of the prophet Muhammad (SAW), we all understand that the Muslims and non-Muslims existed and they lived in peace at a time if not for some issues that arose which lead to the various battles that have been fought by the noble prophet (SAW) ah any person that is history faithful, you will understand all these I am saying. Therefore one of the factors that is leading to these religious conflicts is intolerance. Secondly, it could be attributed to politics as we know because Nigeria we understand that some of the politicians while trying to vie for a vote, they tend to be religious bigots. They used to be sentimental in their approach of campaign. They will tell you that this is a Muslim you should vote for him, this is a Christian you should vote for him. The Muslim will be asking you to be vote, to be voting for the Muslims while the Christians will be asking you to be voting for the Christians and this is wrong. Politics could be said to have played a factor or a role in trying to create a conflict or in creating conflicts between the two religions. If you do not vote for a Christian, the Muslim will ask you why and if you do not vote for a Muslim the Christians will ask you why. Ah that is how it should that is not it is not supposed to be. Anything that is politics should be separated from religion. A religion should not be a severing factor between the two religions of Islam and Christianity.

KD23 [1857-2847]

Well ah the reason behind the growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims especially Christians in northern Nigerian ah, so first ah the more, one of the contributing factors that is contributing to this conflict is politicians because they are the ones that are propagating or promoting something so against the religions of each other and you know religion is ah is ah is a kind of thing that that people take it very, very serious, so anything that you attach to religion so ah in ah especially in other you are trying to ah tarnish the image of other's religion, so that thing it will ah it will make people raise their voice, it will make people frown their face and it will make people ah respond physically ah or negatively because, so religion ah is not a thing that we can play with it. So if to say the ah politicians are not doing that, so I think, so there will be no conflicts ah between Muslims and Christians but the number one contributing factor is the politicians.

KD24 [4641-7639]

Actually the people behind this is just as I have mentioned earlier, the politicians because politics in Nigeria is, if not today that we gained some changes which we are praying it should be what we think but eh consider just three months back before election, continuing if you space back to sixteen years back since from this eh after Sani Abacha, general Sani Abacha's death when Obasanjo came into power ah ah up to some all that long, if you considered that these politicians will set some certain ah ah traits which they want to achieve, they usually doesn't care which way to follow, how to follow, when to follow, where to follow, you know their own aim is just to make sure that they achieve their goal, if someone wants to proceed to be in power, he will do whatsoever he think is possible for him if actually he knows that he will be into power, he doesn't care whether ten thousand people will die, so what happened based on what we have seen, we the northerners ah, see for example if you take the issue of this bombing, bombs have been exploding inside church, churches, bombs have been exploding inside mosque, mosques and eh based on what happened you will find out that you will meet a person when he is being called before the bomb explodes, maybe they will search him, find bomb in his body, you will see him in the mosque that eh, you will see that he is not a Muslim, he is not a Muslim the language, he can't even recite the fatiha, for example, he doesn't know anything about the religion of ah Islam, so what brings about this? If the person the next thing is the Muslims will think that hat it is the Christians that use to send these bombs and is in the other hand they used to give the Muslims the ignorant Muslims, illiterate Muslims, the ones that are in the poor states just because of the money they will give them, they will go to the church and put it, see this way just like vice versa all the Muslims and the Christians each of them will be saying or thinking that okay the Christians are the ones putting these things to us, lets think of how to react. If the Christians in the same way see the same thing in their place they will say okay they are retreating back to us, let's fight. The politicians will gain what they want to gain in a simple way because ah what we observe is that these ah election and ah politics issues if a country is in war or conflict, nothing is going to move and these people maybe politicians they will just be receiving their money, packing their money, stealing the money, no one is there to ask them because the state is living under the is not under their own control, it is beyond their own control, so they will do what they want, steal what they want steal because they people that they are leading, their sense is totally not in the government, not in what the government are doing, but they are just thinking of other things aside. So they will do what they want to do, achieve what they want to achieve, things like that.

KD25 [6532-10974]

Definitely there are many factors, but top among the list has to do with eh you know ah ah ah political deception or political betrayal, let me put it that way, because most of the politicians are only using eh you know religious clerics from the Christians and from the Muslims to clash their heads so that the politicians in the end of the day will achieve their aim. When they achieve their aims, they will be bother-less, they don't mind whatever number of souls have been you know ah ah lost or what, lost, they don't give a damn since they have achieved their aim then, but just as ah it has often been said that it is when you leave your door ajar that the thief will enter or somebody from outside will enter, but if it is locked, he will have to have a second thought before paving his way to your house. So what I am saying here is that both from the Islamic you know angle and from the you know ah Christian angle, they seem to be kind of, you know, dormancy or like ah ah like ah a lackadaisical attitude kind of ah not showing interest and enthusiasm towards Islam and the inability or the I don't know ah call it the physical weakness or spiritual weakness in the hearts of, you know, the clerics of the Islamic angle and the Christian angle maybe because eh most of the, some of the scholars that have not even ah ah undergone western education, that are unemployed, they have nothing doing, they are poor and they are really in desperate and dear need of money to sustain themselves and their family, now these so called ungodly politicians will come and use them by giving them money. They were the ones that impoverished them, they were the ones that eh you know put poverty into them. Now they will come back again and make use of them by giving them money, by pumping money, money that the scholars or the clerics they have never seen, they will say this is for you, we want you to go and preach this in your church or this in your mosque and by that in the end of the day you will find out that some of the followers from the Islamic angle and from the Christian angle will start looking at one another as enemies and that is what have been going on because if you look at ah ah Nigeria let's say 30 years back, there was nothing like this. We used to live like friends despite our differences in religion, of course even the constitution in Nigeria has given each and every Nigerian to practice his religion, his or her religion, so you as a Muslim is allowed to practice your religion perfectly no one can stop you, no one can distort you from perfecting or completing your Islamic rights and obligations so also from the Islamic I mean from the Christianity perspective. We have been living like that for many years ago, but why is it now, why now? That means it is the politicians of now that have been polluted and have continued polluting the, you know, the ah the Nigerian citizenry, but eh really actions have to be taken fast before, you know, it becomes uncontrollable, it is almost uncontrollable, but not uncontrollable totally because alhamdulillah with the advent or the coming of the new ah Nigerian government, you know, headed by our president Muhammadu Buhari, we have started seeing changes insha Allah because he is a proactive leader, he is known to be a just leader, he is going to be a truthful leader, he is going to be somebody who is ready to die, you know, in protecting and safeguarding the reputations and honours of his citizenry, not like the pass government who have given, if you take it like the boko haram from the northern Nigeria that have been on for more than four, five, six years now and the onslaught is still on, it was as a result of the uninteresting attitude or lackadaisical attitude of the past government, nonchalant attitude not minding who ever died in as much as those that died have no any ah blood relation with them, they don't give a damn. We have seen that. So definitely ah ah ah I must say that ah alhamdulillah God the most exalted has heard our prayers both we the Muslims and even the Christians, we must, we vote, we bring ourselves together and continued praying and at last God heard, sees us and ah became benevolent and answered our prayer and changed the government for us, we have started, you know, seeing changes of which I believe that insha Allah ah things will work fine in the nearest future, there are blueprints insha Allah that we are seeing.

KD26 [1777-2960]

I think the problem between the Muslims and the non-Muslims it is that there is difference in ideology. The Muslims they have their own set rules and laws that we do follow and then the non-Muslims have theirs. Then I think the reason why this problem arises is result in the gap, there is no balance in way of life. I don't know how to put it, but I think okay because lets say like 60-70 years ago when the westerners, when the British were colonizing us, the Christian missionaries, the westerners were the ones that were in charge of the southern western region while the northerners were more of the ta'alims and the Islamic way of life and then due to that more northerners did not have opportunity at that time, our parents then did not allow us to go for the western education and that brought a gap in educational balance and I think it has affected because of the way our lives have moved on now, it has affected the quality of life I will say not really okay it has affected ahm I would I put it, it has affected the standard of living. So I think there is this ahm this issue of we Muslims thinking that we are being deprived and they thinking we are not up to them.

KD27 [1510-2420]

hmm I would say more or less goes down, boils down to the...factor. Muslims are in the majority in Nigeria we all know that and there has been this suffocating strangle hold on the non-Muslim minorities by our so-called leaders using Islam as a pretext or on the platform of Islam; now that has generated a lot of bad blood over the years from the time of our late leaders –Sardauna, down through the years to the period of Ibrahim Babangida's presidency to date. Now on the acrimony between Muslims and Christians especially in northern Nigeria boils down to the fact that the Christians feel that they have to rise up and fight against oppression. They feel that they are being oppressed by the Muslims forgetting that the Muslim poor, the Muslim masses are also victims of the oppression by the ruling clique who are mainly made up of Muslims. But it has nothing, the leadership has nothing to do with Islam.

KD28 [3267-4413]

You know like what I said earlier, the knowledge that is when you understand something from the beginning, if you have the basic knowledge of whatever you are doing, your own religion, you know as Islam, you know Christianity, am sorry to say, is a religion derived from what we called, in Islam we call it ahul kitab because they say that Jesus Christ, that is the Christian they call it that it is the religion of Jesus, Jesus is a prophet in Islam, he is one of our prophet because as a Muslim, you are not a Muslim if you don't believe prophet Isa as I prophet of almighty Allah and if prophet Isa is one of our prophet and Islam believes in him. So it is the knowledge you have on this people because lack of the understanding between the Muslims and the so called Christians is because of the lack of the understanding, is the conflict that normally come up between them because you are trying to defend your own self that your own is better than that side and the other side is also thinking his side is better than that side finding one way to dent your own religion and which you will not happy about it because of the understanding.

KD29 [1759-2056]

Well based on my own shallow understanding ah is on the path of the Christian clerics, they do misinform their followers about what Islam is all about. They are not teaching them the right thing they are misinforming them and based on that our Christian counterparts become reactionary to Muslims.

KD30 [2073-2595]

Ahm I think this will have to do with the ah with the situation ahm with the situation in the nation generally, the level of illiteracy, the knowledge of the religion itself, both the Christians and the Muslims need to know more about their own religion, but because of the illiteracy generally which has to do with both the western and even the ah the religious education of course you can see when people lack this knowledge then they will become instruments to or vulnerable to all for all these sort, sort of things.

KD31 [3807-4619]

Ah actually the reason behind all that is just, is just politics, is just politics people are just trying to like achieve their own political personal and political careers so how, when there is cohesion, when there is understanding between the two sides I think people will be able to select the person they feel yes this is a competent person that's if there is understanding or people from both sides that's the elites from both sides are trying to keep are trying to keep their flames burning that's why people will just sit down someone will sit down somewhere okay if we should allow these people to practice their religion the way it should be and when they have proper understanding when there is cohesion definitely there's going to be problem, so I think the reason behind all these is just political.

KD32 [1681-2146]

In northern Nigeria there is intolerance and most of these crises, religious crisis in the northern Nigeria. They are politically associated, they are not purely religious. So there are some things that politics involving and politics play a major role in conflicts in northern Nigerian not only religious and we can say all the conflicts we have tribe, tribalism we have religions and many conflicts, but the intolerance in general is what causes all these.

KD33 [1433-2292]

Well the reason most the reason behind the conflict between Muslim and non-Muslim are first of all we can say politicians because of their selfish interest they try and divide the people so that they can be able to rule as one of their saying like as I can remember but I cannot quote it exactly, they say divide the rule so before all this conflicts that people Muslims were living in the same the same area where neighbors, where peace and harmony everywhere in the community but after the coming of this democracy and people are started engaging themselves in politics so from that place emm emm this emm conflicts have started growing between Muslims and Christian and as we know Muslims that they are dominant in the north while in the south Christians are the dominant so they decide to bring their politics so that they can be able to rule to eternity

KD34 [2014-3292]

Toh some of the factors that am going to take it is, am going to look at it in three phases. One of the phases is poverty. The second phase is political and the third phase is selfish interest. Why I call it poverty because of the lack of poverty and some people want to gain something about of something, they will fuel conflict between Muslims and Christians by taking side, by creating conflicts between them so that they will gain in particular activities. And then secondly political, there are some people that need political gains out of either Muslims or Christians and the only way to survive is to divide those people in other to win from one side, for example, a politician may come, if he is a Muslim, he will claim Muslims are his own and then claim that Christians are doing one thing or the other to dominate them, so by doing that he will win their own intention. So also in the other side a Christian may come to how own Christian group and tell them that Muslims are attempting to do this to do that, they will fuel the conflict between them. Then selfish gain, selfish gain one way of the other some people wants to eh want to gain something out of those out of particular group; they will instigate them and then say other things against the other religion
KD35 [2236-3226]

The factors are simply ignorant of ah the, lack of understanding of the word Islam or the lack of the understanding of the word Christianity. Christianity, anybody who is a Christian is Jesus like, anybody who is a Muslim is Muhammad like, this prophets they preach nothing but peace and you abide by God's ah I mean rules and regulations so that is, but the moment you don't understand that, you understand what your mind tells you, then there should be a problem, there should be conflict, there should be fight, killing of one another, but ones you submit, you understand your religion, a Christian understand his own religion, a Muslim understand his own religion and there is no compulsion in each religion, then everything is simple. When you try to make people understand Islam means submission, Christianity means submission, so I think there is no much wahala for that, no much trouble, no much, is everybody does his own, what he or she or he understand by the word religion.

KN1 [4770-4962]

I can authoritatively tell you that am almost, in the nineteen northern states, I almost know all the nineteen northern states and if am to be sincere with you it's more of economic jealousy between the two religions, because in the first place you look at the leadership of both the religions they are not at each other's throats because a typical and enlightened Christian pastor or a Muslim Imam know what it takes to take somebody's life or to loot him or to burn his house, but now if you can sample opinion and you have the time please have time go to places like plateau state ask the younger ones why do you want to engage the Muslims in any physical combat they will be telling you ok they have dominated us economically they are taking our eh they are taking our daughters they are impregnating...sort of accusation all sorts of accusations. Equally if you come down to Kano, and ask the average or the common youth that is engaged into all this kinds of things will be telling you that Ibos are dominating the market, we loot their shops we would do this we will do that and in no way Islam will encourage that and equally Christianity. So in my opinion it is more it is more of economic factor one. Two, even if there are led by the older generation, those older generations will be politicians or those that want to use the divide and rule to achieve their aims. That is my opinion to be simply put.

KN1 [4989-6213]

KN3 [9672-11177]

Lack of understanding of the religion or deliberate intention to introduce politics into religion. As I told you earlier all the religion God says you should hate somebody because he doesn't belong to you faith. No religion of God says you should be unfair and unjust to another person because he doesn't belong to your tribe or he doesn't have the same culture as you. No religion of God says that. But some politicians introduce politics into religion trying to point out that the religions are different some of them are doing it ignorantly others are doing it deliberately they understand. As you can understand in the first republic we had our leaders, the founding fathers; Awolowo, Azikiwe, Sardauna, Tafawa Balewa to a lesser extent Aminu Kano and Paul Tarka. They were the founding fathers, they belong to different religions, different tribes, different cultures but they all lived peacefully with one another. They respected one another. They cooperated and accommodated, they cooperated with and accommodated one another and they together moved the country forward. The first republic, in those days, Nigeria was in peace. Nigeria was respected abroad. Nigerians were loved and admired wherever they went because their leaders understood their religion and they practiced the teaching of their religion. Now because the present politicians or political leaders are trying to confuse people, they introduced the religion into politics wrongly, wrongly. And that is why we are having problems.

KN4 [2301-3423]

(hum) what am seeing that (ah) that is causing much conflict between the Muslim and non-Muslim is development and development can come in different form. It has its own positive and negative part. You see, in northern Nigeria umm, before we are doing many ah there is many ah ah government that came and pass and most people are struggle for power before power is only in the hands of the military but now since May 1999 when the democratic government began people are more of power so that struggle to see that I become the leader I think is one of the issues that make ah the (the, the, the) conflict between the Muslim and Christians because when you look at it, there is some part of the country or there is some part of the state or tribe that has more population and democracy is more population. So, many people that I think that are of the minorities that of the opinion that we are Muslim or that they are Christian vice-versa that is what is happening in the in the northern part of the country. I think that ah that is the most essential significant factors that cause conflict between-is struggles for power.

KN5 [903-967]

Politics and the proliferation giving to the religious leaders

KN6 [1017-1396]

so, there is many factors that ah that contribute to towards ah towards this conflicts between Christians and Muslims in northern Nigeria, for example, sometimes political issues maybe can participate in this issue and sometimes the level of poverty, illiteracy all those are examples of the ah though that contribute towards these conflicts between Christians and the Muslim.

KN7 [1877-2298]

Well ehm, the first reason behind this is that ehm, we have been unable to understand the fact that yes, we are brothers and we should live as one and ehm, the people let me say, fueling this things are not only, not only Islamic leaders we have, it has its political influence in it and more so the so called Islamic or let me say the religious extremist, those are this people, those are the people fueling the conflict

KN8 [1012-1192]

Basically it is religious issue, majority of the Muslims are willing to protect their religion while the Christians on the other side are also willing to protect their religion.

KN9 [1788-2075]

Well basically, the main reason for this chaos is as a result of, I would say it is lack of understanding. There is no consensus between these two religions. If there were understanding and conformity I believe that this will be eliminated, it is nothing serious. So what is the second?

KN10 [1517-2099]

Eh the first reason is that in this northern Nigeria, you know, Muslims are the majority and the Christians we can say are the minority. So you can find that in some, in some part of the northern is the teaching, the teaching of the Christians that what they have in mind, what I mean is what they have in mind is that Muslims are their enemies, and they now observe that they are also the majority, so they would always have bear it in mind that how they can ah maybe they could decrease the population of the Muslims for them to dominate, for them one day to dominate the nation.

KN11 [1029-1268]

All is ignorance and most of our people we don't really understand the actual teaching of Islam most especially because Islam and Christianity are heavenly religions so if we understand them perfectly I think there would be no conflicts.

KN12 [1075-1134]

In a nut shell, I can say ignorance and political reasons.

KN13 [1379-1885]

Hmm, I could say it is a communication barrier, in communication barrier in the sense that the Christians likewise even the Muslims, there are no proper communication channel to sit down and actually conceptualize their differences when some major sticking point arrive arise, so this communication channel need to be put in place. I think if this is put in place, in places like Jos which have been fueling crisis within area, this would limit the issues of crisis between the Muslims and the Christians.

KN14 [1026-1416]

Yes, the conflicts between Muslims and non Muslims in northern Nigeria is misunderstanding their religions, because if the Muslims understand the teaching of the prophet Mohammed (SAW) they won't ah engage in those conflicts. Likewise Christians, Christians also do the same thing because there's no ah there's no place in the Bible that says you can fight those that are not Christians.

KN15 [1769-2720]

Uhmhm the reason behind, you know, growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims, you know, especially in northern Nigeria is that is due to some misunderstandings, so there are, you know, some acts that maybe Muslims, you know, do believe in it which the non-Muslims, you know, take it as something that will directly affect their lives, so they don't you know take it as a favour so and it use to at times grow you know some conflict between them in the process that whenever a Muslim comes up with something maybe that it favours him through his religion so I don't think that a non-Muslim will take it as a favour, so they use to have some misunderstanding in that process and you know the reason behind fuelling of these conflicts is that government use to indirectly interfere and there are some you know businessmen and some rich people that use to sponsor their people be it Muslims or Christians to be at times making those conflicts.

KN16 [1025-1087]

Uhmhm this reason can be politically, illiteracy and poverty.

KN17 [1874-1964]

The major factor that are influencing is actual is is sharing of power, tussle for power.

KN17 [1995-2256]

Its political, what I mean tussle for power is em the Muslim are seeing it that they are the majority and they don't want the Christians that are the minority to dominate and win them, so his is actually causing fracas among the two sects in northern Nigeria.

KN18 [3353-3679]

It is lack of knowledge and poverty, there is no knowledge of what even the Muslims eh Islam is all about and the teachings of Islam. I don't think the teaching of Islam teaches for conflict. Civility and Islamic civilisation implies tolerance okay, it implies tolerance, accommodation and ah and ah respect for human persons.

KN19 [2643-2822]

I think, to my own understanding, is lack of the understanding of the tenets of the religion, if truly they can understand the religion there won't be any conflicts between them.

KN20 [1479-2014]

Eh I think it's is not really about the religion It is more of the political, it is more of politics, our politicians use our religion as a dividing factor in order to break into I mean to cause some confusions among the people, but really most at times Christians and Muslims don't really have problems staying or living together but is just of the kind of the kind of political activities that take place in the country that's why you see maybe the politicians try to turn eh Muslims against Christians, Christians against Muslims.

KN21 [1414-1454]

Greed, ignorance, hatred, that's all.

KN22 [2407-2778]

Yeah that is what am saying, that is what am saying, because once there is poverty, illiteracy in the society, it could be a disease, it could be a menace whereby people are not educated Islamically even to the western education for them to know what is a taboo and what is not a taboo, for them to know the ethical conduct and what is not ethical conduct in the society

KN23 [1822-2004]

Well same, The Christians, there are people, there Christians who do not understand Christianity as the same with Muslims. So I believe no religion will agitate or promote violence.

KN23 [2045-2083]

Yah, ignorance to a very large extent

KN24 [1190-1421]

What I think over there is that most of the people that are practicing Islam right now are too extremists into the religion. They do not practice it the way the prophet is practicing it and the way he told us to be practicing it.

KN25 [2957-3484]

I think there is a lack of understanding between these two people. If you may recall in the holy Quran it is written, there was a verse that says lakum di nakum walliyyadin, it says you have your religion and I have mine. The implication of this is that right from onset there has been a clear line between how a Muslims should interact with a non-Muslim. And there have been laid down principles on how they should live together. I believe that if we have been obeying these laid down principles there would be no conflicts.

KN26 [1874-2200]

Whether we like it or not you know I always say it Islam is a religion of peace and likewise Christianity, the only problem is that I can say there is this laxity in leadership and when I mean leadership I don't mean leadership of the Nigerian state but largely leadership also among the Muslims umma that is most important.

KN27 [1567-2030]

Well the non-Muslims in northern Nigeria as we all know are people that have come to stay. As one Nigeria we are supposed to live in harmony and peace but the main reason behind this is lack of understanding. The lack of understanding between the Muslims and non-Muslims, you see, most of the, let me say, some of the northerners are of the belief that when you are a non-Muslim, you are of a lesser importance and in one way or the other you be a harm to Islam.

KN28 [1196-1662]

Of course I can say everyone knows that north entirely is probably meant for the Muslims. So the situation whereby the non-Muslims are actually located within that region definitely shows that they have their own personal issues apart from probably personal interests which brought them down to the north. But the factors which I believe could easily bring about these conflicts; we can just look at the economy probably the socio-cultural or the political issues.

KN30 [1003-1146]

This is its un-Islamic and even the true Christians know that it not from their teachings. There are interests that lead to all these issues.

KN31 [1386-1715]

Well I think this is mostly a disagreement that occurs or that exists among ah or between Muslims and Christians in terms of the differences in our religion. I know normally we have cultural differences but, I think, the major conflict that we have had and which has really affected our society is that of religious differences.

KN32 [691-761]

Eh greed, lack of understanding of the message of the both religions.

KN33 [844-1013]

It can be as a result of misunderstanding of teachings of the two religions. The factors may be as a result of ah political issues and maybe ignorance of the followers.

KN34 [856-974]

One, I can also attribute it to injustice. Secondly, the factors that are contributing to it is the political elites.

KN35. [1949-2126]

Actually there are a lot of factors but despite the fact that everything has been politicized and when politics enter anything there may be conflicts and conflict is necessary.

KN36 [1300-1449]

What is that will help to understand each other because even the prophet lived with non-Muslims and the rules and regulations are there to guide us.

KN36 [1497-1548]

The political elites, eh poverty and the illiteracy

KN37. [1052-1200]

I think it is just a mere politics, ok a mere politics and lack of political enlightenment from the common masses that is at the grassroots level.

KN38 [748-1017]

I do not believe that, to me people become what they want to become due to some certain factors, for example, the innate, I believe in innate, what will I say, the criminal tendencies in human beings but it has nothing to do with the proliferation of Islamic scholars.

KN39 [773-1053]

Actually we lack good governance in Nigeria. What I mean by we lack good governance in Nigeria is that we don't have a leadership, a leadership that will help Nigerians both Muslims and non-Muslims to bring them together to show them that there is no any difference between them.

KN40 [1018-2003]

Thank you very much. I observe that having conflict between Muslim and Christian firstly is because of the disagreement or misunderstanding of both of the religions. I believe in the olden days there was nothing like conflict between Muslims and Christians, but nowadays whatever their mallam discuss with them maybe in the church or in the mosque or wherever or in the Maulid, so I believe it is the misunderstanding of the religion and also the resources that maybe one side of the religion is just trying to have the majority of the resources or the power while the other side may just want to disagree with that. So it normally use to involve themselves in religious conflict crisis. Like the case study of Kaduna, Kaduna Zangon Kataf it happened that the origin of the people there was Hausa people, I mean Fulani people but Hausas came and the Fulanis there were the Muslims and the Hausa people came, they were just trying to claim the land due to the resources that are there.

KN41 [1218-1300]

I think this is instigated by lack of unity and the respect for other's religion.

KN42 [1525-1869]

The most important thing is lack of tolerance from both sects. There is no tolerance between both Christians and Muslims and the factors are they, they are political leaders, the political leaders are actually fuel this conflict so as to deviate peoples mind from national question, the unstable economy and all these things and what have you.

KN43 [1929-3059]

One of the reasons is politics. Our politicians use ethnic and tribal as well as religious divides to trigger conflicts in order to satisfy their selfish interest. Secondly, is ignorance, most of the people that engage in conflicts especially ethno-religious conflict if you look at it critically are not adequately educated. They are ignorant people who have never been to school or who have very shallow understanding of life, who have a very myopic understanding of what interfaith relation is all about. Religious divide is not a factor as far as I am concerned that one can use to wage war against his fellow, you know, Christians or Muslims. As a human being you have right to believe in whatever you want to believe. Because I am a Muslim, I would not say everybody must be a Muslim and because someone is a Christian would not dictate what faith I should follow. So you have a right to practice his own beliefs and I also have the right to practice my own belief. And we have also the right to live in the same climate, in the same environment peacefully and we respect the, you know, religious affiliations of one another.

KN44 [1211-1625]

To, the reason for this conflict has to do with ahh maybe lack of good understanding between them. I believe a good understanding hmm of the followers of these two religions will go a long way. Like I was saying the reason for the conflict has to do with lack of understanding between the followers of the two faiths. I believe if they can really understand each other, these kind of ah conflicts can be prevented.

KN45 [1230-1408]

I think ehh you can sum up the factors to political, sometimes it is not really a conflict between Christians and Muslims, it is a conflict that had a political undertone, yes.

KN46 [2649-2798]

Mis-governance. If there is good governance ah it does not envisage ah such conflicts between Christians and Muslims or Muslims and any non-Muslims.

KN47 [2142-3175]

Yes, looking from what happens in the settlement whereby the government simply finds the mixed ah mixture of people ah Muslims population and non-Muslims population in Jos and Kaduna especially we can simply say that there are, you know, kind of nomenclatures that are set in place by the politicians. This is to say that there are political reasons behind it and then there are some economic reasons because when a Christian maybe is selling something in the area then a Muslim may become violent whenever there is a little bit of conflict between them then they would go and arson the properties of the other people that don't belong in their own religion. So these cases, these cases we are seeing in Kaduna and ehh in Jos and previously during election, post-election violence, in many other towns in northern Nigeria, there were situations whereby you can simply see youths vandalizing the properties of people without genuine reasons whether those people offended them at that time. So there are a lot of complex reasons for that.

KN48 [1161-1259]

So I think the main reason for that is lack of understanding and lack of respect for each other.

KN49 [1792-1983]

I think for, I think for that, I think its politics, for one, contributes a lot in such a scenario, politicians tend to engage divisive tendencies so as to get some of the things they want

KN50 [1255-1485]

Ahh I think the reason is intolerance of both sides means the Muslims and non-Muslims, contestation for power or economical reasons and then the factors fueling this conflict are, are political politicians, they are politicians.

KN51 [2433-4079]

Ahh the main reason behind conflicts between Muslims and Christians, like I have been saying, is because of the Christian aggression against Islam. If now Christians would mind their business, mind their words, they would not attack anything that is Islamic, they would not belittle the personality of the prophet (SAW), they would not encroach upon anything that is Islamic teaching like the Muslims are doing; in fact in Islam no Muslim is Muslim if at all he tells nonsense to anything that is Christianity. If he tells nothing about especially Jesus Christ (sallahu alayhim wa ala nabiyina). So at least even by reciprocity, Christians should respect Islam like Muslims are respecting Christianity. They should respect Muhammad (SAW) like Muslims do respect Jesus Christ. So if now Muslims or Christians should desist from activities which will endanger hatred between them and Muslims, definitely everything will go in the right direction. But this is one of the main factors, even one of the Christian workers Rev. Blyden was expected to have said in his own words the Muslim propagandist held Jesus Christ with respect amounting to reverence. They call him the word of God, the messiah, the one exalted here and in the hereafter, but on the other hand, the Christians now call Muhammad (SAW) as a liar, as an imposter, an arch imposter, a man full with evils. He said this as a result of self-obligation. So because of this if Muslims will now desist from attacking anything Christianity at least the Christians on their own part they should do the same. So this is the main factor, responsible for fueling these conflicts in this country.

KN52 [1870-2038]

Well, I think this has to do more with, what I will call, the manipulation of religion. I don't want to believe that Muslims and Christians are naturally antagonists.

KN53 [1959-2522]

Disagreement between them is that they don't believe and they don't want to agree with each other that we are serving the same Allah, which some people agree on their own side but the most, let me just say, some agree while some do not agree. And the fueling source of this conflict between the Christians and Muslims is that they are taking advantages of the Christians in this northern land and they do not want to agree that yes this is Muslim land and they don't want to compile with each other, they don't want to reason with the compilation of each other.

KN54 [737-773]

Maybe it is lack of understanding

KN55 [870-1270]

The factors that are fueling these conflicts or let me say the reasons behind the growing conflicts between Muslims and Non-Muslims especially Christians in northern-Nigeria are first illiteracy because most of the people that are engaging themselves in such activities are illiterates, they lack education and also lack of understanding that is Misunderstanding between the Muslims and non-Muslims.

KN56 [1293-1592]

Ok, actually what I think is the main reason behind the conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria are many. They are lack of understanding, illiteracy, lack of tolerance, bad leadership, mismanagement, embezzlement, and the rest, corruption to mention but few. These are my...

KN57 [1403-1925]

You see your first question is that there is difference in system, Christian they believe in their own system, Muslims also believe in their own system. So each one, if there is no tolerance between them, there must be a conflict. Also I am sure that our leadership play a vital role in such issues. Also you see you talk about the factors that are fueling this conflict also still the government or the leadership still play a vital role in this fueling the conflict in Nigeria. All we know that it is practicable.

KN58 [3470-5190]

There are a lot of factors that are fueling the crises. So let's start from the crisis. You see, the crisis was created. It was not, it did not happen as a coincidence. The crisis was created because of the fact that those who are interested in creating the crisis observe that there is high tendency of those in Islam that are ignorant of the true teachings of Islam and those Christians that are even ignorant of what is Christianity. So they try to kind of create what we call mutual suspicion between the two religions by instigating them that Muslims are your enemies or Christians are your enemies why don't you attack them so that there would be crisis. Take a look at what is happening in Jos, for instance, or what is even happening in other parts of northern Nigeria, all those crisis were created. If you take a look at the history of the Jos crisis, it all began on Friday, during a Friday prayer, where a Christian woman that dressed nakedly or half nakedly passed in front of a congregational Friday prayer. That was a deliberate act and she must have been sent by somebody. That ignited what you refer to as the time bomb that was planted. Before you know it a conflagration of the crisis now started whereby killings and maimings of innocent Muslims and Christians was carried out. In the first place, why did she pass a congregational prayer? She of course knows it is wrong. At least even if you are in the north, wherever, if Muslims are praying, you know that it is wrong for you to pass in front, let alone a woman that was dressed half nakedly. Definitely you know that would cause havoc. And that happened and then they took advantage of that because they are prepared for that. So that is it.

KN59 [1135-2827]

Hummmm, to me and to my understanding, the main reason behind these conflicts between these two is just the belief, is it belief? Can I use the word belief? Actually there is this contradiction that both religions think that own is superior. Superior in sense that the Muslim think they are on the right path while the Christians think they are on the right path. So based on this little belief then there is this ahm conflict, you understand. The major thing to me, that brings about this conflict or fueling this conflict is the clerics we have as in the Imams and the Pastors because virtually everybody has own followers and when they are preaching they condemn the other sects that this din didn't want your progress, didn't believe in you, didn't believe in your books and didn't kind of believe in your kind of prophecy and other things like that. But I as a Muslim I know it is wrong, it is not the major factor, actually right from the inception there is this conflict, you understand, but as a knowledgeable person you have to kind of accommodate all religions, you understand, and accept them despite that there is this lapses or this alterations in the Bible because I as a Muslim I believe in the Bible because it is a book relieved to a prophet that is prophet Jesus (alayhisalatu wa salam). So during their own time they used the Bible as their own Holy book, but due to modernization, globalization then there are alterations in the Bible, which brings about this conflict and misunderstanding. In the north the major factors that lead to this conflict or misunderstanding between the Muslims and Christians are the cleric men which are the Imam and the Pastors.

KN60 [1761-2495]

The main reason I can say is lack of full knowledge of religion. If you have full religious knowledge, there is no way you can see a mallam or a true pastor involving himself in this kind of religious unrest in Nigeria or any other places. Let me cite an example of Nigeria where I am living. You cannot see a mallam, a pronounced Islamic scholar or even a student who knows, who read through the Islamic teachings involving himself. Many a times the people involved are the vagabonds, the youths who do not possess both the western education and Islamic knowledge. So I can say illiteracy is the backbone, is the main factor that cause or make these youths to involve themselves in religious crises and religious unrest in Nigeria.

KN61 [766-1016]

Actually eh what cause this eh problem when I can look at it ah is lack of understanding on the religion itself. When one understands the religion, there is no need for him to fight among his people, tribal, or even counterparts within the society.

KN62 [2279-4307]

Well these are like three questions put together, let say, ah let's look at the first part of the question, reasons behind the growing conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims especially Christians in northern Nigeria. Well the first thing is illiteracy. I believe that illiteracy is the cohort; illiteracy is, if you like, the culprit behind all these things. Ehh looking at the ah boko haram insurgency, for example, you know it is something that actually brought about eh by this illiteracy. Most of the youths that were employed or taken into these ah things are illiterates. We generally believe in that and besides that, we believe that the Euro-American world is behind this, yah it's of course a certain ah let's say a speculation but a proven one, a proven speculation, therefore, it becomes a theory now, a theory if I may use this expression. A theory that people there in the western world are fuelling this very conflict and ah maybe this is the reason why so many people are actually taken into this, ah let's say, conflict, insurgency and other things. Money is used, we know this, we see this, people especially the earliest members of boko-haram those who came, who subscribe to the movement early or earlier on, they came with money, they came with American dollars, US dollars, ah, let say, ah inviting people to the movement yah, so we know that there must be a certain strong organization behind this and people have been speculating that it is the Euro- American world, simple. Ahha ha these are the reasons, maybe this is, these are the reasons, illiteracy and then the, the western world. And then the factors that are fueling these conflicts, precisely, these factors are not far from this illiteracy, the same illiteracy I talked about before. Ehh with good knowledge, with good ehh let's say, understanding of life, nobody can reasonably, sensibly take his, take himself into this very movement. I don't believe that ah there is another thing beside this illiteracy. These are my let's say ah ehen.

KN63 [2269-4343]

You know one thing I can attribute to that is that there is no proper understanding of Islam by the non-Muslims, you know, for example now, if you go to an, if you go to maybe to, to a Muslim state, or let's just say an Islamic dominated state, you know, being a Christian or being a any other religion, you need to understand Islam, huh understand the way of life huh, you know because the way, okay like in the northerners now, in the north here in Nigeria, you know, Islam has molded their lives, they live their own way or their life entirely you know ahh in an Islamic way of life. So that has gone a long way to shape their life. So somebody coming from elsewhere now, coming down to maybe the north and condemning it you know is an abuse, to a Muslim ma, is not even accepted that maybe a Muslim coming up and say this thing is wrong, huh, I mean which is a laid down rule in Islam no. It is not accepted. So maybe those Christians that are coming up here in the north, they need to learn their way of life, they need to learn their culture that is one of the cause of the problem huh in the north, there is no proper understanding. Ok like in the case maybe somebody abusing the Qur'an, for example, or maybe tearing the Qur'an or taking the Qur'an as a paper or toilet roll or whatever, it is not, all those things are not accepted in Islam huh. If he or she should have the proper knowledge or that this thing is wrong, he will never, you know, do such a thing or abuse, huh, huh maybe abuse the prophet, for example, this is very, very wrong you know or reprimand the, the sahabas of the prophet, this is very wrong. You know if to say that maybe you know these things, you know, if you don't want any trouble, you want peace, you want to live in peace, then you don't have to, you have to abide by those things as well, you know, something like that. So that is one of the cause of maybe, maybe ah this ah crisis between Muslims and Christians in the north. There is no proper understanding of Islam or no understanding of the culture of the, of Islam as whole.

KN64 [2322-2470]

Is ignorance kawai, Ignorant about the real ideologies of our different religions we have in Nigeria is what causes this problem. It is ignorance.

KN65 [2366-3589]

Ahm, okay the reason why there is more conflict these days between the Christians and Muslims in the northern Nigeria is attributed to poverty, lack of education, and political sentiments. So those are the factors that are responsible for the proliferation of ah violence among the northern community, you understand. So you can see from the 1999 to date, we have more crisis than ever in the history of Nigeria, you understand. This crisis arises from what, ethnic, social, tribal and religion crisis. They you understand. So the factors that are responsible for all those crisis that is emanating in northern Nigeria, is linked to one: political sentiment, our political eh partisan politicians, use conflicts as a tool in gaining trust and confidence of the masses, you understand, and with the high rate of illiteracy, we fail vividly to understand things or we cannot even think straight to make use of our common sense, you understand, in this part of Nigeria. We do not have the adequate informed knowledge. And thirdly, poverty level is very, very high, so we just believe we take whatever that comes our way. So those are the factors responsible for the major crisis we are having in the northern Nigeria today.

KN67 [789-972]

Most of the factors are political, economic factors and ah few of religious because most of them they are using the religious as a camouflage, but the real factors are not religious.

KN68 [736-808]

The factors that are fueling this conflict are conspiracy and politics.

KN69 [2459-2888]

Between Muslim and non-Muslim in northern Nigeria is that lack of mutual understandings, lack of mutual understanding in the sense that we are having the same territory and we happen to be Nigerians, despite the fact that we are having different religions, it is better for us to understand each other, it is better for us to understand our differences and translate the differences of each other so that we can live in harmony.

KN70 [2199-2746]

Well actually, most of the problem is that ahm a reflection of the state of Nigeria ah that state of Nigerian, government are not doing enough to really address some fundamental issues, issues like employment, issues like formulating favorable policy that would aim at reducing the rate of poverty among all segments of the society. Certain conflicts might appear religious at the surface of the word, but if you look critically at some those conflicts, you will discover that it is essentially economic not religious in the sense of religious.

KN71 [3999-4990]

Yes, as I have said it, it is this four issues that I mentioned before and the third if you should put it is this issue of tribalism, I feel I should be proud of my religion that I am a Muslim alhamdulillah and let the other party feel that he is a non-Muslim alhamdulillah let him go on his own way, but when I don't understand the religion, I don't understand the principles, well he don't understand the principles, so we will look at ourselves as enemies. In the midst are our scholars either from the Islamic or from the Christian domain that at times, their preaches, their words are even more aggravating than bringing things back to normal, and then of course this issue of divide and rule again of politicians. Everybody wanted to hold his people to have power, to have relevance, you cannot do that until you have your certain domain that you belong to, people that will back you. So in so doing, you mobilize of course the illiterate among the two parties to go against whatever.

KN72 [3599-3942]

Yes. The reason that eh the growing conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims especially the Christians in northern Nigeria are political aspect. They are political aspect. So I think the main factor is class domination in politics that is what contributed to the involvement of fightings or declaring a war against Christians by the Muslims.

KN72 [4020-4656]

No. When we look at the nature of northern Nigeria, Muslims are predominant so that is why in the positions of power, they are also dominating. A part of the Christians they were minorities, being they were minorities or they are minorities, they think that Muslims have always dominated them in the place of politics that is the main factor. Another factor is that inequality, or in equal distribution of the resources by the power holders. When we look at the distribution of the resources is based on who is your people. Most of the leaders engage in showing priorities over their ethnicity or their section that is what cause this.

KN73 [2123-2415]

The conflict between Christians and Muslims ah really is ah, how do I call it, ahm the serious it has been for long, but the only reason is just illiteracy, just illiteracy. Most of these people are always inciting or insulting one religion or the other. That's the only reason between them.

KN74 [6361-7473]

So, the basic reason that growing the conflict or fueling the conflict between Muslims and the Christians or non-Muslims in Nigeria basic factor is politics, politics because here now in Nigeria we find ourselves in situation where there is two different groups and our leaders use to, use such kind of ah factor that is politics to make things grow in-between Muslims and non-Muslims because they find out that if there is mutual understanding between Muslims and non-Muslims, they can't achieve their goals and eh having whatever they want to do and the problem that our, the basic reason that would reflect that is whenever there is a leader in Nigeria you find out that the religious leader are always very close with the leaders, yes, they are always together with them both Muslims and Christians and whatever and whenever they did something wrong, such kinds of our leaders use to eh, the leaders you are using them to cool the temper of our followers therefore the y know that whenever there is mutual understanding between Muslims and Non-Muslims, they will not achieve their goals I think this is the

KN74 [7759-8003]

Yes, that is what is happening because if you can remember the first conflict that we face, that we have start, the first conflict that we are facing in Nigeria is that during eh can I mention the leader that such things happen in his era or

KN74 [8026-8344]

If you can remember, it happen during eh General Mohammed Babangida that's what had happened in Kaduna, that is Zangon Kataf between Muslims and non-Muslims. If you look at such kind of an incidence you find our is a politics, is a politics, is nothing behind, you can't add or subtract anything out of that reason.

KN75 [6520-6940]

Religious conflicts in northern Nigeria or in Nigeria as a whole, there is never, we have any religious conflict or Christian-Muslim conflict, we have never had it. Go back to history, they will tell you. Christians and Muslims have never have any conflict or any misunderstanding between themselves. The problem we are having in the northern Nigeria is tribalism and political conflict that lead to religious conflict.

KN75 [7204-8661]

That is what I am explaining, the problem growing behind the conflict between the Muslim and non-Muslims especially the Christian, in Nigeria there is nothing like Christian- Muslim conflict. We have ethnicity conflict, tribalism and the political problems that emanate to bring conflict. Let us assume, let me give you a typical example, if in north eh let me take northern Nigeria as an example, if a Muslim contest as a if a Muslim contested, stand as a President in the northern Nigeria, it will be a threat to the southern Nigeria whispering their own people that they should try to vote their own candidate as a Muslim because all there believe is that Islam is only suppressing the Christianity, the non-Muslim in the northern Nigeria. You take Kaduna for example, you take Jos for example, you take state like Benue for example whereby all their belief Kaduna state is for the Christianity, it is not for the Muslim, Jos is for the Christian, is not for the Muslim, Benue state is for the Christian, is not for the Muslim, then you go to places like Maiduguri, they have 30% or 40% Christians by which there are distorting their mind to make sure that look what the Muslim are trying to do in the northern Nigeria is not supposed to be a religion just look at, during the time of Buhari, campaign in Sokoto they even made allegation that Buhari is planning to Islamize Nigeria that anybody who is coming as a Muslim, is trying to Islamize Nigeria.

KN76 [3188-5540]

Well, eh there are many reasons behind these conflicts, actually I can say the main reasons behind this conflict between Muslims and Christians in the northern Nigeria actually started as an economic conflict between the two societies. If you take an example of Zangon Kataf when there was Zangon Kataf riot, actually there was nothing like religion in that conflict all you can see is something purely economic. A native community is at a disadvantage economically with a settled community. The settled community is the Hausa Muslim community in Zangon Kataf while the native are the native Zangon Kataf that is non-Muslim yah Katafawa. So there was a great disparity between the two communities. You can see that all the economic activities were dominated by the Hausa Muslims while the Christians they only ahh walk in the farms and as laborers and attendance in the shops of the Hausa Muslims, so that is what brought about that conflict and if you look at what happen in Plateau state, you can see all that has economic undertones because the economy of Plateau state was dominated by Hausa Muslim community, then the Igbo community that are Christians, then the native communities are also there at disadvantage and they are mostly laborers and civil servants. So if I can say that to one of the, looking at the reasons, I can agree that ahh okay the growing conflict then maybe as a result of that, that resulted to a growing ahh distrust between the two communities. The Muslims ah the Christians in those communities were agitating for ahh having ahh yah actually having economic advantage or more participation in the economy while the Hausa's communities or the Muslims communities are seeing it that this people are trying to destroy us because we are not Christians, vice-versa. So that conflicts always have some spillover effects in other states. Like when there was Zangon Kataf there was a spillover effect in Kano. When you look at all the conflicts, religious conflicts in northern Nigeria, you will see that if you trace the origin of the crisis, you will find some economic undertone, even though you cannot separate the religion from the economy because it is all about groups: Muslim groups, Christian groups, one is felt threatened by the other economically and that economic can translate into many aspect of life.

KN77 [10049-11114]

Alhamdulillah. The main reason that is resulting to the conflict between Christians and Muslims in this very country or northern Nigeria is injustice, injustice because we have seen and I could remember during the time of Obasanjo the former president of Nigeria, there was a movement of re-establishing ahh sharia state in the northern Nigeria and that sharia is only going to affect the Muslims, not the non-Muslims, so at that very period of time some of the Christians started violating showing all sort of things or unhappiness on why they will never allow the Muslims to practice the sharia. So this is injustice because in life each and everybody has the right to practice the religion he is convinced with. So the main problem or the main cause of the conflict between the Muslims and non-Muslims is injustice, is injustice. As somebody is being given right to practice his own religion, he should also allow other person to practice his religion that is how life is. So that is the main reason and the factors that are resulting, that are resulting to ahh

KN77 [11189-12011]

Yes, those factors are one, they are many, there are many factors that are fueling this very conflict. One of the factors, one of the major factors is misunderstanding, misunderstanding between the two major groups. You understand, yes, some of the non-Muslims are misunderstanding the concept of Islamic teachings. Therefore, they are always against whatever is related to Islam and sharia, so this is one of the greatest factors. Second factor, as I told you, is injustice, you understand, injustice. Each and every given person who is living in the country says that they are saying there is freedom of religion, do you understand, an expression should be given right or due right to practice his or her own religion, do you understand? Hmm number three that is the third factor is differences in our cultural values.

KN78 [3539-4800]

Well quite a number of conflict in the north between the Christians and the non-Muslims, quite often are not religious per say. Some of them are, could be explained using the rate of un-employment in the society. For instance, you have graduates, you have youths, you have large percentage of youths who are not employed, who are not really participating in income generating activities. So for that situation you are now creating favorable environment for violence, but intrinsically the factors could not necessary religious, it could be economic, it could be political, it could be ethical because I wonder sometimes when people say religious, they are other, you discover that in a environment where you have conflicts, certain group of people are not really participating like for instance the Yorubas who have the predominant number of Muslims as well, when there is a conflict between average Muslim Hausa man and non-Muslims, you discover that the Yoruba man who is a Muslim or other tribes man who is are Muslims are not affected. So that is why I said it is very difficult to give it one way explanation, but at the background it could be ethical, at the background it could be other factors, but for me, I don't really think it is religious.

KN79 [2028-2258]

Ahh, is poor democratic leadership, as I said, is poor leadership, that is what is normally fueling the conflict among Muslims and non-Muslims or Muslims ah people in northern Nigeria that is between Muslims and non-Muslims, yes.

KN80 [2238-3460]

So this, what contribute this is-there is a number of factors which contributed this state of affairs, so first of all, is they lack of understanding of the teaching of religion itself both the Muslims and Christians. If to say our Nigeria Muslims or northern Nigeria Muslims and Christians per se, have the comprehensive understanding of the teaching of their religions, a lot of crisis will not have happen in this country or in this part of the country because both the religion of Islam and Christianity teaches peace. We live together in peace and harmony and none of the religions encourages conflict or anything that emm ah any violence, so the Muslims and Christians in Nigeria nowadays are more concerned on the on their own inclination more than what their religion commanded them to do. So if we can refer back to the historical stages of Islam during the life time of prophet Muhammad (SAW), so we can see that since from the advent of Islam prophet (SAW) lived with non-Muslims peacefully and they interact together peacefully without any intimidation or coercion. So if we are to apply these principles nowadays, so I think all these problems will be discarded out from the Muslims and Christians community.

KN81 [2230-2409]

Hmm I think these religious preachers from both sides that is Muslims and Christians preachers, so they facilitate the conflicts, ignorance, economic tension and host of others.

KN82 [2757-3636]

In northern Nigeria, as you said, there is a growing conflict involved between Muslims and non-Muslims. I will highlighted initially, as we highlighted initially, these conflicts were as a result of misconception of the religion itself that is first. Secondly, is due to political interest, politics, it plays significant role in making the Muslims and non-Muslims to misperceive themselves or to disagree with one another because if you properly look at the setting in the northern Nigeria you will find some places that have a combined faith, I mean you find a household that half of it are Muslims another part are Christians, but they live in peace and harmony without any crisis. But in some places or in most places where these problems are more intense, you find out that the problems are emanated from the politicians, the fuel the crisis because of political interest.

KN83 [1990-2206]

So ahm initially there is poor leadership and unemployment, illiteracy and the illiterate preachers. I think these are the factors that influencing conflicts in northern Nigeria between the Muslims and non-Muslims.

KN84 [2637-3216]

Ehe this I think I can only categorize these factors into two different factors. I think there are external factors which are now known as the jihadist from Muslim countries and what Christian organizations wannan Muslim countries and Christian organizations, western power and so on and so forth. I think the external aspects of these factors are fueling these ehen ehen ehen conflicts. So I think they internal aspect, the internal factors of this will be, you know, internal in violence, you know, ahh while the internal violence preaching from so called religious preachers.

KN85 [1215-1635]

Ahm one of the reasons for ahh the growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims ah is mistrust. There is mistrust between Muslims and non-Muslims in the country not just the north and this is mostly brought about by the activities of some preachers and politicians. They politicize religion as such there is mistrust between people and there is growing amm occurrences of conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims

ZA1 [1654-2296]

No. I think the researcher should coin the question, what is the problem that bringing or raising issue of conflicts, not the issue of Islam. The issue of conflicts that happens in everywhere in the country, in the nations wide is the problem of corruption. (phone ringing) Those in a low class, they were been cheated by those in the high class, but now instead for the westerners to come clearly and indicate this is the real problem, but they try to want to blackmail Islam so that non-Muslims should not converted to Islam or should regard Islam as a religion of barbaric. It is not the matter of hmmm, it is the matter of corruption.

ZA2 [1203-1676]

While I think the main, by the observation of the entire society today, we say at least based on this worldly affair activities that manifested to this particular problem today we call differences in the religion sector, people, some people make use of this religion as a source of their income, so in line to this, they will not want, they will always have criticism from one another so that they will be able to benefit from what they are needing, so that's only I think

ZA3 [2630-3868]

Ans: As I said earlier, the north was known to be a very peaceful region of the country right from time. Even when the colonial masters came, they found them in organized society and that is why when they came, the three major regions: the north, the south west, and the south east. The north were the most organized probably due to the emm background of Islamic religion that has come with them from the northern part of the world, from their north that is from Niger, chad, so that has led to peaceful and even right form time, there were still Christians living among them, but of recent because of the emm this there is emm disrespect to any, one found to be practicing the religion, it might not be unconnected to what is happening world over where Islam all over the world is being, is being trampled upon. So especially when you come down home, you find out that emm regardless of the sufferings hmm that we are undergoing through as a result of bad governance or bad leadership, you will still find people aligning to their faith and damning whatever circumstance. Probably in recent times, there have been main conflict in the northern part of the especially some are politically motivated and some have some external factors.

ZA4 [7452-8451]

Toh Alhamdulillah you know, we have many reasons behind this, depends on the personal beliefs of the Muslims towards the non-believers and also the personal beliefs of the unbelievers towards the Muslims, you understand, you know every believer as a Muslim without you having that deep knowledge about Islam, if you dont have, as long as they say they are unbeliever people understand that every unbeliever is an evil person, every-is totally an evil person. Every unbeliever, you cannot get anything good from him rather than destruction and in the end after all he is going to hell fire. So there is nothing you can get from unbeliever. This is a wrong understanding. Islam does not teach this because Islam teaches good behavior even though you have unbeliever, the way you behave to him can even call you to your day, call you to Islam, but the way you behave to him, you can expel him misunderstanding the concept of your of your deed. So it is never the teachings of prophet Muhammad (SAW).

ZA5 [2922-4121]

Thank you very much, the factor, one of the factors that is fueling the crisis between Muslims and non-Muslim in Nigeria is based on self-interest, you understand, interest is very this thing inside because everybody is fighting for his own right and lack of understanding between the two religions because if you look at it, the scholars, the real scholars never preach about jihad, you understand, if you look at it prophet Muhammad (SAW) during his time when he was in Medina, he stayed with Jews and Christians in Medina, but I don't see reason why people in Nigeria will say that this one is a Muslim, this one is a Christian. Today if you go to southern as in South West that is the Yoruba side, you will see in between Muslims and Christians, the are living together without any misunderstanding because there is mutual agreement between them and there is cordial relationship and Islam did not, does not preach against other religions, you understand, because there is a verse in Islam in Suratul Qaf (he recites the Qur'an) if you Want to do your own religion, do your own with me too I will do my own. So because of that it is just due to the self-interest. That is what is causing this.

ZA6 [1761-4904]

Ahm I think this is, it is due to the self-interest we have in, self interest in the aspect of politics and self-interest even in the aspect of religion. Ahm the religious aspect you find out that the Muslims and the Christians only engage in, they only engage in in most of the part of the Qur'an or the Bible that favors whatever they are doing at the moment, so whatever does not favor them, any teaching that does not favor them at that moment, they will keep it and follow their self-interest because human being is very selfish. But in Nigeria presently, ours is much, we are very selfish. If we are to follow the teachings of both the Qur'an and the Bible, then I don't think there will be conflicts of interest, but the thing is everybody wants to benefit in whatever he is doing, so that self-interest is what is causing the conflicts because in the Bible and the Qur'an, the Qur'an preaches amm peaceful coexistence between the Muslims and the non-Muslims that is the Christiana and even the Jews, and I believe even the Bible preaches the same thing. So the self interest in the aspect of religion now when the, for example, when the Qur'an says, when the Qu 'ran tells you, you should try and pick this and drop that, for example, am not trying to bring out a quote from the Qur'an now, am not bringing our a quote, am given a lay man example now and the Qur'an, the Bible says pick this, drop this and pick this. If that thing the Muslims is dropping would benefit the Christians and will not benefit him and the Qu 'ran tells him drop it, he will want to pick it because it will benefit the other persona and it will not benefit him, but whenever he comes to a teaching where it benefits him, you will see him showing his religious vibrancy now trying to show the world that he is a good follower of the Muslim faith. So that selfish interest is what is killing us and that is what is causing the conflict. And in the aspect of politics now, we are being manipulated by the politicians especially is obvious is very obvious in Nigeria, manipulation of religion in Nigeria is the order of the day, but thank God with the change we are hoping we might see some little changes. The top political officers just to protect their economic base or to promote their political carrier or something or to get a kind of a political benefit they tend to manipulate the ignorant hmm ,and I said from the beginning lack of knowledge is what causing this, hhm. They tend to manipulate and it is easy to manipulate the Nigeria man with religion than any other thing. If you come to the north and bring religion you come as a Muslim this that, you say this is making a blasphemous statement about Islam you tend to get followership for people to go and get that person. The same thing with the Christian faith, you get, so it is easy for leaders to manipulate their ignorant, the masses and you find out even those that are educated to certain level so I believe the main reason behind the growing conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims especially Christians in northern Nigeria is self-interest both religiously and politically.

ZA7 [2215-2701]

Well personally some people have said its political and I sincerely believe its political because if you look at Nigeria before democracy we lived harmoniously despite the fact that Muslims have been Nigeria and Christians have also been in Nigeria even pagans, so I don't believe it is religious crisis, religious conflict rather I want to believe it is political due to some set of people trying to impose their selfish interest and cover it up with religion as conflict that is all.

ZA8 [1504-2033]

Ehm, in my own opinion, I think the major problem that is happening between, the major factor that is causing the problem between Muslims and Christians in the northern part is politics, yes because of all this politicians. They fuel these things because of what they will gain. Some people don't gain anything without all this crisis and riots and whatsoever. They gain when there are those things, so they fuel this things and using all those people that are jobless and have nothing to do. So I think it is politics majorly.

ZA9 [1804-1924]

It is just one thing, I believe, is just tolerance. We are not tolerant of our religious activities at all, tolerance.

ZA10 [2201-3375]

Before this time, formally north were seen known to be peaceful, peace coexisting states. They love one another, they love other people from other part of the country, not you being a Christian or any other religion, they see you as one because that is the teaching of Islam. So but recently people misunderstanding of the way some activities are going and the influence of even some political men like the government has like intoxicated most of the unbelievers that is the Christian minds about Muslims because they see Muslims like terrorist. So with that when you see someone like terrorist, anything he tells you, any advice he gave you, anything that is of benefit to you that you think you can get from that person you will just be seeing it as if is a way of, is just a trap so you will never appreciate that person. And the fact that you are living in that region does not really mean you are actually from that place or you've occupied up, you've become a full member of that region. So I don't see any reason with what were the growing conflicts. So I see it's just a political way of bringing misunderstanding between ahh the both religions, both parties, yes.

ZA11 [1972-3122]

Well Christianity as a whole, when you try to look at it, the rivalry has been right from the unset due to the way things have been going, the westernization and the rest, so all is all about the perspective, the perspective the Christians are having about the Muslims now is quite different from the teachings and the morals. It is an instigation in which is happening now. When you take a look at the church or the Christianity itself, a lot of their scholars, let me put it that way, or their clerics, they don't have knowledge that much about the religion, but due to the fact that is the centre of business and other things, they tend to open churches and you see churches around and then those delivering the sermon and teaching the ways of their books, give them the different motion about what they ought to know about Islam. So they tend to condemn Islam based on the western understanding which they do have and due to that instigation, every Christian begin to look at the Muslims in a different sect, and the Muslims get provoked about that though it's not decent quite alright, so I think that is one of the basic reason for the conflict

ZA12 [1362-1721]

I think is just, the basic thing is understanding, there is no understanding about, I mean the Christians don't understand how the Islam religion goes and also that is vice versa. Then the other one you said what, the factors that are fueling the conflicts. I think the ethnic then maybe, how do I put it, ethnic and tribalism, I think is one of the factors.

ZA13 [1690-2108]

Yah, on the first basis or the first reason behind it is understanding between we and the, I mean between the Muslims and the non Muslims and one of the factors that are fueling it I think parenting is the first part that make it, if the child is being brought up from a Muslim family or brought up from a Christian family, he is trying build on that or to grow up on that form and believe that is the way of living.

ZA14 [1606-1648]

It is lack of understanding between them.

ZA15 [30793425]

Part of the reasons between Muslims and Christians, yes, one is, they feel as if the Muslims have taking over everything so they are at the helm of affairs, they have taking over everything, so they feel they should also be allowed to come and give their own or say their own ehh that is what I believe and kuma lack of trust is also part of it.

ZA16 [1334-1774]

Yah the, you see, the reason why there is conflict between Muslims and Christians is that because we leave or we avoid, let me not use the word, avoid, we forget the teaching of Islam, had it been we emulate and we practice the teaching of Islam, these conflicts will not come up, because during the time of the prophet, we see how he relates with the non-Muslims. So leaving the teaching of Islam that is what brought all these conflicts.

ZA17 [1105-1135]

Selfish interest, tribalism

ZA18 [1402-1948]

Well actually there are political factors. People always want to hide under the religion to carry out their mischief, you get what I am saying, so based on that they will use some ahhhhh what adjective should i-I don't know, they will hide, they will form some kind of caricature, you understand, they will hide in one corner and use others as scapegoats, you get what I am saying, scapegoats they will be somewhere hiding, then they will push this ones, when they kill them is not their own cup of tea. So they are there to get what they want.

ZA19 [1812-3098]

Well, actually just as I have said earlier, people are actually ah people ah ok what do I think is the reason behind the growing conflicts? Well actually the growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims, the Christians in northern Nigeria, it depends on several factors. First and foremost, I can place my own perception on lack of understanding and the use of political elite actually to incite this kind of hatred or religious bigotry between these two different sects or religions. But actually Muslims and Christians were harmoniously living together during, if you look at the antecedent or historical evolution of the Nigerian state, Muslims are attending Christian Xmas so also Christians are coming to Muslim festivals after fasting and so many other Muslims occasions. So actually Muslims and Christians before were living harmoniously, and these factors I mean the factors from the other aspect of the question which you said ah what do I think are the fueling factors, well actually ah most of these factors are not unconnected with the political reasons actually, political and economical reasons So political elites were using so many methods in other to incite or to fuel these grievances between the Christians and the Muslims particularly in the northern Nigeria.

ZA20 [1269-1626]

Well particularly in northern Nigeria probably I might say clash of interests, but in reality it is all about injustice from the angle of the leaders especially the northern leaders, especially with the influence of political powers. That is what is increasing this religious bigotry, regional mentality, creating political thugs all around and everywhere.

ZA21 [1026-1350]

To be specific that factors are politics. There is nothing between Christians and Muslims only that people hide behind the guise of Islam or Christianity to perpetrate their evilness, but to tell you there is no doctrine or no teaching either of Islam or Christianity that dictates fighting between Muslims or non-Muslims.

ZA22 [1291-1575]

Yah there is always a conflict between two opposite parties or two different religions wherever they exist. So there must be measures to put in place to resolve such a conflict. But the major thing that I think causes all that conflict is political interference of our politicians.

ZA23 [2278-2312]

Simply politicians and politics.

ZA24 [2405-3056]

To my own understanding, it is politics they are playing now. It is not that there-both Muslims and Christians that are fighting themselves they are fighting to enrich themselves to enrich their pockets because now when there is election to represent Nigeria Muslims will want to dominate the area Christians also want to dominate the positions, so all these things bring conflicts between Muslims and Christians. But majority that are fighting each other to fighting themselves they do not understand the concept of Islam because Islam says you should be in peace all the time even Christianity also preaches peace. None of them preaches violence.

ZA25 [2249-3551]

Ok. One of the main reasons that tend to fuel-behind the conflicts, the growing conflicts is that ah lack of mutual understanding that is majority of either religions or the adherents of other religions they hardly listen to the other party to know what actually their scriptures are saying especially from the Christian part. We've seen many Muslim clerics eh delving into Christian scripture, which is the Bible, trying to do serious analogy –comparison between the two, but unfortunately from the other side they tend to take the practice of many Muslims as if that is what the Islamic scriptures –the Qur'an dictates. So the hardly sit down to learn the real provisions or teachings of Islam from the authentic sources of the Qur'an and hadith and this gap of knowledge of the either religions from either of the sides tends to nurse the conflict. And some of the factors that tend to fuel it is politics. Yes, politicians they know that the more the two religions know their religions the less their power because it on these conflicts that they grow, their interests grow because majority of the politicians they only come into the open and proclaim a particular religion but in real fact they don't belong to either religions. They just use it as platform to get to where they want to go.

ZA26 [1319-1779]

To me I don't believe there is conflict between Christians and Muslims in Nigeria, but there is political conflict because Muslims when they are in the house, when they are working in harmony getting money they don't fight, it is just they send children of masses when they are searching for political positions they will use it to ignite children of the masses to go on conflict or on rampage there is nothing like conflicts between Christians and Muslims.

ZA27 [975-1081]

One is the politics; secondly it is the misunderstanding of religion, the real teaching of the religion.

ZA28 [3347-4897]

Well another very interesting question here. Conflicts, well I would like to be explaining some words which I based on my own understanding like conflict here. When we say conflict we can say they are set of arguments or set of arguments leading to whether misunderstanding or chaos among the people. Conflicts among these two beliefs amm Muslims and Christians basically are attributed to the low understanding of both religions by their followers. And consequently I would say well religious leaders are really trying, but there are some instances maybe because of their selfish interests, the religious leaders they won't like to open clearly for the followers to understand what the religion is really talking about. And again another factor that may fuel this factor which is conflict among Christians and Muslims faith is nothing but lack of tolerance among both parties or I would say lack of emmm you will agree with me that there are people among us that really don't respect the opinion of the opposite may be and if a Muslims comes up with an issue and perhaps he believes because if he doesn't believe he will not bring that issue for the other person to understand which is not a Muslim and whether or not he understands what the other person is saying so even if he seems to understand he will not actually truly accept the point given by the other person. So when this kind of things are happening you will see that it can lead to serious argument and serious argument will lead to conflicts and only God knows what will happen next.

ZA29 [4196-7008]

Well if you look at this question very well you finally say seriously the reason in which this kind of thing is happening that is especially you being specific to northern part of the country is that there is this serious misunderstanding if I may say between the two parties and these misunderstanding is fueled or let me say it is more pushed by the people that teach or make them as in teach them how to practice the religion. You know you find a mosque or a church or a majalisa let me say that is a place where issues concerning a particular religion are being discussed, you find a place whereby you have person that he will try to say some ideas that favors him only, you understand, in the name of preaching take it or leave it; both sides of the religion, the Christians and the Muslims. Some will tell you that this is the religion, you seeing that they are the ones that know the religion better than you, you will think that what they are saying is right and you go ahead and do it. do you know that some people are being paid to cause conflicts among people that is among the religious followers to tell them that if you do so and so, so and so thing is not good. While they knowing deep in their minds that they are telling you what to do to ignite conflict or hurt your other part of the religion in they will hurt your brother 's religion or let me say your opponent or let me say the other part of the religion. They know that yes if you do such a thing it will hurt them. But they will tell you if you do it, it is your own religion that tells you to do it. And when those conflicts are created they are being paid for that. So actually in the north actually it is a total misunderstanding and lack of the knowledge of the religion completely, not knowing the religion or knowing the concept behind the teaching of the religion. You don't just go to the school and read bla bla and say that ok I have earned enough knowledge now I can open a majalisi and start sharing knowledge to people, that is not done that way. You have to the concept and the idea, the spirit behind the religion and what the religion teaches first. So look at it or you want talk about it now even in the past, in the past days when the two religions, in fact during the life of the prophet, he said the closest people or the brothers we have in the world are the Christians because it is in that time that you find, you seek house and you find a house that you have a brother and sister being Christian and Muslim and they live together happily. They live as one family, they fight not both of them believe that both two religions are from the same source rather it is being misunderstood, it is rather misunderstood. What I can say here is the causative agent here is misunderstanding and misperception of knowledge.

ZA30 [3073-4002]

Hmm mainly I think it's a politics, I think it is a politics that is fueling these growing conflicts because when you look back at our history, before the coming of the colonialism, I don't think there is any conflicts between the Muslims and the non-Muslims in northern Nigeria. It was after then when this colonialism came in ahm even when they came, they met Muslims they have their own ways of governing, they are not just like that and, and all other tribes around them are usually pay respect to them and also come to them and also like the way they are doing their own things, but when politics come into play, that is when the issue of religionism came, tribalism came, then also the religions. So, the politicians are using those like three weapons like regionalism, tribalism, and religions to use them to divide people so that we can, they can continue that their divide and rule. So, I think that is the main factor.

ZA31 [1748-2169]

So, all these problems is based on our, all this people that used to cause this why we have these problems with both religions is our leaders. Our religious leaders or priests don't tell their followers the truth of the religion. They just, they used to, what can I put it, they used to give false information or false preaching about the religion in order to hold their flocks because they don't want to lose followers.

ZA33 [1471-1924]

Yes the growing conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria is the conflicting or misconceptual character or attitudes they have towards Islam. On the other hand some Muslims or some Muslims or some bad eggs among the Muslims use their selfish interests in the name of religion to convey their message to both Muslims and non-Muslims which makes them to participate in such conflicts, which of course trigger the conflicts themselves

ZA34 [2219-4019]

Actually there are, to my own understanding, there are three factors. One: illiteracy. Both the followers of the two religions, some Muslims and some Christians, lack knowledge of the religions that is the basic teachings of their religion because in Islam, the word Islam means peace, to live in peace with others. And likewise in Christianity there are so many verses that talks about living in peace with others even your neighbor even the other people of the community, so one of the major problems is illiteracy, lack of education. Two there are these selfish desires. Some of the people that are followers of these two religions have their own selfish desires, which is also contrary to the teachings even though some of them are having knowledge of their religion yet because of some of their desires they tend to create problems between them and the other people of the other religion. The third problem is political problem. The politicians are using religion in order to gain their mission. Some, if they are Muslims, they will go and tell their other brothers Muslims that it is because I am a Muslim that is why I came to contest or this, this, this. If it is a Christian he will go to the Christian side and say I am a Christian I want to contest this, this. If he could not win the election then he tends to create problems. This is because I am a Christian or because I am a Muslim and other things. So I base these problems into three: education that is illiteracy, selfish desire, and the act of politicians, which is also involving some of our traditional rulers, not even politicians, traditional rulers. When they want to have a power, may be they want to have power over this, over this then they tend to create problems between the two religions. This is my own understanding.

ZA35 [1337-1358]

I don't have an Idea

ZA36 [2258-2423]

Ehmm the way I see it, it is as if they see us as if we are more superior than them or we enjoy more than them, so that is why they don't like associating with us.

ZA36 [2492-3045]

Hmmm it is as if, I can say it is insecurity. Yes it is insecurity because if government has looked into this issue we would not be having problems because they are as free as the air, they do whatever they like an nobody can talk. Like what happened a month ago here, their leader is our neighbor, you need to see how they treat people, they move about everywhere with knives, cutlasses and all sorts of things, just trying to harm whoever comes their way. So had it been government have come into this issues, we would not be having this problems.

ZA37 [1138-1808]

So what I can say about this is number one there is a communication such a communication gap between the Muslims and the Christians in some areas and in the real sense, if you are to, if I am to say something about this, if you can see the areas where all this conflicts use to happen are the areas where the Christians are the dominant, so if we can be able to answer this question, then the answer is clear, if you can be able to understand this one then the answer is clear. Why is it not conflict, why is it that this conflict is not in the region where the Christians are the dominant not where the Muslims are the dominant, so this is what I will say on this.

ZA38 [3094-4788]

Actually the problem of religion, the problem of conflict though the issue of conflict in the northern Nigeria especially the in-between the Christians and Muslims, firstly, I would look it from the political perspective, you understand, political perspective to the extent, you know, we are developing nation and not only developing nation, we just started this our democracy not more than two decades ago, our politicians have not been helping matters, our religious leaders have not been helping matters, even our scholars, academic scholars too have not been helping matters, there is no awareness, even though there is awareness in terms of the political field, political arena, it is just for their own favoritism. The politicians always do it, they use religion in form of a divide and rule system oppressing the ordinary masses, you understand, they would align themselves with the scholars and other religious scholars and other people, then they would continue oppressing the ordinary masses and this leads, this triggers religious crises because you would tell you one thing and they went there and tell the other people other thing, at the end of the day we start looking at ourselves differently and other things. And the aspect of fueling of those conflicts, I would look at it from the religious angle because even the both religions have not been playing a major role to curtail this aspect, you understand, instead of them teaching morality in the mosques and in the churches, they go ahead in teaching, telling people the differences between this religion and this religion, the differences between your neighbor and this person and at the end of the day it fuels the crises.

ZA39 [3576-5057]

Actually the reason why this thing is becoming more and more increasing in Nigeria, if you look at Nigeria, Nigeria is a country that is occupied by Muslims, Christians and even pagans those that do not practice, believe in any religion and considering the histography, history of the country, the people have being living together as one, but in recent times we experience, we have started experiencing this problem. So the problem must not be unconnected with the activities of politicians in the country. When the politician wants to have a total control to his advantage, they use every method in order to get that support. And they have diverse; I mean they have discovered the means of division that is divide and rule. They divide the people in the name of religion, in the name of ethnicity, in the name of regional affiliation, just in order to capitalize or to take advantage of such division. So the activities of division, Christians, Muslims, non-Muslims, I mean non-Muslims, pagans and non-pagans having conflict or interreligious conflict is promoted by politicians for their selfish political gain because this people both the Muslims, Christians have been living in Nigeria without this kind of problem, but now that it is common, it is connected with this corrupt tendency, I mean politicians, dubious conduct of our politicians in order to take advantage of this conflict. I think that is one of the major reasons why this conflict is always on the increase.

Th 2.3: Proliferation of Islamic Preaches: A Source of Militancy

FG1 [8088-8389]

My opinion is that this is an incorrect perception. For now let me give you an example from the initial stages of Boko Haram, from the beginning of Boko Haram to today no Islamic preacher is supporting them. All of them are against them. In fact those that are against them are killed by Boko Haram.

FG1 [8391-9253]

For me the statement is right. What I am saying is that they (preachers) tend to put things more than it is suppose to be (some interjections – in a manipulative manner) yah the preachers too when they are preaching they are supposed to say it in a polite manner. Whatever is not achieved peacefully can never be achieved during violence. So what is the need for you shouting trying to bring out harsh things, if you want those people to be with you, to be among you, you have to introduce them to you not just to scare them or fighting them. What am saying here is that when they are suppose to preach they should not be castigating non-Muslims. They are supposed to say politely things that will make them happy and ... Islam is a religion of peace. They should also display that through their activity. Am not saying that as a Muslim anybody should go and die

FG1 [9255-9694]

And not even among the Muslim and non-Muslims relations, even among the Muslims there is diversity among them. Nowadays Islam have different sects. So the Islamic intellectuals we have nowadays everybody is trying to preach in order to favor his own sect. So trying to favor my sect and him trying to favor his sect we come in contrast with our ideas. So even that may evoke militancy among them and that will evolve to the large society.

FG1 [9696-10443]

But do you know also that in Christianity too there is that kind of thing. It is also applicable to them. Because I can remember (someone interjected is very minimum) yah they use to have but you won't know. What happens is that we were talking with someone, he is a pastor we use to call him pastor but I don't know if he is a pastor. Then we were discussing like that he will be telling me all sort of things which I won't believe and I will never believe. Then later on there is a girl she is a Christian and I think she will say that what pastor is saying is right and they will now gang up on me then later one she was saying different thing he was saying different thing and I was saying different thing and now I pack my things and leave.

FG2 [7467-7561]

I disagree, totally disagree. You see yes we have differences of opinion they are different.

FG2 [7562-7895]

Yes according to my opinion I agree with it. my reason is nowadays preachers, Islamic preachers, there is no any institution that use to sieve to know who are qualified to preach and who are not qualified to preach and what are the levels to attain in Islamic knowledge before you can stand in the public and call people to Islam.

FG2 [7897-8156]

Yes of course actually me too I am with him. We lack a specific body that will have the responsibility of monitoring the people that preach in Nigeria today in particular. So therefore we must be experiencing a problem with regards to the conduct of preaching

FG2 [8160-8714]

I also agree with them in the sense that even in Islam there are many groups there. Like shi'a, Darika, Tijanniya and Izala. And the lack of unity in Islam also contributes towards this issue of militant bodies because the Shiites will always look at the Tijjanis followers as if they are not Muslims. And other groups will also look at them as if they are not Muslims. Any time even between themselves they have any conflicts or any misunderstanding of each other they will start talking about each other unreasonably. And lack of Islamic regulations.

FG3 [13172-13957]

I actually want to say something about this because this proliferation of Islamic scholars actually you know Islam like we said is a way of life and our teaching is based on scripture Sunna-the Hadith, but we have some scholars that have the knowledge but as you know we are all human beings. Everybody has his own principles, have his own ideas and interest. And in Islam when you put in your understanding that is your own belief you partially go against some teachings that is some Sunna. So some scholars which also belong to some sects tend to like propagate their interest instead of saying what is the teaching of the scripture and the hadith so they put more emphasis on their interest than them saying the truth which is from the scripture or the hadith of the rasul (SAW).

FG3 [13958-15133]

Sir I think it is already said before it is already predicted by the prophet that when it is end of time religion will be broken into many parts, Islam will be broken into many parts, different preachers, different that people will be confused that they won't know what to follow and who to believe, who to know that is preaching the true gospel. There will be different kind of preachers, different kind of leaders that will call people to their own way, come to this way, come to this way and you know it is happening now there are different kinds of Islam; there are different kinds of Islam. You see like now, Islam is not based on one thing now. You see some people will say I am Nasfat am not ... some people say am ... am not this thing and this Islam is one. Why do you break it into so many parts? And this religious leaders earlier said, even for me today I have one knowledge today I gained something here now for me too I believe jihad is holy war but as this person explained it now I understand so much. Because I heard from a religious leader that holy war, holy war. Seriously me too I don't really know the true religion until now I thought jihad is holy war.

FG3 [15135-16710]

This particular question if you are to look at it, it is very very wide as a matter of fact. Just as my brother said that the prophet (SAW) said when it comes to the end of the time this Islam is going to be broken into 71 and just only one are the true Muslims and they are the ones practicing Islam. Now if you are to look at it according to Islamic history, we have some people maybe that they waged war against the government of their country, they waged war against some certain part of the country using religion. I want to mention some names I mean some sects now. We have ISIS now everybody knows that now. None of us here is ISIS. But ISIS are claiming that they are Muslims and we are Muslims. None of us here is a member of Boko Haram now and the Boko Haram a claiming that they are Muslims. Alshabab none of us here is an Alshabab and Alshabab are claiming that they are Muslims. So all am trying to say in essence is this that Islamic scholar is supposed to be called unIslamic because most of the doctrine is unIslamic, but it is very hard for the people that are non-Muslims to believe. Because if you are to look at it critically some of the Madhabs or let me say, Madhab is the Arabic word for doctrine, they are using if you are to look at it is against Islam but this thing has been forecasted during the time of prophet Muhammad because there were some sects they called Kharajites, so the prophet told his companions that this people they are going to spread into the world and they started unIslamic activity even during the time of the prophet (SAW).

FG3 [16770-18070]

Yes there is influence because I think as they have just mentioned, it happened because there is no specific care by the government to put control. If we can take example with a country like Saudi Arabia, there is control there. They usually stop there people within the Qur'an and the hadith. That is it. They do not allow their people to go away from these ones-the two boundaries and that is actually Islam-Qur'an and Hadith. But they we just hear, even me today I can just wake up and become my own mallam I will just bring my da'wa and stand on it. That is what Muhammad (The first Boko Haram Leader) use to do from the beginning. I think since before people became aware of who is Muhammad Yusuf, the late Sheikh Jaafar Adams figured him out and had been sitting him down to tell him that what he is doing is not Islam. He said he sat down with him almost ten times, him alone not with other Ulamas. So there is no control, if to say there is control, he has been inviting government, saying we should not allow this thing to continue because if we allow this thing to continue you cannot control it, but the government just ignored everything saying it is an in house problem it cannot affect us. So that is just it. But if to say there is control this proliferation I think will not happen.

KD1 [6107-7440]

Actually I beg to disagree. When they say proliferation that means they are much. What I would actually is, would I say immature or inexperience or uneducated or unexposed scholars or preachers. I think that is what is actually the better, but not the proliferation of preachers. The bottom line is preaching because it is part of our region that we should actually as in extend the message, so I myself I see everybody as a preacher. A father os supposed to preach to his children. So, if by that case, that means there is problem all over the world, but how I actually see it is the substandard, inexperienced or unexposed preachers, those that actually give people on the wrong direction, those that mislead people. When they are much, profession of misleading preachers, I think that's the better way and that is what actually causes the problem, but some people are just uneducated, just go to Islamic, maybe they are able to read Arabic, open one or two books and they believe they are scholars on themselves and they become authority in religion and begin to pass fatwa and give wrong direction, misleading direction and people begin to follow them anyhow, hook line and sinker. And that is actually what cause problem and not the proliferation of preacher actually, but proliferation of incompetent and unexposed preachers.

KD2 [2724-3358]

No they don't. The proliferation of Islamic preachers today is, is just developing and informing people, the Muslim fellows on how to go about their Islamic activities with their ibadat with their functions as Muslims. They don't teach any form of militancy because I can hardly point at a single preacher whether, whether a renown preacher or someone that just comes into existence that is teaching people on how to go about ehm militating, militating the society or causing social harm or havoc to the, to government or people in the country. I don't think the proliferation causes any form of militancy in the society. It doesn't.

KD3 [2383-2682]

My opinion on it is that most of those Islamic preachers today contributing towards Muslims being influenced into militant Islam, are those preachers who are not, they are not that learned because a true learned Islamic preacher will never preach into, preach to fellow Muslims to become militants.

KD4 [2776-3201]

Well talking about the about the proliferation of Islamic preachers, yah I may say that their some preachers tend to use, to hide under the wings of the Islam itself, to proliferate the din itself rather than teaching actual religion and then with this they use to achieve their selfish or personal interest, whereby it breads conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims, but it is not actually Islamical and it is not Islamic.

KD5 [1745-2247]

I think the proliferation of the Islamic preachers contribute towards (repetition of question). I think that I agree with that. I think the proliferation of Islamic preachers contribute towards increase in the youths engaging in militant activities is true though its not rampant. But looking at the current resurgence of boko haram in the North-Eastern part of the country, it was introduced by the new scholar called Mohammed Yusuf. So, I think the proliferation of Islamic scholars contributes. Yes

KD6 [2797-3077]

Yah. They are right because we don't have a stand. We Muslims don't have a stand, what I meant by a stand is that we don't have somebody that we say do and don't and we follow him. So, that is why I say we don't have stand. So, if we have it we will not be experiencing all this.

KD7 [2141-2852]

Yes, it's very true. We have a lot of people whom have studied the Qur'an, but studying the Qur'an does not necessary mean that the person can translate it the way it should be translated. These preachers, they preach in different way. Islam is a religion of peace, it never encourages a sword, the sword always the last resort for anybody, a Muslim person. The sword should be the last resort, but our preachers preach violence, they preach heatedly over things that can be heard other ways. Sometimes, it's the misinterpretations from the preachers, it's something that they too did not understand, but they are trying to will that interpretation, so that they gather more youths into this kind of militancy.

KD8 [8481-10410]

Is not true because I don't think if there is any, I cannot perceive or see any Islamic preacher that is preaching violence, they don't. Their violence is caused by certain factors, that inherent misunderstanding; I wouldn't want to call it enmity.

Two, the politicians are using it in order to achieve their own objectives. So, I don't see any Islamic preacher, unless if the ones that are already sponsored by some invisible hands, you understand, to actually create problem, but I don't see any, any religious preachers that will be preaching violence either openly or because Islam is about peace. Islam is fundamentally about peace, it's talking about your life generally, you understand, it's talking about your life, how you conduct your life, how you live peacefully with your neighbor because even if your neighbor is not a Christian, I mean he is not a Muslim, he has right over you, you have to protect his life, if you see somebody trying to inflict injury on him or trying to kill him, you have to protect him. You have to make sure that his right is protected. This is what Islam says. Your neighbor if he is a Christian, he has about two rights. He has rights because of the fact that he is your neighbor, you have to protect his life, if something bad happens to him, you have to go and condole him or you have to go and sympathize with him or to show your sympathy or to show you love. So that is what Islam is preaching. So, I don't see Islamic preachers in particular preaching violence. I don't believe because things are changing, people are getting, understanding the religion better, people are seeing the need for peace that there is no reason to be living in conflicts, it doesn't add anything, you understand, it doesn't add anything to our lives. Having conflict, fighting each other, killing is not doing us any good. So, I don't see any Islamic preacher in particular, you know, preaching violence.

KD9 [4177-5128]

I agree that proliferation of Muslim preachers, there are people that just wake up and preach without really being grounded in the teaching of prophet (SAW) because if you are a true Muslim you are a peaceful person, but you have so many people today preaching akida that is not Sunna. So yes there are opposition to Islam, Muslims are being killed, Muslims are being tormented all over the world, but the prophet (SAW) has told us how to go about dealing with issues. You don't just wake up one day and start telling youths that you have to take up arms, you have to fight, you have to do this and that, in your preachings especially in Tafsir, now we are getting to the month of Ramadan, for example, you will hear all kinds of tafsir. Some people will bring their own personal opinion into interpreting the Qur'an and of course this is proliferation of all kinds of all manners of people to come and just talk about Islam, definitely is a problem.

KD10 [2369-2642]

Yes it is true. It is true because some scholars they are not propagating the religion well. They don't know that we should not call to disobey the leader. So some of the scholars, from their utterances, they are directly or indirectly ah they are calling to violence.

KD11 [6312-6923]

Yah my opinion is that proliferation of Islamic scholars, scholars that are unscholarly you know preaching without a clear cut religious ideology, preaching according to their interest has really contributed into proliferation of ah towards such blind movement. One of the example is what we see Mohammed Yusuf was in his own case. Yusuf was never a scholar, he never mastered the hadith, we even heard a report that he went to Kano to buy, what do you call it? Ah the whole cassette or recordings of a scholar in an attempt trying to ah in his own attempt to learn the ahadith which was a very wrong ah step.

KD12 [4977-5840]

Eh in fact the proliferation of Muslims says Muslims, as the knowledge of Islam is growing, we believe that we are going to have more Mallams, more preachers that are going to be propagating the religion likewise the way of education in Nigeria too, formally we are having about 12 universities, but now it is more than 30. So we know that actually we are going to have many lecturers in various fields so the proliferation eh Muslims for preaching Islamic principles now, you see, is what we expect that will occur is only where what is necessary done in this multitude of preachers is that the principles of our preaching which is laid down by prophet Muhammad (SAW) ah must be obeyed while obeying it, it must be enforces too, and then any mallam that does not follow what the divine, the sharia has said he should cautioned or he should be scold by the law.

KD13 [1559-1797]

What is it that actually the Islam preachers are trying, but on the other hand there are few preachers who want to have sects, so they try to see that they conflict the society's idea trying to look for members that will follow them.

KD14 [2211-2527]

Yes the saying that the Islam preachers today are those contributing to the influence of the ah those that do cause the influence of that is militancy in Islam, we don't call them Islamic preachers, they are just called may be Islamic fanatics and mostly, as I said earlier, those which sallow knowledge of Islam.

KD15 [1709-2428]

Ah actually what I see is that you see we have some religious leaders who preach in their own self interest not the real religion the real righteous man will never preach of war or crisis or abuse or to abuse one another they only preach of what God and his messengers says so in Qur'an or in hadith or in Bible God didn't ask us to fight or have conflict or whatever in religion. So I think, what I believe in religion is just peace. If there is understanding between two religion I think there will not be conflict or whatever. So all those Mallams or all those pastor that preaches their own self interest and I think there are just ah prophets of Shaytan not prophet of God, prophet of devil, so that is just it.

KD16 [981-1008]

That could be. it could be

KD17 [3349-4293]

Ah I can say that yes, because you see everywhere you go now, you find that there preachers, everywhere you go, even those that you know that they don't even know anything as far as this religion of Islam is concerned, you get that they are now Mallams, they are teaching here, okay look at the issue okay one Mallam just rise up here start saying that attack Christians, attack this people, they are not doing what is right, this person is not a Muslim, you have to kill him, you understand, people do not even understand what Islam talks about, what the Sharia of Islam talks about, what it means to establish the sharia, they are the ones preaching the sharia, they are the ones preaching to people to follow, even they themselves don't even understand what the religion talks about. I can say proliferation of scholars, so called scholars because to me they are not scholars, they are just misguiding people. May Allah guide us from them.

KD18 [2477-3134]

Yes the proliferation of Islamic preachers today is contributing towards and being influenced into militant Islam because if you can see there are some Muslims who, there are some set of people even especially in the north that they they don't care about education before and there is need for them now to educate and try to orient their people about education so that their own children is going to be well educated and they are not going to be cheat in the societies. so I think that is the reason why they are trying to preach, to orient and to enlighten their people to try to educate their children so that they will not be left behind in the futures.

KD19 [2993-3840]

Yes proliferation of the religion especially Islam is a factor that leads to the, to the state of intolerance among adherents of various religions. Take for example, in the olden days in one village you discover that there is only one mosque maybe one Islamic school which everybody attends even the mosque everybody attend to that mosque and observe his prayers, but with the society becoming more complex people holding different views about the way the religion should be practiced people tend to create their own mosque and churches, so that leads to a lot of problems. I always believe that eh the fewer number of worshipping centres we have the more closely knit a society is, you may discover that a society becomes one, but the more the number of churches and mosques you discover that the society tends to be polarized among the people.

KD20 [1442-1706]

I think the reason is that they did not follow the Qur'an the way it supposed to be and they did not and the preacher they miss, they misunderstand them because that is not the way they preach you understand so they don't have much knowledge about it, that is it.

KD21 [2035-2333]

Yes I go with the affirmative, I think it's yes. No Muslim with will just wake up and pick up an arm without having a leader who has put him unto that path. Mohammed Yusuf have had his followers, Maitatsine had his followers. They had been preaching as such, been gaining followers day in day out.

KD22 [5115-6696]

That is very wrong, absolutely wrong. We Muslims we are known to be tolerant, we are known to be conducting our affairs in accordance with the dictates of Islam, whatever a Muslim does you will find out that it's regulated by one law or the other. We have the Qur'an which is the principal law that is regulating any Muslim's life across the globe. We have the traditions of the noble prophet (SAW), we have other opinion of Islamic scholars. All these schools of law or these principal legislations could be said to regulate a Muslim's life. If a person should do something contrary to any of the injunctions both done by the Qur'an or the traditions of the prophets or any of the legislations that is been found from these various schools of law, ah that person could be said to have been fouled of the law and he will be accordingly punished therefore every Muslim is expected to abide by these laws and regulations and if there is a law that is regulating the affairs of one's life, you won't find him wanting in any particular area. Let's take for instance, eh the issue of arm robbery, which is a phenomenon that is circulating in our area ah the Qur'an specifically condemned armed robbers and it makes it unlawful or sinful for somebody to engage in such an act likewise the offense that is being committed severally we call them the khulud offenses and all these khulud offenses they are really offenses that are being provided for in the Qur'an. The Qur'an prescribes how the offenses committed or being committed and the punishment that is ascribed to it, so that's it.

KD23 [3010-3380]

Well my opinion on this is that, so I did not also agree with this because I did not agree that proliferation of Islamic preachers today is contributing towards Muslims being influenced into militant acts eh militant Islam, so my opinion on this is that so the government ah must have a regulatory body that will be regulating ah the activates of the Islamic preachers.

KD24 [8016-11066]

Well actually Islam is right and eh some of the major issues that brings about this is because ah the system of government in Nigeria is not the sharia mode of ruling and eh because the country comprises of ah Muslims, Christians, other religious people that are living even that are practicing other religions so based on this you see you can't come and bring them into one umbrella because the number of Muslims in Nigeria is too much, likewise Christians is too much too. So we can't say we will practice Islamic law in our country, no, because it is not the Muslims that are there alone, there are other people there also. So if that should be the case assuming, assuming if you consider countries that majority, eighty to ninety percent of the militants or civilians they are living in the country there are Muslims or practicing for example the sharia law or they go the way the way the Qur'an and the hadith says even their what eh do they even call it, this eh thing in eh I don't even know what to call it, there in the, for example, let me ...when we experience something like, if a thief is being caught, according to Islam, there is a way he is supposed to be treated, the nature or they count what has he stolen, weight it and see how it goes. There is a certain limit if it reaches you will cut one hand from the ankle here, okay but it is not like that in the way we are practicing today in Nigeria because we are not Muslims. There are Muslims and there are non-Muslims so they try to set some rules that will go to everyone, whether is a Christian or a Muslim or a Muslim or any other religion. So assuming we are Muslims, eighty to ninety percent, maybe we will go the way the Qur'an and hadith say, if that should be the case for example then definitely there will be council of ulama, this council of ulama they will make sure that they will not allow anyone to go inside mosque start speaking, preaching, saying some things just based on his own understanding or because he thinks he is who, he is who he is, no. They will make sure that before they allow or give certificate to someone to go and preach, they will make sure that they test him, make sure that they accept that yes he is legal, he is eloquent to speak in the public and they are sure that this one he will not deceive people. He will not tell lies because they are paying him, he will take care of his family, but in Nigeria it is not like that. Anyone can just go and build mosque ask his people to build mosque for him and gather them and say what he wants to say and no one will charge him for that. So this will bring what you've asked now because through that anyone will say what he wants to say, so he will tell his people what he wants to tell them and he will even force them that no one should change your mind based on what i told you because all what they are practicing is wrong, our own is the right one and at the same time the other ones too, they will tell their own people that yes those ones their own is wrong and our own is the right thing.

KD25 [11170-12170]

To some extent that is right, but ah not really ah ah we can say some not all, not just in general ah really and that ah proliferation is really ah ah is as a result of you know ah the uninteresting attitude being shown by our clerics form the Islamic perspective most especially when some of the scholars are not really qualified to serve as scholars, so when you go to schools you will start seeing them in fact you find out that instead of them teaching the Muslim students the rightful religion of Islam they will be teaching them the wrong thing, you understand, and it is because they are unqualified, so I belief ah ah since the world is becoming a global village, people are beginning to ah notice the differences of what they were practicing before and what they are supposed to practice now and I believe in the nearest future insha Allah those ah, you now, the deceitful scholars will be detected and ah will be, you know, ah ah will be changed by those that are proactive insha Allah.

KD26 [3126-3776]

I think proliferation of Islamic preachers today, yes I do think it is a contributory factor because some preachers these days they believe in teaching us, they believe in teaching us about Islam but in negative sorry not really in negative way, but they talk about jihad in the sense that they don't talk about us using the other instruments of jihad. They talk about us using physical forms of jihad and we, most of us in the northern Nigeria, not all that really go to, not all really go to or have that knowledge of Islam, so they believe that is the only way to achieve whatever, so yes it really affects, it really affects the influence.

KD27 [2589-2918]

That too plays a role. That is a factor because once you have people expressing their opinions freely without recourse to the true tenets, without recourse to true scholarship, without recourse to the four, or without recourse to basic tenets of Islam then you are likely to, I mean, it is basic that you run into such problems.

KD28 [4579-5426]

Actually if you look at it, Arabic is a language like all other languages in the world because our prophet of Islam is from Arab language and the Islam, in everything about Islam or through him is in Arabic language because the understanding of this modern day language, when you understand Arabic instead of us to go further to the seek knowledge about this Islam properly, we don't, so when you have this Arabic language some people are thinking yes once you understand Arabic, you know any literature book, any literature you can read it and you think because it is Arabic language that is how everything is because we don't have the real proper understanding, even when we talk about proliferation about this forms, sending people into this idea that it is because of the understanding we don't have on it that creates this misunderstanding.

KD29 [2254-2604]

Ah to certain extent I can say yes ah because of the fact that previously the conduct of preaching use to follow through a certain channel where they will reexamine those who are preaching, but now these channel become a little bit loose. They are not checking those Islamic preachers as such they do misinform the followers through their preaching.

KD30 [2764-3454]

I think I will disagree because if we say proliferation of the Islamic clerics is what is bringing this up then we what will say if we look back at the days of ah Maitatsine of once happens in Nigeria where I think we are having ah we don't have that proliferation which we have now and then we still have that problem then, I think generally it has to do with the level of ah awareness and education of the of the whole society and when we leave the society uneducated then you will see they will become vulnerable to all sort of things where they can resort to taking arms in the name of religion, not even the religion itself, it is not even part of the teaching of the religion itself.

KD31 [4782-5107]

Actually that s not the issue, that's not the issue like I said the preachers don't have anything to do with that it's just kind of political some people are just trying to achieve their own personal interest so they use some fake scholars, some fake people who call themselves scholars just to achieve their aim that's all.

KD32 [2517-3074]

No, definitely this is definitely not true because publicly all the Islam, there is no any Islamic preacher that I can say is preaching militancy or is preaching acts of terrorism really, the way I know. So all the preachers they are preaching peace as Islam means peace or they are preaching peace, so anybody who is getting this act of terrorism is out of Islam not from Islam, so I don't think there is any preachers, they may be people claiming to be Islamic preachers, but they may not and they are not publicly known, so I totally disagree with this.

KD33 [2465-2487]

Yah is true, is true

KD34 [3464-4216]

Ehm to a lesser extent I agree because sometimes ehm and ehm and imam or may instigate or say something against others, others like ehm like other sects like in Islam, they are different sects, somebody wants to gain the opinion of his own followers or listeners by accusing the other part. If you look at it critically now, the person that is accusing other either sect or other religion, he gets more listeners than the one that is just teaching pure Islamic something, you see them hailing him, saying yes he thought he said a lot of things against the other sect, so you have more followers, more listeners. So that is why to a lesser extent I agree with that but by doing so, he is getting more people, more listeners and becoming more popular.

KD35 [3397-4043]

ahh is true, the so called mallams that is why I am with the believe that anybody preaching should be guided, should and obtain a license before he is allowed to preach so that he may not preach is own understanding. Once you agree you are going to preach, you preach exactly the way (SAW) preach during his own time and the Ulamas that past, you know, you preach peace, you preach strictly adherence to the rules and regulations of Islam, do not preach your own selfish interest in other to get money or to get the worldly things because most of 90 percent of the imams now are the preachers, they do that in order to gain the material things.

KN1 [6494-7233]

I agree. Because in the first place before when there is a traditional system of leadership in the north, before you get into preaching, you have to be interviewed by Scholars to ascertain the level of your knowledge whether you are up to it to start preaching or not and equally whether you have the right perception of the religion for you to portray to others but nowadays even the new scholars are against some of the opinion that has been voicing out through the media and even the leaders are encouraging that because it is a free something they invite almost every scholar without ascertaining whether they are up to the task or not. So now I think it is the fault of the government for not being deeply into controlling the system.

KN2 [4926-5674]

You see in the last fifty - sixty years ago, efforts have been made to regulate, to screen and regulate those who are going to be Islamic scholars especially those who are going to preach. That effort as with any religion on earth was in vain. It was in vain because of sectionalism for two reasons. One if you stop someone from preaching he will interpret that because he is not from the same sect so you want to tarnish his own sect and promote your own sect. And then two, there is this issue in Islam that you should carry the message of Islam more so a condition is attached to it that you should attain a certain level. You don't just become a preacher just like that. You are a preacher when you meet certain conditions of scholarship

KN2 [5724-5981]

The conditions are so many among which is attending a school, a religious school. Most scholars, most preachers believe that as long as they are knowledgeable they have met the requirements of preaching. But unfortunately that is not the only requirement.

KN3 [11439-11835]

There is I must say. There is I must say. You see we have got the Shi 'a, we have got the Wahabis and the Sunnis and each one of them wants to have his ideas or ideology accepted. They are training young intelligent people to go and preach their own faith. Or their own understanding or their own doctrine or their own idea and that is why there is this proliferation of teaching in Islam.

KN4 [3593-4551]

You see ah in modern world, the world is on our hand, on our palm. You see nowadays, there is the electro media and there is globalization. The Christianity is there, the Islam is there. Is only the method of preaching that has been changed because of this modern technology? This modern technology it has its own advantage and disadvantage and also a way of learning, some people think that the way that people are dressing or sending their information, not that is not is not ah is not that they are not doing it before but only because of the development and the things that have been changed from level to another that makes people to start perceiving and think in different and think inferior. So, I think it is one of the things that cause ah my opinion is one of the thing that is causing conflict not the some, ah not actually what the people think of. The electronic media they contribute a lot. And people think that ah am on the disadvantage side.

KN5 [1137-1728]

Yes, this is true it is with the proliferation we had Mohammed Yusuf even though it is not directly done by the government but by some of the people involved in the government. So, if with all the proliferation in any way only true Muslims, only true mallams are going to be the preachers and are going to preach the true gospel of Islam not just everybody who may need money. If he indulge in that because he has mouth to convince people then he would be making money through the Islam proliferation and he would never in any way because he is not the God fearing teach the truth of Islam.

KN6 [1804-1947]

So, I don't agree with eh this issue that says preachers can contribute toward these activities of militants. I don't agree with these ideas.

KN7 [2463-3289]

Well, as I have said earlier on amm proliferation of Islamic preachers in one way or the other yes we can say, we can say, would contribute, would contribute to Muslims or the so called Muslims getting or involving themselves into militant activities because if you look at ehm ehm recent time, now ehm we have is ehm so called preachers that are in one way or the other bringing up their own set of ideologies or the way that we think things should be done Islam they are reforming, they are reforming the Quran from its original context. So yes, in one way or the other, this people are, are influencing or let me say they are, they are contributing people, they are contributors to the fact that yes people or let me say the so called Muslims would be getting more and more influenced into ehm Islamic militant activities.

KN8 [1362-1579]

Yes, I think the Islamic preachers also are contributing to the Muslims being involved in militancy because their ideology, majority of the people follows it and as a result of this, it affects their action in doing.

KN9 [2245-2291]

I think this is correct, it is very correct yh

KN10 [2268-2520]

That is true because eh, eh the-there is an increase in the Islamic preachers today and they have- is not all the teachers that deserve to be preaching. So this is-they have different understanding so this help in that growing of the Islamic militants.

KN11 [1438-1481]

I disagree with this, I disagree with this.

KN13 [2258-2888]

Hmm, the proliferation of Islamic leaders I could say it is not something that has actually been buttressed because this leaders they emerged this particular time because of ehm the Islamic tradition and doctrines have been broken down. The more ah the cases of partisan Islam, even in northern Nigeria has been-has not been that kind of very, very high standard as in back then before. So this actually led to the emergence of some major Islamic leaders to come up actually to treat this major doctrines that this are the major things we have to do and actually led to the establishment of some institution like Hisba, so I think

KN14 [1641-1758]

I don't think that the increment of the Islamic preachers will contribute in militant in Islam. I don't think that.

KN15 [2888-3548]

Yes of course, proliferation of Islamic preachers today is really contributing towards Muslims being influenced into militant in Islam, my opinion on this is that you know in Islam, let me say we have different categories, we in Islam, so there are some people that believe you know in Tijjaniyya, there are some people are you know Ahli Sunna and some people are Qadiriyya and so on. So those preachers they all have different opinions, so some people if maybe a Tijjaniyya comes out and makes a public you know lecture that maybe he might have said something that does not favour the Ahli Sunna so they will come out and you know against it so this is the.

KN16 [1259-1560]

Yes because of sudden increase of these Islamic preachers, some of them are not God fearing, they are only after some of their personal interest so as a result of that they can bring some things which are not Islamic teachings and the things may lead to influence some people to militant Islam.

KN17 [2429-2463]

Uh I don't think I agree with it.

KN18 [3851-4329]

I agree with that because from the study of the conflict of boko haram, it is clearly that some scholars, Islamic scholars or perceived Islamic scholars now started misleading group of people and which these people doesn't have a true knowledge of the Islam itself, and these people too themselves that are preaching were not purely educated and lack the true substance of knowledge of Islam so as such they that is they can mislead people and start engaging in conflicts.

KN19 [2985-3158]

Uh actually it is true ah the preaching of one or two ah Islamic ah Islamic scholars in one way or the other is a factor influencing people to involve in Islamic militancy.

KN20 [2225-2581]

Preachers I think ah even non-Islamic, there are more of non-Islamic preachers than even the Islamic preachers these days, because if you look at it, there are more churches than mosques these days people preach and do what have you, but me I believe that the proliferation of Islamic scholars ideally suppose to contribute towards eh eh developing Islam

KN20 [2669-2862]

So in this essence I will like to say that Islamic, the proliferation of Islamic scholars does not really contribute to Islamic militancy but rather help to bring Islam to the larger society.

KN21 [1617-1650]

The argument ah is positive yah.

KN22 [3168-3531]

Yah is true. This can also be seen from the angle of the- from where the preachers emanated from because there are some angle where we see preachers being fundamentalist, being extremist and whenever they are preaching or the are bringing any reform they normally take through the side of the rigid way, so this normally use to instigate the youth to carry arms.

KN23 [2245-2476]

Ah my opinion is that the government should have a kind of, I heard that Kano state government last year want to like have this kind of channel of screening preachers, which will be a good thing but a lot of them disagree with it.

KN23 [2586-3050]

Yah, wrong preachers contribute a lot like if you check the case of boko haram in Borno state, there was a man called Mohammed Yusuf who just without any proper understanding of Islam and knowledge itself, he was saying that boko haram is haram that is Western knowledge and as such it develop a kind of people developed interest due to the frustration on ground and they saw reasons with, which leads to mass destruction of lives and properties within the region.

KN24 [1653-1675]

I think that is true

KN25 [3647-3692]

This is very correct. This is very correct.

KN26 [2377-2916]

This is very correct. This is very correct. In fact the problem is that whether we like it or not there needs to be some form of regulation as to the ability of a preacher or supposed preacher to come out and say some, you know, to preach to people, you know, there has to be some mechanism of control or regulation that will evaluate the doctrines of the teachings you know, to make sure that there are no distortions and honestly you can say that more than a million times almost everybody thinks that he is a super qualified preacher.

KN27 [2194-2397]

Well as I have said earlier, let me tell you in recent times I have come across, let me say, let me make of this popular man Yusuf Ali or so Yusuf Ali the late boko haram leader, you see he was also of..

KN27 [2420-2729]

Mohammed Yusuf sorry, he was also a leader, let me say, an Islamic leader and it was as a result of proliferation of this Islamic leader that is why he came in place and he has been preaching based on sentiment putting in practice things that are not there in Islam. So I could say is a contributing factor.

KN28 [1830-2044]

Well I believe this is a very great development probably when it comes to the preachers today because I believe their involvement into the teachings and practices of Islam is very crucial to the youth of nowadays.

KN28 [2181-2353]

Yes of course it has really been minimal because I believe with their influences and the preachings that is actually going on day in day out it has really come to a limit.

KN30 [1309-1327]

No it is not true

KN31 [1889-2274]

I quietly disagree with that because in most mosques or various Islamic centers that is where they worship, if you go I think most of the preachings that are done are being aired or mostly you hear them on speakers. And I don't think they will want to voice from the speaker trying to influence the minds or attitude of the Muslims towards conflicts. So I quietly disagree with that.

KN32 [929-954]

No no no it's not true.

KN33 [1175-1216]

Yes of course it can contribute to that.

KN34 [1136-1187]

I don't think there, I totally disagree with them.

KN35. [2288-2531]

Actually the tenet of Islam since there is only, we only have the prophet (SAW) as the great leader so the subsequent one even there are, we can call it division after the demise of the prophet that one is imminent so we cannot do without it.

KN36 [1712-1964]

Yes it contributes a lot because some people they do not allow their younger ones that acquire the knowledge of Islam from them to get the right thing or the right tenet that is contained in the Islam because Islam is a religion of peace not violence.

KN37. [1364-1569]

I don't think that is correct and to be very short and direct I don't think the proliferation of Islamic preachers is leading to violent Muslims as said by some non-Muslims. I don't think that is correct.

KN39 [1216-1444]

Actually my opinion in this side is that they are not doing so. What I mean by they are not doing so is that they are not embarking people to for example force them to practice their religion the way that they are not interested

KN40 [2170-2201]

I don't have idea about that.

KN41 [1457-1522]

Actually this might be true to some extent but am not that sure.

KN42 [2032-2202]

The idea is ludicrous, it is not so. Proliferation of Islam is even actually encouraging people to embrace non-violent and to live in peace. So this statement is false.

KN43 [3224-4250]

Yes, I don't as I earlier told you believe in Islamic militancy. Islamic, you know, Islamism and what have you. But the right question is the proliferation of incompetent Muslim scholars contributed to you know if you like ah ethno-religious conflict, I can say yes because it is not the proliferation, so to say, that cause militancy. It is the emergence of people who are supposed to be in the school to learn and acquire Islamic education but yet pretended to be scholars and misguide their followers that cause this militancy. Most of the preachers who preach, you know hatred, and animosity towards other followers of, you know, other religious ah, ah inclinations. If you look at them closely they are not supposed to be called scholars, they are not supposed to be given the chance to peach because they also need to be educated. They are suffering from inadequate Islamic knowledge, they don't even have a proper and they you know good understanding of what Islam is all about and what Islamic knowledge is all about.

KN44 [1790-2300]

I don't know what you mean by proliferation of ah Islamic preachers. Well maybe you are referring to a situation whereby many individual are involved in preaching activities and it is really unregulated. Ah this may perhaps contribute in some of the problems because ah ideally preaching has to be really regulated by the government and if people could be allowed to interpret religion the way they like, I think that would go a long way in creating problems between the followers of the two different faiths.

KN45 [1646-1917]

Yes, I agree that there are lot of Islamic preachers who preaches eh dangerous ideologies and there is need of eh the government to come in and censor the issue of eh Islamic preaching, preaching anyhow in the market places, in our streets, in the Juma'at mosques, yes.

KN46 [2965-3289]

Yah, I kind of agree ah because ahh the number of preachers is getting swollen and most of these preachers are not islamically ah I mean they are not well grounded in Islam. So you can expect all kind of this ah misrepresentation of Islam which may of course lead to such militancy and all sort of irresponsible activities.

KN47 [3340-4475]

Well, proliferation of ah Islamic preachers can be controlled, but I don't think it is the proliferation itself that bring the threats you know to grow into this kind of ah ah ah ugly, you know, ah impart that we have. Ehm what I see here is that it is not the proliferation per se, but kind of negligence from the part of the government to screen those who are credible, who are qualified to teach Islamic religion. You know the government ah was found wanting, for example, by not being able to screen them out, you know, come out with the people with the right ideology and the right knowledge to impart to the society. That is what brings about it, but not the proliferation of the Islamic preachers. If the Islamic preachers are good, if they can be more than one million there is no problem for that because they will not mislead the people, but one dangerous Islamic preacher can mislead millions of people at the same time just like what happened in Boko haram. It is just one person, Mohammed Yusuf behind it, with that stupid ideology I can say and then influence thousands of people and it is still we are having the problem

KN48 [1425-2016]

Actually, it is true based on what we are hearing and to me like I said earlier the way someone practice his or her own Muslim, his or her own Islam and being a Muslim ehn you should be able to know the kind of gathering, all this Islamic gathering that you are going to involve yourself in in order for you not to be misled, there are some, there are some Islamic preachers like that that they use to mislead people, but if you really understand all the way Islam is and the foundation of Islam itself, you should be able to know to distinguish between the wrong path and the right path.

KN49 [2150-2524]

I think eh the proliferation of Islamic preachers or people that are very ahh aggressive in terms of their preachings is I think ah diversionary its eh entirely different perspective to the whole issue. I feel it's not really that, we need to take holistic view of the whole thing; we need to look at the social, political and economic factors that breed such ehh scenario.

KN50 [1652-1980]

Actually the proliferation, the proliferation, actually the proliferation of Islamic preachers today ahh not that it contributes, but it's the way the preachers addresses the, the, you know, their preaching in con, in agree ehn, in con ahh, is ehh is how the preachers preaches towards their congregation, towards congregation.

KN51 [4243-5831]

You see proliferation of preachers if they are truly preachers will only contribute towards making people more just ok; more observant about things that are peaceful, more careful about their existence. If at all they are preachers, but our problem is this, since the extinction of the colonial masters, since the extinction of the colonial masters, now Islamic teaching has been undermined by western teaching, English teaching. So most of those who read Islamic studies, they read Islamic studies in English language and they understand it half way, in so doing now they explain to people things that are not in Islam because this are the things that they learnt in English language and Arabic is the language of Islam. If somebody is not properly taught Arabic, he will not have full access to Islamic text. So because of that, most of those preachers who are now educated in western perspective misinterpret a number of Islamic texts: Qur'anic text, Hadith and even Fiqh. This is because they are translated into a foreign language and there is, they have no substitute in that language because of that there is misunderstanding in that. And secondly, there are some Ulama who do not go to western schools and they don't even go to Islamic school, they are only reading the Qur'an, reciting without understanding the meaning. They only perceive their own understanding and they begin to preach with that, with that one. So these two things are the main factors that currently built in implementing people into militancy and misunderstanding or misconception about Islamic teachings.

KN52 [2197-2568]

Well that could be true really because if you don't regulate the kind of people that preach to the public, I think, you risk allowing a situation where, you know you have all kinds of people, fake and mediocre mallams coming to preach and if care is not taken they could start preaching all kinds of ideas and mobilizing people against other, believers of other faiths.

KN53 [2685-3059]

Well I can say the increasing Islamic preachers to some extent I think it influence Muslims into militant activities, why because some of the preachers do not really understand the translation of the Holy Qur'an so to their own perception they were transferring some, as in un-ideal translation to others to convince them and let them be convinced to partake in militancy

KN54 [934-965]

Islam is a religion of peace

KN55 [1438-1776]

I can say I agree and I can say I do not agree because if I say I agree I can back up my answer by saying most Islamic preachers are preaching now on radio stations, on televisions and this preachings are of vital usage to the people and also some of the Islamic preachers, some of them are selfish, some of them are greedy but not all.

KN56 [1761-2023]

Ok my opinion on this is that ah some of the Islamic preachers preach peace, but some bad Islamic preachers sometimes are greedy, they are only after the material benefits, they may preach violence, but actually I don't believe that Islam can preach violence.

KN57 [2092-2463]

You see yes because some preachers are selfish, honestly. Some are sponsored by some international organization or national organization for their own opinion or their own doctrine which is against the teachings of the religions especially quote and quote Islam. And also lack of proper orientation and knowledge also contribute toward the development of this, you see.

KN58 [5363-6212]

Yah it is true to some extent because those Islamic preachers, most of them are not preaching the true tenets or they are not even preaching the gospel of peace because they themselves don't understand what Islam is. They are not equipped or conversant with true teachings of Islam. So when they came public they only preach war, war, violence. They don't even preach the good side of Islam to Muslims. They don't call them to order, they don't even preach what is even Sunna because most of them don't even know what is Sunna or they are not even following they Sunna. So as such instead of preaching the true teachings of the prophet, they now preach violence or sometimes they don't even preach violence, they preach the wrong concept of what Islam entails. They end up preaching the tenets of their Shaihi which is a distorted form of Islam.

KN59 [3110-3866]

Hummm actually I can say yes, gaskiya it contributes because some of the cleric men are corrupt, corrupt in the sense that it is not corrupt in bribing, they have corrupt minds, they are being influenced by western people. They are not preaching actually what Islam said they should preach. They are not preaching directly from the holy books. They preach based on selfish interest and have some hidden agendas, you understand. Take, for instance, like let me mention a sect which is most of these Shi'ites if you go to their place they are doing their Wa'azi, they always preach of war, war, of fight, fight and they even fight their own Muslim brothers. So to me it contributes really but the contribution actually depends on the preacher, yes.

KN60 [2657-3622]

Actually to some instances, to some degree, I can agree, but to some degrees I would disagree because there are some categories of preachers that preaches fanaticism that is what they preach. So automatically such category of people and followers are bound to have themselves becoming violent and then are bound to fuel this act of unrest and this religious crisis as you can see but there are other categories of Ulamas or Islamic scholars who preaches peace and they tell their followers that ok unrest is not allowed in Islam because even Allah (SBUH) has said that those people who fuel or generated crisis would be dealt with by Allah (SBUH). So you can see it is even an offence for somebody now to preach violence or pro-violent activities anywhere in the world, be it in Nigeria or other parts of the universe. I think this is the little I can say about this act that is why I say in some instances I can agree and in other instances I would say disagree.

KN61 [1180-1305]

No, it is not true. It depends on how people perceive it, how we look at it. That is how I look at it. It is not like that.

KN62 [4471-4866]

Ehm proliferation of Islamic preachers today is contributing towards Muslims being influenced into ah militant Islam. I don't believe in that, I disagree. Yah I believe that as I said earlier, illiteracy is the cause and this very Islamic preachers today are helping people eh let's say eh wisening people, if you like, ah ehm ah enlightening, enlightening people yauwa. That is what I think.

KN63 [4508-5803]

Hmm, you know the problem is that preaching, you have to know the preacher itself. If the preacher have the knowledge of Islam as laid down by the Quran, by the hadith, there won't be anything like maybe preaching a wrong idea or incur, or may preaching wrong values into them. You know, the problem comes from maybe the wrong preachers, you know, if you have wrong preachers, even it happens in various schools, huh, maybe a lecturer, now lecturing, teaching students of what is not expected or out of the course, you just find out that every day, at the end of the day they go there and fumble, maybe their various employment of a thing unless, you know, like in medical school now, maybe you have a very wrong medical personnel that teach the students wrong values, you know. So the preachers, even is also applicable in Islam, if you have a wrong preacher, you know bringing, preaching wrong values to maybe to his followers or whatever, you know they are going to have wrong values as well. So it is also applicable in other things, just like we have it in maybe in, in Islamic society that maybe you are having wrong preachers, bringing, preaching wrong ideas. So it is not only to Islam, it is even applicable in all other religion as well in Christians and some other things like that.

KN64 [3041-3237]

Yes I agree, I agree on this, yes, there is problem from people who are treating Islam, so they are calling people to their opinion and their views, not for the sake of Islam. I agree about this.

KN65 [3757-4249]

Okay, uhm okay, the increase in the amount of Islamic preaching yes, it contributes to some extent to militancy in this part of Nigeria. Why did I say so? In the sense that most of our preachers or scholars have been divided into sects and each of them are now propagating Islam in their own school of thought whereby they tend to like criticize other sect, you understand, they do not harmonize rather they criticize each other, so in whenever they are preaching or disseminating knowledge.

KN66 [1265-1464]

ah to my understanding, this is not true because there is no, ka ce your opinion, there is no Islamic leader, I believe, that would come and preach for violence because Islam is a religion of peace.

KN67 [1143-1449]

Well I think it is true. Most of the preachers I say they are, they are not preaching the real Islam, what am, what I am trying to say is that they are not preaching to teach people, they are just preaching it in order to make themselves famous and ah to gain some recognition politically or economically.

KN68 [970-1023]

My view on this is that Islam always preaches peace.

KN69 [3062-3712]

The issue of proliferation of Islam is something that is fundamental in Islam in the sense that Allah (SBUH) in his Qur'an says (he recites a verse in the Qur'an), but in the course of the proliferation of Islam, problems used to arise by those that are considers as Ulamas, some of our Ulamas did not appreciate the exact interpretation of Qur'an as well as Sunna and even if those that are very knowledgeable in terms of the interpretation of the Qur'an and Sunna. At the end of the day, those that are listening are students, they too use to misinterpret the interpretation given by our Ulama. I think this is a factor which leads to this problem.

KN70 [2921-3304]

As, well, you see the problem with that, with concept is like militant Muslims, I think we have to be very careful when we discuss religious matters or maybe in even in, in, in, our conversation, some of those words are very tricky and I want to believe that eh if you want a very objective discussions you have to avoid the political undertones attached to some of this concept.

KN70 [3568-3972]

Okay, Okay, well my opinion is both yea, yes to some certain extent we agree, we would agree that certain ahm categories of preachers do use their influence, do use the opportunity they have of their popularity and the massive number of fellowship they have to really preach ah all sort of preaching that will really instigate ah violence or promote militancy or promote whatever is negative ah in ah .

KN70 [4078-4742]

Proliferation in a way, proliferation itself is not sufficient hum to explain to, to really ah correlate ah this, this idea of ahm militancy or whatever. In one way of course we have now people who are traveling outside Nigeria to acquire knowledge certainly the natural thing is that they would certainly come back, come back with new ideas, fresh ideas or maybe even ideas we don't know before ahm if we look at it from that perspective or we will say well yes, but in the other way, in the other way round you would equally have scholars if some categories of scholars are preaching violence or militancy, there are equally some scholars who against militancy.

KN71 [5169-6093]

It is true, because yes, let us be realistic. Each and every person due to the right given to him by the constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria can stand up anywhere and say anything with or without guidance, with or without understanding what he is actually preaching, so in the essence, he may be speaking his mind and you know whatever you come to preach on this earth definitely you will have some followers and if you are a Muslim initially it will in the way of Islam. Look at Maitatsine issue, look at this present Boko haram and so many other issues around us. One clergy of the other will stand out, will even gather you know people around him as supporters and maybe teaching something contrary to the fundamental of Islam, yet Muslims will follow him. As whatever he would say because he wanted to gain power, he wanted to gain recognition, he wanted to be known so he embark on starting, you know, yes.

KN72 [4826-5184]

Yes, yes it can be like that but when we look at the present preachers most of them did not follow or are not following the right means to preach because our prophet already told us that preachings should be in accordance with the techniques and such techniques must be look on social factors, economic factors and political factors. This is what cause ehh.

KN72 [5501-5786]

Yes, my opinion is that some of such preachers they miss or they were misunderstand the Islamic preaching because some of them just preach based on their opinion but not based on the hadith and kitab or kitab and Sunna based on the Qur'anic teachings and Sunna or prophetic tradition.

KN73 [2583-2973]

Propagations of the preachers is not contributing anything to Muslim militancy because if you already find any type of preacher, the Islamic scholar, he will not propagate or will not be behind Islamic militant. To me there is no Islamic militant. They just said it, but you called it the militancy, anti Islamic militancy because it is not the same with the practice or teaching of Islam.

KN73 [3587-4048]

If you say Islamic scholar that is the difference if you say Islamic scholar. To me it's somebody who reads Islam, who reads Qur'an, who reads hadith, who knows the real practice of prophet Muhammad (SAW) if that is what Islamic scholar means, if this is what Islamic scholar means, so there is no Islamic scholar who by his preaching will contribute to Islamic militant. It's only some who will proclaim or who will claim, when they are not Islamic scholars.

KN74 [8513-9772]

Okay let us look at ehh the, some ahh I can't say it is not proliferation or propagating ah I can't say Islamic preachers are not propagating such kinds of things, but before we say that, let us look at into three things, you know that most of the cases we had it ahh prophet Muhammad (SAW) says that if there is three things under possession of a youth, the people must exercise patience about this. Whenever a youth has a huge amount of money, the people that are surrounding him must ehh must eeh must exercise patience for his activities, also if the youth has a power the people around him must exercise patience and the third one is whenever a youth has knowledge the people that are around him must exercise patience. Therefore, if we are now, we are looking at Islamic if you look at it now, most if you look at this case, you find out that most of Islamic preachers if they were I can give an example with one of our teacher, Islamic teacher who saying that please my followers whenever I have saying it to you before, if you have a record about that, please bring it back to me so that we can look into it together and in order to solve the problem or whatever I have been saying about you because the word I have seen before, I heard there is ehn

KN74 [10148-10460]

Okay I think on the, the, Islamic preachers were not propagating such kind of ah militancy activities because there is a lot of preachers that we have, but I have never heard or come across with any one of them that is such kind of things for him to ehh influence his people into the militant.

KN74 [10581-10672]

That is what I have been saying before, they were not propagating such kind of activities.

KN74 [10751-11043]

Yah, they were not Islamic preachers because you find out that they were not, they have no good education of good knowledge for you to call them as Islamic preachers. Therefore, you can't call them as Islamic preachers; they just have something in their mind to ehh propagate to the people.

KN75 [9208-10609]

Hmm mm this is a rhetorical question, but it is not like that. In other way round we can accept that Islamic preachers today are contributing towards being influenced towards the militant Islam, as I told you, we have Muslim, nominal Muslim among the Muslims, you understand, some people you see today, different type of sects you see today, everybody is preaching according to his own primordial interest, just to gain worldly reward, but the original teaching is being kept aside. You understand, let us take, for example, the way and manner the Shi'ites are preaching is quite different from the way and manner the Ahlul Sunna are preaching. When a Shi'a man is preaching to you, you think you have never knew anything concerning religion, you would be thinking like are you a member, are you a Muslim or not because of the diversion, the direction they will take you into. You understand, if you come to the other sect, the fact they are using their primordial interest to preach, just to gain worldly reward. Talk of the Tijjaniyya, talk of the Qadiriyya, even from the Izala, you understand, although the prophet (SAW) already told us that Islam as a religion will be segregated into seventy-three places, only one would be the true religion, the companion ask him, which one? He said those who hold on to the kitab wal Sunna, those are the one that follow the right religion (recites Arabic).

KN76 [5855-7122]

Okay, actually ahh I can agree that ah if you look at the, my opinion on this, actually there is proliferation of ahh scholars that preach and ahh I can say that preaching in northern Nigeria especially among the Muslims is not regulated. All I can say is that there may not be any reason for regulation, but at times some people are not even qualified to preach because you need to know the subject matter you are preaching about deeply and you need to know the different perspective about that very subject matter. And one of the poverty we are facing is ignorance about the history of Islam and the the teachings of the prophet Mohammed (SAW), as a result a person that is not qualified to preach about certain issues concerning the life of a Muslim will come and preach and he would preach in such a way that he would captivate the minds of his listeners and you know that religion is a very sensitive affair in human life as a result when somebody is captivated and is agitated to take a certain action or to take a certain stand about a given issue pertaining to his religion that thing is difficult to change and one's that person is captivated, it will be very difficult to change and it may take a long time before you can be able to change his view.

KN78 [4965-6105]

Yes and no (laughing) I think is a both way answer. Well it is true, some would say the Wahabi brand of Islam that was foreign to the history of Hausa land that emerged in I think somewhere around 1978, 79 or perhaps at the period where certain youths now traveled outside to study outside the country particularly in Saudi Arabia and some other parts of the Muslim world, and came up with new ideas, came up with more intolerant ideas. as they said, ahh as some people believe, but you see Islam is dynamic, there are certain things we just have to accept as the truth ahh Islam inherently is a religion, is a very vibrant religion. When Usman Dan Fodio staged his jihad, I think, he never had contact with the European or any western powers. When Al-Mahdi of Sudan did the same in Sudan somewhere at almost the same period ehh Usman Dan Fodio existed, they never had contact with those people, but they were able to stage a revolution, a jihad, which is internal, it is an impulse. So Islam has this inherent impulse for change, good or bad, we to admit the fact that it is within the Islamic belief itself.

KN79 [2464-2658]

Yes it is true. It is true because many preachers do not deserve to preach. They are only fueling conflicts and create violence because even their self ignore the Islam. So how would they preach

KN80 [3632-4679]

Yes. This is happening of course because today in the northern Nigeria Muslim state, almost everybody is ah anybody can be a scholar and can preach without attaining certain level of knowledge or reaffirming the authenticity of his knowledge as to whether he can preach or not. So this also contributed because if you look at the, our immediate communities in northern Nigeria, you can often hearing a number of people preaching, some are preaching contrary to the teaching of the Qur'an or the Sunna of the of the prophet Muhammad (SAW). This gave birth to the growing anti Islamic tendencies in this part of the country, had it been there is a systematic planning from the government since most of the state in northern Nigeria are occupied, at least 90 percent, by Muslims. So the state should have had established a body that regulates the affairs of Islamic preaching so that those ahh scholars with aspirations of preaching Islamic Islam should be screened and confirmed through that committee before going out into the community to preach.

KN81 [3075-3375]

Yes sir of course, to my opinion, they are contributing because many preachers do not entitle to preach in Nigeria, you know, there is no regulation concerning preaching, so this open a door that many stupid or I can say the stupid people can come and gather people to preach, so this is a problem.

KN82 [3804-4100]

It is true. It is obviously true as we highlighted from the start of this interview, perception of Islam itself because of the dichotomy or the sects that existed in Islam. Some believe that to revive Islam is by force that is or what create a kind of ahh divisions within the Muslim themselves.

KN83 [2369-2712]

Based on my understanding, this propagation of Islamic preachers contributes toward Muslims involvement into militant, into militant activities in northern Nigeria because most of these preachers are not preaching Islam, but their ideologies which are contrary to Islam. Islam cannot influence someone to be militant and kill innocent people.

KN84 [3390-3864]

I think there is no pure, is no pure Islamic preachers that have Islamic moral and discipline can motive these conflicts. If you are well educated in Islam your attitude must be guide by the Qur'an and Hadith and if you are given, if you are guide by Qur'an and Sunna, you cannot encourage or facilitate conflicts ahh, but this, so I believe Islamic preachers cannot motivated violence, is only for those that I will repeat this one for those that are so called preachers.

KN85 [1798-2161]

Yes actually the proliferation of Islamic preachers is one of the factors that contribute to Muslims being ahh partaking into militant activities. Amm you see some of them misguide people intentionally, ahh some of them misinterpret and misconceive Islamic principles, they misunderstand the basic concept of jihad as such they lead people into such activities.

ZA1 [2461-2923]

No. If you are talking about ahh we have IRA in Northern Ireland in Europe, we have even in central Africa between Saleka, we have problem in Rwanda. So all these things they are not Muslims. The problems that Islam, the real teaching of Islam has nothing to do with militancy. Now go to the southern part this ammm MOSOP and this men, are they Muslims? They are not Muslims. So why are you talking about the Islam is teaching, it is not the matter of teaching.

ZA2 [1852-1895]

Well to that aspect I don't believe on it

ZA3 [4032-4942]

As far as Islam is concerned is a living religion, so and this preaching is what keeps it alive and for as long as people keep preaching, we preach to those that have accepted and even those that don't and is a universal religion that is to all. The prophet (SAW) was sent to humanity. So regardless of whether-the message is supposed to go to everybody, but in recent times too, there have to be this injustices done on Islam all over the world where you will see whatever in a Islamic state or Islamic person does is considered as terror regardless of what has prompted that. So if people preach that fight for your right which actually is the right thing as Islam has enjoined that you do not cheat and you should not allow to be cheated upon, people outside may feel that as a militant tendency, but in the actual sense you are fighting for your right and it is legal as far as Islamic concept is concern.

ZA4 [8623-12501]

Alhamdulillah yes It is one of the, you know, the first one we said lack of knowledge of the youths, you understanding, they don't know how the prophet Muhammad(SAW) teach you how you can behave towards your unbelievers, he doesn't have that knowledge. Number two, bad scholars that are influencing, you understand, that are contribution to the negative understanding of these youths because if you have a scholar that have different akida on Islam in his mind, doctrines in his belief, he is trying to do everything it takes boycotting the Qur'an and the Sunna just to suit his own doctrines in his heart, his own beliefs, his own akida, then influencing these youths, giving them the Qur'an and Sunna wrongly, telling them that it is the right thing to do, telling them that if they do it they are going to aljannah, in which that is not the good teachings of the prophet Muhammad (SAW), you understand, so scholars are contributing negatively, but these type of scholars we don't even call them good scholars, they are bad scholars. We have scholars, because we have different types of akida in Islam that the prophet Muhammad (SAW) said (recites in Arabic) That is the day of judgment is not going to come until this Islam has been divided up to 73 types. And all the 72 types are going to hell fire, it is only one. So this problem is not from today. Islam is going to see different types of understanding, different types of ideology, beliefs and all that. But is only one part that is the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW). So among of the scholars you have scholars that are Shi'a, scholars that are Nkashabadiyya, scholars that are Thariqa, scholars that call themselves Sunna and they're also divided, out of Sunna we have scholars that are Sunna, but they call themselves Salafiyya, we have scholars that are Sunna but they call themselves Izala, we have scholars that are Sunna but they also call themselves Al-Qur'aniyyun, they only believe in the Qur'an. We also have those that claim they are scholars that they call themselves Assuniyyun, Alhadisiyyun, they only believe in the Hadith not in the Qur'an. So you have different types of Siriqa, you understand, sects in the Qur'an and that is this thing has been, it has been told by the prophet Muhammad that this thing is going to divide into 73, but all the 72 are going to hell fire except one, and one of the Sahabas now they ask the prophet Muhammad, which is this only one part? He said (he recites in Arabic) only those that are following the path that I am today with my Sahabas. So anything that you are doing that contradicts the teaching of the prophet Muhammad, contradicts the Sunna, contradicts everything about even the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad and also the sahabas prophet eh Sayyidina Umar and Ali, you understand they are the guided sahabas of the prophet. Anything you do that does not, in terms of their preaching, in terms of their deed, is not all as the same as they are, you are a suspected sect that is not in the right path, right. So this contributions are, the influence of this, you know, extremism, militarism negatively killing people and all that are influence by the bad scholars, because it is these bad scholars that call this youths gather them together and be telling them lies, giving the wrong interpretation of the Qur'an, wrong information in order to make this people, you understand, to fall out with the society or with the government and start killing people wrongly. And this is the bad act because Islam is not meant for that. It is a religion for peace that teaches peace and success in this world and the hereafter. We are not being trained to, Qur'an does not say we should kill our unbelievers, kill innocent people and all that. So that is their own idea in the wrong path, is one of the path that affects their path of the hell fire (ma'adar).

ZA5 [4296-4937]

As I have already said, I said proliferation of Islam as in militancy in Islam is due to the half baked of Ulama as we are having nowadays. Somebody will just know how to speak one two Arabic and the next thing he will just come and start convincing the poor masses and also poverty also contribute, you understand, because when somebody that doesn't have something to eat and somebody will just come and preach to him and tell him this and that and that, then he will tell him that emm God said this, God said that, God said this and you know somebody that is hungry, you know how he will behave, very aggressive that is one of the reason.

ZA6 [5071-6693]

Ahh yes, that is, that is true, that is true, is very correct. The proliferation of Islamic preachers today really is contributing towards Muslims been influenced and the same ignorant Muslims are the vulnerable ones. When you don't have the prerequisite knowledge of the religion you are practicing, you are easily influenced, you are vulnerable to be influenced by anybody coming to tell you what you want to hear, what will favor you, as a human, you get. Now this preachers come in they don't teach what is in the Qur'an they alter the translation, the teachings to suite their personal needs, you understand what am saying. Now, for example, like in the case of Maitatsine of the seventies, just like Yusuf ahh what is his name Mohammed Yusuf if the boko haram, the one that really started the issue of boko haram, it is same case, they came in, brought in an adulterated teachings of Islam and now they will come to pull the followership and tell them what they want, they give them money, they tell them if you do this you will get the gain and every Nigeria is into the worldly gain, every Nigeria wants to hear a way to success now in a very short while. So you come to tell them if you do this, you succeed, you get this, you get this, with the influence of money and money and other things and then basically the lack of knowledge of this same people. They are very ignorant and that is why they are easily influenced by these teachers. And really the influence of these teachers, these emm emm teachers they have altered the teaching of the Qur'an have really influenced people in joining the militant groups.

ZA7 [2870-3743]

Well I don't really I have a complete definition of the word proliferation of Islamic preachers, but I want to believe it is certain preachers have influenced people into militancy from the whole word the whole idea of the question. Yes I think every religion, every religion has certain group of people that have different ideas of what religion is and I think a preacher can only influence you with his selfish interest perhaps, probably that is if he is not-I just want to believe the direction of preaching depends on the person preaching it actually and his believes and thoughts and the followers. I think if you preach violence to me and I think its violence, I won't take it. I think its just naturally the followers and the kinds of thoughts and interest that the preachers tend to give them and they accept to take them. That is just what I understand about it.

ZA8 [2196-3073]

Yah. I can, I will say that one too is another factor because there are many Islamic teachers now that they actually don't have knowledge of the Islam. They don't have real in-depth knowledge about what Islam is all about and they use mostly people that are, that they know they don't have knowledge because they even run away or will I say they avoid people that they know are very, very well verse in Islamic knowledge, so when they started teaching or preaching what their whatsoever, they don't go where they know that they are well versed in Islamic knowledge. They only go to those places that they know that okay this people don't know anything about Islam, so they tell them whatever they want and they will take it been that this is something that they say is Islamic something without finding out is this true or not. Yah I will think that one too is another factor.

ZA9 [2090-2547]

In my own opinion as the things that I have witness, let's take, for example, this boko haram insurgency, all, I think all the scholar that I have come across, that I have read some things about them, have condemned this act as it is not promoted or it is not condoned by the religion of peace as it is widely known. Most of this people are, they are evil just trying to use Islam to cover what they are trying to do, the bad things they are trying to do.

ZA10 [3543-4402]

Actually I will say no and I will say yes. There are some scholars that understand the faith very well that is Islam, so when they are propagating Islam in their own course they will say the right things, while some, some maybe they are possibly engineered, while some are not too occupied that is they are not too groomed to go out and propagate Islam, so they do it because of maybe the love they think they have for the religion and they are not saying it appropriately. So some followers and listeners that will hear this will now have their own different understanding and believe about the religion and with the little knowledge they have, it will now develop to a different thing, but all this is term because of, one, they don't have a complete or they don't have much western education compared to those who are from the south or the Christian part.

ZA11 [3291-4122]

Well, let's start by the understanding of Islam is but few that understand actual Islam. Some are born into the religion and then they grow up and continue in such, they all believe that because I was born a Muslim then I should be a Muslim and when I try to see them and ask them what is it about your religion, what is it you are practicing, majority of them don't even know the religion, they don't know the basics yet they are Muslims and then when you look at it from the parental guide, some don't even know the basics right from when they are coming out, like the Islamiyas the tauhiyya, they don't know this things. So when they hear some verses or some preaching they don't tend to go further to the understanding they, just pick the verse the line without some actual understanding behind it and then they begin to act.

ZA12 [1888-2077]

As I earlier said that, the thing is that they try to brainwash a particular group in which maybe those group believes that yes that is the way, which is not or maybe to them it might be.

ZA13 [2276-2649]

Actually yes, I quite agree with them. The proliferation of Islamic preachers, yes ahh I do because if you look at one of those ahh most of this regions that we are especially here in Kaduna and if you look at some of the preachers we have here, I think they do it based on their own interest not the interest of the Islam and through that it affect the young coming ones.

ZA14 [1810-1966]

Yes because if you look at it you say we have so many half baked Ulamas that doesn't know much about Islam that just go and be talking about Islam anyhow.

ZA15 [3589-3916]

Uhhmm yes, I will say yes I will say no, why I am saying yes is, some of our preachers don't actually have or don't actually know how to preach because most of them do fuel these crises because they don't have enough knowledge on how to educate people with wisdom and so on. So that is what is causing most of these problems.

ZA16 [1936-2406]

Yes, my opinion on this is that, for every preacher, for every preacher that wants to practice Islam and wants to have students that follow him, he needs to, he needs to be watched by the authorities concerned because you cannot leave anybody to go and start preaching without knowing what he is teaching, so the authority concerned should be ehh should be guiding or should be watching the movement and the kind of preaching preachers use to preach to their students.

ZA17 [1290-1381]

Actually a preacher is supposed to preach the way Rasul (SAW) has taught us to preach.

ZA18 [2113-2554]

Ah gaskiya is true, you see Islam should not be, Islam does not allow whoever to preach whatever he likes, you have to go, some of the people preaching now don't go to schools, they will make use of the little knowledge ah the little knowledge they have to forment trouble here and there kagani which in fact government, if I should say, government should not allow each and every body to go and preach at will, there should be a criteria.

ZA19 [3257-4037]

Well I can agree to some extent because if you look at the prophetic explanation, I mean the theological, theologies of prophet (SAW) where he actually said there will be a proliferation of different sect in Islam, where you may likely get about seventy something different sects within the Islam. So actually some of the sects were been grounded or been actually sponsored by aliens that is the external or foreign forces actually in order to achieve some political and economical gains. So actually proliferation of these Islamic preachers, some were just ah enchanted or let me say actually wanted to get something either political or economic. That's what actually motivates them into preaching without having a ground and solid knowledge of what the religion is all about.

ZA20 [1792-2053]

Still I have to refer you to back to my previous answer. There is no actual statistics to certify the fact that Muslims are more involved in militancy, insurgency and all sorts of conflicts as opposed to or compared to those of the Christians or other faiths.

ZA21 [1516-1797]

Well I can say to some extent preachers of today preach the gospel of hatred and what have you. And that I said they do that to further their nest and to some extent build an empire as to say whether they ahhh the people with largest number of followers or things like that.

ZA22 [1741-1881]

I don't think there is no any pressure among the Muslims that preaches that Muslims should join militancy. I strongly disagree with this.

ZA23 [2478-3120]

The issue of militant Islam as I said earlier does not exist. But some people even some of the preachers are just accidental preachers. In the real sense they are not preachers. So some will assume the responsibility of mallam (teacher) or imam while they are not. So they will use all ways possible to see that they try to revoke, sorry I don't mean to use a revocation, ammm what will I say, they want to make people aggressive towards something, which if they feel they don't like this, they will utter words to destroy it and they will do it in the way people will believe in what they are saying so that people will be aggressive.

ZA24 [3228-4356]

It is true because majority of the people did not go to, they didn't go to school now, they are not knowledgeable in Islam, and they are not well equipped in Islam. So they always follow what their mallams tell them. So when their mallam says that if you kill one person you will enter paradise so they want to enter paradise so therefore they won't find out whether this is true that if you kill somebody or if you kill innocent soul you will enter paradise when Allah says that you should not even mistakenly kill somebody. So majority or Muslims now did not go to Islamiya they don't know their religion. That is why they always listen to preachers and those preachers their mind is to enrich themselves. If you see a preacher preaching hatred or preaching violence within a sprinkle of time you will see that he has already made money. So it is in money, they are just doing it to enrich themselves. Therefore I am advising everybody to go to Islamiyya to know so that if somebody says something you too should go and find out is this true, could it be true to kill somebody or to fight somebody because he is not a Muslim?

ZA25 [3721-4916]

As I have said, this is a serious issue and one major problem in Islam is that we are not organized, I will say so that is everywhere you go we hardly have an amir under which all the other Muslims are answerable to. An amir that is chosen by Muslims not chosen by politicians, so those we have are traditional rulers and they are answerable, one way or the other, to the politicians that put them there. So that is why you can hardly control the proliferation of Islamic preachers. And I am afraid even if you want to control it now, am afraid it is only those that are going to tow the line of the politicians that will be allowed. So what I will advise is the Muslims should organize themselves despite that for now we are not ripe for sharia system and complete Islamic state, we should make sure we organize ourselves in every region, every state we should have an amir chosen by us not given us by government. And in that way we can have a council of scholars-learned scholars that can put the extremist teachers and preachers in check. So such regional and state wide Muslim organizations they can be registered. But the leaders should be chosen by Muslims themselves not by government.

ZA26 [1945-2272]

My opinion is it is the proliferation of oppression by the western countries or orientalist that is what brought Islam to be under them because Muslims feel they are attacked. Some people abuse the prophet why? In the name of what, human rights, why? They know you cannot abuse someone's values and you go and rest. That is it

ZA27 [1246-1440]

Yes, actually as I said some of the preachers we are having in Nigeria, they don't have the understanding of Islamic knowledge. That is why they normally take people to this kind of activities

ZA28 [5062-6123]

Well proliferation I would say like amm is a factor that leads to the growth of am growth of so they say militant Islam. I want to emphasize on this issue of linking Islam with militancy. As I said earlier on they have no link they are far away from each other. Islam is a religion of peace and militancy there are set of ideas set down by people minority basically for their own selfish interests. And amm Islamic preachers amm some argue that proliferation of Islamic preachers today is contributing towards ...well as I said earlier on while responding to the third question and that both Christians and Muslim leaders that actually preach properly or let the followers really understand what the religion is all about. So I think this is basically amm this is basically due to their own selfish interests may be they want to influence some certain number of people to achieve certain goals may be basically for their own selfish interests. We have these kinds of people, we have them only God knows how many we have, but God will see us through.

ZA29 [7178-8904]

Well like I said if you look at the statement I just made, like I said the word proliferation of the Islamic preachers and likewise not only the Islamic preachers likewise are for the Christian preachers. What I said has answered this part of your question that yes definitely not all the preachers have earned enough knowledge to preach, but rather some earn a little knowledge to make money. If you find out you will see some group of people opening a little, little churches, you understand, and they will ask people to pay them and likewise you will see on the other hand even the Muslims also open a small, small, small houses we call them Islamiyya or anything they want to call it in the name of sharing or giving knowledge or proliferating knowledge. Saying whatever comes to their mouth and make people laugh and the next thing is they request for money and they get it. so they act like they are doing a kind of drama or something. But if you are truly preaching, if you really preach from the concept of Islam, if you really teach from the teaching of Islam the way it is revealed to the prophet Muhammad (SAW) and the way it is being passed down to ashaba those that we get the religion from, if you really follow the concept there is no way in which the proliferation of the Islam or cause anything like conflict in our society because there is no way that the religion has teaches you to harm somebody or not to let somebody to do what he thinks is right so far he does not do what is not right to your religion. So definitely what you said actually some preachers are contributing to the proliferation of it because those ones I do not call them preachers but rather the money makers, they make their own ways.

ZA30 [4174-5680]

I have say this earlier, we can't say the proliferation of the all Islamic teachers. I told you somebody might understand a single verse in that ehm, that ehm, I can't remember this verse that they usually, those boko haram usually mention and even cramming it because in any of their preaching, you will hear it or more like (he recites the verse of the Qur'an) so when you come across such that kind of interpretation of those verses more especially if you say you read some books written by Sayyid Qutb, all those people that are, that found themselves in problem or even they wrote the book they are in the prison, those emmm Egyptian people. So, they wrote the interpretation based on the situation they found themselves and they interpreted the verses in according with the situation, that some people are cheating them, they put them in prison and they didn't even allow them to do their own lives, so they interpreted the verse according to their location, that is location, their territory and also the situation they found themselves also in. So, when you come across such book and you carry it and keep on going, so that is why I put it from the beginning that some people got themselves in such act because their own limited, inadequate Islamic knowledge. So, somebody might have just come and mentioned a verse and keep on ehm make Allah or let me say making noise, it doesn't mean that person, that person is an Islamic preacher. So, he might mislead and also mislead other people.

ZA31 [2343-2959]

So, my opinion is, is not true. As I said earlier on, you know some people used to because of the name of Islam, there are some people that don't like the religion, you understand, they don't like the religion and they will try by all means to spoil the name by creating violence in the name of Islam like the way we have in Nigeria now, like boko haram. People are claiming Boko haram is an Islamic group which is not so. So Islam is not the religion of terrorism, It is, it is just some people that are creating, as in hiding under the umbrella of Islam and achieve what they want to achieve in the name of Islam.

ZA32 [4606-6070]

It is not true because once that preacher or the preachers are good, though I can say to some extent, it assists, it paves that way, it contributes but very little because you can see if you consider or if you look at the large number, the largest number of the Muslims in northern Nigeria, you can say, even in the world self, in the world, in it's entirety, you can see that those who are having strong or who are extremists or misunderstand the Islam, to be a religion of peace or I can say those who have the failure to follow the right teachings of Islam are very few to the extent that you can see. For example in Nigeria, we are having a conflict but you will see, the conflict is or the members engineering that conflict are very few and they claim to be Muslims. In fact, those people that are trying or that are generating the conflicts are not preaching, they are not preaching. You can see they are only fighting and that is not eh part of Islam, it is not on Islamic way of what, of preaching, yes, and that, with that I can say it contributes a little and eh I know the other Muslims, their friend or let me say their brothers, their Muslim brothers, those who are following the right teachings are trying to bring them, to call them to order. In fact they even try as well as possible, but you know, who is misguided, no one can guide him, who is guided by Allah, no one can guide him and who is guided, no one can misguide that is what I can say.

ZA33 [2093-2550]

Yes the proliferation of Islamic preachers is so intense in northern Nigeria nowadays because of the different school of thoughts in Islamic schools which there is no proper screening for preachers to preach on mubar and of course in the gatherings. So they use that as an avenue when they have an opportunity to exploit their selfish interest and to inculcate that interest in the youths who are not educated, who are not educated in Islamic perceptions.

ZA34 [4185-4928]

I disagree with this. Why? Proliferation of Islam is an achievement because as the population of the entire world growing there is also the tendency that the number of the preachers that is the proliferation of preachers must also increase. For example if it is ten million before now we are a hundred million so we need other scholars to also come up. But the problem is there is lack of control by especially those on the affairs of the government because in some countries there are limitations for preachers, and even before you go about preaching there are rules guiding the preaching of that religion. But in Nigeria and other countries they are left just like that without any rules and regulations to guide them. This is my own view.

ZA35 [1522-1974]

Yes the Islamic teachers I will say or preachers preach, their preachers today is contributing towards the Muslims being influenced into militancy because the way the non-Muslims in the north especially northern part of the country are killing or treating the Muslims is what, I think, is what make them, is what makes the preachers or the teachers to preach to the people about their Islam so that they would fight and strive for their own religion.

ZA36 [3212-3589]

Ahhh I don't see that as one of the issues, I don't see that as because the way I see the Islamic studies teacher, is somebody who would bring change, somebody who would be a good model to students, so I don't see why such a person would bring problems into the society, he is a model who is supposed to bring change, so I don't think an Islamic study teacher would do that.

ZA37 [1977-2415]

This is not true as I have already said earlier because the Islamic teaching, if you can divide the Islamic teaching into five, only one part of it is talking about this issue of militancy; the other four parts are talking about different aspect not this one. And if you can listen to the Islamic preachers about 90% of the preachers are not even interested in talking about this militant issue. So I would always disagree with this one.

ZA38 [4957-6550]

Actually this aspect it is not new in our society especially in West Africa in general, but then Nigeria in particular. Yah, the influence of Islamic preachers is something we cannot deny because just as I said earlier, I said some of them that travel wider to the Arabian society and other things, came along with some new sects that we cannot adopt it in our society and it became a problem. When they started preaching, they involved some people that are not even knowledgeable about religion, they don't even know the basics of the religion, they influence them and this becomes a major challenge actually to us. Just like the example of this issue of Boko Haram, actually even though we know that there is an external influence, but internally this is how it started. The Yusufiyya by Mohammed Yusuf, what are they passing? Why they just come overnight and say the modern northern secular education is a sin, you understand. What, I don't want to go deep into that aspect because what they say that, why they condemn secular education is as a result of people that pass through secular education, in fact they are the people corrupting the society. That is why for his own perception he feels that secular education have not played any major role in the development of the society. Some people did not get the right, but with that they could have preached or that preach it perfectly, remove the corn from the chaff, you understand, remove the corn from the chaff and let people understand why secular, the importance of secularism and the effect by some people in our existing society.

ZA39 [5219-6189]

Actually my opinion on this issue is that, that is not the position. Muslim teachers are not people who come from the sky. These are the same people that want to propagate and teach their religion, teach other people, those that embrace the religion the way they should be practicing the religion. So their increase in number would rather help to reduce the misconception people have in the religion which in the long run would assist in tremendously, assist tremendously in sensitizing and orienting people towards practicing the religion, and the religion don't forget teaches peace, love one another, be kind to your neighbor be it Muslim or non-Muslim. So there is no way their number would have this impact on the people but rather will encourage people to understand the religion with the view to treat the other one that are not sharing the same believe with kindness and respect. So that is not the idea, that is not the idea. I don't believe in this opinion.

Th 2.4: Proliferation of Islamic Preacher: A Source of Interreligious Conflicts

FG1[15635-15969]

The problem here is that there are too much teachings to follow so even those that could not be traced to Islam are there. So therefore you couldn't be able to identify which is actually right and which is actually wrong. Therefore the wrong is now mixed up with the original teaching. And that is what is creating the problem.

FG1[15971-16327]

On my own side I will disagree with this one because the case of this religious conflict is something that is indoor, intra within particular religion-Islam. The case of this shi'a-Izala-Darika is not affecting the Christians at all. Now the conflict or the, whatever is between the Christians and the Muslims and when it comes into such issues like this

FG2 [13421-13426]

Sure

FG2 [13427-13443]

To some extent

FG2 [13461-14386]

(F) because let's take for example, I am a Muslim and I have a Christian friend and since we are close I decide to like press here phone to the extent I heard something so abusive to my religion just like a preaching done in the church and or meanwhile in exchange she pressed my phone and played something just like a music and she heard something abusive to here religion so how do you think she will feel. Like it will offend you, it will be so offensive it will be like that is an abuse to us. So that is how it generates. Preaching in the place as in the preachers abusing our religion like just destabilizing everything, so you see that will give rise to conflicts. Let's assume I have a bad mind or a bad thought just like an illiterate so I will take that upon myself and move to the extent of returning back what was don't to my religion, creating disunity among the two religions. I think that is also something.

FG2 [14414-15061]

I don't agree. I do not agree that it has to do with proliferation of scholars. You see most of these conflicts that happen in northern Nigeria if you look at them, they are political conflicts which later on are being influenced to be religious. Just for example what was the original cause of the Jos crisis? It is politics. 2003 crisis in Kano, the religious crisis in Kano, it was politics. But later people were like ahh they are Christians and they did this to us and the Christians were they are Muslims and they did this to us. So to me it has to do with society and political influence that we are having today. Political influence.

FG2 [15092-15756]

I agree to what she said the other time. An additional input to it is that yah some of these teachings bring about wrong..., in fact some of this teachings are bringing about wrong ideas of what the religion is talking about. Like in jihad now it says that you should fight in the cause of Allah, but some of these people now misinterpret it to the extent that it is being exaggerated. Like these Christians that are among them now may be they feel that this Christians refused to come to Islam or follow the teachings of Islam, they may even cross their own territory and cross their boundary to go and disturb the Christians. So I think I agree to what she said.

FG2 [15760-16578]

But don't you know that the politicians to some extent are those that are causing these things? In 2011 what happened? Politicians, some politicians were going to the church and were telling the church members that we Christians, we are your people, do not agree with them and do not vote for them. The Muslims were like we are Muslims and they are Christians don't vote for him. You understand, politicians and before you know suddenly the Christians won and they (Muslims) would be like no ai sun zalunce mu ne, karya su ke yi (they only cheated us, they are just lying) sorry to use this language, but what I mean is that they will not concur. Politicians use religion, you understand, in achieving their aims. Most of the religious crisis in northern Nigeria, I repeat myself, is caused by political propaganda.

FG2 [16580-16828]

I partially disagree with him. Yah politics may be part of the factors that is causing this, but I also think that religious bigotry is the main thing causing these conflicts between Muslims and the Christians not only the political aspect of it.

FG2 [16830-17474]

Nigeria is the most multi-religious country in the world. Every Nigerian listens to his priest. If today I will be called to the mosque and the imam who I respect the most will tell me the context of jihad, that jihad means slaughtering and Allah will reward you, some followers they don't go far in thinking this man who said I should do this, is there any backup from the scripture and what is the extent of these words that he just interpreted to me. And what does it mean in another context? So I believe religion is the primary issue in Nigeria. All religious followers listen to their preachers and priests more than any other person

FG3 [24087-25768]

Yes of course. It is because the door was left open as I said earlier that everybody is a mallam today. Even if it is one verse you cram you just come and maybe when you are vocal, you can gather people. So at least there is need for that control as long as when government sees this kind of report they should try and put control because all the religions are not just left like that, there are guidance. What is religion or let me say in Islam, we are talking about Islam in particular we have boundaries that as long as you go out of Qur'an so you stay in the hadith so as long as something come after these two things, there is ijma and other things, but before you can be a person that will give fatwa or other one among them, I don't know, you must be qualified. So let government put control. Let people stay between Qur'an and hadith. Stay there; when they use that control that is all, because you cannot stand up and say something unless you know the Qur'an. You can stand up and make noise unless you know hadith. If you don't know these ones then stay calm.

- Sorry like, government putting control over this is a very difficult thing just like you said happened in your state. But one thing again like ... it is very difficult because when you are dealing with religion especially Islam is very very wide you know. The only way I think is through we ourselves that is jihad, we telling- because even the Qur'an said, the prophet said disseminate my word even if it one (someone quoted the Qur'anic verse) ok so government imposing law that no one should preach until he is certified for that I think it will cause problem

FG3 [25813-26340]

Yes because one, there are a lot of people that would bend the law and it will cause a little riot in the community which can escalate because it is religion. Two, you cannot say you impose law from the federal and the local units...you know. The only way I think is through safe information from government to tell people politely from the scholars possibly from the Amir of the country tell them ok as a Muslim you don't just disseminate any word which will come from the interest but from the scripture that is it or hadith.

FG3 [26342-27675]

I don't say I disagree with you, but what we mean by control is not just government to come and say we impose law. What they are going to do is that you know maybe (interjection- certification) ehhen sir where are we facing we use to go to-Muslims are facing the al-qibla to perform salat where the al-qibla is let me say Mecca. People are going to Hajj to conduct Hajj in Saudi Arabia so maybe that is the origin of Islam not even maybe. Let government invite the Ulama and tell the government of Saudi Arabia to give them Ulama that is learned people to come and interview or intervene into the problem of let me say a Muslim, now we are talking about just within Muslims, the division within Muslims. So they want maybe as to put that control let's invite let them write to the government of Saudi Arabia to give the Ulama. And when the Ulama come our own divisions, all those people that stand and think they know should come let those Ulama interview them, are they within the boundary of the Qur'an and Hadith? If I am not among or maybe am going out of the Qur'an or Hadith then you, maybe you are right, the other person is right so they might mark the two groups or one group that these are the only people that are right they are within the boundary of Islam they didn't go out so the other people should just be stopped.

KD1 [10797-12458]

It has played the part of in most cases fueling, fueling the crisis more because instead of in most cases where the preachers would have come to calm the nerves of people and give them hope. Most preachers actually come to raise fear, to make people actually to see the need for them to retaliate. Which in most cases the prophet (SAW) never did that. But you see somebody tell you, your brother has been killed in so, so, place, your brother has been killed in so, so country, your brother has been this, this that, that has been done to him or her. So by that, he is raising the adrenalin level, he is raising that your humor, that feeling you have in you, that sympathy you have for the religion and of course, he is channeling you into another path instead of him to challenge you that your brother is being oppressed because of there is no knowledge because they are less educated, challenging you to go and get more education, challenging you to go and exploit the business world and get more empowered and get more business for you to become or challenge you to seek elective position so that you can represent the people effectively as or in a better way. No, he will challenge you that you should go and get a weapon and retaliate and that does not solve the problem because an eye for an eye makes the whole world go blind and two wrongs does not make a right. Instead of him to make you see reason why you should not behave like them and actually show them the right way, be role models to them. No, he will show you to retaliate in a way that is more callous or wicked than the way they have done and that is actually where the problem arises from.

KD3 [3656-3773]

So is just the misunderstanding between scholars that do cause conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in Nigeria.

KD4 [4797-5155]

Well as I have said earlier on, I will just say that the ideas of this preachers trying to use that, trying to hide under the umbrella of Islam to portray their selfish interest it has a very high influence of the conflict, so you can see that there is always a relationship between that conflict and those proliferation. So you can link those two together.

KD5 [3455-3891]

I think are the only way proliferation of Islamic scholars contributed to the conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria may be that of the advent of boko haram which I can cite an example, the period that a bomb blast erupt in a church in Kaduna led to conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims because they believe that it is Muslims that bomb their church. So, that led to conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims.

KD6 [4843-5343]

Yah. It plays a big role. For example, let me just take two instances. When we say am izala, ahlul sunna, the other one say I am Tariqa, the other say I am Ssfiam, because everybody is doing what, wanted to be known as a leader of a sect or something and which is Islam is one. So and without coming back to the umbrella of Islam completely, me and you leaving what we believe in and come to the what Allah said and the prophet. So, we will be having these conflicts, seriously, we will be having it

KD7 [4579-5000]

Hmmm It has played quite a role, it's still playing anyway. It is in so many ways. As I said before, we have so many teachers now, we have so many schools now and the each person wants to interpret the Qur'an the way he sees fit not necessarily the way that he should translate the Qur'an. That is where the problem begins and it translate into crisis for the people around whether they are Muslims or they are not[

KD8 [13714-14047]

I don't see any because I don't see any serious Islamic Muslim preaching violence. I don't see that, there are other reasons, but actually not Islamic teachers. I don't perceive it like that because why I am saying this is that because I don't see any Islamic preacher preaching violence either openly or behind the scene or hidden.

KD9 [6174-6829]

Of course it has played a big role. People tend to see ah others even among Muslim sects, some Muslims sects will see others as renegades, as not part of the system, as not true Muslim and of course these is a problem. So you are preaching militancy in your own brand of Islam and then your followers are looking at other Muslims as not, as good as they are. Probably as you are preaching it, what you mean or what you're trying to pass across is to a particular limit, the person you are talking to, he will take it far above limit by the time you begin to react or act according to your teachings, you yourself will not be able to control him anymore.

KD10 [3674-3802]

As I said earlier that ah what causes this violence it could be ignorance and lack of patience and tolerance with one another.

KD11 [7871-8313]

The proliferation of the Islamic preachers I don't think has generated any conflict rather what has generated conflict is the social and political, let me just say the political structure, the political economic rather you understand, a situation where there is poverty in a country, backwardness, you know, lack on basic amenities, people will have no option rather than to resort to primordial identities in order to get what they lack.

KD13 [2556-2580]

No. Nothing like that

KD14 [3134-3187]

I could say I still don't have much idea on that

KD15 [3510-3799]

By abusing their selves or maybe a religious ahm leader is saying bad word against another religious leader, I think that brings conflict too and which is not allowed in Islam, is not allowed in Islamic religion and I believe in Christianity it is not allowed too. So it is not normal.

KD17 [6373-7526]

Hmm I can say that because like you look at the recent issue of ah the so called Boko Haram issue in Nigeria that is in north eastern state of Nigeria, where you hear ok there is maybe the earlier person as we are told that started it maybe Yusuf that, I don't see Yusuf as a scholar because even I don't think he has even finished schooling under those that thought him, those that he said are his teachers before he even now start calling people to start raising arms based on what he heard on the media you understand. I don't, from that you can see that okay scholars as in people they call the so called scholars, proliferation, they are just all around, everybody is just all around just teaching as in they don't even take their time. Earlier on as in it is not like this, maybe due to spread of, people are getting more interested in seeking for knowledge, people are willing to seek for knowledge, there are more means to seek for, you understand. So you just go seek for knowledge, not seeking the right knowledge you understand, making proliferation of scholars all about, those that are not exactly scholars just trying to misguide people.

KD18 [4798-4903]

I think there is no proliferation of Islam teachers being generated between the Muslims and non-Muslims.

KD19 [5817-6686]

Generating conflict, yes eh one aspect that has played a big role is in terms of the preaching. I want to believe that eh every Islamic or religious teacher would not ask his followers to go and fight, no religion teaches that. So but you discover that in terms of preaching, especially among Muslims, if the Islamic scholar have one believe that if you don't belong to what I am doing you are not part of us and by extension you are not part of Islam. So that idea creates conflicts eh like you rightly know among the Muslims there are different sects, Izala, Dharika and what have you. So sometimes, some people in the Dharika aspect believe that if you don't practice what they do, you are not part of them, the same goes for the Izala sects. So it is not the teaching of the preaching, but the actions of the leaders and to some extent the action of the followers.

KD20 [3257-3323]

I think the answer is still lack of tolerance and understanding.

KD21 [3269-3508]

Yes they have succeeded in bringing up Qur'anic verses and then tend to translate it in their own understanding thereby always looking at the non-believers, people of the book as enemies that should be wiped away with the blink of an eye.

KD23 [4090-4225]

As I earlier said, I said so eh lack of regulatory agency or regulatory body that will be regulating the activities of these scholars.

KD24 [12590-13732]

Well because there is no any council of ulamas, just as I said earlier, because anything that is left open, anyone can talk, anyone can say what he wants to say, then there is no security, then conflicts will be there because if you even in ah family house if the father just allow the family members to behave the way they want, he will not say anything, no any rule just everyone should do what he wants, the house will be scattered, conflicts will be there every day every time, but if he is alone, you, you are the senior, you, you are the junior, you, you are the wife, you are the second wife, so this one is ahead of you, you this one is ahead of you, follow him based on normal things, if he cheats you report to me, things like that, don't take action on your own hands, things like that. The same thing apply to the Islamic umma and the religious side of the Muslims in the north, assuming there is eh counsel of ulama, they set some rules and regulations, they make sure that no one is allowed to go into the media or mosque or any place to gather people and just speak out the way he thinks he can, then things will be resolved.

KD25 [17643-17648]

Hmm

KD26 [5188-5221]

I don't really get the question.

KD27 [4484-4547]

A great many conflicts are as a result of negative preaching.

KD28 [7703-7736]

I don't think there is any part.

KD29 [3890-4024]

Well ah to a greater extent ah I can say these preaching in the early stage have to, could have undergone certain stages of scrutiny.

KD30 [5463-5928]

I think for people that are living in the northern part of Nigeria I think we will say that the problem that is mostly happening between the northern Muslims and the Christians is not particularly religious, because there are mostly motivated by either politics, political or other things of such nature, so you will see that ah most of the uprising actually ah are not mostly ah being ah influenced by teachings of maybe these ah these clerics, so I think I will.

KD31 [6135-6186]

Ahm actually I don't have anything to say on this.

KD32 [4833-5124]

Uh definitely I can't say if there is any specific Islamic thought or any specific Islamic teachings that encourages conflict, so definitely conflict is human maybe as I have said is just an intolerance of the two religions, so there is no any, it has nothing to do with Islamic teachings.

KD33 [4365-4464]

No, no, no, no I don't think this proliferation of Islamic teaching or teachers bring any conflict

KD33 [4554-4676]

It doesn't make any impact, it doesn't make any impact or any contribution in conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims.

KD34 [5536-5943]

Hmm the parts it plays is that whenever a particular sect come and call themselves Muslims and they are against the other sect then the other religion non-Muslims, then those non-Muslims are just looking at them, all of them are Muslims, they don't differentiate even within the Muslims, within themselves the different sects, there is conflict, there is clashes within them, they all generalize all Islam.

KD35 [6117-6458]

Ahm the proliferation of this comes from both the Christian side and the Muslim side. Some pastors they preach what they think is right for them, some Muslims preachers they preach what they think is right for them whether it is right or wrong. So ahm the followers who adhere to that and then they stick to that and they look for trouble.

KN1 [10358-11335]

Now as I told you before, islamically, someone needs to be knowledgeable before you can impart knowledge. And equally in Islam, there is two kinds or let me say that the religion aspect is divided into two; the ibadat and the mu'amalat. The ibadat is the worship, physical worship; mu'amalat is the relationship between you the co-existent in the society or rather between the Muslims and everybody and it is specified in Islam how it should be done. However it is not everybody that understands this. And a times people are portraying their own interest and their own opinion and not understanding the actual teaching of the religion and actual stand of the religion concerning. So a times the bad ones or the misled ones or those that do not understand the religion rightly, probably been imparting knowledge that is not in the right something and based on this political democratic something everybody will be claiming that he has right of expression and right of religion.

KN2 [7833-9524]

Honestly it is not a proliferation of ideas that lead to crisis between Muslims and non-Muslims in Nigeria. It is not because new ideas are being imported and those ideas ...it is not because of those ideas, but because of a crisis within the Nigerian polity, because of a crisis within the Nigerian polity. It is not because a foreign idea has been imported into Nigeria which is preaching that Muslims should attack non-Muslims, but it is because of a crisis within Nigerian state itself. And in most cases it is because of provocation and most of these provocations are political. Take for example the last crisis in Taraba, the crisis in Plateau state, the crisis in Oyo State, all of these crises came as a result of confusion, selfishness, greediness and all of them are attached to politics. If you take Plateau for example it is a clear cut example. Crisis between Muslims and non-Muslims is because government did not take advice or deliberately did not take action because a Muslim is affiliated to one party and a non-Muslim to another party and that was how the crisis took place not because a foreign idea has been imported telling Muslims to attack non-Muslims. The same with Kaduna state, what happened during the 1999 sharia that was launched by Yariman Bakura of Zamfara state, what happened in Kaduna state was purely political. Muslims agitating for the implementation of Sharia at the same time non-Muslims saying why should they be subjugated under Islamic state because they also belong to Kaduna state and their own rights should be exercised by the government. So you see it is not because of the proliferation of ideas and bla bla bla bla and a host of other places.

KN4 [8023-9382]

You see umm, the increase of the teaching of Islam in the northern part of Nigeria does not cause the conflict, is the political development in the northern part of the country that cause the conflict between the Muslim and the Christian. It has no any change on its original setting and the present teaching all is the same but only we can see that people are struggle for power and the majority are Muslims, the minority would always say that or if I can say the non-Muslims are at the disadvantage side. From their own way of teaching, they too there is some eeh kind of teaching maybe among the two religion that am not satisfying, that I am dissatisfying with what you are saying, you too I am dissatisfying with what you are saying. But the lack of the central government that is just and justice is the main contributor, it is the main contributor factor to the crisis of Muslim and non-Muslim since none of them is a sovereign state, none of them is a independent state, none of them can go to preach without informing the government. Is only the negligence of the government that being the contributing factor of the crisis between the Muslim and non-Muslim, I think the government play a very vital role in causing the problem not the Muslim or Christian because they are all subjected to the law and order and the constitution of the federation.

KN5 [3110-4459]

Ah ah as we have said this people are working most of the mallams or the Ulamas or pastors, you have the religions leaders are working for the government and this government is always doing what will serve and suits its interest. As my view actually, as far as my view is concerned the previous government of Dr. Goodluck Jonathan has inflicted a lot of pain on the northern Nigerian people and that was as a result of voting eh the religious leaders we have that has been using eh their position to instigate chaos in the society ah eh and I think this is just one thing that maybe I can cite maybe what happen eh when Oritsejiofor, Ayo Oritsejiofor the CAN president jet was caught in south Africa to buy ammunitions, you can refer that as one of the reasons because, if not because the the the Muslim leaders have been calmed down by their superiors and the true leaders it is going to be a conflict that would may only God knows what is what would have been the consequences by this time ah ah because they caught him trying to buy ammunitions with his jet at the end of the day the Muslim people were killed and in the northern Nigeria they were a lot of bombs in the churches and they say the Muslims are the ones that do it and what happens is this religions leaders who are not God fearing that indulge into this businesses and terrorisms.

KN5 [3110-4459]

Ah ehh ah yes ah ah some Christian preachers normally try to inculcate this conflict in their church, in their church because usually they try to tell others those Muslims are your enemies and sometimes you can find some cases where you can find for example what is happening recently now ah when the prominent Christian were caught in this south Africa who tried to buy this ah ah ammunition. So some-those preachers of Christian are participating towards their rising up ah this conflict.

KN7 [4186-4662]

I have said earlier, that we-proliferation yes of Islamic teachers we've said, yes have contributed to ehm, to people getting involved more and more in militant activities because yes they are trying to, they are trying to bring, they are trying to let me say interpret the Qur'an and the teachings of the prophet Mohammed (SAW) that is the Hadith to do with their own taste, they are trying to interpret it in a way that few things should be done, but not in the real sense.

KN8 [3303-3758]

Actually, taking a study of that of Kano, as I have said initially, there was a man that said as the Sheikh Ibrahim Nyass of the Tijjaniyya is above the holy prophet. It has generated conflict even among the non-Muslim, they supported it. Even the Christians also supported the non-Muslims by saying because they know the values of the holy prophet (SAW), so this has generated a conflict as a result of the preaching, the proliferation of the preachers.

KN9 [3407-3819]

The proliferation of Islamic scholars basically is the main reason for this conflict I think because ah if the top is affected, I want to believe that everything is affected. These leaders are the one who preach the young the youth and every other person who would eh create any violence in any society. So once there is a problem with their ideology, I want to believe that conflict is, is definitely prone to..

KN10 [3441-3661]

No, I don't think if there is any, between the conflict, between non-Muslims and Muslims, no-the proliferation of the Islamic teachers does not cause any problem between the ah relations between non-Muslims and Muslims.

KN11 [4637-4942]

I have a little say here, you see as I have said earlier, some, some so called scholars they claim that they have vast knowledge when they have not. So, usually they gather people or those so called almajirai so they teaches them wrong, wrong way, so with time the thing will turn to other things, yes.

KN13 [4697-5181]

Hmm, like I have said earlier, it is as a result of communication barrier, lack of understanding the differences between the Muslims and non-Muslims because even right from the prophetic era whereby in Mecca and Medina we have the non-believers that have been allowed to practice their own religion and we've been-they have been allowed to use the facilities and the amenities whereby the Muslims enjoy although they pay some taxes and fares. So I think that is the major issue there.

KN14 [3242-3803]

This of course ah the issue of this boko haram, actually they are claiming Islam even though the our scholars are always criticising them giving them solid reason that this is not the teaching of Islam and Islam does not encourage all these conflicts and they are citing examples with our prophet that he lives with ah some other non Muslims. Even though there is jihad in Islam, but that is when the ah the need arises. There are some there are some there are some criteria that a Muslim has to play before jihad, one cannot stand up overnight and say this is.

KN15 [5026-5481]

Yah, proliferation of Islamic teaching it plays a vital role in generating conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria because even we Muslims, there are you know some of our preachers that at times choose to support non-Muslims rather than a Muslim which is very, very bad in our religion. So by doing that it use to you know frustrate our Muslims to start acting on maybe, let me say, conditions that will grow a conflict between them.

KN16 [2463-2556]

Like the case of ah Islamic barriers, of different classifications, even case of boko haram.

KN17 [4426-4461]

Ah I don't think there is any part

KN18 [5894-6889]

Well well well well I don't I can't say, I can't say, I can't say that proliferation of Islamic teachers has generated this kind of conflicts but if we could say that yes there are, there are many un-Islamic teachers that come, these un-Islamic teachers that doesn't have lack ah that doesn't have enough knowledge of Islamic teaching are now misleading people now. We could say yes I agreed that it promotes eh crisis between crisis, but in essence, in essence if we could see the true cause of many religious conflicts in northern Nigeria are not as a result of a teaching of a particular preacher. I don't think, the boko haram crisis that are religious crisis, it is not between Muslims and Christians and ah it had never, you can never see them now okay saying one group attack another is not that group, all the targets now are Muslims, they are targeting Muslims they are not exempting Muslims. so proliferation of that is not the cause between the religious group or Muslims-Christians.

KN19 [5874-6662]

Okay, actually I can cite one there was a recent issue that happened in the town whereby somebody was ah somebody was ah was embracing an Islamic scholar over the holy prophet of Islam that is more supreme to the holy prophet of Islam, you understand, the so called Sheik Ibrahim, even though Sheik Ibrahim is a very great scholar of Islam in fact he is my he is he is a model of mine myself that I do embrace him, but the fact remains that that speech by him made majority of people in Kano town to rise over violence then they strike him out of the city, then this generated a very great conflicts even within the non-Muslims that could understand very well understand the impact of the Holy prophet why could somebody say an Islamic scholar supersedes in all aspects of ramifications

KN19 [6700-7668]

Sheik Ibrahim Nyass, the one I'm putting at my chest, you understand, I follow him and part of Tijjaniyya sect, but someone could just rise up and say he is more than the, that the holy prophet is below Sheik Ibrahim according to him, so it has generated a very great conflict, this is an issue that is not more than two not three weeks, I was in town that day even I wasn't able to see the person, but it strike it brought conflict among people of the Kano of the Kano central whereby people were rushing up and down to strike against the man then he was sent out of the city, he went to exile, it was as a result of that word as result of that statement, so it's teachings in one way or the other has generated conflicts, even among the non-Muslims they contributed and supported the great Muslims that could, the non-Muslims that know the value of the holy prophet has joined together with the Muslims to strike against the man as a result of his wrong statement.

KN20 [4000-4041]

To to me there is no any part, no part.

KN21 [2431-2496]

I have said it earlier on the radical nature of their preaching.

KN22 [4516-4947]

Yes this proliferation of Islamic teachers has actually gingered a lot of enmity and conflicts between the indigenou Muslim in Nigeria, because most of these teachers are not even Nigerians. They are coming from somewhere, from Asian countries and they will come and instigate and pervert the minds of teeming youths in Nigeria to carry arms in order to fight for Islam which is contrary to philosophy and teaching of Islam.

KN23 [4179-4580]

Well, in Plateau state, the Plateau crisis, I have forgotten his name; there is this mallam who is always telling the Muslims to attack the Christians. He never preaches the word jihad to them, he doesn't even understand the word jihad. And like I have said, due to this illiteracy of a thing, people will just engage in the act without knowing the proper meaning because they are already frustrated.

KN24 [3431-3690]

Yah that is, that-let's go back to the first thing I said that most of the preachers the way they are preaching and understanding of the religion is not the way the religion is supposed to be understood. If you go there may be the way people are taking it KN25 [4886-5300]

Well yes truly it has contributed to the conflicts between Muslim and non-Muslims because some of these teachers they tend to translate the Qur'anic verses directly without caution so like ah some hold the opinion that there is no relationship between a Muslim and a non-Muslim. And they strongly believe that the only relationship that must exist if it has to exist has to be antagonistic, which is very wrong.

KN26 [4066-4790]

Well largely it is clear, its clear, you know, whether we like it or not there are street teachings, we have teachings in Islam that says your neighbor is your neighbor in fact even treat forty to your left, forty to the right, forty front irrespective of their religion they are all your neighbors treat them as you will want to be treated and so on and so forth and largely we all know this in Islam there is no compulsion in religion. These are clear things that Islam has said but there are like I said earlier distortions, you know, preachers bring distortions in their own myopic, which can be largely influenced sometimes even to some personal things are affected, you know, but we blindly import them for example.

KN27 [3879-4188]

Part of the teachings is that they believe in forceful jihad, they believe in forceful jihad and in one way or the other they have misinterpreted the concept of jihad itself. So they believe forceful jihad, in one way or the other, bring back non-Muslims to Islamic orientation which is kind of impossible.

KN28 [3130-3416]

Sure ahm the Islamic preachings always tries to make you understand the value of you living within the region as in within the state like taking anyone as equal now matter his religion no matter what you think he is worshiping just go ahead and live with him just like a normal being.

KN28 [3553-3758]

It has played some part though it is really drastical considering the way the non-Muslims say Islam is not the ideal and they believe Christianity is the idea while they never know the right thing to do.

KN32 [1437-1499]

No it does not. It does not in any way influence true Muslims

KN33 [1810-1844]

Sometimes it gears the conflicts.

KN34 [1663-1720]

To me I don't have any fact or reason that I will state.

KN35. [3812-4087]

Actually this proliferation of Muslim teachers and the teachings is that since ideology has been built, so the ideology being built and they have seen their teacher or sheikh as their role model, so they only take whatever they say as so and the correct and absolute truth.

KN36 [2999-3318]

It generates a lot of conflict because even- immediately you are not among of their clique, their group or association, they will think you are not good enough even to, you are not even a good Muslim talk less of non-Muslim because even to follow in prayer there is a lot of problems. They want to follow their groups.

KN37. [2459-2472]

Not at all

KN38 [1623-1662]

I don't think there has ever been one.

KN39 [1992-2061]

Actually I don't think there is any side effect with regard to that.

KN40 [3393-3413]

No idea about that.

KN41 [2053-2153]

Actually I don't think I have anything to say pertaining to this proliferation of Islamic scholars.

KN42 [3614-3631]

None whatsoever

KN43 [5674-6005]

Yah, as I told you the incompetent preachers who have emerged on the religious terrain of northern Nigeria are ignorant, they don't have, they have a very shallow understanding or, if you like, a misguided understanding of Islam because of that they have been instigating their followers to fight other followers of religions.

KN44 [3294-3391]

No, since I don't subscribe to the other question, I don't think I have an answer to that also.

KN45 [2747-2779]

I would like to skip this too.

KN46 [4975-4994]

No, I cannot say.

KN47 [6545-7270]

Yes, you see the understanding or religion is something that has to do with ah ah very good conscience and then the right ideology and the right teaching and the right people you stay with. As far as Islamic teachers are concerned, there are some who are not tolerant, you know, there are some who are not tolerant, you understand, about religion, they just all they know is, you know, there religion should be ah supreme and should be practiced in the society and there are those who simply understand that there is the possible inter-relationship between the adherent of various religions as it was you know exhibited in the life of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) used to stay with non-Muslims and he became nice to them.

KN48 [2992-3002]

No, idea.

KN49 [3891-4324]

I think eh there would always be radical Islamic teachers and scholars and the there would always be that difference, that gulf that exists between Muslims and non-Muslims. I think how we address issues, and how we acquaint and educate ourselves on how we should relate with others, I think is important, but the proliferation of ideas from scholars go a long way in changing the psyche of people or the entire population as a whole.

KN50 [2676-2715]

Ah, I don't think I can remember any.

KN51 [11381-16777]

You see there is no any imported Islamic teaching in this country at all. I have been saying it over again, Islamic teaching is one, it is the same teaching in Saudi Arabia, the same teaching in Sudan, the same teaching in Egypt, the same teaching in Nigeria everywhere, the same teaching everywhere. So for everybody to think that there is some teaching, Islamic teaching being imported into this country, he is wasting his time because, for example, when Shehu Usman Ibn Fodio (rabiyyallahu anu) ok made his own religious campaign, who imported that one into the this country? Ok when people like Mohammed Bello, like Abudalla ok like Emirs, when they revive, they reform Islam, who imported all this teaching? Nobody, because the teaching of Islam is the same teaching everywhere, the same teaching everywhere. The reason why we are getting this trouble today, people would think ah ahm some Ulama are importing ah teachings from eh outside is because a number of student are sent to learn in Saudi Arabia, some of them in Sudan, some of them in Egypt, others in Bangladesh and so on and so forth. But I want to say if that is now a means of importing foreign teachings into this country, so what would we say about the foreign teachings that is being imported by those who go to America to learn, who go to France to learn, Germany to learn, United kingdom to learn, what are those? Are they not importing anything into this country? It is only those who go to Saudi Arabia or go to Sudan or go to any other Muslim country to learn that is importing something different, something strange? I am still on this, there is no teaching that is being imported, yauwa, no teaching at all, no idea that is being imported because every idea, every teaching is contained in the Qur'an and in the Sunna. If there is proper understanding of these two sources, the same thing would apply everywhere, everywhere. So we are talking about conflicts, conflicts, conflict resolution or what have you. These conflicts, this is the genesis of these conflicts. How to address this problem should be the problem of all the scholars and all the Muslims and Christians. How do we live peacefully in a situation where someone is respecting others parents and they are attacking his parents, someone is revering, respecting the institutions established by the religion of others, and others are trying to destroy his own. They are not inviting anything that is peace. If we are to understand the problem raised by the Reverend Blyden in nineteenth century, it is the same problem that is existing today. Christians should desist from anything that is un-Islamic ok, anything that is belittling Muslims, anything that is cheating because no Muslim is Muslim if he cheats any Christian, no Muslim is Muslim if he at all attack anything Christian, no Muslim is Muslim if he thinks he can now belittle the personality of Jesus (alayhissalat wa salam), so this is the genesis of all this problem and I belief in the things, I think ah, reverend father Henry Martin made a very good observation when he read the Qur'an (he recites a verse of the Qur'an) those, you find those who said who are the most enemies of Muslims, those who are Jews (he continues to recite) you find those who are very close to Muslims in love ok, (he continues to recite) those who say we are Christians (he continues to recite) because among them, there are monks (recites) there are priests (recites) and they are not arrogant. This is the way al-Qur'an addresses the Christians. This is the way al-Qur'an views the Christians. This is what the Qur'an is teaching the Muslims to look at the Christians this way. So if now Muslims are thought to be looking at Christians and are people, humble people ok, very good people, why should Christians be looking at Muslims as evil people, bad people, why? This is the genesis, in this case when this reverend father read this verse, he made his own wonderful statement, and he said ok I can understand if you see any Christian now being an enemy to Muslims is because he doesn't understand what Christianity is all about. He is ignorant about his Christianity and is ignorant about the teaching of Islam. So you can see, if anybody is to talk about anything that is peace in this country between religion, one religion and another, Christianity and Islam or what have you. We have to look at it from this point of view, Muslims should respect like they are respected anything Christianity, Christian should respect Muslims like the Muslim are respecting their own Christianity, their own religion. So this is the genesis of this problem. Whatever one wants to say about anything that is bringing Islam into this, bringing into, is a different problem, completely different. Most of the people, why people think there should be jihad, there should be this, is because of oppression, oppression of ah our leaders that are being supported by the western power, oppression by the west ok, oppression by the group of G7 or G8 ok. People are becoming impoverished because of their own oppression. So whenever such youth cry for jihad for whatever, it is because they are denied their own rights, they are doing that for economic purposes, not for religious purposes, not for religious purposes. They are doing that because of their own economic reasons not Islamic reasons. This you must understand.

KN52 [3924-4381]

I responded by saying I do not understand what you meant by Proliferation of Islamic teachers because for me it carries some negative connotation because when you say the proliferation of Islamic teachers are you saying that the number of Islamic teachers you know is somehow not commiserate the with the quality of educations they have or what, I don't understand, that is why I said I don't understand what you mean by proliferation of Islamic teachers.

KN53 [4077-4086]

No idea

KN54 [1475-1479]

No

KN55 [2380-2396]

No there is not

KN56 [2504-2522]

I already said no

KN57 [3555-3656]

So I do mention Shi'ites and boko haram, here we say so called boko haram is one of them honestly.

KN58 [7806-8839]

Well to some extent sometimes, way back in time, some of the Islamic clerics even mentioned that for them to even vote a Muslim that belongs to Izala, they prefer to vote a Kafir. You can imagine this kind of statement, this kind of statements mostly incite their followers in seeing other Muslims as Kafirs. Now this would now start nurturing or maturing in the minds of the followers of those people that make this kind of statements and before you know it, the crisis erupts and once crisis erupts even if it is between the Muslims, the remaining other Muslims that are ignorant will now attack the Christians because it has become an order of the day in the northern part of Nigeria or in other parts of Nigeria that once there is religious crisis, the dominant religion in an area would attack the other religion. For instance, in Kano those in areas around Brigade and Sabongari, those in Brigade would attack the Christians and those in Sabongari would attack the Muslims because they see them as potential enemies or threat.

KN59 [6613-7413]

Actually the teachers in particular I don't have any person to say that leads to conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims. Mostly the one I know is between Muslims, a sect in Islam among another sect but Muslims to non-Muslims actually I didn't see that unless maybe there is like what happened in Denmark that they molest or they did a cartoon of prophet (SAW) you understand, so such things in the north, can lead to conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims because it is something that touches every Muslims irrespective of where you are or where the incident happened, you understand. So such thing can lead to conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims but for a particular teacher to create, to kind of encourage conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims is not all that common in the North.

KN60 [7100-7182]

Well I think I have spoken about this point in the previous questions you asked.

KN61 [2170-2334]

Ah, that is because we are only considered that is lack of understanding of the book or even, even the concept of the religions that cause this crisis or conflict.

KN62 [7082-7598]

Well ah still I am on that, that ah this very question is like one we have talked about or answered before. I, I think that ah there isn't any relationship between the teachings of our Islamic scholars and ah the insurgencies or conflicts everywhere in the northern Nigeria at least or in particular and ah what I reiterate and emphasis still is that the teachings of our scholars straighten our thoughts, our faith and everything, but it doesn't mar or destroy or distort our thought. That is what I believe, eh.

KN63 [8165-9645]

Hmm, I can't say, I don't think it has, that has generated any problem in Nigeria. This people have been, the Islam have been there for decades huh preaching the, this thing of the recent, is just happen recently, and maybe ten, fifteen years ago now or what you are talking about it is just happening ten years ago now so. and that, the that thing, the teaching of Islam has been there for how many years now, fifty, sixty years ago, you know something like that and if to say that it has been there, all this western, all this ah non-Muslim, they will never be allowed to stay here in Kano, for example. But the, the; in fact Kano is accommodating. If you look at, in the- it is even more, it is one of the accommodating regions, the northern, in fact the most accommodating regions in Nigeria compared to the others. How many people, how many non-Igbo's are living in the Igbo land huh, because they are not, they are not accommodating like the northerners. If at all, those things have been there, those teachings have been there right from there, they will never allow them to come and influence them with bad values or bad ideas. So Islam, in fact, those Islamic scholars need to be encouraged. The only thing that can say that maybe those that don't want to have the adequate knowledge of Islam, something can be done, you know, maybe going to the proper school, lay down rules and regulations, lay down the, the religion, good moral values of Islam, something like that.

KN64 [4486-4741]

Hmm, if you have preachers or preacher is preaching his own view, his own opinion, to what he sees not about the religion, but he is calling people to his own view, to his own selfish ah ideologies, this can cause anything within not only conflict, hmm.

KN65 [6590-7262]

Okay, ahm the part is this, most of our scholars, have already created a mindset between the foreign policies, and that of Nigerian policy. The mindset they created was, whatever policy that is emanating from America, U.SA or the university in Europe it has a Christianity backing you understand. So whatever interpretation they are going to give it, they are going to give that it is now backing the Islamic, ah I mean the non-Muslims individuals within the society. So they tend to condemn it and this has become the major, major problem we are having. So they did not, they fail, they fail to look outside box on any foreign policy that is coming into the nation, yes.

KN66 [2407-2435]

There is, there is no part.

KN67 [2274-2326]

I don't think there is any incidence I can recall.

KN68 [1566-1584]

I already said no

KN69 [5298-5865]

Okay in this regard the problem rise in two angles, in the sense that our Islamic scholars are expected to interpret Qur'an and Sunna in accordance to the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) if this is happen I think our Islamic preachers doesn't have any problem. But another angle is the listener of the preaching, they use to have problem in the sense that in the cause of listening, they use to mislead themselves, they use to mislead themselves by misunderstanding the interpretation of Qur'an and Sunna as taught by their scholars. I think this is the problem.

KN70 [7439-8284]

Well I think ahm, as I said earlier, in the case of Boko haram is quite interesting because I think ehm although ehm there are quite number of ah things that it will be too premature for me to give an analysis of ah the actual thing that happened taking into consideration that there are quite number of things we expect ahm to really come up with time, but huh I remember, a few years ago when they said some ah people go to the churches and bomb some churches, and they, they said as they claim said that they are Muslims, so that itself I think if we mean to, to cite that as an example, I would say yes, but long before that one for you to understand adequately that that could not be seen a factor in itself is the fact that Muslims and Christians have been living alongside for quite a long time, without that type of conflict happening.

KN71 [9455-10112]

If you say part, the part it played, of course the proliferation of the teachers is one issue, but which type of teachers is another, you have to differentiate. As I said earlier, any other person anywhere can feel that he is a scholar and wanted to establish a dynasty and would start preaching anyhow, but a disciplined scholar, one who is trained, like what they are saying ehn al-ulama-U-rabbaniyun true trainers of the religion that they play part in subsidizing the conflicts, but those other parties that are just speaking anyhow, I am sorry to use the word we call the yan achaba, they of course help in raising all this kind of conflicts anywhere.

KN72 [7085-7212]

Yes, their means of preaching which is based on violence or to say violent preachings can cause this to happen, this conflict.

KN72 [7376-7473]

Yes. Always they want to against non-Muslims without any reason, so that they can cause harshness

KN73 [6297-6883]

Yah. Islamic preachers or Islamic teachers. You know, I have said it. They haven't generated and they are not generating new conflict. They are not generating, if they are truly Islamic scholars. And if you find that if some Islamic scholars, the truly Islamic scholars, they are not generating. Their teachings and it always generates peace coexistence between Muslims and now Muslims. And it has been for over a hundred years. There are Muslims in northern Nigeria and there is no conflict. It is only been in recent times while some claim they are Muslims scholars while they're not.

KN74 [13027-13140]

This question has been answered before because the question that we have answered is similar with this one, yes.

KN75 [15655-16097]

Lot of things, this is a controversial question, but I don't want to mention names especially what is going on in Jos and Kaduna. Some of the scholars that are preaching in those areas, they are, they contributing a lot in the violence that occur between the Kaduna and Jos crisis that led to Muslim-Christian crisis. You understand, a lot of scholars have contributed honestly speaking kuma they are Muslim scholars. Let me just stop there.

KN76 [9135-9734]

Actually all I can say is that ah is the fact that played significant role in this, is the level of exposure among the scholars. For a scholar to preach in such a cosmopolitan society like Nigeria where you have many religions, take an example of Kano, Kano is a predominantly Muslim community, but there are certain Christian communities in northern Nigeria, in Kano state. If you take ah Anambra state, it is a predominantly Christian state, but there are certain Muslims communities there. And these issues about differences in religions and many other things have been on for over 100 years.

KN76 [10113-10615]

Well actually the part that this proliferation played is that, as I said before earlier in one of the question, I said that preaching is not regulated here because of that of the fact that it is not regulated that is why there is this proliferation of the Islamic teachers that preaches and a times they preach on the subject matter they know too little about and as a result it leads to conflict ah all I can say is that what bring about this issue is the fact that the preaching is not regulated.

KN78 [10419-10762]

Well I think I want to refer to what I told you, some of these conflicts are not sometimes religious in themselves. Some of them are economical, economic ah reasons, some are political reasons, some are ethno-social reasons and that does not mean that there is no religious reasons, but most of the conflicts are essentially not religious.

KN79 [4568-4722]

Hmm, many part of northern Nigeria, for instance Kaduna, Jos and North East, but not only Muslim preachers, there is another preacher that is not Muslim.

KN80 [7972-8659]

Yes ah they generated because as I told you ah earlier that this ah lack of methodology of preaching is playing a very, very significant role because you can ah because it is ah it is so apparent with the most of the preacher to proclaim a statement which is dangerous in the Muslim Umma and the people they are preaching are not Islamically learned enough to comprehend the statement. So if you look at the crisis that are taking place in Nigeria, northern Nigeria, some of them are generated from the preaching of the preachers because of their statements are not signifies emm to what to, on how those that are receiving the preaching should refer it in their own comprehension.

KN81 [5150-5275]

Well these so called Islamic preachers instigate unrest situation or violence between Muslims and non-Muslims in the country.

KN82 [6112-6307]

Ahh actually it has played a significant percentage to say 40 to 45, for example, because of the thinking of some ulama that a Muslim should not relate in any form, in any way with non-Muslims.

KN83 [3816-4013]

This emm emm proliferation of Islamic preachers bring obstacle between Muslims and non-Muslims because they are preach facilitated heart and inconvenience living condition in the northern Nigeria.

KN84 [4805-5034]

Yah the propagation of Islam by Muslim preachers also called, let me just use my normal word, also called Islamic preachers play a vital role in generating conflicts between Muslims and Christians in the northern part of Nigeria.

KN85 [3289-3665]

Yes, as we have said earlier on, ahh the activities of some preachers have influenced the conception and ahh perception of people on Islamic principle of jihad. This have led so many people to think that you can only carryout jihad when you kill people most particular non-Muslims in order to establish Islam. So this has led to most of these activities we are talking about.

ZA1 [4641-5279]

I think what the researcher will look about, what are the real geneses of conflicts? Now look at what happened in 80s in kafanchan, definitely government has set a committee and they come out that what happened there is not a religion. What is happening in Plateau is a problem of indigene-ship. What is happening presently in Borno, Adamanwa, Yobe is not Islam. So it means that no, the people, you can differentiate between people of nowadays or people of conflicts. Even between you and your spouse, you are aware that sometimes you may have a conflict, but if they cover the Islam, I am on the view that Islam has nothing over that.

ZA2 [2493-2789]

As earlier I have informed you, you see when you look at this Islam as religion, I think from the beginning of Islam it doesn't preach anything rather than peace, so if you can get anything contrary to that, I feel is just people's opinion towards the way they can achieve their personal needs.

ZA3 [6100-6821]

Hmm since I do not believe in any because if we are talking about proliferation as if what it ought not to be, but proliferation it is what is encouraged the revival of the din that people must always preach about their religion. So I think the most generating conflict between the Muslims and non-Muslims in the northern Nigeria is one, as a result of political influence. The political leaders who played, who always played on the majority illiterate of their power demand, if it so happened that those in control are Muslims, they try to preach to their that ahh this one is a Christian he is coming to Islamize your religion and that leads to conflicts and leads to hatred between the two families or two religions.

ZA4 [14628-15967]

What are the disadvantages of most of these teachers that are teaching Islamic knowledge influencing these youths negatively, proliferation that is diversities of preachings now, different misinterpreting Islamic, Islam. So yes, this thing has contributed negatively because we can see this people that have bad behavior eh eh doctrines in their hearts, bad akida, they will be trying to be using the influences of this primary schools, secondary schools because they young by then. The mind is not yet developed and all that. So they are using that advantage by preaching, misinterpreting the concept of the Qur'an, of the concept of the Sunna, influencing this people in terms of the jihad, telling this people that they are being cheated by the government, by the society, society does not care about them, they don't even care about these things, the only way they can, they should talk against them, they should try and make it in a form of jihad, all these things. So this proliferation, bad teachings of the Qur'an, you understand, that are being told to these youths especially in secondary school level and primary school level, have contributed negatively and advisedly they should be monitoring them, they should be monitoring the types of the teachers and they should stop them by doing, preaching this type of doctrines.

ZA5 [6967-7408]

Yes this proliferation of teaching that have caused crisis in Nigeria, we have issues in Kaduna, issue of ahh what are they calling them, this Zangon Kataf that have issue that happen in Kaduna. We have this issue of Matatsine, we have issue of boko haram, they you understand and also if you look at Shi'a sometimes, there is something that really happens and at the end of it, they come over it. Those are the issues that cause problems.

ZA6 [10603-11417]

Ahh the North East, Maiduguri to be precise, in Maiduguri there are Christians and Muslims and when it started, we start hearing something like Muslims bombing the churches and all that, though there is, there are elements of political manipulation there, but you manipulate using religion. So there is there is a correlation yes also. They manipulate you using the religion and then they use those adulterated Islamic scholars to get the followership from the youths now eh so the northern Nigeria they, like Maiduguri to be precise. Sometimes in Kaduna state even in Kaduna state, places like the southern Kaduna where we've seen crisis between the Muslims and non-Muslims and then other northern state, but precisely Maiduguri and Adamawa where you have large number of Christians living amongst the Muslims.

ZA7 [5400-5668]

Yes because they have thought violence a lot and indecency and, for example, the boko haram they have kidnapped most of our girls and this has had great effect on Nigerians as a whole and even businesses around those areas like establish such teachings. That's all.

ZA8 [5152-5864]

It has played a lot of part I think, even in like places like Jos, the conflicts, the riots that happened in Jos, in Kaduna, all these are caused now by the proliferation of the teachers, teachers that don't have in-depth knowledge about Islam because instead for them to come to teach what religion actually say, being that they themselves don't have that knowledge that Islam does not support riot, they incite it instead saying they should not allow this, we must kill them, all those things are not, I think it has played, in fact, majorly in all riots that are happening in Nigeria, this has played a very part, a very big part in it.

ZA9 [5295-5721]

Well I think, I think, in my own opinion, this has to do with jihad, jihad like fighting for the cause of Islam and Islam according to, my own knowledge, you don't force people to join or to embrace your religion, like I said earlier, I think this part of the Qur'an this people are misunderstanding, they are misunderstanding it and they are using it to perpetrate their evil act, they are using some quotes from the Qur'an...

ZA9 [5752-6460]

Well I think I have forgotten the part of the Qur'an which if you neglect the upper part, it was saying a different thing but when you come to the middle it talked about bloodshed and attacking non-Muslim and that particular quote was in respect to the previous ones which say if emm their existence like they are forcing you to do things you don't want to do or they are making life difficult for you that is when you attack. I think they are using that part to perpetrate their bad teaching that they are trying to do. They just bring out that quote and brainwash their followers since most of them are illiterates, they have it, they find it difficult to reason, like normal human beings, sorry to say.

ZA10 [6274-7340]

Actually, no because when you are teaching Islam, Islamic religion you use the Qur'an, Hadith and the Sunna, there is nothing that is out of these and when you use it accordingly to the teaching of the prophet, and they it has been stated, there is no conflict that will come, like I said earlier, I said it is some scholars believe, their believe, their understanding of the faith that make, and because of the sect they belong to, makes them teach in a particular way that will make some part of the country, part of the northern part, have this believe about Islam and some will have other believes so when both parties now have different believes and when I start saying about, talking about my religion that is Islam and you as a Muslim started talking it we feel we have different understanding of this particular teaching because our both scholars that is our teachers that taught us particularly about this said it based on their sects and their understanding but amm so far so good it has not brought any concrete or like any conflict between two Muslims.

ZA11 [5588-6336]

Well, sometimes when you get to hear the outrage of some of the Islamic scholars make, then they have a lot of followers, he is talking and maybe due to one or two hurts he make an utterance and then he doesn't mean it in such a way, but the understanding of his followers now they will go along with that word or the sentence or that this thing, and it means a lot to them and before you know it they begin to have a different perspective about everything. I guess, you have to understand when you are teaching and you have a follower, you have to watch the way and then you make it, a kind of, \very vivid message you are passing. If there is any other explanation need to be done it should be short and necessary and precise without sentiments.

ZA12 [3631-3669]

The way and manner which they preach

ZA14 [2912-3086]

Just as I have said before, if you look at it, the conflicts that we having in Nigeria today, the issue of Boko Haram umm look at what is happening there no peace anywhere.

ZA15 [6012-6016]

No.

ZA16 [3687-3865]

Yes, by the type of their teaching, the kind of their teaching ahh this proliferation of Islamic teachers, the kind of, the way they taught or the way they teach their students.

ZA18 [3499-4186]

You see at times this proliferation is not only based on maybe religious conflicts between Christians and Muslims, it has gone to the extent of even creating problem amongst the Muslims themselves, you could remember in those days, there is one Maitatsine palaver that happened in Kano, this people are saying that if one should use wrist watch, it is contravening the tenets of the religion that it is wrong for you to wear a wrist watch and those that know the religion of Islam really believe or really know that it is not an offense for one to use a wrist watch. It is allowed, you understand, so as a result of those kinds of mushroom teachers, then this kind of things escalated.

ZA19 [4994-5528]

Well, to some extent, if you look at the current bedeviling issue now which is Boko Haram, the issue we have at stake, you can also attribute this to the proliferation of the sects within the Islam that is the sects being controlled by the late Muhammad Yusuf and presently controlled by Muhammad Shekau. So you can say actually they lack the proper orientation of what Islamic knowledge is all about. So it actually only triggered the violent and conflicts between the Christians and the Muslims and other religions in the country.

ZA20 [2866-3031]

to be fair and honest to you proliferation of Islamic teachers or Islamic teaching cannot, cannot, I have to be very clear, cannot increase militancy or insurgency.

ZA21 [2914-3313]

Well to some extent I said ab initio that this has to do with hatred; the preaching of hatred between Muslims and Christians as propagated by some Islamic preachers. This is to say that the conflict between Muslims and non-Muslims in Nigeria is mainly fueled by those Islamic preachers and of course the pastors, so to say, in their churches and this done only to further their parochialism.

ZA22 [3284-3787]

You know we Muslims particularly in northern Nigeria, if you interview any of the Christians that live here in the northern Nigeria, they know we are peace loving people. They have been staying with us here some of them over 50 years, but nothing has ever happened unto anyone of them. They know it. Even the security personnel know this. We don't have any forum where we meet and launch war against them. The know it. So as far as I am concerned Muslims are good people particularly northern Muslims.

ZA23 [3954-4746]

As I was saying even among the Islamic teachers, sometimes the kind of politics we are playing today in the world, do take part in it. Some, even among the Islamic teachers, are after positions. So with that they connive with the politicians. If you will trace back to history in Nigeria, the northern Nigeria itself, you will realize that so many Muslims then were living peacefully, there was peaceful coexistence between the Muslims and the non-Muslims. In those days if there is any festivism for the Muslims Christians do attend even though it is not all the Muslims that attend festivism of the Christians. But the Christians do attend and they are living peacefully with one another. Why now the sudden change? Do you get that? So politics is playing a vital role in these conflicts.

ZA24 [5854-6581]

In fact it has generated a lot of conflicts within Muslims and non-Muslims in Nigeria. Though Christians are at fault also Muslims are at fault. Some Muslim preachers are preaching violence and ask people to go and kill even some are killing their fellow Muslims where it is haram. The prophet (SAW) said that it is haram to kill the blood of your brothers in Islam, it is haram for you to kill that person. If you look at what is happening now people are killing Muslims and killing non-Muslims. It is from their preachers, they are following their leaders. And whatever they tell them that is what they will follow. Therefore it is has contributed to a lot of conflicts between Muslims and non-Muslims in northern Nigeria.

ZA25 [6420-6791]

Eh yes the part I would say is em they emphasize such extremist, extreme teachers or scholars, they tend to emphasize the hatred, they emphasize the hatred between Muslims and non-Muslims without also emphasizing the importance of exemplary characters that Muslims can show to non-Muslims which are capable of making them know-exposing them to the beauty of Islam.

ZA26 [3224-3834]

I don't know you emphasize on proliferation of Islam, what of proliferation of Christianity and other religions. I don't know why you emphasize on that? Because Christians do preach, they meet us in hostels, in the road and other places they preach. Why emphasizing on Islam proliferation? In Nigeria there is no census for Islamic preachers, there is no census for Christian preachers that is what brought all these because government is supposed to intervene in who preaches and who shall reach so and so level to preach. The census is from the two religions. But I don't know why they capitalize on Islam.

ZA27 [1968-1989]

Yes it is ignorance

ZA28 [8001-8061]

This question is directly related to the one following it.

ZA29 [12499-13346]

Well what I may say which I have already said and I don't have to recapitulate it. The process at which knowledge is imparted or the process at which message is disseminated to the lower level of religious practitioners, both the Islam and Christians, Islamic, Muslims and the Christians rather take some roots. There are so many ways in which I witnessed; some people have aims and objectives like I said. But if at all this two religions you are to disseminate the message that is being sent from the book, there is no way in which your own message will call to conflict unless you are such a selfish and self opinionated person that you only want to disseminate your opinion not the opinion of the religion. That may cause trouble. But if you are to disseminate the message of the religion, I see no reason why the message will cause trouble.

ZA30 [8329-11118]

The facts is that (clear throat again), still I will go back to my point because that is the starting point. As long as you don't, may be, find out the source, if you find out the source that may be the source of anything either it is a problem, so that is when you will look for solution. In the source of generating different conflicts is going out of Qur'an and Sunna. We would only remain in peace when we hang ourselves or we stick ourselves close to Qur'an, not to even close, when we stick ourselves to the Qur'an and hadith that is Qur'an and Sunna. As long as we go out of these ones, because some people are teaching different things. Okay, let me give you an example, somebody will come and say he have something in his own book that they put to say they have some certain salat, when you do to Rasul, when you recite it ones, you will get reward with somebody that eh, you will get the same reward with somebody that completed the Qur'an like sixty thousand (60,000) times or six thousand (6,000) times and that salat came may be six, five to six hundred (500 - 600) years after the demise of the Rasul, when the wahayi has been closed, that is revolution, revelation sorry, has been closed. Someone just say he say he went to the Ka'aba he has been doing some ibadat and someone, and some angels came to him, they brought a paper written meaning he has opened the door of revelation. So, he said that his salat is equivalent with a, almost when you read the salat that is suratul fatih, it is equivalent to like sixty, they say in some, they put six times of completing the recitation of the holy Qur'an and in other places ma within the... it is equivalent to six thousand complete recitation of the holy Qur'an when you read that single recitation of the salat. This is what we call a bidi'a that is an innovation into the Islam. That is to this area, then there other division may be like Shi'ite, Shi'ite has nothing than coming to be insulting the companion of the Rasul. Even me to say as a single person, I raised a family and I die and left them, you say all my families, let me say, all the families, all my friends, they are not righteous people meaning I don't even know how to raise people, the insult will come back to me not to that people because I don't know how to raise them. So, that is Shi'a side. We have different section and that is what am referring to that we can't solve Muslims' problem unless when we go back to the actual teaching of the Qur'an and the Sunna. So all these ones they are still invented after the demise of the Rasul, this different divisions: Qadiriyya, this Dharika, Raji'at, Murji'at, all those different classification that can give rise to what we are seeing today, Shi'a, Dharikat and all those things we are seeing today.

ZA31 [3981-4332]

Yes there is. There are some leaders, was it last week, four weeks ago, ago, there are some, there is one of our Islamic leaders in order to hold his flocks or to cause conflicts, he was, he was conveying false, false information about Christianity and in order to cause conflicts, which is not supposed to be like that. Hope I answered the question?

ZA32 [9465-11054]

It is what I have mentioned above, about above point of interview, I mentioned that people are having freedom, absolute freedom to preach about religion both Muslims and non-Muslims and some understand the Islam while some did not understand it and so also some understand the Christian system while some do not understand it, but with that, all are having the rights, are opportuned to preach, to go and call people to their religion and they even lack the manner both, I am talking about both Christians and Muslims, they lack the manner of approaching the people by calling them and they lack the forbearance and patience and they have no knowledge about that. In that way we can say, it played, this problem it played a great role in generating conflicts between to Muslims and non-Muslims and ah you see, you hear some Muslims or non-Muslims calling, most especially non-Muslims, calling people or establishing, they always establish the or telling their followers that, am talking about the teachers, the preachers among them, they always telling their people that those people are your enemies, just consider them as your enemies. You see, while in Islam, and ah even in Christianity, you are not allowed to establish that enmity. In fact, you are expected to call others to join you, to join your mission, to be, to engage or to have your faith, to believe in your faith, to have that faith you have, to believe in your religion and some or almost general numbers of the both religions have, have that failure of calling people or have that failure or lack the manner of approach.

ZA33 [3743-4102]

The proliferation of Islamic teachers and extremist teaching of Islam induced by the teachers to some Muslims, yes an example of that case is the case we had in Jos recently where the teachings of some Muslim clerics triggered the Muslims or most Muslims to fight with the non-Muslims due to the harsh words and harsh words and statements by the preachers.

ZA34 [8146-9316]

A great example as I said is in late 1970s and 80s, the Maitatsine idea whereby he condemned the teaching of the Hadith, he condemned the great ulamas, the sayings and the ideas of the great ulamas they only concentrate on the Qur'an whereas the Qur'an is our book of guide that needs some other explanation. That is why rasul (SAW) was ordered in the Qur'an that he should explain the verses of the Qur'an. Allah (Subahana wa ta'allah) says Inna anzalna ilaykal kitabul tubayyinal nasi manuzila ilayhim-we have sent this book in order for you to explain to the people what is being revealed to them. So the Hadith of the rasul (SAW) are the explanations of the Qur'an not really complimenting the Qur'an but explaining the Qur'an. But now the Maitatsine rejected this. There are the Qur'aniyyun even presently that are rejecting the Hadith and there are other people that are also rejecting the Hadith. This is a problem that generates and even escalates conflicts within two religions. Even the Christian side they have also such ideas, which part of their preachers they also lack the basic knowledge of their religion. So they engage in causing problems.

ZA35 [2649-2657]

No Idea

ZA36 [6926-7210]

What I can say about that? I can say that one is bringing peace, is bringing peace because you know your religion more and you know that your religion is not a kind of religion that brings conflict and crisis, so you try to avoid any conflict that is coming your way, you avoid it.

ZA37 [5068-5846]

No any ma kawai eh because it always brings about the understanding not generating conflicts. Islamic preaching, Islam is a religion that Islam as the word might mean as meaning of the word or as the word means, it means peace, so Islamic preachers always preach towards peace, so wherever there is Islamic preaching, there is peace in that area. As I said and I am still repeating it, if you can make examples from 1987 to date, what happens in Nigeria most especially northern Nigeria, if you can count them because you can be able to count all of them and traced what happened, what brings out the conflicts, you would see that it is always from the non-Muslims, the genesis is always from the non-Muslims. So this issue of this question I don't need to be, I don't need to...

ZA38 [10337-11348]

Actually the role the preacher plays in generating conflict, I would not say yes, but rather I would say no. But one major point I want you to believe me is when they brought this ideas from outside to our society, they refused to acknowledge that we have been staying with our non-Muslim brothers and sisters before this time. They didn't know how to fix this into the society, they feel that they are very, very hot, you understand, they are hot, no, the city cannot be like this, you can, yah common problem, they no, you can't be eating from a non-Muslim person, if he gives you food during festival don't eat whereas in the Qadiriyya brotherhood, the one Usman Danfodio brought, they said no, you can stay with your non-Muslim person, eat his food, but the issue is that there is some specific food that we didn't, Muslim is not supposed to consume especially the issue of pig and dog, you understand, that one you can avoid it, but any other one, you can stay with a non-Muslim perfectly, you understand.

ZA39 [9509-10448]

Like I said, I cannot say directly that the proliferation of Islamic teachers, the proliferation of Islamic teachers, it depends, like I said, who teach what. Those that teach the actual religion have contributed a lot and influenced many Muslims in Nigeria to live in peace with one another. Those that call themselves Islamic teachers, those who take advantage of the ignorance of certain Muslims, have influenced their mind into corrupting the religion with the aim to promote violence and misunderstanding in the country among Nigerians. So we always, don't forget we put it in our mind that proliferation of Islam, if they teach the actual position of Islam, we can say it has brought a positive impact. Those that came with false religion, false teaching and false misunderstanding of religion of Islam, have contributed negatively into the society or into the thinking and relationship between Nigerians, among Nigerians I mean.

Th 3: External Influence on the Understanding of jihad: A Source of Fundamentalism.

KD1 [32215-33387]

Yes, I think it has because from the history of the recent boko haram that we have in northern Nigeria. We've heard a lot of people linking them to Al-Qaeda, linking them to some other groups and all this things were actually foreign teachings and to a great extent, they are causing serious devastation in the nation because they have gone out of hand. I have heard several issues that even the local scholars like the late Sheikh Adam Ja'afar of precious memory are calling a lot of them to order, but after and even several meetings that sanction them to do the right thing and calling them, their attention to the kind of danger they are about causing, but they declined and went ahead and begin causing what is beyond, what we are now experiencing now. Actually this is causing a big problem, foreign I think good, a good level especially the Al-Qaeda challenge and likes is partially one of the challenges and we can see those people, they have weapons in their hands and now they are doing a lot of evil with and even doing more of things of more Islamic than things that we know are Islamic. So they can't represent jihad and they can't represent Islamic for that.

KD2 [12819-13083]

It hasn't. It hasn't influenced any Muslim to engage in negative conflict because what they are being taught, what they are being sending as propaganda to people, people just listen to them, but in fact people do not even think that those activities are going on.

KD3 [10467-10719]

There is no external influence on the current understanding of jihad in northern Nigeria. The only problem we are having is shallow understanding and people being misled mostly by politicians or just some particular people in order to gain their goal.

KD4 [19008-19417]

Yes, external influence, yah I think I totality disagree with this assertions because when you are talking of jihad, if you are truly talking of jihad, there shouldn't be any external influence because there are rules and regulations in which are set and then they are guided by the Holy Scripture. So you cannot bring any externality into it when something has been already been documented for donkey years.

KD5 [10759-11255]

I don't think that there is any external (the question again.) I don't think so because even if there is any influence that should be may be, may be the issue of western people, they feel that, people feel that western people are exploiting them which make the advent of Al-Qaeda and the rest in the international scene. So, I think may be, I don't know, may be it has contributed towards the recent or the current insurgence that is happening in the area of Maiduguri, Borno, Yobe and the rest.

KD6 [23052-23626]

Yah, I will say yes and I will say no. For example, boko haram is still external forces that come to us and before we don't have any, if you are a Muslim, you are a Muslim. What makes you to be a Muslim? What criterion makes you to be a Muslim? There is nothing like external forces or external influence as per Islam is concerned. Am not talking about western education or anything like that, but am talking about real Islam. Unless you have not attained that position in your own community that you thinking Islam brings new things, there is no any new thing under Islam.

KD7 [16105-16500]

Yes, this is very true, the influences we have had, Islam is a beautiful religion, it means peace, peace, peace. Today, the influences we have, we have over our religion, the western influences, today somebody practices religion and he believes that the only way you can do jihad is by strapping a bomb to your chest and bombing others, innocent people and that is not Islam, that is not Islam.

KD8 [34248-34777]

I cannot say to any extent because like I have been saying, I don't see any jihad. I don't see any jihad going on in the north.

There has not been any jihad that will influenced by external force. What is happening is just fight, conflicts between Christians and Muslims for a certain things, but there is nothing like jihad. Jihad has ended during Usman Danfodio. That is the time that jihad took place but there has not been anything like jihad in northern Nigeria. It is just fight, it is just conflict, it is just conflicts.

KD9 [21446-22354]

I think the whole talk of this paper is on jihad ah yes the way external influence has affected is the fact that people have been taking away from the true meaning of jihad, so the white man colored jihad the way he wants it. Islam has explained jihad in the right perspective, so the white man that has all the media hype has made it difficult for the ordinary man to actually understand jihad. So they feel, even a lot of people think conflict is synonymous to jihad, just as long as you have problem with non-

Muslim and then, you know, you have a quarrel with that person and then you go on the street. That is not jihad that is not jihad. So if the white man tries to tell you, you see this people, this is the kind of jihad they are talking about certainly we don't want this jihad, so that is the coloration that I feel the western man has brought to taint the true element or the teaching of jihad.

KD10 [14759-14998]

There is no doubt about that the external has influenced the meaning of jihad. People think jihad is just fighting, killing people, causing public disorder and so on and so forth because of lack of knowledge and self desires and caprices.

KD11 [19609-19939]

Yah external influence like ah what we see on the media, the killing for instance the 911 by Al-Qaeda, the ISIS, when you look at the Boko Haram now currently it is increasingly channeling its movement in the same fashion like the ISIS trying to capture territories. So there is, I will agree that there is an external influence.

KD13 [8033-8036]

NO

KD14 [9509-9620]

To me the influence exerted by current understanding of external influence. I say I don't have idea on that.

KD15 [14438-14565]

Ahm actually this really happened, but I don't think ah is really allowed in Islam or any religion so it's not proper at all.

KD16 [7539-7573]

It has eaten very deeply into it.

KD16 [7694-7718]

I do. I strongly agree

KD17 [25654-26483]

Of course just like here in the north where you have the issue of Boko haram and other things, presently we are in a global world now whereby people can access external information, go to YouTube, download videos, listen to preachings. As a youth, you have this zeal to learn more, but when you drive it in the wrong direction, it leads you in the wrong way. You get it, so by the time you listen to preaching of people that, maybe hear of terrorist groups, they start preaching, you just think ok they are, yes this is what the verse of the Qur'an says, but whereby they are not explaining it in the right way, you just see youths following it straight before you know the go and take up arms or look for one means of the other to go and meet them and they should start continuing all, with the jihad, with the so called jihad.

KD18 [13106-13485]

I think the answer is yes, there is external influence. Let's say for instance the issue of boko haram, there are some people that are sponsoring them from other countries that we cannot identify because you will see some helicopter they will that they supply them food, that they supply them weapons, where do all those things come from if not there is an external influence?

KD19 [16542-17158]

Yes, eh external forces or external views has affected the concept of jihad in the sense that ahm most of the things people read are not the true Islamic position today. So people tend to be more of extremism extremists than true Muslims. Ah there are things that eh, let me give you an example, one thing that eh external views have changed is the concept of jihad itself. Right now when you mention jihad, what came to people's mind is just fight, war, but that is not the only meaning of jihad. That is an external view of jihad. That is what the westerners think, is all about fighting, but it's more than that.

KD20 [12431-13116]

Yes it has influenced so many Muslims in many ways, in the sense that let us use this boko haram as an example, in those days there is nothing like boko haram and even though if there is a conflict or misunderstanding in a state or in the country, it does not, it does not the external influence were not involved, but now they are involved you can see the people that supply boko haram, the weapons and food, you'll see some helicopter they will come in the in the midnight to supply weapons and foods to the boko haram, but who are those responsible for that? I think is an external eh, I think is external influence yes that has affected our Muslim communities in negative way, yes.

KD21 [11081-11484]

Yes these external understanding has engaged Muslims engaging in negative conflicts. We don't have to go far, you look at the Muslim at large, today the Muslims in the Tijjaniyya sect, the Muslims in the Ahlul Sunna sect and the Muslims in the Shi'a sect just don't dine on the same table. They all see each others as non-believers. These are part of those influences. Sometimes, it leads to bloodbath.

KD23 [11200-11266]

Yes it has led and engaged ah some Muslims to negative conflicts.

KD24 [41455-42968]

Ehmm I can say, for example, these ah media, the media actually if they are not careful in taking news of what is happening, they will fall and eh make people to understand things in the negative way, not in the positive way. Ah actually I myself have been watching sometimes, I can't even mention, I will not mention some of the media will be stating some things that are happening here in Nigeria particularly the northern part of Nigeria, I use to wonder, is it that these people doesn't use to go and ask the good people the right people to ask that please what is happening in really so that we will know what to tell the world, but you will see that they will be speaking of some things which actually they are even out of what is happening. I use to wonder then, I don't know how to tackle those problems and how to act about them, ah a journalist has to be very careful of what he will say to the public. What to take to his own office so that they will speak it out to the public that in Nigeria or in northern part of Nigeria or any other part of the world so, so, so things are happening, he has to make sure to be fully sure that what he is saying is the actual right, if not hundred percent, at least eighty percent is right sometimes they will be speaking some things that you that is living there you will even be wondering, imagining how, who did they ask? Who did they ask that gave them such answers? That is not actually what is happening, so maybe that this is what I can say about this one.

KD25 [55113-57219]

It has, to some extent, it has because if you look at this ISIL, this ISIS they are not just pushovers and ah they have their wealth and that is why they are mindless of whatever America would say or would even hold or want. They have, they are given money, you understand, they have the real money ah all these eh you can see, these heavy weapons they are using anybody that has got no money cannot use these weapons, so they continued, they started importing those weapons into this country too because eh like I think it was 2014 that eh these eh so called ah boko haram leader Shekau came out to say that he has ah pledged allegiance to the ISIL ah meaning that eh he would be abided by their word yah, he is ready to support them in short, globally and internationally, so you can see that it is money that the ISIL are using, so that external influence is, it has really to some extent eh affected the some of the youthful ah Nigerian Muslims most especially those in the boko haram. Aha you can see the heavy weapons, you can see the expensive ah cars they have been, all these what do you call it this pickup something, Aha Hillux and the rest, it's not a poor person's car, it is a very expensive car ah you will see anywhere, both starting from Maiduguri to Yobe to Adamawa to Bauchi and the rest of them, you find out that anytime they said there is an attack in so, so state, you will find out that they will say the people came in Hillux and with heavy, who gave them? Who supplied them those weapons? It is the people from outside. So you can see by that the external influence has really exerted on some of the ah youthful Muslims who are mostly unemployed I know, mostly they are unemployed because somebody that is employed and getting something and ah has this ah Islamic training right from his ah parental home will not just have the mind or interest to leave all what he is doing and to go and join such people, to go to bush and let them continue living there, killing innocent people and all that in the name of jihad. That is not jihad, it is just insurgency, it is not jihad.

KD26 [14201-14421]

Yes. Yes it has. The external influence that has affected, like I said, the proliferation of teachers and preachers is one of it. We seeing foreign whatever, like the new sects that are coming up, it has influenced it.

KD27 [16318-16354]

Well I wouldn't say, I wouldn't say

KD28 [19847-20323]

Yes I agree there is because the external influence is that the western education which came into the north, tried to condemn some aspects of the Islamic aspect of life, the way of life in the north. With this it gets some northern leaders irritated. Now the understanding of the western education and Islamic education is trying to conflict each other. That is the issue because right from the onset, I told you what, unless you have the understanding of what you are after.

KD29 [11534-11581]

Well to a certain degree I can say yes I agree

D31 [12613-12706]

Okay ah I think the or just skip that skip that please I don't have much to say on that too.

KD33 [14391-14908]

Well! It is true that external influence exert on the current understanding of jihad in northern Nigeria is true because when you look at what the people that are calling jihad we are doing in the northern Nigeria you will see that I totally not Islamic because Islam doesn't permit you to kill even a non-Muslim without reason. So what the, so the so the influence, the external influence is really exerting on the Muslim in the northern Nigeria so that they will kill each other with non-Muslim and start conflicts

KD34 [15063-15819]

I agree, I agree because as I said now we live in the world of media that is internet of everything. Some of the activities that we never witness before in Nigeria we are witnessing it ten years back, like bombing of either mosque or church, targeting a group of people that they know nothing, they know nothing, they have nothing to do with others. You just fix a bomb in a market where a lot of people come there, some people are Muslims, some are Christians, some are children, some are kids, some are looking for what they will eat and fix a bomb to destroy them. It happens to other countries a long time ago in a foreign complex and now we are seeing it in Nigeria. So definitely there is foreign influence or external influence in our own society.

KD35 [16152-16710]

Yes clearly I cite an example with what is happening in the Palestinian territory now ahh the northern Nigeria, a common Muslim in northern Nigeria think the Palestinian are being molested, are being deprived of their right because they are Muslims so a common man in northern Nigeria think western ahh I mean the Europeans don't like the word Islam, they don't they don't like Muslims, so that is why the common man, the common Muslim man in the northern part of the country is ready to fight in colonialism or the European you know concept of the rule.

KN1 [38511-38993]

I will agree with you because as I told you now knowledge is moving freely, before ours are moving out to read out of Nigeria to have their degrees and they obtain ideologies, the capitalism ideology, the Karl Max ideology, that is theee... this Russian ideology-Marxism, so not only about Islam and jihad, when I go out to read out of the country they obtain ideas and now as I mention that knowledge is moving freely on the internet and the air so there this external influence.

Yes, one, probably by those that don't understand religion or have a misconception of the word jihad and probably by those that want to manipulate religion to collide probably the country, we may not even understand our external enemies a times are trying to divide us and make us fight ourselves so...

KN2 [21482-21670]

There is external influence and it has gone a long way since there is this proliferation of arms and people claiming to be Muslims have taken up arms. So you see it has gone a long way.

KN3 [27590-28219]

Well as I said the misunderstanding of the leaders or their selfishness, but Islam is not like that. Islam is quite clear that jihad is defensive not offensive and that if you are going to preach, do it with tact, diplomacy, wisdom and good speech (he quotes a verse of the Qur'an). Go on to the path of your lord with tact and good speech. It is quite clear there. So it is not Islam it is the people's selfishness or misunderstanding, ignorance that has brought about this or deliberate attempt by colonial masters and neocolonialists in order to bring confusion into the Islamic world so as to control them as they did before.

KN4 [34811-36682]

Well you see when you make to think like you, when you makes me to behave like you, when you colonize me, there must be a conflict of interest so that conflict of interest has-is a factor that influence the current situation of the northern, in the northern Nigeria. When you look at it when French colony establishing their government the people there they make them to think like them, to behave like them, to eat like them, to undress like them, that is assimilation principle. There is also association principle, that is way their own way of doing things. When you look at it England that is our mother, ehn if I can say, in the modern world, we use their official the official language in the country their own language, so it influence our mentality; their own dress, they are the people, they are the westerners, they think they don't give priority to religion and they people here in the northern part of the country they give priority to religion, so when you are trying to take your culture and makes me to be like you, you are coming with something very, very, very vital and very, very true but myself it could be difficult for me to accept, I can be very, very inflexible to some extent as a result of interaction, we acculturate some of their culture we-they influence us on some certain instance and in some certain instance the people here in the northern part of the country couldn't allow them to influence them to accept their own way of life that caused the conflict of interest, is true. It is their influence on us as our parents and we that we think that we have another parent before they came, caused a little misunderstanding when it comes to some engagement amongst us. The influence and the conflict of influence affected the understanding between the northern Nigeria and the external or between the entire Nigeria and the western world.

KN5 [14938-15170]

Ahhh actually ignorance is one of the factors and ah the external influence has not actually eh made much impact, if it does in any way, it is by, by through inculcating and instigating poverty in northern Nigeria, that is just it.

KN6 [15168-15548]

Yes not only Muslim, both Muslim and Christian because even those who are claiming they are jihadists in this northern part of Nigeria, for example, like Borno and Yobe, there is some Christians who are participating in the issue so is not the issue of ah is not the issue of Islamic, it is the issue of maybe politics or is the issue of ah maybe I don't know, how can I say, so.

KN7 [15830-16682]

Hmm, yes eh, when you look at it from in the real sense, when we talk about politics, definitely, definitely, one way or the other, conflict would come in. It would come in in the sense that ehm, some politicians, some politicians believe that ehm, conflict ehm, would solve would ehm really, really solve, yes, because we have some political thugs within the society, what are the functions of this political thugs? They are just there to cause crisis and when they feel yes, we want to change this ideology, political thugs doesn't, they don't understand any language apart from the fact that yes, there have to be conflict, there have to be conflict and ehm yes, so indirectly or directly or indirectly we are saying that yes politics, politics of the western, of the ehm northern Nigeria has been influenced so definitely conflict would come in.

KN8 [12899-13088]

Yes, in fact my answer is absolutely yes because as I have said initially, the western ideology is an influence over people that are embarking on jihad in the contemporary northern Nigeria.

KN9 [13663-14056]

Yes this dear ah the whole scenario has encouraged Muslims in engaging in conflict, this is because ah they are, the westerners have successfully brainwashed most of the Islamic scholars into promulgating actually what is not the correct teachings of Islam. So as to create ah, you know, a very chaotic situation in order to just ensure that the religion is backward and relegated in history.

KN10 [10791-11245]

What happen in the world now is that justice is not being doing to Muslims. So this is such external influence, yes can affect ah can really cause conflicts within the people because once Muslims realize that there is no justice from the other parts of the countries or from outside of the country, so of course they will use the idea or their chance or opportunity that they have to respond in such external influence that is ah that they are facing.

KN11 [15464-15474]

Yes, yes.

KN13 [16286-16336]

No, it has not influence on any negative conflict.

KN14 [12111-12402]

Yes of course, the issue of this boko haram as I told you before is ah is imported ah ahhhh things from abroad, and I cannot say from, I cannot say this is the country that imported boko haram, but it is a planned thing that most of the most of our respected scholars do not agree with it.

KN15 [13388-13797]

Yes indeed, it really influence Muslims to engage themselves in negative conflicts nowadays because the international communities they use to at times supply them with maybe weapons, sophisticated weapons, money and at times even food materials so as for them to continue you know protecting their influence, so their interest sorry for them to continue protecting their interest, so this is what is going on.

KN16 [6906-7014]

Yes external influence has influenced some people to engage in negative conflicts, for example boko haram.

KN17 [16351-16381]

Yah, well to a little extent.

KN18 [25936-27006]

Eh well external influence in this context you could always see it from maybe from the fall of Ghadaffi, okay, fall of Ghadaffi, fall of Ghadaffi brought about circulation of many arms and ammunition in that particular axis, Sahara axis, from Niger, Mauritania, Mali, Chad, okay, Cameroun and some parts of Nigeria, they were free and there were, there were there were many groups okay, okay, smugglers arm smugglers operating in that vast Sahara vast Sahara free without, without any, any, facing any problem from any challenge from any authority. In that context we could say there is external influence, external influence that there are circulation of arms and other things. Secondly, we could say that from what happened in Libya where armed group carried arms against a government and with the support of the West they toppled the government that kind of a conflict and together with what is happening in Syria and Iraq we could say that it could have influenced, it could have a little influence in the mindset of the people of around that region so its two way.

KN18 [27044-27083]

Yes engage in these negative conflicts.

KN19 [17055-17469]

Uh actually ah tracing ah em tracing it from the concept of globalisation, you understand, the world we are in a global village, people are reading text, people receive messages, people chat, people research aboard, there are a lot of influences of book, you understand, from there so in one way or the other there are elements of regulation and moderation of people's ideology, you understand, from the external.

KN19 [17579-17594]

Exactly, yes.

KN20 [9859-10304]

Eh if you see it through what people see on the screen, the TV the news and the rest of it when they see people in the middle east are even fighting when it comes to the north, some people that are-their knowledge about Islam is very myopic so they want to like take advantage of that to revenge on what has happened, but normally jihad should be a kind of soft thing from your mind not like seeing what has happened in the external world to

KN20 [10401-10429]

Of course of course I agree

KN21 [6630-6648]

Of course it has.

KN22 [12832-13059]

Yah because-well as I said earlier, one of the challenges of contemporary Muslim is that of extremism and fundamentalism that led to terrorism. So this external influence we are talking about, we are seeing what ISIS is doing.

KN22 [13145-13344]

Definitely, we've seen and witnessed what Al-Qaida has done and so many Islamic terrorist organizations. So that has to some extent influenced and perverted the mind of teeming youths in Nigeria.

KN23 [10132-10351]

External influence, from my own view, they are not doing any good because these people they are the people that are saying jihad is this, jihad is killing, jihad is violence, they don't give people clear view of jihad.

KN23 [10471-10497]

Yah to a very large extent

KN24 [10792-10815]

To a very large extent

KN25 [12157-12201]

I think it has a very great impact on that

KN25 [12320-12346]

Exactly. This is very true

KN26 [13214-13434]

Well it is a subconscious one. Subconscious in the sense that there is no necessarily for a direct influence but rather a subconscious influence like I said earlier on in media, largely media. largely media that is it.

KN26 [13551-13572]

Very well, very well

KN27 [12149-12636]

Looking at it from a more political aspect, there is what we call in political terms neocolonialism that is indirect ruling; indirect rule in the sense that these people are invisible, you won't see them but yes they are ruling you indirectly. So in one way or the other yes I want to believe to a very large extent there are western ideologies that still exist and is still existing in the cultures, the orientations and the understanding, believes of the northern Muslims in Nigeria.

KN27 [12755-13013]

Yes it has. It has because when you look at it, the westerners they are of less, let me say believe in the fact that if they just want to achieve something, they don't want to know how the implication it would since it doesn't touches them. So yes it does.

KN28 [9879-9932]

This I don't think there is any at all, not at all.

KN30 [12441-12499]

It is been long since I did this...not at all, not at all.

KN31 [14106-14182]

External influence in northern Nigeria, hmm they don't have any influence

KN32 [5627-5791]

ah Kabiru as I have told you before I don't think there is any relationship between external influence and the current understanding of Jihad in northern Nigeria.

KN33 [5121-5180]

By teaching wrong interpretation of jihad, yes it is true.

KN34 [7048-7422]

When you look at the, it has an impact, when you look at the way they use to use their western media- western world use to talk about jihad it's just like Muslim or Islam or Muslims in short want to convert non-Muslims by all means whether they like it or not to practice Islamic religion once they are not willing to submit to that so they must leave or vacate their land.

KN34 [7538-7562]

hmmmm I don't think so.

KN35 [10050-10202]

Yes, simply because the contact of the Muslims in the northern part of Nigeria and some radical Muslims in some part of the world, so it can influence.

KN36 [9541-9841]

Yes there is a lot of external influences like issue of the Shi'a and other groups within the Islam which interprets the jihad in wrong way because religion, our Islam does not preach violence. But this people they always protect the interest of their society rather than the interest of the Islam.

KN37 [8388-8433]

Yes I think I will agree with that. It has.

KN38 [5764-5768]

No

KN39 [9555-9782]

Actually I don't think there is something negative with regards to the teaching of Islam because all the time Islam doesn't teach Muslims to make ah to do conflicts, always Islam is teaching Muslims to conduct a peaceful life.

KN40 [11001-11022]

No idea about that.

KN41 [7433-7633]

Ah see jihad doesn't really mean fighting, fighting in the sense that you will be hitting yourself, beating, being at the battle field, using sword or gun and whatsoever. Fighting is a synonymous word

KN42 [12941-13803]

Yes. I agree. External influence has been part of the reasons why people, people now see the ehm, Islam has a violent religion, a religion that preach about killings and maiming of people instead of religion of peace. Take Boko haram, for instance, is said to be an Islamic organization whereby we all know it is political in nature because they are not after any religious benefit but actually to divert people's mind away from the national question. Take the Al-Qaida, ISL, they have always been that they were sponsored by western, by external influence, not actually from the people within. This external influence, providing weapon with arms, financial, logistics and everything thing and what have you has that actually contributed in how people see Islam in a negative light rather than the positive one. So it is really a very great problem in Islam.

KN43 [14867-15370]

Yah, as I told you, the only external influence which to me, in my own opinion, that is you know, antagonistic to the peaceful coexistence of Muslims in northern Nigeria is the importation of shi'a. So the importation of shi'a has nothing to do with non-

Muslims, is ah an internal problem, is a kind of, you know, problem that bedeviled the Muslim community not the non-Muslims. So the external influence as far as I am concerned has nothing to do with the relationship between Muslims and non-Muslims.

KN44 [10139-10439]

I don't know, I don't, I don't even believe there is anything like northern Nigerian in Islam. Islam is Islam everywhere is a universal religion applicable everywhere. So to really narrow Islam to only northern Nigeria, that is part of the reason why perhaps I wouldn't like to answer that question?

KN45 [10873-11537]

Yah, but ehh I think there must be a ehh I can agree to a certain extent that there is some external influence on some of the insurgence fighting in especially the North East areas maybe you can say that there is influence of Al Qaeda, maybe Al Shabab in Somalia on them but ehh, to a larger extent that influence is very minor because I know before many of the commoners, the masses living in northern Nigeria took people like Osama Bin Ladin, and the likes of them as heroes, as heroes of Islam that was before the coming of Boko Haram but when Boko Haram came to northern Nigeria, people realize ehh that even Osama was not that sane after all, after all, yah.

KN46 [19515-21199]

Yes, there is this external influence, for example, ahh you know people, Muslims have different understanding of how to go on their activities. So, for example, there are some ideas that started in other countries which maybe ahh they are maybe 100% Muslims, so definitely their understanding of how to relate with non-Muslims will be different from that of Muslims living in a multi-faith societies and communities. So I think this ideas coming from those countries contributed negatively in shaping ah understanding of some Muslims living in Nigeria specifically I would, I would like to cite Saudi Arabia as an example. I would not say Saudi Arabia deliberately are trying to negatively influence the Muslims here in Nigeria, but I would say ah for the fact that Saudi Arabia is almost a monotonous country, I mean, they have only one religion and to a great extent, one ideology. So some Muslims who are influenced by scholars from this country try to import their understanding of how people should live into our own, our own context which is not relevant because they live in a monotonous country they don't know any other religion but Islam, they don't know any other ideology but theirs, and they think this could be applied in our own society which is not possible because we in Nigeria live in a multi-faith country, you have Muslims, you have Christians. Even in Islam you have people who have different ideologies. Some of them are Sufis; some of them do not share this inclination, so we need to develop our own way of how to solve our problem, we should not import such ideas from outside because we may end up complicating our problems rather than solving them.

KN47 [24370-25565]

Huh, I don't think ah external influence has anything to do with to do with determining, you know, the concept of jihad because they are not preaching Islamic religion even if they do, do we here in northern Nigeria don't really listen or don't really depend on them for that kind of meaning. So what I know here is that ah, you know, we are already know the jihad, you know, we know, you know, what is the meaning of jihad and then we have better interpretation of what is jihad in northern Nigeria. But when you come to, you know, look at it from the perspective of the of the West, you can simply see it from the perspective of Islamaphobia because they are very much afraid of Islamic religion, you know, looking at the growth of Islam in Europe and United States, you know, and what happened immediately after, you know, December ah 11, 2001, you understand. So you can simply see that their own is out of phobia, what they call Islamaphobia and our own understanding of jihad ah we simply find out that it is not about the fighting, it is not about bombing, it is not about killing and shouting, you understand, so we believe in other concepts of jihad which is better practiced nowadays.

KN48 [8436-8446]

No, idea.

KN49 [14278-14831]

I think it does, ah people go out of the country and they become radicalized and they come and they preach ahh violence, they preach terror, they preach ahh unrest and it goes a long way in disorganizing the stable society in which we use to live in and ah people go and adopt other practices and obtain other concepts that are not workable in the present system we have and they expect, they expect ehh to work with those concepts and ehm not taking into consideration that we live in a multi-ethnic and multi-religious and very, very complex society.

KN50 [7512-7597]

Ah yes, I think some negative influence has made some Muslims to engage in conflicts.

KN52 [18432-19332]

Well I would say yes of course there could be some kind of external influences on the way in which contemporary Islam in Northern Nigeria is practiced especially if you look at it in terms of this new, you know, more sort of militant sects such as Shi'a for instance and other salafi groups like ahh the boko haram for instance, right? You could say, for instance, some of the inspirations that ah these groups might have had, you know, come from external sources. For instance, take the case of the Shi'a, you know, their funding comes directly from Iran, how the Iranian revolution inspired the Shi'a group in Northern Nigeria and things like that. So yes of course in that regards, there could be some external influences and the boko haram crises also for instance, there have been attempts to really establish the links between boko haram and other external influences; Al-Qaida, ISIS in Iraq,

KN53 [9719-9757]

I don't really have the idea of this

KN54 [4604-4618]

Well it has

KN55 [6025-6052]

Yes it has influenced them

KN56 [8767-9180]

Yah actually external influence has greatly exerted on the current understanding of jihad in Northern-Nigeria why because the western influence, the western countries always try to portray Islam as a religion of terrorist and they always try to portray Muslims as terrorist through propaganda in their medias, you can name them BBC, VOA and the rest. They always repeat negative things about Islam and Muslims

KN57 [9790-9820]

Yes of course, yes of course.

KN58 [21919-22552]

Yes because they have been taught of different meaning of jihad or meaning of even the religion. They were told that Islam only entails violence that by being violent or by killing they are now carrying out the jihad. And where does Islam say that by killing a fellow Muslim you are carrying out a jihad? Where? Who can tell me? If you look at what is happening in the North Eastern part of Nigeria whereby a whole community or village would be wiped out. Is that Islamic? It is not. So there is serious influence of western culture to distort the true meaning of jihad. So that eventually Muslims would be labelled terrorists.

KN59 [16911-18468]

Humm actually yes there is actually, Humm actually the external influence has exerted the current understanding of jihad because to them they are not really, it is not that they want the peaceful nature of the north, but all they know is just to go, some of them you would see them as if they are Muslims, the external forces, some of them are not even Muslims, they just hide behind the curtain as Muslims just for you to have a misunderstanding maybe they have some economic influence they want to extract from that particular country, you understand, they would now train a person, go there do this, do this so that they can harness your resources there, you understand, let me use the issue of this boko haram in Nigeria that is currently going on, to me, my understanding of this boko haram is the external influence because based on the perception of people that there is oil in Maiduguri and this boko haram based on the perception of the rumor that we are hearing because I don't have a proof, it is just a mere saying that it is being influenced by French, you understand, so that they would carve away Maiduguri from Nigeria, let it be part of Cameroon because Cameroon is being colonized by the French people, so that when they scrap away Maiduguri from Nigeria then they would now attach it to Cameroon then they can easily have the oil. So the people in charge of this boko haram, the members are Muslims, but actually they are not true Muslims. They might not actually know why they are being sponsored to fight the Muslims and Nigerians.

KN60 [19624-19649]

It has actually, it has.

KN61 [8234-8324]

Yah, definitely there are some external forces, some external forces that cause this one.

KN62 [28265-29296]

External influence of course has come, infiltrated our mother land, our people, our Muslim community, and it has bastardized our ways through this very dangerous trend, and trendy, and passionable way of life in name of globalization. This has, let's say, ruined and distorted our ways of life. So through media, we have the, through this media, you understand, we have so many problems. People watch television, people use their computers, people spend more time on television, people spend more times on their computers, on their television screen, on their cellphones, on their this social network and that social network and through this social networks we see ahh some ah, let's say, western thinkers, we find western thinking, you understand, posting some, some unbecoming an wholesome and very obnoxious words about Islam and this words are actually eh becoming problems to our young Muslim brothers and sisters, who haven't ahh or who are not well vast in the religion, so actually there are so many things to say on this.

KN64 [13005-13295]

Yes, there is some, there is some external influence and I agree with this. Like I said to you ah in the past ba? People outside, they are come with their views and force it to our youths in order to make them ahh useful to them to achieve their goals in bad side. This, I agree with this.

KN65 [16168-16189]

Yes, yes very well.

KN66 [9652-9835]

Yah, external influence such as the westernization has influenced in some Muslims to some extent and it has changed some, the attitude of some Muslim in the modern northern Nigeria.

KN67 [9857-10159]

Well I think there are so many influences which are, may have happen in Nigeria or in some other places which people started ah giving it another interpretation and that caused many problems and that makes people to think that the western, ah the western people I can say, they are against Islam, so

KN68 [4986-5078]

Ohh, external influence has entirely changed the conception of jihad in northern Nigeria.

N69 [18754-19234]

External influence influenced those that are in Nigeria particularly northern part of the country as Muslims to engage themselves into jihad, that is to say the so called jihad because it is based on their understandings. This is almost what is happening almost worldwide to the fact that some extremist not understanding the exact interpretation of Qurn'a and Sunna and they engage themselves to the so called jihad. To me is a so called jihad because jihad must be conditional.

KN71 [31577-32999]

Yes, like the Islamic revolution in Iran, you know it kindled light, this similar light in so many other places of the world. And like what, like even this al-Qaeda of Osama bin Laden and so many other organizations of their type, of their nature. We would see that what always use to happen in a man's life is that man wanted to be a hero of whatever he ventures into. You can remember how the name Saddam was so, you know, random in our state or in the whole, in our country due to the 1991 Gulf war because Saddam was seen as a champion among the Muslims, you understand, so similar impact of the revolution of Iran and so many other places like that, of course motivated so many other youths, not only in northern Nigeria, but in, I mean in the whole continent of Africa as a whole. So of course and in that you can see that is why even when we having this now on the leader of Shi'a sect in the name of the El-Zak zaky what brought him, what took him there? Was it not first motivation of the revolution, then the issue of being a member of the Muslim Student Society then now transforming to what he is now. Do you understand? And when there was this faction, we have one side, at one side the, what do you call them? JTI, you have the Zak zaky on the other side and you have so many other similar movements either big or small all having the same feeling of that one day they will revolutionize the nation, yes.

KN72 [17417-17731]

Yes exactly, there is so many influence for external influence that make this happens because when the colonial masters come to Nigeria especially northern Nigeria they were trying to change the mode of thinking of the people, so such ehm changes in the mental or to say making rational is what makes this happen.

KN72 [17847-18250]

Exactly because that influences to take so many advantage because when we look at the other side like ehh Egypt and most of the part of the Latin is this Latin America or to say yes it is Europe especially the Russian side where Afghanistan and so on try to change their code of conduct based on the Islam so this influence the people of northern Nigeria to attempt to engage in negative conflict, yes.

KN73 [16995-17490]

Yah. Really there is external influence. This external influence and to what extent? Really we have to find extent of external influence and some Muslims that you find or they engage, it's not only external influence that makes them to engage. There is poverty, like I was always telling you and some they don't even know what and what this concept means and what jihad concept means. They are only after what type of or what kind of cash will I get when I engage in. That's the only influence.

KN74 [29010-29230]

Ok, this question seems to be almost the same thing with the previous one we have discussed about. I think there is no any an external influence exerted to the current understanding of jihad in northern Nigerian Islam.

KN75 [30684-31471]

A lot of western influence have negate the influence of Muslim ehnn this conflict especially in northern Nigeria. Let me take a typical example of the Israelite, they call it the Jewish conspiracy by which whatever they are going to do, whatever let us assume what the conflict that is happening between the Muslims and the Christians in the northern Nigeria they contributed a lot, yes there is external influence because let us take example from Jos, they are the people telling the people of Jos that look Jos is for the Christians, any member of Jos, take only 5% of Muslim are in Jos, they should not allow the Muslim to dominate in their government affairs so they have to strive, they have to fight to make sure that what happen in Kaduna states should not repeat itself in Jos.

KN76 [20591-21108]

Actually ahh in modern society and with the present ahh ahh globalization we have and ahh seeing the level of ahh connectivity between, in terms of ahh movement of information and many other things, you can say that jihad ahh that the view of jihad in northern Nigeria is not influenced by some external factors of an hour or in some minutes you can you can know what had happened in certain areas, that thing may have either positive or negative impact on an individual depending on his educational and disposition.

KN78 [26983-27644]

Hmm mm I think conflict has been part and parcel of a process in the Hausa ahh society. I think we should not ignore one very important point. We had series of conflicts even long before the the 70's, long before the 80's. We have, for instance, conflict between the Tijjaniyya brotherhood movement and the Qadiriyya brotherhood movement. Those conflicts could not necessarily be violent in nature, but we do have conflicts long before that time. So I think it is part of a process that we have to ahh we have to understand that ahh those factors are really part of the process of a wider impact of certain values that comes from other part of the world.

KN79 [14112-14122]

Yes, yes.

KN79 [14296-14637]

Because many of this external influence or many of this ahh external ideology as I said that are coming to our country they are using our people, they come with their own ideas which our people didn't understand and that idea is just like ah I can say is just bad ideas and they are using our people to propagate their own ideas, of course.

KN80 [26140-26495]

yes of course because a number of Muslim do travel to some countries like ahh our mother land Saudi Arabia and other Muslim countries. So Muslims, northern Nigeria Muslim has the spirit of Islam, so through these visitations so they come up with so many ideologies and perspective on how themselves should be governed, so really it influences their mind.

KN81 [13170-13359]

Yes of course external influence facilitated negative conflicts in northern Nigeria because most of this jihadist in Nigeria copied the idea of Arab jihadist and adopted it in the north.

KN82 [16821-17108]

Yes, yes, as we said, the fabrications, the distorted Islamic teachings inserted to the Muslims and some of the Muslims misperceive that of course resulted in a serious disagreement that some are fighting in a very wrong way claiming that they are fighting for Islam which they are not.

KN83 [10749-10930]

Hmm yes I agree because before our people started importing jihadist ideas, no Islamic militant activities in the north only in Arab countries we had and some and some western part

KN83 [11090-11225]

Yes all this kind of things ahh happening in some part of Arab countries like Afghanistan, Pakistan, Syria, Iraq, Yemen and the rest.

KN84 [12517-12777]

Of course there is, of course there is. There is external influence because western power influence this jihadist movement and so called jihad. So in Muslim countries also jihadist movement, in Muslim countries is also influence northern militant operations.

KN85 [12853-13308]

Yes we said some of the activities of some groups in the Middle East and North Africa has actually exerted some influence on the understanding of people of northern Nigeria of the very concept of jihad, yes it has influenced them and this influence has ahh actually molded their behaviors, has molded their activities towards militant Islamism. This has actually ahh had a great influence or has influenced them to a great extent to engage in conflicts.

ZA1 [15661-16190]

External influence. I think if you are talking about the external influence that is the things that happened nowadays in North East is a problem of the westerners, is a westerners conspiracy, not a jihad conspiracy because all this arm that people are using, no any country in Islamic country that are producing this AK47, this bomb. Is there any country that are producing it? This America, this America they are the one who is producing. So let us ask them who are they providing this ammunition, this external to. So is not.

ZA2 [15219-15771]

There is nothing like that because to me as I am telling you, if you look at, when we look at the teaching of Islam, there is nothing going to be there, nothing that you bring in will influence because this is what is already been in the book of the creator. So anything coming in new it should just be of the negative or a way of given my own needs. So the influence then is not so to that extend that I believe it hat you know, it is determined by our attitude that is the western influence, there is nothing that comes in rather our attitude.

ZA3 [14164-14502]

Toh external influence, the religion has never been a closed circuit. Islam is universal religion as I have said and, but due to break in barriers, the world turning into a global village, of course what happens in other parts of the world could definitely affect what happens in the community world groups so there could be that effect.

ZA4 [30452-30889]

Yes now. External influence in the sense that sometimes we normally send our students, our people, our children to Jazeelatul Arab, we send them to Saudi or Iraq to go and study Islam, so sometimes they get negative understanding from there, they get bad understanding of Islam, even when they came here they will be rebellious to their parents and all that. So this is how it contributed negatively to we in Nigeria here, you understand

ZA5 [17363-17635]

Just look at external influence that we have in Nigeria, sorry to be using Shi'a whether this thing or is not even Shi'a if you look at it Shi'a were getting their sponsor from where? From Iraq, Iran that is where the sponsors come in that is from international bodies.

ZA5 [17743-17752]

Yes sir

ZA6 [41975-43955]

Of course, in fact aahh majorly it is, this issue of militancy and their notion of jihad is an external influence in most cases. Is an external influence because that is why it is an imported adulterated amm and it is an imported teaching of Islam from outside, they come in just for them to benefit in one way or the other, mostly you find out that this happens in countries with oil, with oil ahh with crude oil around the world now. It is an influence, external influence in the sense that they try to use this people, this imported scholars to come and teach altered message, they alter the messages in the Qur'an, they teach this ignorant people hmm and they get their sponsors from outside, externally now ehn, they pump in money to this people, this ignorant people, now you see success in the short while and they teach you this is what Islam says, of course they will gather followership and as they gather followership now, the sponsor now they start giving them, they tell them about the jihad of fighting, bombing, where do they get this sponsors? It is from outside. They sponsor them; they push in weapons, bombs and money. They become very rich, if you bomb this, you get this and they tell you Islam allows this. Now they tell you, you are a Muslim, you know if you do this is bad, so you won't want to do it, and now somebody is coming to tell you if you kill this person, Islam allows that and not just that that means you will be rich, you will get the reward when you die, in case you die, if you live you will get the reward in this world because they will give you money, you will be rich. Now come to think of it, you have nothing to lose, if you die you have the reward, if you are living you have the reward here. So what are you to lose? Of course you will what, so the external influence is what is really killing this people. It is, in fact that is the major ahm set back that is what is really causing, you know, the growing of this militant groups.

ZA7 [15919-16531]

Yes from what I said to you earlier I think I answered this question before and I said external influence, people from external countries have their cultures, their way of lives and religion in any other country and the way of life must also be influenced, the religion must also influence your religion wherever you are, you understand, despite the fact we Africans we practice Islam and Islam says that there is no religion we have to practice it, we still influence some our cultural activities, so definitely there must be bad influence, if the external, if he external influence is of bad intention to us.

ZA8 [32411-35145]

Yes. I think so because most of this terrorist groups like the ISIS, the al-Qaida that they are claiming to be fighting for an Islamic state that is very unnecessary. Now all this kind of things are what some of the illiterate also in Nigeria that don't know anything about Islam are trying to copy or let me say to emulate. That okay since in so and so state and so and so country they are fighting for a state, now why not in Nigeria? Like, for instance, this boko haram sect of a thing, they are claiming to be fighting for an Islamic state and they are killing innocent people indiscriminately because if actually you are fighting for the cause of God, a jihad like they say that they are fighting for Muslims. Number one, it will be so obvious that you will never kill a Muslim, no matter who he is. The moment you know he is a Muslim, apart from that, even if he is not a Muslim and he claims he is a Muslim you leave him alone because you claim to be fighting for the same religion, so why kill him if you are fighting for the same religion? Now it has come to light that these external factors have also influenced almost crisis, like the current unrest in Nigeria, it has influenced because if you ask them now, they will tell you that they are fighting for Islamic state while they are killing innocent people, women, raping, killing children, kidnapping women. I have never heard when religion asks you to, in fact, during the time of the prophet (SAW), they don't fight in the town. Even the rule of war entirely, generally, not Islamic, if we want to fight you, we don't come into your residence and fight you, we will tell you look we are bringing war to your country meet us, you only fight war in the border, border of your state. We will come to an open field where you will not hide. Anybody that comes there knows he is coming for one purpose to come and fight war. So you are prepared, I am prepared, now let's fight. If I kill you I kill you if you kill me you kill me. That is number one rule of law. But this one that is happening in Nigeria, they enter into the town, kidnapping women, killing children, during the time of the prophet, if they want to fight war, it is when the idol worshipers invites them that look if you don't come out for war, we will come to your house. The prophet will now mobilize and tell people that look we don't allow them to come and destroy our property and kill our women and children rather we will go and meet them at the border to stop them from coming into the town. This is how, even in the rule of modern law that is how, modern war, you don't kill, bomb peoples home. Find a neutral ground then you go and fight your war there. If you win you win, if you lose you lose.

ZA9 [17733-18436]

Yes. If you look at what happened, if you look at what happened, what is happening in other Islamic states, look at Iran, look at Iraq recently Gaza was attacked by Israel, just the same thing happened during Sadam Hussein's period. So many things they believe and this people are fighting for a different cause, they are fighting for territory, but this our, I think our northern Muslims are not fighting for their own territory, they are, the Muslim political leaders in northern Nigeria are using that experience that is, what is happening in other countries to brainwash our own northern illiterate mostly or northern Muslims to perpetrate their own personal interest which is bad for our country.

ZA10 [20030-21050]

Yes, some external factors, let me use that word, have actually affected, has negatively affected some northern Muslims, negatively because when someone is exposed to some things that un-Islamic like some teachings that are un-Islamic and back before he is enlighten about those negative things, he doesn't have Islamic knowledge, it will make him have these strong belief that what he is doing is right and they are all wrong. So coming to the northern part or the Muslim states, you will see he will be exhibiting some characters that are un-Islamic, so with that he will easily form his pears, and they will be influenced by this character and that's how it goes. So those are the external factors that actually affect these because even if it is a foreigner that comes in and make friends or mingle around, you will definitely inculcate some attitude or some things that are un-Islamic that is when there is no jihad fi sabilillah, there is no constitution guiding some, a lot of activities like that in the state.

ZA11 [15441-15810]

Of course, when you look at it now, you will hear about the ISIS and other activities going on and then, it is always on the media, it gives the notion that that is the only way they could be heard, so creating other sects like boko Haram and others this thing. It is all about the notion and the perspective that it gives, so I believe it has something to do with it.

ZA12 [8577-8707]

Yes it does because the external forces, if one believes in such, in their teachings, then it has great influence on the Muslims.

ZA13 [9484-9874]

Yes, quite right it has because in one aspect, if you can look at it especially bringing about this boko haram that we have, to some extent we will be able to know that if it were being handled, we will be contented with it by now, but due to some external influences that we have maybe from the Alshabab and Wherever, influences of Al-Qaeda, this fueled this crisis to where we are today.

ZA14 [9235-9420]

Yes sir, because if you look at the issue of Boko Haram, there is no difference with the one that is going on in Sudan, all the Al-Qaeda, Alshabab, they have almost the same ideology.

ZA15 [15401-15639]

Yes, as I have said, you know we have some Mallams, their views, they are too harsh, too extreme in such a way that they over preach what they are not supposed to preach. So it has actually influenced most people particularly in Nigeria.

ZA16 [9183-9188]

Yes.

ZA17 [9126-9140]

Yes I has do.

ZA18 [12872-12933]

Gaskiya there is that possibility, there is that honestly.

ZA19 [17106-17649]

Well to some extent ah this western influence has negatively influenced some Muslims, and not even Muslims alone, to involve in conflicts because some are highly intellectual while some where not intellectual. Some you can use propoganda, different forms of propoganda techniques to actually ah convince or confuse them to involve in some conflict and violent acts in the society. So to some significant extent, the western influence has impacted on the behavior of some northern Nigerians particularly Muslims involving in some conflict act.

ZA20 [9400-9659]

The current understanding is that many people are saying current influence, it may be the influence of this current phenomenon of ISIS like Boko Haram who are receiving support from ISIS you know. So I don't think ahhh any way let's go to the next question.

ZA21 [13617-13987]

Of course yah. The extremist here in the northern Nigeria are blindfolded by thinking that ok whatever they are doing they are doing for the cause of Allah which is not true. This is to say that the external influence as said here and that they are brainwashed by some of the Islamic scholars and this is the reason why they are involved in all these activities.

ZA22 [11723-12040]

Yah like this Boko Haram they are calling, this brothers that are militant in Islam, we heard the story that they got the idea from Algeria, all those Somalia and the rest of those countries. So it is a foreign ideology that they came and adopted in Nigeria, which made it impossible for us to achieve what we want.

ZA23 [16904-17557]

Take for instance the advent of internet. Originally to our understanding those that were the advocators it they didn't bring in internet in any way to help Islam and the Muslims, but only to see how they will separate Muslims from Islam. You maintain the name a Muslim, but in practice not a Muslim. And they tried to see that they groom some people, they finance them, they do whatever they could do so that they will use them to destroy the Islamic teachings from the Muslims. Take for instance there was so many episodes that happened for example the Maitatsine move, the present Boko Haram. This is all anti Islam, but in the name of Islam.

ZA24 [22467-22969]

Yes there are external influences. There are some they call Al-Qaida, those ones, in fact, some people- there are in different sects now, if you don't belong to their sects whether you are a Muslim or not you can be killed at any time. Therefore those people are influencing-you know we are not wide knowledgeable in Islam in Nigeria -so majority of people did not go to Islamiyya, but they just heard that in so and so country they are fighting Islam, they don't know who are those they are fighting.

ZA25 [20058-20544]

Ahh yes I would say so. You know as of now the whole world is a global village. Whatever is happening at every part of the world is eh Nigerians are well exposed to it. And you some brothers that are not all that patient that tend to take some learned scholars as not proactive, as timid or fearful, so they are apt to start practicing and dramatizing or that is implementing what they see in other parts of the world are doing. That is in terms of suicidal attacks and what have you.

A26 [9635-9803]

Yes, this issue of attacking Palestine and other things is part of it. Korea owns a nuclear something but when a Muslim country tries to own it they will say no, why?

ZA27 [8085-8263]

Yes, like this issue of politics, politics like some northern Nigerian Muslims this their issue of bringing politics into religion is what is also contributing to this problem.

ZA28 [19158-19748]

Well may be this question I will attribute to amm some self centered leaders that preach wrongly to people and let them engage in all this kind of negative conflicts. Some of them are really, really, really influencing people that is why I say it is very necessary for people to go out there and search for knowledge. It is not every religious leader that you and kneel yourself down to learn things from and you might not know who exactly you are engaging in your search of knowledge with. So I think people should be very mindful of the kind of people they go to in search of knowledge.

ZA29 [28070-28375]

Yes I do agree. Like I said the jihad is misunderstood and misconceived not only by the non-Muslims, but by the Muslims themselves. When heard the word jihad what first comes to your mind is fighting and draw sword, guns and no that is not jihad. And it is misunderstood and it influenced some Nigerians.

ZA30 [38668-39461]

Gaskiya, I don't think we have any external forces that forces Muslims to behave differently. Well, it is just now we are hearing that ehm this Imam Shekau have an alliance with ISIS, but if not this time around, all the fighting that took place in Nigeria, in northern Nigeria is just happened internally. I don't think that there is anything happening that we say that it is caused by the external agents. It is may be within us, created by aggrieved politicians. That is just it. But now that Boko Haram pays allegiance to ISIS, so we don't know. Although, Yah I agree, I can say because some weapons they are using, they bought it as a result of breaking down of ehm Ghaddafi's empire in Libya. So it might happen this thing just started. The external forces just begin to influences now.

ZA32 [33748-34814]

So I can say to some extent ahhh some people or the people in northern Nigeria that are carrying out the jihad or rather claiming to be jihad undertakers ahhh honestly speaking, they are, they are influenced by other ahhh sects or groups in the world that are engaging themselves in jihad and they understand it as to fight and they understand jihad that is just as what, as fighting which is honestly it is not which is contrary to the real nature of the jihad as provided by the Qur'an and the Hadith of the prophet (SAW) and ah it influence, really it influences some Muslims to engage in negative conflicts. Like for example, the issue of boko haram, it is a greater example ah available to us now to refer ourselves to eh when talking about the influence of external ah influence ah external ah negativity in carrying out the jihad, yes.

ZA35 [10277-10285]

No idea

ZA36 [15702-16034]

The external influence I can see is watching movies, I can see that this people are even influenced by watching movies because the way they see people killing and shooting and maybe that thing is attracting them so that they are trying to practice on us. So maybe that is what influenced them to come and be doing all this rubbish.

ZA37 [18165-18582]

Actually it is to the extent that many people, in most cases non-Muslims and some parts of Muslims misunderstand the real concept of jihad, real concept and meaning of this jihad. It is to that extent at least and the influence has almost reach to the point where each and everybody knows what is or what happens in Maiduguri area and some areas of northern Nigeria. All these are what influence of external factors.

ZA37 [18704-18746]

Yes of course it is what I am saying.

ZA38 [23783-24483]

It is something I cannot deny personally, yah it influence, it influence to the extent that as I said earlier that most of those people that traveled outside, the wider for Islamic knowledge, some of them went to the wrong side and got the other side of knowledge. When they came back they started teaching people, teaching their followers and this is how it turned from religion, instead of them doing the moral aspect of religion they started practicing sectarianism forgetting about religion. That is why we started having problems between the Shiites and the Sunni, the Sunni and Qadariyya brotherhood or the Qadariyya brotherhood against the Tijjaniyya brotherhood. This is what influences.

ZA39 [33790-34014]

Yes I can agree with this. There are some people in one reason or the other, but such reason must be un-Islamic, unconnected with Islam, engage in promoting a particular cause that is not the true position of the religion.

ZA39 [34061-34827]

Actually this external influence has made a serious impact on some Nigerian Muslims. I think particularly the ideology, the Islamic ideology. There are some ideologies that are not connected with the true teachings of Islam, so some people that believe in this ideologies use money, use their own necessary means available at their disposal to bring this issues to Nigeria. As a result it attracted a lot of people who now share the same ideology with those external Muslims or foreign external ideas, as a result it generates a conflict not only with the non-Muslims, but even among the Muslims themselves because of the misconception of Islam. So actually it created a lot of problems in Nigeria not only among the non-Muslims but also among the Muslims itself.

Th 4: Qur'anic Provisions: A Source of Fundamentalism

FG1 [31399-31896]

Though there is jihad in the Qur'an but that doesn't mean or doesn't say that you should strive as those people nowadays do. I think what is expected of the preachers now is to preach on jihad let them actually classify or try to bring out what jihad really means because many people try to do jihad based on the perspective they see it. There are many people who are saying jihad this jihad that but later you will see that there is nothing in common with the real jihad so that is the problem.

FG3 [46327-46914]

I disagree. I strongly disagree. It is a verse in the holy Qur'an and I quote (he quotes in Arabic). He whosoever kills an innocent soul, his destination is hell fire. Not just hell fire, you know in our religion we have categories of hell fire and I believe in Christianity also, we have purgatory; we have like, not, but the last hell fire; deep down and forever. He will be there forever. If that book or let me take it. If my holy book will say such a thing how comes from nowhere somebody will say that you should kill and take life and you do not give life and you don't take it.

FG3 [46916-47407]

There are many verses you can use to buttress the point that say (he quotes a verse). Whoever saves a soul it is like he has saved the whole world. And there is another verse that says (he quotes the verse) There is another one that says (and he quotes the verse). There is no compulsion in religion. Another one says let your religion be your religion and let my religion be my religion. So there are so many verse to use to buttress that point. So the Qur'an never encourages violence.

FG3 [47409-48555]

In addition to what they just said, somebody might just read the Qur'an and maybe read some verses that are calling towards the jihad, yah really there are such kind of verses there, but as I said earlier that jihad has conditions, this holy book, the Qur'an was revealed to prophet Muhammad (SAW) and he is the first person that practiced it; how did he do jihad? Immediately after revealing the aya he started fighting people? I told you from the beginning, first educate people, he spent 13 years educating people. He even migrated to avoid the conflict, he migrated from Mecca to Medinah, he spent ten years in Medina also. So you see there are conditions. And also I told you that before you embark on jihad you must have an imam, you must have khalifa that everybody believes in, mubayi'atu. So you see when you see the verses there, there are interpretations. You can just go to the, that is why if somebody comes and interpret the Qur'an they will tell you who interprets before you, who is your Salaf. Do you have any reference? Anything you interpret there are those sahab with rasul, so any interpretation they must have a reference.

KD1 [33605-35567]

That still takes us back to the case of unexposed, inexperienced or half baked preachers in the sense that we've always been warned that this religion is not a religion of my father, it is not a religion of my grandfather and it is not a religion of my town. It's something that actually has a source, has an origin and we are not the first people to practice this religion and this text, this Qur'an is not that it was revealed today or yesterday, it is something that has been revealed over a thousand years ago, over a thousand four hundred years ago. So we need to, when we are interpreting the holy Qur'an, we need to do it, we need to take a cue from all the past predecessors interpreted it. We need to take a cue from how the scholars of the Qur'an actually interpreted it, how the scholars of tafsir interpreted it. You don't just come out and interpret Qur'an anyhow when we have scholars like Ibn Kathir, Attabarani and the likes and the other scholars of tafsir having their interpretations, and you just coming from the blues and putting your interpretation on and twist it in the way that suits you just to turn peoples heads. So if people are actually conversant with the interpretation of these scholars, certainly such problems will not emanate. But I think that's, the Qur'an does not have such thing because God is not a word, is not a God of destruction. He doesn't create people to just come and destroy themselves, this Qur'an has been existing for long and all these problems are just kind of a new problem. So you can't just say it's just now that we realizing those things are in the Qur'an and we now want to be following them. Actually we have to trace it back to how do those people interpret the Qur'an and how did they follow it because certainly the prophet (SAW) says the best of nation is this generation (recites a verse in Arabic). So, we can't, we can never prove, we can never claim to be better than those past predecessors.

KD2 [13296-13389]

To me, actually I don't agree with such Quranic provisions as they are being misinterpreted.

KD3 [10932-10964]

No. I did not agree with that.

KD4 [19630-19904]

I will totally disagree because Islam, as I told earlier on, is a religion of peace and it encourage peace and it does not encourage violence and it cannot encourage violence and there can never be conflict when you are adhering to the rules and regulations of the Qur'an.

KD5 [11471-12094]

Hmmm I think there is a Qur'anic provision that suggests Muslims should engage in fighting with Christians or non-Muslims, but under a condition, because if I could remember the verse, it stated there that (la tu qatilu hum) that you should not fight them, you should not kill them, that is the Christians or unbelievers, but (wa inqatilu hum) but if they kill you, (faqutulu hum) that you don't have any option than to retaliate and kill them back. So, I think the only verse that encourages Muslims to engage in killing of non-Muslims is only when non-Muslims kills Muslims and then it encourages them to kill them back.

KD6 [23840-24811]

No. You say some not we muslims. It's some that say that, may be in their own understanding or they don't understand Islam that's why they say that. Nowhere in the scripture that tells you to go and kill. What they are talking about is maybe they are talking about a verse that teaches you what to do. Qur'an is the complete moral of human being, nothing you can do in this world that you can refer it to Quran, nothing, it's not like other books. That is why you see Muslims, as a Muslims you are supposed to do your things according to Qur'anic teachings. Islam in any aspect of life you want to do. Anything you want to do, Islam teaches you how to do it. The only thing that Islam says, everything you want in life, anything, Islam already has the answer to it, forget about Jihad even in literary meaning, I can't fight you, you can fight me. Islam teaches me how to defend myself, come out of fight you. If you say I fight you because I defend myself, I fight you.

KD7 [16700-17071]

I agree because the people translating the Qur'an are translating it in such a way that they are making the polity heated and they are engaging these youths who society has left misguided to encourage in violence. They translate the Qur'an and they translate it in such a way that it suits their own purpose. They heat the temperament of these youths to go out fighting.

KD8 [34990-35277]

Violent conflict is not jihad. Violent conflict is different and jihad is different. Jihad is to strive in the cause of Allah, which I say it could be in terms of current education, building mosques, preaching, converting people. The other jihad too is there, but is not in modern time.

KD9 [22507-22550]

I don't agree. I won't say more than that.

KD10 [15161-15243]

No. I don't agree with that. It is false. It is completely untrue and misleading.

KD11 [20091-20351]

No because jihad itself is not a fight against non-Muslims. Those who had reduced the meaning jihad as a fight against non-Muslims have abused or have the wrongest notion of da'wa, sharia you understand, but yah, it is a very wrong notion of the word sharia.

KD12 [23214-23604]

Ah the Qur'anic provision does not ah does not, where we have some Qur'anic provision for ruling ourselves or for living together with non-Muslims, it doesn't give any way to anybody to go and kill non-Muslims see what the principle expected is just to give people awareness and then preach to them so without ah even without pointing accusing fingers to anybody ah this is what I can say.

KD13 [8258-8289]

I don't even agree with this

KD14 [9794-9820]

I do not agree with this

KD15 [14777-16471]

You see this, I will just go to ahm go straight to one verse of the Qur'an which says Qur'an 9 verse 41 where Allah (SBUH) says match forth whether you are light, being healthy, young and wealthy or heavy, old and poor and strive hard with your wealth and your lives in the cause of Allah that is better for you if you knew, but you see we nowadays and that doesn't mean that okay because Allah (SBUH) says all that, we just go pick weapons and start killing each other ah you see the word fighting itself even though by its nature it is disliked by humans because of the liability of being killed or being taking as a captive or being injured with the wasting of lives and properties and wealth, the stigma of the industry, the destruction of the country, the spreading of the feat in the soul and the possibility of being expelled from ones home or ones land, Allah has made ready good reward that cannot be ah by a human for the mujahidin, so you see all this statement ah Allah has made a reward for the mujahidin, but that doesn't mean that ok because Allah has said okay anybody that fights for the cause of Allah will be given paradise, will be in good whatever, so that doesn't mean we should now just pick a weapon and kill each other. It is not allowed in Islam. So you mustn't pick, in our generation now I don't think fighting with weapon is even jihad in our generation now, by your good deed and by your good intention I think that one only in our generation now is the most jihad stuff for me that is my own opinion. So you mustn't pick weapon or whatever I think doing a good thing, be a good person and be a good neighbor. I think that one is also jihad and very strong one.

KD16 [7871-7910]

I disagree. It is just misconception.

KD17 [26691-27428]

I don't agree. Which Qur'anic provisions? Which verse supports for you to go and be fighting non-Muslims? People that doesn't raise arms against you, they don't fight you, they don't stop you from practicing your religion, which Qur'anic verse? If there is any verse that person should go and bring the verse and bring it, as far as Qur'an is concerned, let him bring the verse that says you should go and fight people that they don't take up arms against you, they don't stop you from practicing your religion, they don't hinder your rights, you go and take up arms and go and start fighting them, for what? As in logical, let's even look at it from logical as in from a logical angle, you understand, there is nothing like that.

KD18 [13695-14158]

The answer is no and I disagree with it. There is nothing like that written in the Qur'an that say we should be fighting and make the provision for killing people like that. Even though when ka'aba was completed the last, when they opened the ka'aba and when the when they all gathered there, so they even said that the Qur'an, the words we have in Qur'an is that we should not fight anybody and there is nothing like a conflict written in our Qur'an, that's it.

KD19 [17385-18168]

Well, well I don't agree with that in the sense that like I told you, Qura'nic pronunciation or verses does not encourage a Muslim to start war, like I told you earlier, what Qur'an says fight in the way of oppressors, but do not start the oppression. So any Muslim that just starts fighting and he says it is the Qur'anic aya that says fight, then he has misunderstood that you should fight in the name of religion, but do not start the oppression. It is not possible for you to stay maybe at your home you are practicing your religion somebody comes and start attacking you and you are expected to keep quiet because you want to be a true Muslim, you want because the concept of the religion is peace, no. You are supposed to fight him back, if you do that, you are doing jihad.

KD20 [13266-13288]

I disagree with that.

KD20 [13308-13752]

Yes, because in the our holy Qur'an, there is nothing like fighting in the holy Qur'an, there is no any place in Qur'an that said we should be fighting each other that we should be fighting non-Muslims, so the Qur'an even advise us that we should live in peace with any with anybody whether they are our religion or not, so there's is nothing there is nothing like that written in the Qur'an that we should be fighting and killing people, yes.

KD21 [11911-12139]

The Qur'an has always been a blessing to mankind. It is never going to engage in violent conflicts with Muslims and non-Muslims. This goes to those who have a little understanding of the book as it goes al-ilmun kalilan fitna.

KD23 [11474-11814]

No. I did not agree with this. I totally disagree with this because all what Qur'an has already state everything, so Qur'an is our ah is our driving force, so whatever Qur'an says we have to follow it, so as I earlier said, I said it's negative act attitude of some scholars that are saying some things contrary to the teachings of Islam.

KD24 [43238-45338]

Ah is not right. That is not what the Qur'an says. I have mentioned this one too earlier that the prophet Muhammad (SAW) in his first place Allah (SBUH) has been mentioning (recites in Arabic) don't fight them, be patient, be patient, if you are calling them, call them with peace, call them with truth, say the truth, declare, be violent, don't am sorry, don't be violent, be...of what you are saying, make sure is the truth you are saying. Don't be angry on their own reaction towards what you are saying or your own mode of life or your own things that you are reciting to them. So if that should be the case, then the Qur'an in many places has mentioned that it, between the Muslims and the non-Muslims, we should sit in the same community, environment, none should touch none because of certain things, no. You are to touch someone, you are to fight someone if certain things happen which ah, ah concerns your religious part, that should stop you from practicing your religion just as I have mentioned earlier and the suggestions which I can mention is that the Qu'ran has been mentioning in so many places that before you fight somebody in Islam, you have to call him first. Secondly, you have to call him again. Thirdly, call him, if he refuses and at the same time he is abandoning you from doing your own that is when you are to treat or take action on him. And another thing is not to the action just on your hand, no. It should be from the leader and the leader too has no any right to just take decision, he has to call some of his, some of his colleges that are just sitting next to him and they should be neutral, they should note the mode of life these people are in, if we say we are to fight now, what will be the reaction, people will die even because of food, if there is eh war or conflict, no one will open shop, no one will open his own market, no one will come to market and sell food. Then there are the poor people that their own food they used to go and get the daily the next food they will eat, it is now that they will go and look for that money to come and settle, so.

KD25 [57605-57635]

That is really, really wrong.

KD25 [57755-59260]

I don't agree that is that is a falsification to the Qur'an. It's mendacity to the Qur'an, it is a lie. There is no place in the Qur'an that Allah provided that the Muslims should go and eh eh wage war that by so doing that eh to encourage the Muslims in ah engaging in violence. There is no were that Allah said the Muslim should be violent. No place in the Qur'an, even the prophet, Allah said what? (he recites in Arabic) it is because of the mercy of Allah that you the prophet is very soft and mild to your people, to your companions that are around you. Allah said (he recites in Arabic) if you were violent (he recites Arabic) a very strict hearted (he recites in Arabic) they would have dispersed away from you. So what, this statement is faulty and I am afraid that this kind of statement can lead to a person going out of Islam. It can lead to apostasy of course because the prophet said (he recites in Arabic) anybody that should translate the Qur'an based on his own wilful or wishful ah feeling or desire he is going to, he will not, eh God will not really have mercy upon him. That he should quickly go and maintain his seat in the hell fire. That was what the prophet said, anybody that should translate or interpret the Qur'an based on his own wilful desire toh on the day of judgment, if he should die on that course, then on the day of judgment God (SBUH) would really deal with him. He would not ask, he will not admit him to paradise, but instead can punish him in the place of fire.

KD26 [14574-14588]

No. I don't,

KD27 [16566-16583]

No. I don't agree

KD28 [20557-20683]

I don't agree that there is a provision the Qur'an that yes you have to make a jihad of this nature. I don't agree with that.

KD29 [11799-11885]

I totally disagree with that. It is an attempt to misrepresent the Islamic teachings.

KD30 [19798-20663]

I think this is part of the misunderstanding of Islam that I say people need to stand up, the Muslims have to stand up in order to show people the what Islam truly teaches ah peace ah I think peace is ah even mentioned more times than war in the holy Qur'an, so you will see that before it comes to war to carrying ah jihad or carrying ammuniton in Islam there is going to be a lot of, unless if you have been left with no option, but Islam is a religion of peace and the before it, unless there is no option, in Islam, we always try to show the beauty by good conducts and inviting people into it. That is why I said people need to learn more about Islam, people need to indulge in such jihad where you invite people, you show them the beauty of Islam so that they take away this misunderstanding of Islam where it is always about force or carrying ammuniton.

KD31 [12871-13163]

I don't, I quite seriously disagree with that like I said most people doing that don't have proper understanding of the Qur'an because the verses of the Qur'an if you look at they are always trying to like preach peace because that is the meaning of Islam itself the word Islam from salaam.

KD32 [17242-19097]

Ah most people, most people are just quoting some certain verses for their own selfish interests in the holy Qur'an without looking at the context of that verse, without now for instance if you quote the verse that was revealed one thousand four hundred years to the prophet during the time of his rule of kuffar in Mecca and you are trying to make that as a reference of nowadays, I don't think you are being, you are fair to Islam, this is very, very unfair. First of all if you are quoting a verse from the Qur'an you just look at the context of that verse, the context, the reasons of why God revealed that verse to the holy prophet and after that, if you observe all the verses in the holy Qur'an that are talking about the fighting with non-believers, if you look at the immediate verses, the immediate verse, the verse that follows after that they always talking about peace, so when they said if they attack you, attack them back, while if they want peace escort them to the place of security that is when unbelievers, when they come for peace not only give them peace but no, escort them to the place of security. There are so many instances like this in the holy Qur'an that if they come to attack, attack them back this is what the verses are saying, so anybody who is trying to defend his own selfish interest against Islam will just quote, will just quote the verse without giving the real contents of the verse, without looking at the reason of the revelation, why God revealed that verse, without looking at some verses that came after that, so many verses so when they speak about the war immediately after the verses in the holy Qur'an talking about the peace, so when they want peace give them peace if they come for peace as the Islam, Islam is peace, it derives from the word salam and salam means peace, so this is totally not Islam.

KD33 [15121-15194]

No, I didn't agree, I didn't agree with that, I didn't agree with that

KD34 [16037-16450]

I totally disagree, I totally disagree but I come across some quotations, some people are quoting Qur'an without reference, they will just quote a particular verse that say something without adding the next verse after it or before it to explain the true meaning of that word jihad or that word fighting or conflict or whatever they are just defining it. I come across it online written, but I totally disagree.

KD35 [16945-17312]

I don't agree with that. Ahh Qur'anic verses encourage Muslims to fight to the last drop of their blood when it is necessary, when they are touched, when they are killed, when they are deprived from practicing their religion, but with the exception of that I think Islam always preaches we should stay behind peacefully and cordially with even non-Muslims brothers.

KN1 [39991-41154]

The Qur'an does not encourage, it allows based on the circumstance as I had been mentioning and the situation, it allows but it does not encourage. It always, the almighty

Allah (Subh) has said wa subuh khair that negotiation and reconciliation is the best. That is the verse of the Qur'an wa subuh Khair. Reconciliation is the best, negotiating is the best. That one is encouraged by the religion but it depends upon... I cannot sit down while you are pick arms against me to kill me you don't expect me to sit down without defending myself, it doesn't make sense. That is it so that is why am saying a times especially nowadays people don't understand religion and they don't read about religion, they assume once you are answering a particular name it makes you a Christian or a Muslim. I know about a lot of Christians that if you quote the Bible, they will not even know you are quoting the Bible. I know about them. So that is it. So please there is need for you to know Islam to judge Islam, not to know Muslims, that Muslim may not be practicing the right Islam or doing what Islam has said right. So try to understand the religion not the adherents.

KN2 [21974-22000]

No. that is not correct.

KN2 [22033-22301]

You see jihad itself is not between Muslims and non-Muslims. It is between Islam and any contradicting force that happens to pose a threat to Islam itself not merely attacking non-Muslims. That is why I say jihad itself is misconceived. So that notion is not correct.

KN4 [36897-37037]

No, there is no way or a place in the Quran that say that a encourage fighting amongst people, no. Quran does not permit that. I disagree.

KN5 [15563-15644]

no I do not agree with this saying actually. That is not what Quran has taught.

KN6 [15763-16432]

I don't agree. Quran does, Quran does not encourage people to go and kill other people. Maybe you can't find it in the Quran so maybe you can find it in Bible. So if I didn't forget I can quote from the Bible that says you should go and fight, so maybe I can give you some paraphrase when you look at the either Matthew or Luke it says that you should go and kill those who are not part of your religion so this is a paraphrase when you take this Luke or Mathew you can find but you can't find it in Quran because it is clearly that it says in the Bible those you should go and kill those who are not part of your religion so maybe this is the western orientation.

KN7 [16892-17160]

No, I don't really think ehm this is relevant enough. It isn't. Qur'anic proooo, there is nowhere in the Qur'an that you come across the Qur'an saying that ehm you should go into conflict before you can ehm resolve little problems that is existing within the society.

KN8 [13302-13959]

Am, I think I disagree with this because according to the holy prophet (SAW), the holy prophet said, (he recites Qur'an) that it is not the righteous man, it is not the most powerful one that can be able to defeat his mate or somebody more than him, you understand. But the most powerful according to the prophet is the one that can control and suppress his temper, you understand, at the presence of words of anger. You can be able to control your temper that means truly the holy prophet is recognizing you as a powerful one. So in a nutshell, violence, conflicts, disagreement is not the element or tenet of Islam because the word Islam preaches peace.

KN9 [14272-14622]

Well I agree, but the truth is a most of these people are people who have gotten the wrong interpretation of the verses of this Qur'an. If only the person who have gone through these verses accurately, he would know that ah you are not just to strike an unbeliever at chance. There has to be adequate reasons for you to carry out such activity, yes.

KN10 [11460-11478]

I disagree, yes.

KN11 [15689-16463]

Some say Quran is teaching Muslims to fight, as I have said we can't deny it. There are some verses that talk about jihad but how would jihad be taken place that is the problem. Of course there are some verses in the holy Quran that talk about jihad, but how jihad would take place that is the problem. So some people misinterpret the word ehen but really, as I have said earlier, even in the bible, Old Testament, New Testament, there are some verses or there are some chapters that talk about jihad but how will jihad be taken place that is the misconception, where the misconception came. If you look at Moses, even Jesus Christ fought in the course of Allah (SBUH).

KN13 [16554-16570]

I am not agree.

KN14 [12614-12878]

No, there is no ahhhh verses in the Koran that says you should go and fight non-Muslims, except there are some conditions, one of these conditions of, ah ah is when they disallow you to perform your religion or some other reasons which I cannot now explain to you

KN15 [14011-14447]

Yes is true that Qur'anic provisions for fighting, jihad and war encourage Muslims to engage in violent conflicts with non-Muslims is true because sometimes you cannot come and say something bad on our beloved prophet and expect us to leave you and go free, so we must at least make a move and do the right thing and the right provision that the holy Qur'an gave us, so we have to follow it with due process.

KN16 [7227-7357]

Qur'an provides us to fight but not encourage people to engage in violent conflicts, except if our religion is being confronted.

KN17 [16535-16539]

No

KN18 [27237-27269]

I do not agree with this please

KN19 [17742-17754]

I disagree.

KN20 [10590-10694]

No, no, no, no, no, no, no Qur'an never, there is an extent an issue will get to before you go on jihad

KN21 [6786-6809]

I disagree with that.

KN22 [13678-13693]

I do not agree

KN23 [10650-10895]

ah, I agree because some people have the proper understanding of, they don't have the wisdom to access al-Qur'an the way it is supposed to be. And Islam is dynamic itself. There are things that can be useful now that they won't be useful again.

KN23 [11121-11221]

Yah I believe so because it is written crystal clear but people don't have the proper understanding.

KN24 [11091-11129]

No that is not true, no I don't agree

KN25 [12499-12788]

This is because of theeeee (Interjection with do you agree?) Well I don't. This is-why they engage in this violent conflict despite the fact of the laid down procedures by the holy Quran is as a result of misunderstanding and misconception of the true intent of the verses of the Qur'an.

KN26 [13735-14037]

Ahh I think it goes back to the earlier response I gave. It is all the matter of the leadership of the umma largely, you know, it is largely the leadership of the umma. You know when the umma is may be not truly guided ah to some extent they tend to teeter, follow across the violent part of it, yes.

KN27 [13161-13179]

No I don't agree

KN28 [10081-10095]

No I disagree

KN30 [12650-12675]

I don't agree with that

KN31 [14340-14363]

I disagree with that.

KN32 [6007-6135]

ahh I don't agree with that and as such I don't think I should be responsible for given you any provision that will suggest so.

KN33 [5381-5399]

No I don't agree

KN34 [7710-7768]

I don't agree. They are just misconceiving the whole lie.

KN35. [10350-10352]

No

KN36 [9989-10182]

No I do not agree because Islam is a religion of peace and even in the Qur'an and even in the hadith of Rasulu, there is a lot of provision for the non-Muslims to reside in the Muslim society.

KN37. [8581-8617]

No, no, no I don't agree with that.

KN38 [5915-5919]

No

KN39 [9928-9956]

No actually I don't agree.

KN40 [11230-11373]

Thank you very much. I disagree with that in the sense that Qur'an or hadith does not state that Muslims should be fighting against non-Muslims

KN41 [7847-8291]

Actually I disagree with this assertion because Qur'an doesn't make any provision for fighting or encouraging Muslims to engage into violent conflict with non-Muslims and on the other hand jihad doesn't mean fighting. As I said earlier that fighting is a synonymous word, it might be preventing yourself from doing something which is bad or trying to engage into doing something that is good. All this can be called fighting against something.

KN42 [14013-14871]

The Islam does not encourage, we should know that it is the Quran and the hadith especially the Qur'an is divided into four parts; what has happened, what is to happen, what is happening and what would happen. So whereas in the Qur'an is part that has preached about fighting, but they are for the people that are before us that is for the people that have been oppressed and we are told if they have oppressed you to the point of you not being able to take it again, and you are calling to your lord, your lord has not given you a reply, fight them back. But in this present day, which is what is happening there is no place in the jihad that is telling us to fight them back. Those are the people that misinterpret what is already said in the religious thinking. So there is no way Islam is suggesting violent provisions or anything that has come our way.

KN43 [15581-15888]

That is also misinterpretation. Islam or Qur'an does not categorically encourages or rather encourage Muslims to go into war. Qur'an preaches peace and peaceful coexistence. Probably the verses of Quran that talks about war and jihad are not properly understood by some segments of Muslims and non-Muslims.

KN44 [10645-11071]

I don't have the Qur'anic text to support my argument and since I don't have the provision I cannot be able to recall most of these Qur'anic injunctions, for me to comment on that is, it won't be ideal for me, suppose I have all the Qur'anic injunctions on the jihad that would have helped me to quote some of them and justify this, I mean, my response to this question. So since I don't have I don't like to talk about that.

KN45 [11747-11910]

No, I don't think there is any eh Qur'anic injunctions that encourage eh Muslims to fight non-Muslims, yah. I don't think there is any Qur'anic injunction that.

KN46 [21409-23183]

I think it is the misunderstanding of Qur'an, if the ah really understand all the provision made by Qur'an for one to engage in such things, I don't think you should understand that. So actually the proper thing to do is for Islamic scholars to engage their brothers and enlightening them, educating them about true Islam not their own understanding because, you know, ah people, scholars, Islamic scholars I mean, are trying to interpret Islam differently. So some of them ah, have narrow understanding some of them are broad minded. So I think Muslim scholars should come together discuss this hot issues, especially the issue of jihad what does it mean and even the misconceptions Muslims themselves have about the word or the term jihad, Muslim scholars should do something about it because ah we tend to complain that jihad is misunderstood by non-Muslims, no, jihad itself is misunderstood by Muslims first. That is why even non-Muslims take the advantage of that understanding some Muslims have about jihad, they fuel the misunderstanding. So I think Muslim scholars have this obligation, they need, they have this duty to Islam to come and explain this misunderstandings Muslims have about their own religion, they need to do a lot of enlightenment campaign, they need to carry a wide and eh maybe intensive campaign to ah to try to make ah Islam understood by the Muslims themselves before because I would not say that non-Muslims misunderstood, misunderstand Islam, yes of course some of them misunderstand Islam, but those who most of them write about Islam they know Islam and they know what Islam is ah all about and they know the place of jihad in Islam and the true meaning of jihad they deliberately misrepresent this fact. This is my understanding.

KN47 [25778-27088]

Well, there are many, you know Qur'an, you know, as a book as a sacred text is interpreted, you know, differently by different scholars, you understand, so according to the popular understanding of the holy Qur'an, you know, as I heard sometimes, you know, a reference to the Tafsir of Sheikh Ja'afar Mahmud Adams, you know, the late, he simply said that it is not enough for somebody to read a verse in the holy Qur'an and go out and say you just want to practice that particular teaching of the, of the aya, you understand, he has to go by many, many Tafsir; many, many interpretations. They were written in a lot of books of interpretation of the holy Quran. So according to the interpretation, I mean the popular interpretation, of such kind of verses, you have to, you don't have to go and fight people, it is not an encouragement, you understand, some ayas were even kind of, were even giving you kind of self-defense, you understand. When you have self-defense that is where I said, you know, before in the interview that, you know, there is no situation anymore that you go or somebody come and say you should not practice your religion. You understand, so we don't have the situation whereby if you are attacked for practicing your religion you go and attack somebody and continue to attack somebody.

KN48 [8654-8808]

No. because there is, there is nowhere in the Quran that it teaches us anything like that to be to be fighting or causing a kind of conflict everywhere.

KN49 [15042-15432]

I think I do not, I totally disagree because Islam as an entity preaches peace, but ah I think some people misunderstand the scriptures, they directly translate the scripture and the verses of the holy Qur'an, but eh in terms of the interpretation of the Qur'an, we need to take into consideration several factor. There are ways of translating and people directly translate, which is wrong.

KN50 [7808-7954]

I totally do not agree because this is misconception of the holy Qur'an. In Qur'an there is no verse that says Muslims should engage in fighting.

KN52 [19542-20436]

It is not true because most of the people who argue, you know, for that position either do not understand those provisions in the Qur'an, those Qur'anic injunctions or they simply deliberately quote them out of context, you know, and that I think it is the case in most cases. You know, they quote those verses out of context. So you need to understand the context of the Qur'an within which the Qur'an, those verses were revealed. So if a verse revealed for Muslims in Medina to rise up against enemies coming from Mecca for instance, that verse should be interpreted strictly contextually, you know, within the context of that historical time. So you cannot simply lift up that verse and then try to apply it to a situation where you have peaceful and harmonious coexistence between Muslims and non-Muslims groups in the society for instance. So that is the problem, quoting out of context.

KN53 [9968-10217]

A'a, A'a, A'a wallahi this one is not true Madam. This question is not true because Qur'an is just meant for is to understand the rule of Allah and what Allah did not want so that we could also preach the same thing to other people. That's all.

KN54 [4830-4849]

Actually it is no

KN55 [6258-6333]

No because Islam always preaches peace and Qur'an cannot allow violence

KN56 [9390-9615]

Actually this is a ridiculous question because Islam doesn't preach violence and there is no way that the Qur'an of our creator Allah can preach violence. So this is even to some extent blasphemous, a blasphemous question.

KN57 [10030-10193]

You see I do not agree with this, Islam is nothing but peace. So some people misunderstand what the word Islam mean. So I strongly disagree with this statement.

KN58 [22760-22772]

I disagree

KN59 [18678-18690]

I disagree

KN60 [19859-19875]

I don't agree.

KN61 [8474-8493]

No, I don't agree.

KN62 [29646-30472]

I don't believe that Qur'anic provisions ahh encourage fighting. I don't believe in that. I told you the first verse ahh about, about fighting, about jihad in Qur'an that (he recites the Qur'anic verse) that is the first verse you are not allowed to go after your non-believer or ah an unbeliever or a person who actually thought to have been taken a sad ahh a different part, you understand ah well until, until when that person wrong you, you shouldn't go after him. So I don't believe that there are Qur'anic provisions that encourage jihad or war or anything of sort. So many people, historians, philosophers around the globe talk about this peaceful nature of Islam. They believe that Islam doesn't in any way encourage ahh this war, jihad and other things, taking weapons, yah Islam doesn't encourage people to do so.

KN64 [13571-13779]

There are verses in Islam that calling Muslims to come out for jihad, but this does not mean to go and killing people discriminately, no, no. Jihad means you protect your religion, hmm, protect your religion.

KN65 [16423-16823]

I do not agree. Quran never encourage any Muslim to go violent with non-Muslims. Okay when we are talking about non-Muslims, the Qur'an refers to the Jewish and the Christians as ahl kitab and he has never, he has also encouraged us ah ask us, we should respect those alh kitab, he has never encouraged us that we should kill ahl kitab. So the Qur'an never encouraged any Muslim to kill non-Muslims.

KN66 [9990-10150]

I don't agree because in, because Islam is a religion of peace, the word Islam is an Arabic word which means peace. There is no way it will encourage violence.

KN67 [10309-10537]

Well people are misunderstanding or misinterpreting the Qur'anic ahh verses that relate to the jihad. I think yes I agree, there are so many issues that people are misunderstanding and are using it to create violent activities.

KN68 [5289-5371]

Ehh, Islam always preaches peace, so the Qur'an cannot preach and teach violence.

KN69 [19453-20744]

Well at the same time it is the Qur'anic provision which show us how to live with non-Muslim in a good way, in harmonious way, mutually. Therefore, problems lies always on the interpretations of the provision of the Qur'an as well as the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) even if there is outright provision which commanded you to do jihad that is jihad in the sense of physical combat, if time is not in your favor I think it is not allowed for you to do it. This is one of the rational of Islam because Islam always gives room to his people to make sure that they live in harmony, they are not expected to do things which at the end of the day it will be the detrimental to them. I may cite it, I may cite you example during the era of Prophet Muhammad (SAW) Sayyidina Abubakar intended to go to Ka'aba in order to break down all the idols there and the prophet (SAW) responded by telling him that he is not eh, he shouldn't go there because it is not right time, it was not right time but Sayyidina Abubakar went ahead and do it, what was happened to him? They almost killed him by beating. So even if the provision of the Qur'an and Sunna mandated us to engage in jihad in the sense of physical combat, if we see that the time is not in our favour, we are not expected to do it.

KN71 [33227-34080]

I really don't agree, if somebody is saying we are having what, we are being encouraged by Islamic quotations, as regards to this, I don't agree because from the verse that started to give Muslims instructions to go to the battle field to the last one, it was not an instructions just for you to go and fight, but for you to defend yourself (he recites the verse of the Qur'an). This is the ground. (Re-recited part of the verse) on condition that they were being maltreated, they were treated unjustly then they were given a chance, an instruction to fight back (re-recites another part of the verse). So it is not an issue of because there is (he continues the recitation). What did Allah say (continues the recitation) you fight the cause of Allah who, those that are fighting you. So Islam is always on self defense mission. So get this very well.

KN72 [18466-18620]

No. I do not agree with that because there is no any versions that allows peoples or the Muslim peoples to engage in violent conflict, yes there is none.

KN73 [17699-18202]

Ah, really this provision in the Qur'an, for how long has Qur'an been? How many years? Is over 1000 years. Yah from all this time to now. Why some Muslims don't really engage in fighting conflict wherever they find themselves? How many countries there are Muslim, why don't they fight or engage in fighting? From there you will really agree that it is not an Islamic provision or a Qur'an provision. It is not that contribute or motivate them to engage. So it is only as I have said it, it is the cash.

KN74 [29939-30104]

No, No that is what am trying to tell you, therefore, nothing in the Holy Qur'an that eech encourage Muslim to engage into violent conflicts with the non- Muslims.

KN75 [31745-31775]

I disagree with the question.

KN76 [21324-21355]

Actually I don't agree with it

KN78 [28133-28516]

I think I disagree ahh certain, I think we have to be very careful, there are certain interpretations, when you say some group interpreted the text of the Qur'an or the authoritative text of the Muslims to suit their purpose, that I agree, but I think it is not something that is acceptable to the whole vast majority of Muslim communities. Is just a matter of interpretations, hmm.

KN78 [28782-29658]

...this group, the group, the group of cause because you see we have all the scholars who disagree with them at the same time and they equally have some text, Qur'anic text to support their position. If those quoted Qur'an to support the fact that violence is legitimate, violence is allowed, there equality number of scholars who disagree by quoting the same or different source of the same text, giving a particular interpretation, there they feel that their are position is right. So the whole idea has to do with what is you interpretation of the Qur'an? If you have a group that has a political agenda, they will certainly quote verses from the Qur'an, text from the Qur'an to support that position. If you have all the people that disagree with the political agenda of the other group, they will certainly have all the verses of the Qur'an that hahahah (laughing)....

KN79 [14851-15236]

Well there is no any Qur'anic verse or Qur'anic verse that encourage Muslims to just engage in ahh violence just like this because all the jihads during the lifetime of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) all the jihad that the prophet Muhammad (SAW) engage on is just for retaliation, that is for ah self defense, defense. I think there is no any verse that encourage Muslims just like that.

KN80 [26710-27442]

So the three words you mentioned are different from each other. Fighting is different from jihad, war also is different from jihad. The jihad which Allah (SBUH) categorically mentioned in the holy Qur'an is the jihad with conditions that is jihad fi sabilillah. There is so many steps governing the conduct of Islam as it was prescribed by the injunction of the ahh Qur'an. so but never for once Islam enjoin wage of jihad for political gaining or for economic reasons rather for Islamic reasons. But in the case of war and fighting, all can be waged in both reasons, politically of economically it is what makes fighting and war, but as far as jihad is concerned it is only for the sake of the religion that jihad will be waged.

KN81 [13924-14158]

I disagree because there is no such provision in the Qur'an that encourage conflicts, you understand? Qur'an does not provide anything to encourage, to encourage conflict or war, you understand, or fighting. So this is what I mean.

KN82 [17320-17539]

Okay Qur'an suggests means, a course for someone to fight, but, as we said, Qur'an demarcated a bench mark if someone cross will result to jihad, but the situation we are, such a situation does not warrant in Nigeria.

KN83 [11432-11620]

Hmm I totally disagree. I don't know why people misunderstand like misunderstand the position of such verses in Qur'an. They do not encourage fighting or war but revenge or self-defense.

KN84 [12984-13107]

I disagree. No verse in the holy Qur'an that encourages war or influence conflicts. No verse, no way in the holy Qur'an.

KN84 [13110-13208]

What about verses that talk about conflicts in the Qur'an?

A: With conditions, with conditions.

KN85 [13517-13907]

Yes Qur'anic provision have enjoined Muslims to fight, has enjoined them to engage in war with non-Muslims, but only on certain conditions, when they prevent them from practicing their religion, when they persecute them, when they persecute them, but under normal specific situation there is no need for those emm activities. Yes Qu 'ran has enjoined them, but only when there is provocation.

ZA1 [16341-16732]

So let me ask you, who sent America to conquer Iraq? Is it an Islam? No, it is not. Why does the America conquer the Afghanistan? Is it an Islam? Why does America conquer, go and destabilize Libya? Is not an Islam. So all these issues they are talking about is not Islam. Islam didn't give door for a single person in particular because you have been wronged to take arm and retaliate, no.

ZA2 [15921-15942]

No, no, no, no, no.

ZA3 [14716-15072]

So am wondering now why the author is having jihad and war, so you mean there is jihad and there is war, so if there is jihad and war then as I have been saying all this while that jihad is striving does not necessarily mean war, so what I will agree with is there is no such provision that they have to be involved in violent conflicts with non-Muslims.

ZA4 [31108-31971]

All the ayas in the Qur'an that is talking about jihad is when jihad is necessary after you have to do some other things before you talk about that one. So ayas in the Qur'an is not talking directly that you should take a gun and start killing, you understand, that is how prophet Muhammad interpret al. these ayas in the Qur'an and he understand the Qur'an more than everyone. So you have to follow the concept of the of prophet Muhammad not you reading the Qur'an alone and you start and go and do it, you will be wrong because we have prophet Muhammad that is there to interpret the sayings of the Qur'an. So those that just quote the Qur'an because the Qur'an is saying this one (he recites the Qur'an) you just have to kill them, they are evil people because they are misinterpreting the Qur'an. That is not the teaching of the Qur'an or the prophet (SAW).

ZA5 [18236-18304]

I disagree with that that is what am saying. I disagree with that

ZA5 [18380-18615]

Qur'an never teach us to fight non-Muslims neither for you to like preach to them, give good to them, they you understand, we have good character of prophet Muhammad (SAW) that you behave, you look like ahh yes this is a true Muslim.

ZA6 [44168-46649]

Ahm no, no, no, no. I don't agree with that. It does not, it does not encourage fighting with non-Muslims because I told you striving in the cause of Allah, jihad itself has conditions, it goes with conditions hhm. For you to practice real jihad, you have to know the conditions guiding the jihad itself that was why I told you jihad of the heart is the best jihad hhm. The cleansing of the heart is the best jihad, being charitable to people, being honest and being just to people is the best jihad, Now if you want to engage, you know, the other aspect of jihad maybe the force, the forceful aspect, like I gave you an example now ehn before in the university now, in those days you see where people dress, you know, indecent, the nudity becomes the order of the day in the university, the boys goes into the girls hostel to stay the night ehn maybe if a girl is with another girl, you know, there are always problems. You see a guy coming to stay with a girl inconveniencing another girl that is not into that kind of life style, you get? Now in that in those days now the Muslims Society of Nigeria, the MSS now decided to engage in a forceful jihad not really fight, you get, it was a forceful jihad. Now the new, they understood the guiding principles and they followed it and they achieved their aim. Now you see their dress code, they dress decently mostly in school especially in ABU here where we are, you understand. So fighting, I don't think, you know, the jihad itself will promote fighting with non-Muslims, no. In fact it will entrench, it will promote peaceful coexistence because if you understand the tenets of the jihad, you would understand that it is only proper for you to live peacefully with your non-Muslim brother, you will know it is only proper for you to treat a non-Muslim ehn in a very nice way, it is proper for you to be charitable to a non-Muslim. So you see when you practice the jihad the way it is supposed to practiced, you find out that it only promote unity rather than, you know, when you start seeing fighting and all that within the non-Muslims then that is not jihad, it is an imported teaching of jihad just like you find, you see in the North East and in even the emm Jos plateau state and Kaduna. That is not jihad, it is an imported teaching and that is why you see fighting like that. If they should practice real jihad then I think, I believe and I know and in fact it is the fact that they will live peacefully and harmoniously.

ZA7 [16752-17027]

Well Islam has not provided any people with thoughts of going to fight people just like that. Islam has only said if you have been oppressed then and you've been maltreated then you can fight back. So I don't think Islam has encouraged anybody in any way to fight anybody.

ZA8 [35339-38599]

Ahm I don't agree with this point. There is never a place in the Qur'an where is says that you should engage in fighting conflicts with non-Muslims. In fact, it was stated that if they come to you, for instance, you know in war sometimes, if people realize you have been conquered, for them if they realize they are going to lose the war, they will start waving a white flag calling for peace or surrendering. Now during, in the Qur'an because this Qur'an was revealed during the prophet's time and it was revealed to him, so everything he does was told to him by God. If he said, during that time because there was conflict actually, like I said, there was hostility towards the Muslims then because they are very, very minute. So for them to die then prophet as they are increasing in number now, people are converting, increasing, increasing, now they now have the power to also conquer other states and they don't conquer states by just going and start killing. The prophet used to address, write a letter of address to the ruler first, if is a king, if he is a senator or whatsoever that look this is what God says because it is binding, it is compulsory on him to do that because they are worshipping idols and stones and whatsoever. So it was compulsory, it was made compulsory on him by God that write a letter to so, so state, they should stop worshipping idol, they should worship God. So he will have to address them first that look we are calling you to worship God, we are not going to collect your property, nothing, everything is yours, but you must not worship the idols you are worshipping any more, you will have to convert and start worshipping God. They will tell them because if they refuse to agree then you will now tell them that look God has made it compulsory on me to fight, how do they call it, to fight Shirk, Shirk in Islam means worshipping anything other than God, is made compulsory on me to fight Shirk wherever it is. You must find it and fight it because the sole purpose of the creation of people is for them to worship God. Now you are not worshipping God you are doing something else, it is compulsory on somebody that is worshipping God to tell you and call you to the right path. So then God tells them that look you are enjoined to fight, not physical fight, you understand what am trying to say? Fight Shirk wherever it is, call the people to change, but do not force anybody accept Islam. It is only God that can do that. It is only God that when God wants you to change, its just to change your mind before you know it you will just start changing your mind to whatever it is. So God told them, tell them this is the truth, leave their conversion to me. So there is no Qur'anic verse that asks you to kill people or to fight innocent. There are only place that says you should protect yourself if somebody wants to kill you. Protect yourself, protect your family, protect your wealth, you are allowed to do that. But apart from that, there is nowhere that the Qur'an said pick up arms and kill no, no, no, no. It only say fight corruption, fight Shirk, fight injustice wherever it is until they become good, they do what is good, they worship God, they fight they believe in justice. That is what I think it means.

ZA9 [18645-19034]

Like I said earlier the I believe jihad should take place only if this people, only if non-Muslims are trying to claim everything... I disagree with that. I disagree. Jihad should only take place if this people are attacking Muslim, in my own opinion. We should not have, we should not be the ones striking. We can only attack them if they are stopping us from practicing our own religion.

ZA10 [21253-22105]

Umm I actually can't say any provision in the Qur'an that stated that, it's possible, but there is no authentic hadith that said you must fight violently for jihad, no. The only provision is for the second step, like I said, that is alternatively that is when some situation actually warrant, like back in those days we've seen how the prophets conquered some country through jihad, it was actually not through fight directly, it started from sending messages and then like that. So but recently Qur'an is compiled and it is complete and it has shown us everything, so I think, what I think, in my opinion, it is not right to use violence to fight someone to tell him your religion that is jihad in the other way, but instead jihad fi sabilillah which you use Quran to tell him the word of God, Sunna of the prophet to preach to him that is the best.

ZA11 [16025-16189]

I believe it is lack of understanding. It is lack of understanding of the verse that has brought to that because it is misinterpreted. So that is my point on that.

ZA12 [8956-9025]

I think they lack the understanding of the provision in the Qur'an.

ZA13 [10083-10105]

Ahhh I do not agree.

ZA14 [9634-9879]

I disagree even though there are some verses in the Quran that mention jihad, jihad, but it is not jihad, we have so many ways doing jihad, but it is not a physical jihad that we are talking about here rather we are talking jihad fi sabilillah.

ZA15 [15853-15969]

You use the word violent. No I do not agree, what will solve that is peaceful understanding or peaceful agreement.

ZA16 [9612-9632]

No I do not agree.

ZA17 [9355-9459]

No, actually there is no any place I read in the Qur'an that says you should fight without a reason or...

ZA18 [13145-13164]

No I don't agree.

ZA19 [17858-17882]

I disagree with this.

ZA20 [9870-10146]

The Islamic provision, I mean the Qur'anic provision which guarantees Muslims to embark on jihad, that very provision though I can't remember the exact ayat, but that very ayat is very specific and has laid down specific conditions before a war is waged against unbelievers.

ZA21 [14201-14823]

We don't agree because there are quite a number of unbelievers close to the holy prophet as we said ab initio. And never once the prophet ordered that this should be killed this should be that. Even to the extent that when they go for war between Muslims and the Christians, Prophet Muhammad do order that ok if somebody runs away you shouldn't go and kill him. You shouldn't go about killing children or women and as well anybody who uttered the word la illah ha ilallahu you should let him go. This is to say that it is not in the interest of Islam for people to be killed mainly because they have not accepted Islam.

ZA22 [12250-12692]

I strongly disagree, Qur'an preaches for peace. Qur'an calls for peace and good interpersonal relationship with even non-Muslims. There are many verses and hadith of rasul (SAW) that quoted that and encouraged that. So Jihad as I said is just for our military strength as a society or as a territory. You must have military strength that will be able to defend or to avert any attack that might be launched on you. So that one it is there.

ZA23 [17766-18146]

No I disagree. Islam will never encourage Muslims to fight. As I told you earlier fighting in Islam has a condition and the condition is those non-Muslims to fight you then you must fight. Those wars jahidu fi sabilillah bi an waliku bu anfusikum is not addressing fighting. But use your own health, use your own wealth in doing what Allah subuhana wa ta'allah ordained on you.

ZA24 [23180-24520]

I agree that Qur'an says we should fight non-Muslims or unbelievers, but not in the present now. It was- we cannot say that Qur'an is old, old or new Qur'an, so this aya that is in the Qur'an when the kafirin sent prophet (SAW) out of his own town, he did hijra to medina and from there they still wanted to kill him then Allah now ordered him to fight them just to defend not to - Qur'an preaches peace and it says in the Qur'an that we should not enforce anybody on Islam that we should not force anybody to embrace Islam. I forgot the aya, but now I want to suggest that I totally disagree that we should use the aya of the Qur'an now in fighting non-Muslims. What are you fighting them for? We should not fight them now, but if I want to suggest what we should do the provision that suggest to do this is when somebody came now as I was always saying and for instance let's say when we are praying in the mosque and somebody came and destabilize us or started beating us so we too should fight back because they are already tampering with our religion, there is no freedom. If there is no freedom of religion so then we can use jihad to fight back, we can use that aya, but is there is freedom then we are free to pray any time and nobody is harassing you there is no any harassment then we do not need to use that aya of the Qur'an.

ZA25 [20754-21311]

Yes the problem is in Islam you don't do a partial analysis of verses and hadith that is you don't just take a verse in isolation and interpret it the way you like. So every- almost the interpretation of every verse depends on the provisions of some other related verses and the ahadith. So but some uninformed Muslim brothers they can just go and take some verses and say qatilu fi sabilillah. Qatilu then start fighting without having to resort the scholarly analysis of such verses in terms of the manner of interpreting and implementing such verses.

ZA26 [10012-10381]

I told you earlier there is no war in Islam. All the jihad fought by the prophet he was attacked. He just revenged. But when these people oppress you and when you retaliate you are called a terrorists. I don't know, I don't know. All this issue of terrorism they are creating the war and sending it to Muslims. Anybody you attack, he can respond. Stop oppressing them.

ZA27 [8472-8534]

No actually I don't agree. I didn't agree with this statement

ZA28 [19954-20984]

Qur'an. Allah himself does not want killing, unnecessary killings. He doesn't like unnecessary killings. And even when they say jihad fi sibilillah as I earlier mention based on my own understanding, the little knowledge I have in Islam is eh striving in the way of Allah, for the sake of Allah did not say you should go out there and fight people just because of your selfish interest. Qur'an or Allah himself have given the proper channel to follow while carrying out jihad as contrary to what people have in their minds. May be some people maybe when verses talking about jihad comes to them, they interpret it just the way it is, which I don't think this that is how people should conceive or perceive. They should really go in search of the meaning of that verse, what it is really saying, what way does Allah provide, has Allah provided for jihad to take place. It is not just willingness of somebody to just rise and say he is going for jihad with no leader, no acceptance from other leaders. So basically that is it
ZA29 [28593-29303]

This is a big fat lie. Qur'an the holy book, from the name the holy book does not in any way give a provision, in fact does not in any way give the followers of the religion the fight, does not in any way. Bismillahi rahamani rahim I will like to quote a verse here. There is a verse that says Wa man yaqatallah ... whosoever kill an innocent soul muta ammidan suddenly, just like that, his destination, his final destination is hell. It is the same Qur'an that says such, then how comes the same Qur'an will encourage or give provision for that? Is that not contradictory? That is the western role. That is what the western is. That is why I tell you that the western and the Islamic, there is big dichotomy.

ZA30 [39729-40112]

I disagree; I strongly disagree with this one because I mentioned it earlier, some people due to their inadequacy in knowledge, in Islamic knowledge, they engage themselves in such act while I told you the actual teaching of Islam, even during war did not permit the person having weapon to go and kill the person that don't hold weapon. So I already answered this question earlier.

ZA31 [13799-13814]

I don't agree.

ZA32 [35028-35803]

I don't agree. Strongly, strongly disagree with this point because Allah said la iqra ha fid din, no compulsion in religion and Allah said ahh you should not fight them until when they fight you and the prophet (SAW) was maltreated by the non-Muslims in his era, I mean in his period, lifetime, in his life time, but nevertheless, he never encouraged the sahaba to kill non-Muslims unnecessarily. In fact, even during the jihad, there are categories of people that are not allowed to be killed. Prophet (SAW) disallowed the Sahaba to kill old people like old man and women and young boys, young children are not allowed to be killed. So by this you cannot say or you can strongly disagree with this point and no any provision, Qur'anic provision that suggest that hmmm, yes.

ZA33 [9715-10064]

No. I think I don't agree with this because Qur'an does not encourage or permit a Muslim to fight with non-Muslim except if the non-Muslims fight him first. In the Qur'an Allah is saying do not fight them until they fight you and when they fight you, you fight them and when they kill you, you kill them. So therefore Qur'an does not provide such.

ZA34 [21392-21905]

I disagree because there are some verses also that talk about living in peace with others because Allah (SBUH) says la iqra ha fid din-there is no compulsion in the religion of Allah. And there is also a verse that says la ya -l-haqqumu-l-lahu katil wa la... Allah does not compel on you to fight those that do not fight you. See it is a verse. So how could you just pick one verse that says that you fight while the other verses are saying don't fight, live in peace with others. So I don't believe on that.

ZA35 [10489-10565]

I disagree. Qur'an does not, Qur'an is not a provision for fighting jihad.

ZA36 [16231-16255]

I don't. No provision.

ZA37 [18957-19005]

No. This is not true. This is not true actually

ZA38 [24694-25737]

Yah, I disagree because this Qur'an you are saying is a word of God. If you don't have the wisdom to read it, you would read it abstractly, you will read it differently from its teachings, that is why you see some people would say ah ehn go for jihad and kill unbelievers. This is not how the, no this is not how the religion is saying it, you need wisdom to read it before you pass the knowledge, you understand, because there is a chapter in the Holy Qur'an that says that be careful of the non-Muslims especially the Jews and the Christians. It is referring to the period when the religion is finding a ground, when the non-Muslims, the Christians and the Jews are conspiring to make sure that this thing did not see the light of the day, this is when the revelation came and he addressed this issue perfectly. Presently now we are not looking at that aspect, what we want to do now is to try to ask ourselves and say why is this thing like this? What are the solutions to these things? Is only what we find, I didn't see any other thing.

ZA39 [35037-35496]

Actually I don't agree because if it did not promote or encourage Muslims to fight against Christians and Jews during the life time of the prophet, it cannot promote a modern Muslim, a Muslim of this day to do the same because a reasonable and serious Muslim is expected to do is to practice the religion or a good Muslim what he is expected to do is to practice the religion according to those people during the life time of the prophet. So it is not true.

Sub-Research Question 1.1

Th 5: Theological Interpretation and Fundamentalism

Th 5.1: Imported Fundamentalist Islamic Teaching: It's Influence on Muslims

FG1 [10743-11160]

There is this influx of trying to bring in some teachings into Islam particularly in northern Nigeria. Nowadays we have scholars from here going far to Iraq and Iran to study and we have some going to Sudan and Saudia to study. We have some going to Senegal and Mali all of them to study. All of them are bringing different aspects, different forms of knowledge and understanding of Islam into the society.

FG1 [11162-11559]

That is not even the problem there. If the teachings from the various countries were actually Islamic, if the teachings were actually of the prophet there is nothing wrong with that. But that paves way for other non-Islamic activities to come into the country and you know when you are trying to prove, as you say extremists, they tend to prove that we are Muslims and we do things the best way.

FG1 [11561-12026]

The case here is that, you know even in Islam we have different schools of thought, we have the Malikiyas, we have the hanafis, etc. What is applicable in the Hanifi society may not be applicable in the Maliki society. A country like Iran may be part of Shafi'i school so there may be something which is applicable there that is not applicable here. So a scholar may be there to study and viewing that as right to him he may try to impose that here in the society.

FG1 [12028-12314]

From the beginning of Islam that has never developed a problem. The perspectives that you are a Shifiya or a Malikiya or whatever. That has never developed a problem. The problem is from these sects the Shi'a sect, the Darika sect, the Qadiriyya and so on (and uproar of voices ensued)

FG1 [12315-13494]

For now scholars if you are watching on social media, there are people who are trying to analyze the issue that they are saying that this issue of religious sect conflict is sponsored by the Europeans, for example if you look at the Shiites they said that they are sponsored by the Jews, the Israills and the Americans to come and destroy the social order of Nigeria and particularly in northern Nigeria and there are so many proof, video proof that I saw. You will see El-Zak Zaky together with Benjamin Netanyahu, Barrack Obama and all of them watching together, sitting together in fact they even go for exile to Israel, Rome and other part of the countries. So people are suspecting them. That is why even the sect crisis now is even reduced, for example between the Izala and the Darika what they are trying to do particularly the Ahl Sunna part, the Daurawa and this Kabiru Gombe, what they are trying to do is they wanted mobilize and harmonize the two sects into one. That see if we are not taking care this shi'as they are coming into us, they say that this Shi'as are going into the other part the Darika part for example in the Maulud and there are so many activities

FG2 [8978-9455]

(F) Sorry I have a different view, with respect to this issue I strongly disagree because when you are a Muslim you should be a Muslim and when you are a Christian you should be a Christian. And I believe there is no any religion on earth that encourages immorality or callousness. So if you are a Muslim you know the teachings of Islam and how the ... of Islam so I don't think there is anything that can influence you to go bias or to go the other way. That is how it is.

FG2 [9457-9737]

I totally disagree with her because there are Muslims that are so soft and are so easily addicted to the western life. So anything brought in new they would like to adopt it and try to make some other innovations to make it as part of Islam. I believe there is a western influence

FG2 [9747-9802]

I too agree with him that there is western influence.

FG2 [9804-10150]

I also disagree with her. The reasons is that Muslims of nowadays can easily be brainwashed, some may be through aids, some may be through finance this money that will make them go against Islam even though they are Muslims because of all this material things they could easily against Islam though it is not all but some Muslims are like that.

FG3 [18347-19443]

mmmmmm we can say like, this in ehhhh there are some books that usually came to us in 1970s I think came to northern Nigeria written by those Egyptians, Sayyid Qutb. Some of the books that they brought, aha Hassan al-Bannah so the kind of books they brought into northern Nigeria then, they wrote the book while they were in prison. They wrote it based on the situation they found themselves and also the situation of their country and the situation they found themselves. Most of them because of their preaching the government caught them and put them in jail so they wrote the book while they are in jail. When you see the book from the beginning to the end you will see those verses (he quoted the verses in Arabic from the Qur'an) That will be the verses that they will keep on reporting and expatiating more and they are right because those people are cheating on I don't know cheating suna zalintan su they pack them an put it there so they have been importing the book to us here and we just see those books we carried it and we read it and we just took their own interpretation...

FG3 [19472-20493]

not really assessing. They interpreted it based on their own condition (An interjection – and it doesn't suit our country. That we can say something may be the influence of external forces that came to us may be is that one, but almost all the crisis we have been having in northern Nigeria I don't think there is any influence or any external forces. Because let me say from Boko Haram there is no any country or other people apart from Nigerians that are claiming boko is haram I don't think there is. Before boko haram-Maitatsine is also almost the same process. I don't think it exist in any where before this country. Then this eh religious crisis we have been getting right from Tafawa Balewa, Kafachan, this sharia, Kaduna and other places I don't think there is anywhere that this thing maybe as we are reading I don't know whether I never come across it maybe someone has come across it. I don't think there is any external forces that maybe lead us into the present situation we find ourselves.

FG3 [20527-21373]

I disagree with mallam it has. That external influence it has because from the research I have mad that late mallam Yusuf the one that founded Boko Haram, someone reliably told me that he in fact he really he really loved one of this name you mentioned Hassan al-Bannah, Sayyid Qutb, there is another one they call him Abul Ala Maududi all these people are jihadists and what they were preaching to people was unIslamic in their own time because their own belief was to wage war against the government and topple the government of that particular country and what I heard they said even this Yusuf happen to be an admirer of these people. So most of these things they are agitating for in Islam they did get it from the books of these people they read and trying to implement it in this country. The thing is there are external forces.

FG3 [21377-21875]

Really not to argue with him, but I could remember before they killed late Albani he sat down with Muhammad Yusuf also all the books he tried to figure out written by this al-Banna, Sayyid Qutb, he only had the photocopies while Albani has the original copies. So in any aya (verse) he brought, when they came here they are the ones that came with their own recording, they did not allow the cassette to go out because Albani finished them academically with scriptures let me use this word.

KD1 [7603-9140]

When you talk of imported Islamic teachings, the bottom line is Islam did not originate in Nigeria. The Islamic teaching better the fundamental or the recent one that we are having that we assume is causing a lot of problems, they are all foreign, but what I will say is that, the world is now a global village. Nobody is isolated from anything that is happening. If you look at the case of terrorism that we are having in the places like America, Europe and in Asia, in Arab world, is already here in Africa. We have some cases in Sudan, some in Kenya, some in Ethiopia and of course Nigeria and some other, some of our neighbors. No nation is an island by itself and you can't isolate yourself from what is happening over the world. But one thing is the case of sympathy and the case of foreign teachings because when we know actually realize like some cases like recently when we hear cases of the history of Shiites, you realize that they in fact sometimes they even give themselves some training in the anticipation for fighting against either Christians or even Sunni and some other cases like, you have sympathy to some other people like those that are maybe we say cases of Osama bin Laden and the likes. So it depends on the teaching of Anwar Awlaki that this thing. But it all depends, some of all those teachings actually are some those things that causes it, but if you realize they are actually most of them are unpopular. They are very, very few but they find themselves filtering in and of course causing big problems.

KD2 [3516-4005]

To me, I don't think there is any imported Islamic eh behavior in Islam because everything is already been there in the books, in the ahadith, in the Qur'an. Except if people misunderstood it to be a different thing and they started using it in another form like in the form of, in the form of militancy or in the form of jihad or something like that. People do misinterpret other things to mean another thing differently, but there is nothing imported actually. Nothing is new in Islam.

KD3 [2841-2978]

So based on the question you asked. To me, there is nothing like imported Islam. Islam has just been there the way it is right from time

KD4 [3361-3786]

Ah! My brother, if it is said Islamic, imported Islamic teaching. I find it very difficult to understand that word. Islam as a way of life is universal and is found everywhere. So Islam as it is practiced if it is true Islam you can never find any imported teachings in it, rather than you can say that some people try to bring another idea outside the religion. So you can't call that Islamic eh imported Islamic teachings.

KD5 [2409-2760]

Hmmm I think all the teachings of Islamic scholars have been the same. I don't think there is any new teachings that have been imported into the country that is responsible for the growing conflict or make you to engage in militant activities. Rather misconceptions by some of the Islamic scholars like Mohammed Yusuf for example. I think that's it.

KD6 [3237-4025]

What I understand by this question you are talking about may be in what way imported Islamic, there is nothing like imported Islamic something in Islam. Islam is one, but it depends on how you understand it, it depends on how I understand it. What I say at the last question is still the same thing. Leadership problem, we have a leadership problem and if you have a leadership problem, you have a big problem. Under leadership, you will see many factions coming out. So, with that, you have many things to come. In the time of Sahaba they have differences, but they have a leader. So, it makes them to go the same way. Without a leadership, anything can go on, anything can happen, still the same things that happens that derive militancy because there's no leadership. That is just it.

KD7 [2962-4240]

It has a very big impact in the sense that today, we see, we are more eh there is more, there are more schools, there are more teachers that are there than they were before, but the character of the people of today is different from that of the people that have gone before us in the sense that they take up laws into their own hands. The preachers we get today from our preacher are different, every preachers has his own style of preaching. So they, the people who are following that preacher, have, they try to interpret their own understanding on others from the way they see the preacher is preaching. For example, you will see a preacher calling somebody arne and my understanding of the term arne is somebody who has no religion, who does not regard God and the from the Qur'an, we have seen and we have read that their people we call the people of the book, the Christians and the Jews, they believe in one God. There are some things that are permissible between us and them. We all believe in the one true God, but we have our ways of worshipping him. Arne means somebody who is godless, when you call somebody an arne, you promote hate for that person and Islam always encourages us to encourage people through peaceful means to bring them to our side not by force.

KD8 [10522-11556]

Well the influence is in terms of understanding the religion better because most of the people that go outside, they are young people, they go and get, they go into research and get deeper knowledge of the religion. Therefore, they come and preach it. There are many preachers than before, so they propagate the issues of Islamic ideals. The only thing is terms of giving fatwa, in terms of giving fatwa because they are having their, they are having, there are more researches, they research more, you understand, they have wider understanding of the religion. So normally, they give conflicting fatwa that with regards to the, to the life of Muslims in terms of may be inheritance, in terms of prayers, in terms of certain things, you understand, that's the only thing. So, what I will say in summary is that, it has influence it in a more positive manner because they have more understanding of the religion, they are having modern ideas, they are teaching peace, you know not violence, so it has actually impacted positively.

KD8 [11628-12041]

Well the teachings in terms of well, I will say the general teachings is the teachings of prophet (SAW), he teaches us to be God fearing, to be violence free, to love our neighbors, you understand, like we love ourselves and your neighbor could be a neighbor in the office, it could be a neighbor at home, in residential home, it could be a neighbor that is a Christian, so this what the teachings are all about.

KD9 [5238-5753]

I will have to go back to Boko haram again, as far as am concerned, it is imported Islam in quote. Northern Nigeria has always been peaceful place even with the encroachment of non-Muslims and trying to, we have always been peaceful, this is unprecedented. within months people that are supposed to preach Islam are now carrying guns, throwing bombs, as far as am concerned this is imported. It has really turned around everything as far as am concerned. The culture of the people of northern Nigeria is concerned.

KD10 [2752-3207]

You see the imported behaviors from other countries, is that not, into Nigeria or in into the northern part of Nigeria actually it as influenced. You see some imported behavior which is in accordance to sharia alhamdulillah has influenced the Muslims. When some Scholars come from Saudi Arabia they teach, they propagate, they preach this correct Islam, as you can see the Muslim women in northern part of the country, they are putting on hijab Annikah.

KD11 [7032-7495]

Well when you talk about imported Islamic teaching I don't really understand what you mean. You mean, ah Islamic teaching is Islamic teaching anywhere, but when you talk about ah I don't know if you are really talking about this thing ah Muslim exposure to probably through the media by group such as Al Qaeda and the rest, such terrorist group I think has contributed negatively towards ah towards the socialization of the Muslim Umma especially on the youth.

KD12 [5949-6908]

Hmm in fact in the northern Nigeria bringing new customs to the Islamic way, in fact it has influenced the real faith that people should have, like now most of the people are having their own handset now or electronic gadget where foreign songs, foreign systems of an atrocity like drinking, adultery is being done secretly and then the way they can do it, so most of the people that are not godly, real faith, you see, they fall prey to all these systems. So it is only where it occurs or when the Mallams, when Mallam knows that this is the way, these are, it looks like thorns in one's flesh, so when they observe it is only good Mallams that put it into da'wa, to preaching to people because it has influenced, it has continued to influence too, most of them dance, you see them in the television too, most of the Muslims most of this song praise song praises you see them dancing beyond what Islam has said so that .

KD13 [1962-2249]

You see the teachings in the northern aspect of Nigeria you see Islam has actually helped because Islam is the education that the northern Nigerian Muslims they have and perfectly those who try to abide by that education they survived it and truly they become a disciplined human being.

KD14 [2693-2820]

This question imported Islamic teaching there is nothing like imported. Islam is not imported. Islam is the total way of life.

KD15 [2538-2808]

Ehm actually you see the prophet (SAW) sorry for saying that ah says ah any religion or any ahm activities or any religion in short introduced newly or imported to Islam I think is ah is not accepted in Islam. So Islam is one, Islam is peace and ah I think that is it

KD16 [1356-1372]

Well negatively

KD16 [1559-2026]

Hmm actually it has ah led to segregation between the Muslims. Long ago even before we are born from what we have heard from our parents, the Muslims tend to be one, unlike we have today. This person belongs to this sect, this one belongs to another sect of which some do not even have value for the person that is not from his sect. Those days even right from time there was nothing like. We speak in one voice. We see ourselves as Muslims not as this or as that.

KD17 [4446-5116]

Hmm not exactly because the only thing is that ok you see maybe down there in the Middle East, people, maybe like due to the access people now have to the social media and the internet, they can get anything right from, even things that are alien to this country, they bring it in maybe they try to download some video they see what is happening, you understand, maybe through YouTube and other social media. I think those teachings that they are not Islamic, you don't have Islamic, basic Islamic tenets being imported into this place that is it is alien actually. So I think part of these is among what is causing all this Islamic militancy affairs here in the north.

KD18 [3372-4091]

Islamic teacher most especially maybe from Saudi Arabia or from other Islamic countries, I think its because, I think they came to they came into the, they came to the country I mean to our own country here to try to mobilize some people and try to educate some people as well, but this thing has, you know the understanding is different because they are not Nigerians, so the way the Nigerian people understand it I cannot really say because the way the I mean the over their I mean is like they did not get the message well that is why the, is like most of majority of them they misinterpret it, they misinterpret they misinterpreted what the imported Islamic what they came to Nigeria to teach them it's like the...

KD19 [3994-4667]

Well eh imported Islamic teaching, I want to believe that every aspect of the religion is imported because eh in the olden days, this part of the world we do not know of Islam or Christianity what we have is traditional religion with time, people bring this religion to us and so we believe we should accept it. If I decided to be a Muslim, it is not by my own making but is by the grace of Allah. So all these imported teachings tend to shape one's opinion and believe towards the other person. So I don't think the imported religion or certain aspect of the religion play a role in all these crises, no, it is what the people want to do that creates all these problems.

KD20 [1863-2328]

think you are talking about the foreign knowledge, the people that came from outside, most especially the people that came from Saudi Arabia and our own people here that use to go to their country to have more knowledge about Islam, the reason behind it is that they misunderstand the, what the those people there preach to them and they have their own, it's like the people here in Nigeria add their own culture into it that is what makes it to be different. Yes.

KD21 [2487-2843]

Yes, they have influenced Nigerians so much. Let's say ah prominent Islamic scholars, Sheikh (speaking hausa) the Sheikh Ja'afar of blessed memory, the al-Mawi, the ah scholars that have succeeded in going outside Nigeria to update their Islamic teachings, when they come back, you tend to see that their way of approach varies from the indigenous scholars.

KD23 [3534-3728]

Well imported Islamic teachings ah and I don't think it influence the behaviour of Muslims in northern Nigeria because Islam so eh what Islam has so is already compiled, it's already compiled.

KD24 [11278-12392]

Ah actually it has brought so much ah contribution in the sense that, see normally what we heard from our fathers and from the history even in school spoken then some fifty years back sixty to seventies back when Islam is not formally functioning strong as it was or as it is today in Nigeria, the way the Muslims used to dress is not even the way they are dressing now, the way they used to pray is not the way they use to pray today, the way they use to interact with people is not the even they way they used to because then even though they are Muslims, but they are not well equipped with Islamic knowledge. The number of teachers, preachers, imams, sheiks that were then they are not as much as those we have today, so according to what happened based on time, is passing by and ah younger ones are growing up, sending some the children aboard to acquire this Islamic knowledge, things have been changing from time to time. See mode of dressing is being changing things like that, trust between people if not of ah today that things used to begin to change again, we don't know what we will say about that.

KD25 [12361-15912]

Well I won't say that ah, you see, just as the English man says, charity begins at home. There are many Nigerian youthful Muslims that were opportune to have ah ah ah succeeded in getting admissions into universities outside Nigeria like Mecca, Medina, like Malaysia, like Dubai, like Egypt, like Morocco, like Kuwait and the rest of them, but the problem is you know if the youthful Muslims lack the basis of Islam, by going to Malaysia or Kuwait or Egypt if care is not taken the what they are expected to get is not what they will bring. It will be another thing. It will be an imported knowledge, just as you said, because not all the scholars that teach in those, you know, universities, Islamic universities outside Nigeria or even outside Africa that are really (coughs), you know, sticking or abiding by the teaching of the Qur'an and Sunna. They have just digressed. We have the Shiites, there are those that are pretending not to be Shiites, but they are Shiites, if we come to know that through their teaching methods and methodologies, so eh really if you look at those most especially those that must have ehm studied at eh let me say, let me use these two countries of eh maybe Egypt and ehm Sudan or Malaysia you find out that they, not all anyway, but some of them or few of them use to be, you know, arrogant, you know, or trying to even outclass our scholars that taught them, they want to say that now they have possessed knowledge more than them. So maybe they are even, are mocking or making a jest of the our scholars here that ai our scholars have not even gone outside Nigeria. All the knowledge they have acquired here, but in their own case they have even flown, you now, outside, not even outside Nigeria, but even outside Africa that they have gotten the knowledge and now they have come back so therefore whatever, so that clash will come and that eh religious egoism trying to say that if it is no me nobody again, you know, that is what ah amounted to ah that but to some extent I won't say it is average, if I am to score that, that is the proliferation of the imported knowledge, I will say it is average, not eh not even half talk-less of ah full but ah really ah alhamdulillah our scholars have ah noticed that and they are taking precautionary, you know, steps towards curbing that and bringing those students who must have studied, you know, but in the case of Saudi Arabia I have no doubt, nobody you see that studied from Saudi Arabia will start behaving in such a way like Malaysia and the rest, but Dubai you know Egypt, Sudan you will find out that those that most especially even Egypt, anybody that go and say that his name is al-misri, you know, because he studied in Masar, Masar means a big, you know, ah country or a big town, so since I studied at Misra that is Egypt, he has the guts to say that he studied in one of the or maybe the oldest university as it is been said. That is about 1000 years now, the Ansar university or maybe the some of the Nigerians, some of the youthful, you know, Muslims that are opportuned and lucky to study there, when they come back here, they will start, you will start seeing them behave am behaving in a pompous and insolent manner that ah in terms of knowledge ai that they are the best that even they have outclassed our scholars and the rest of them. So you can see that the important knowledge must have brought all or learned from there to bring here is to some extent, minimal is not even up to half, so it will not really impact on the Islamic populace

KD26 [3938-4513]

There are some, yes what ways, like, for example, the Islamic state that is the ISIS militancy group, they are kind of, their mode of propagating Islam is totally different from the teachings of Islam. Their, I don't know, their own word is sort of like imported and then we, we don't really understand, we don't get the complete picture of what the teaching is and then it affects us because most of them, those are the kind of people we looked up to, the ISIS the Al-Qaeda those are the kinds of sects we look up to. That is what has generated this problem in the country.

KD27 [3082-3751]

Ehhh most of the militancy we have here are home-grown. I don't think there is much-if there is any influence from outside I don't think it is really that apparent because when you look at the issues of those Boko Haram, you know, it is home-grown. We have Maitatsine in those days. Those are deviants. We had previous experiences with the Maitatsine and, you know, several others like them. So to me it has little foreign influence. It is basically as a result of ignorance, lack of knowledge and the laziness of some of our preachers. They refuse to read, to learn, to seek for knowledge. They prefer to just create their own and just to get followership.

KD28 [5532-6235]

Ahm I am sorry to say this question I cannot because am not more of northern people. Am sorry to say that is why I will not be able to say much, but in my own opinion, as we have said, you know like what am saying, you know like this our own area presently, the leaders of Islam will have to come down and get the basic knowledge of the understanding, what really is Islam about and us we know that Islam as it is, is a religion of peace and God has said that yes you have to, if you have to serve God, you have to be contented with whatever you are having but you know that this earthly needs of nowadays has given us, messed us up in the religion of Islam or maybe you will understand what am saying.

KD29 [2806-3140]

Well based on my discussion with some other learners Islamic learners I happen to understand that there are other bodies, other bodies that do engage some of our students that do study Islamic studies abroad, that they were being sponsored to carry on certain ah Islamic, certain beliefs through what they have actually gone through.

KD30 [3620-4348]

Ahm if you mean the influence of western ah the foreign Islamic ideology by imported Islamic teaching then I will say that I think it ah it acted positively, it influenced positively, it influenced ah the Nigerian Muslims positively because if I will refer to the ah the Medina, there are some group of Muslims nowadays is to call them yan Medina I think they are those who mostly went abroad to Saudi Arabia possibly Medina to study Islamic education and when they come back here, they come back with more awareness on how to practice this religion and is mostly peaceful. So in think if we are to look at that as the western ideology I think these people only brought peace and more awareness on how to practice the religion.

KD31 [5303-5945]

Actually I don't eh I don't think yah the import of some Islamic teachings has really influenced some things in some parts of this world because like I said like I earlier mentioned there are people of, they are fake people who call themselves scholars Islamic scholars who are been sponsored by some unknown groups called the shadows I don't know the it has really affected them and ah me as far as I'm concerned I don't have any particular Islamic teaching that will go against even though there are some that are not being honest with themselves like I said like let me call them the sponsored ones I think that is all I have to say here.

KD32 [3177-3935]

Yah the imported Islamic teachings ah this brings about a different denomination in Islam like we have the Shi'a and the Sunnis, so we have the Sunni is specifically imported from Saudi and we have the Shi'a being imported teachings form Iran, Iraq and other parts of the world, so this has bring the diversification in terms of practicing Islam, so some people are viewing they are practicing it based on the teachings of the prophet that is the Sunnis, these are the teachings imported mostly from Saudi Arabia that is Mecca and Medina specifically, they are practicing the Sunni Islam and if you look at from the other parts of the world Iraq and Iran they are practicing the Shi'a, so these are the two major eh teachings that are imported into Nigeria.

KD33 [3031-3586]

Well I don't I don't believe because Islam as I know as a Muslim everywhere you go is the same, so importing it I don't believe in importing Islam to another country because everywhere you go the Qur'an is the same Qur'an you read in Nigeria is the same Qur'an you will read in Indonesia, the same Qur'an you will read in china so I don't believe of importing Islamic teachings or preachers so as I said earlier the misunderstanding and misinterpretation of Islamic some of the Islamic teachings and values and verses that was bring Islamic emm conflicts

KD34 [4374-5367]

Hmm to some extent yes they did because one thing I notice is that the moment a student was opportune or been able to travel abroad to study he will make sure that on his way coming back he bring up something new or he find out something that he will criticize the way we are practicing Islam. Am not saying that what we are doing the olden way are all perfect, but no, but whenever somebody went out to study abroad if he comes back, you will see him he will took something that he will use to get popularity among the people that is one and then secondly the teachings, the foreign teachings it influence to some extent too, it influence the behavior and the attitude of eh of people. I don't want to call a particular sect, but there are some activities that we did not know them 10 years back, but now they are new and definitely they are foreign because there are other countries that have been practicing it a long time ago and now it has come to Nigeria and now they are practicing it.

KD35 [4249-5037]

amm ... you know we have ahh people who are really ignorant of ahh method of preaching, method of understanding the hadith, the Qur'an itself, so this is why they preach. Let me cite an example, if an imam or preacher is preaching, the moment you throw a question to him that he don't understand instead of him saying the truth, I don't understand this, he may tell you whatever and the follower may adhere to that and trouble may come. So I think there are a lot of ahh preaching's that are foreign, they are imported into the country in order to make trouble, so I think is I mean Muslims scholars should understand the reason very well, they fear God, they fear Allah and they preach well then you know once you preach and you don't preach your selfish interest, things will go fine.

KN1 [7540-8085]

I think you will agree with me if I say now the world is becoming a global village, now based on this philosophy of global village not only religion even tradition and culture are moving freely without borders, so actually if ... I can say to some certain extent there is influence or to some certain extent and most of the time it is having impact on others or those that are not deeply ammm they are not quite knowledgeable about the religion or are misled that is in error way and so to some certain extent that is affecting the younger ones.

KN1 [8302-8755]

That is what is exactly what am saying, the free flow of knowledge, the knowledge is flowing freely on the internet, on the media, and the handset whatever, so knowledge is flowing freely and you cannot even ascertain the source of the knowledge, it may be from the Muslims, it may be from non-Muslims, it may be from anybody you cannot ascertain the source of the knowledge and you don't even know the motive, so because of the free flow of knowledge.

KN2 [6204-6617]

Yes there are numerous, a lot of them. A lot of them are springing up and they have not stopped. If anybody has a knowledge of group dynamics, he knows that groups will continue to evolve and fragment and become sections. It is because of that fragmentation and sectionalism that a lot of scholars who claim to be Muslims are coming up and preaching Islamic injunctions, each one from his or her own perspective.

KN2 [6670-7189]

There is no clear guideline to regulate because there is no affiliated government. You see screening and regulation can only happen when there is an authorized body. So if the government of Nigeria which is secular will appoint a scholar, which scholar is it going to appoint? If it appoints a scholar there are several others scholars which do not belong to that sect which that scholar is from. So if he made any screening, it is definitely going to favor his own section and the others will reject that screening.

KN3 [11932-13292]

Certainly, Allah says that we are Ummantan wahidatan- we are one people. But we are now becoming different people. But you see again this has something to do with colonialism. First of all years ago we had this movement, the Ahmadiyya movement. The Ahmadiyya movement was the creation of the intelligence of a country, foreign intelligence. They wanted to bring division into the Islamic umma. I think it all started when they realized the last Islamic empire-the Ottoman Empire, Ottoman Turks were becoming strong and they were even penetrating, beginning to penetrate into Europe and they wanted to break that Islamic cohesion, so they were trying to divided them. They were encouraging the Ahmadiyyas and the Ahmadiyyas broke away and claimed that they have their prophet; they were different from the others. Then the Shi 'a also they wanted to penetrate into the Shi 'a in order to divide the Muslims and break that cohesion. The Wahabis are now very strong through the Izala. The Wahabis which is an offshoot of Ibn Taymiyyas doctrine or teaching are becoming strong and behind all these movements are foreign influences or foreign intelligence intrigue. That is why. The attempt to divide the Muslims because those colonial powers, former, realized that the unity of Islam will make the Muslims strong and the Muslims will be a formidable force.

KN4 [4706-6467]

Islamic teaching has influenced the behaviour of Muslims in northern part of Nigeria because Islam has become part of life, has become their doctrine, has become their lifestyle and above all they are the most populous people in the northern country and they use common language Hausa. This language it makes a lot of impact in the northern part of the Nigeria. I can say, I can say, you see (humm) the teaching because there is sect in Islam and there is also sect in ah ah ah in Christianity but there is some high opinion or there is some, there is some those that are local and some that are well learned. This makes the sects between even the Muslim. Some to see that we are disadvantage and some to see that we are on the advantage side. So as usual as normal routine that is happening in the world, people are of ah if I can say our opinion that if I am on the disadvantage, I have less majority that I can say that have been affected. I think ah that population also on the side of the sect is also affecting the teaching if I can refer. Those people that have much population, they have more followers, there is also ah ah ah affecting the teaching like I the northern Nigerians nowadays much of some people of Sunni I think they are of the more ah in population that also affect the teaching most of them they are Sunnui despite the fact that there is Shi'a , there is Qadiriyya there is eh eh eh Darika there other things ah ah ah other sect like that. But the electronic media I can say and the teaching itself is also affecting the pattern of the teaching in the northern part.

KN5 [1886-2474]

If the imported teaching means bidi'a it has actually impacted more harm than good in the Islamic teachings in the northern Nigeria ah we all know that Allah (SBUH) has forbidden bidi'a and ah and not only that, but bidi'a in its minimal ground has led to a higher ground in Kano state with eh making reference to what happen recently in Kano state where a sect of the Tijjaniyya who tried to uplift Nyass to the almighty or to the great or noble prophet (SAW) with respect to the noble prophet (SAW) which led to an insult by a member of the sect to the prophet (SAW) wa iyazu billah.

KN6 [2315-2481]

Yes, some way that can influence the teaching ah in northern Nigeria is those ways that ah Ahl Sunna wal jama'a follows for teaching our youths and their students

KN7 [3449-3856]

Ooh well ehm, when you talk of imported Islamic teachings that is we are talking of teachings that are outside Islam so ehm I think it is totally negative, it's a negative impact. It would definitely, it would definitely impact negatively on the people that are having Islamic teachings that is the real Islamic teachings and ehm I don't think I have any particular teachings I can refer to. I don't think.

KN8 [1743-2368]

Hmm, actually it is true, there are so many teachings that are affecting as a result of the influence of bringing it from another country into here, you understand. All this preaching is in one or the other affecting the action of the doing of the people. For instance, look at uhm vision, virtually all the scholars in the northern Nigeria, there was a recent person that was saying; ah Sheik Ibrahim Nyass of Tijjaniyya is above the prophet of Islam. The majority of the people strike against him, sir all these teachings and sayings of the people are affecting the action of other people and they are imported ideologies.

KN9 [2447-2909]

Well the imported teachings have eh influenced Muslims in the northern Nigeria. This is very true because ah you see when you look at the average northern person, northern Muslim. His teachings are basically the ideal teachings of Islam but because of imported knowledge, you understand. It tends to create a rift and it tends to create ah, ah controversy between what he initially believes in and what he learns from the imported knowledge. So I think this is.

KN10 [2678-2682]

No

KN11 [2294-2576]

Yes, and the question is are there particular teachings you can refer to yes, based Islam ahh, our scholars are supposed to be cosmopolitan what I mean is to be versatile that is to know the different areas of knowledge in order to know how to teach the real Islamic teaching, yes.

KN13 [3048-3599]

Hmm, yes there are particular teachings, teachings like eh, the teaching of Al Mahardi has actually-the teaching of people like ibn Ghazali. This are all scholars from the Arabian side, so this traditions I think they are traditions-even the-even the teachings from the people from this Shi'ite traditions, they have actually influenced Islamic teaching in the northern part of the country, not even in northern-it has even extended part to some western and eastern part of the country, where we have some Muslims who are practicing their traditions.

KN14 [2299-2616]

Yes, the imported teachings I can give example of is the example of boko haram because this boko haram is ah from the beginning initially is not the teaching of our people here in northern Nigeria but it is an imported teaching that comes from other countries and those teachings actually influence our youths today.

KN15 [3708-4324]

Yah, let me give a direct example you know by myself, uh imported Islamic teachings it gives me a lot of influence in Islam because at times I prefer to you know listen to imported preachers than to hear some of our you know preachers locally here that we are going together with them because they use to bring in their interest while trying to extend that Islamic message so those imported preachers sometimes, even though I use to you know I use to select them not all, so they don't use to put their interest much on the issue so I prefer imported Islamic teachings and it gives me a lot of influence of course.

KN16 [1720-1993]

There are so many teachings that imported into Islam which are not Islamic and can influence the behaviour of some Muslims, example what happened what had happened in Kano state one man abused the prophet (SAW) and it is as a result of that such imported teachings accord.

KN17 [2664-2982]

Yah there are particular teachings I can refer to as in the em most especially the teaching of em these em Tijjaniyya sect of group they have this dogmatic believe in their practicing of this religion that they see their selves as the superior sect that these are the real Muslims that are actually practicing Islam.

KN18 [4526-4844]

Toh ai I don't know any sort of imported Islamic teachings, imported Islamic teachings, Islamic teachings. All I know is that Islamic teaching is one and the source of these Islamic teachings the eh the source of these Islamic teachings is from the Qur'an and Sunna so so we don't now where this concept of imported

KN19 [3264-3606]

Uh actually I cannot really justify that because I didn't stay in the northern region but with the look of things to some extent could be justified that there are some western and imported ideology that is affecting and ah in moderating the activities of the people of the northern region which is controlling their doings and their actions.

KN19 [3661-4450]

Uh, actually I can't really cite any but looking at the ah looking at the conception of the ah prevailing boko haram and the rest of them virtually all the sects that exist under them understand, look at the teaching there are a lot of scholars under the Tijjaniyya, under the Qadiriyya all these sects of Islam in which their preaching in one way other is an is an influence or a means of ah of moderating the activities and the doing of these people. There a lot of there are lot of teachings someone could mention though any could not be specified understand this present moment but considering the aspects of the Tijjaniyya, the Qadiriyya, there are a lot of scholars of them that have in one way or the other they are contributing and making a statement that is influencing whatever.

KN21 [1859-1957]

The question is not well framed; I don't think there is anything like imported Islamic teachings.

KN22 [3638-3772]

Yah, actually when we are talking about imported Islamic, it has actually influenced the behavior of the youths in northern Nigeria.

KN22 [3835-3999]

Yah, like the jihad movement, like the extremism, like the fundamentalism of Islam, this is a new attribute. It is a new attribute that emerge in northern Nigeria.

KN23 [3287-3680]

Well imported Islamic teachings like the sects we have across the Middle East the Allawites and some of this people have links with those Islamic violent groups. They are even sponsoring them financially, which if you-England itself want to stop Islam, English citizens from accepting any help from external countries. I think it is a good thing. Nigeria should try and put that in place too.

KN24 [1887-2440]

Yah like the teaching of the way Islam was practiced in Maiduguri. If you take example, the way their imam the former late, what is his name, the Boko haram person, Mohammed Yusuf. The way he understand Islam is different from the way the rest of the Muslims understand Islam. So that is why sometimes we don't want people like them that are not well intellectuals to come and be preaching to people what Islam is all about because he doesn't know what Islam is all about. Had it been he knows what Islam is all about he won't go and start preaching.

KN25 [3795-4158]

Ah well I can say most of the imported Islamic teaching turned out to be radicalism. So it has affected Muslims in northern Nigeria in so many ways, like most of our youths are lost into sects, some sects that during the prophet's time they didn't exist. So I think it is causing chaos, a deviation from our normal Islamic course into other non-relevant courses.

KN26 [3027-3093]

Hmmmm yah to some extent actually but to some extent yah it has.

KN27 [2841-3341]

Well in many ways, in many ways in the sense that there is this imported Islamic teaching, let me tell you, it is hijab or let me say a corb, you see in a corb it is imported Islamic teaching, Islamic teaching that originated from the Saudi Arabia from the Arabians but you could view from-recently that most northerners, or let me say some part of northerners now see people that are not using the corb as people that are not, let me say, fully practicing Islam in the normal way which is not so.

KN28 [2458-2493]

Well the teachings not any for now

KN30 [1430-1739]

Muslim is not imported. Muslim is a generally teaching that you cannot say is imported. It is only that there some interests, some opinions, some teachings that are connected or that are being influenced by some groups in the world towards or to make it look like Islam and they influence people with that.

KN31 [2381-3044]

Well Islam generally, you know the meaning of Islam is peace which means everything it preaches is peace. So I think Islam on its own and its preachers are always trying to preach to the Muslims on involvement in the act of violence that they should discard involving themselves in violence. So mostly why you go to Islamic societies or even where the societies are mixed, both Muslims and Christians, you find Islam or Muslims indulging in such activities, it is just their own wish or their own attitude which they have married to their selves, but it is quite unislamic and I don't think any knowledgeable and reasonable Islamic preacher will preach to that.

KN32 [1117-1129]

No, no, no

KN33 [1371-1455]

Yes, and it's by teaching different perceptions on Islam and the teaching on Jihad.

KN34 [1345-1356]

Actually no

KN35 [2690-2982]

Yes I think like the shi'ite influence in the north most especially the Kaduna issue of the El-Zak zaky and Sheikh and then they have the influence in the northern part of Nigeria. I can say their activities are being got, are being imported from the Middle East, if we can trace the origin.

KN36 [2073-2256]

It has been imported to Nigeria based on some radical Islamic preachers and the teachings in the Middle East that are not teaching what we expect them to teach or the tenets of Islam

KN36 [2313-2381]

Like the principle of jihad and how the jihad should be carried out.

KN37 [1727-2141]

You see in the northern part of Nigeria we can say it is that region which practice Islam and a times some scholars may argue to the extreme and you see in particular some of the teachings I can say influence the kind of character or habit of the Muslims in northern Nigeria is that of extremism. Extremism should be pointed out as that teaching which influences the character of Muslims in the northern Nigeria.

KN38 [1124-1140]

A positive way

KN38 [1195-1283]

Yah, for example the teachings of Islam when it comes to morality and ethics of living

KN39 [1561-1674]

Actually importing this kind of habit or creates in the minds of Muslims, actually it sometimes brings disunity.

KN40 [2359-3067]

Ok. Thank you very much. I know teaching naturally influence the follower Muslims especially an issue that happened recently about one mallam that was preaching in Kano state it has not even reach may be a week now, preaching about the Maulid of prophet Muhammad (SAW) talking against other religions, you understand. And this followers they only just try to hear whatever their mallam says to them and they try to follow it, unlike them just trying to know more understanding about what the mallam is telling them or about what mallam told them at that particular preaching. So I believe that in the northern states the fellow Muslims they normally use to accept and obey what their mallam preach to them.

KN41 [1674-1736]

I'm lost at this actually, you can move to the next question.

KN42 [2360-2840]

Imported teachings, imported teachings here ehm I am understanding it to be innovations in Islam right? If it is innovations in Islam which is said to be wrong and it is like teaching us different doctrines, which is already not in the Quran and not even in the hadith, and if it is something that is imported that means something that is not supposed to be there in the first place and so all are wrong and there is no-since it is not supposed to be there, there is no example.

KN43 [4410-5352]

Yes, if you look at eh, shi'a as an ideology is imported to northern Nigeria in the early 80's. The ideology of shi'a is antagonistic to the mainstream Sunni ideology that majority of Muslims in northern Nigeria adhere to. So the coming of shi'a or the importation of shi'a to northern Nigeria created a kind of two antagonistic camps. The shi'a on one hand and the mainstream Sunni Muslim on the other hand and this shi'a are aspiring to create a kind of religious space for themselves and promote the ideology and teaching of shi'ism. So a number of Sunni Muslims are not happy with this because of the way and approach of the shi'a and the unhappiness of the Sunni we find a kind of, you know, antagonistic relationship between the two groups. So in a nutshell the importation of foreign or new ideological ah Islamic ah groups to northern Nigeria has contributed in creating a kind of misunderstanding and if you like conflict.

KN44 [2454-2753]

Well I don't know, I don't know what you mean by imported ah Islamic ah ideas. Islamic ideas has been with us for long and ehh maybe you are referring to recent trends whereby maybe Shi'ism and ahh is really getting ground in the country. I think that may have contributed in some of the problems.

KN45 [2252-2305]

No, I can't refer since I am not aware of them, yes.

KN46 [3448-3947]

Well ahh I think the, I cannot call it imported because I do not think it is imported. It is found in books which are, some of them are written by ah Muslims who are not from this country and some are written by those ahh scholars who are from our own ahh country. So I think ah this ideas, the idea of not tolerating ah divergent views is the one responsible for that. Any idea that is intolerant of divergent opinions ah is the responsible for causing ah this ah militancy and all what you said.

KN47 [4636-5476]

Well, I don't know imported, imported Islamic teaching influenced the behavior of Muslims in northern Nigeria? Well, you see, so Islam as religion, you know, it has to do with history, you know, it was really imported by the Arab, I mean Arabian traders during Trans Sahara trade, you know, who came from the border of Borno to northern Nigeria. So in the Kanem Borno there are many scholars, you know, who came from East Africa and other places. They brought Islam along so if you say now imported Islamic teaching, I don't know whether you are referring to the current ideology, current religious ideology talked in Sudan, in Egypt and in the Saudi Arabia. They might be different from what had been known to be have been brought up as a religion during the Trans Sahara Arabian trade. So I don't know which one you are now referring to.

KN48 [2179-2415]

What do you mean by imported Islamic teaching? I think it shows that we are getting everything wrong, to me Islam is Islam nothing like importing any preaching from elsewhere that will now be misleading Muslims all together like that.

KN49 [2683-3262]

I think it has greatly radicalized them, it has made them more forceful, its made them more violent, its made them more reactionary. I think ahm people who go to certain part of ahm the Islamic citadels of knowledge are more prone to violence, are, are more prone to be reactionary, people that go to Islamic Nations such as Iran, Iraq to study become greatly divergent when they, when they return and I think they, they tend to become more reactionary, more forceful and much, much more violent in their ways of dealing with situations they feel do not favor them so.

KN50 [2137-2375]

What is imported Islamic teaching? Moreover Islam is Islam all over the world, anywhere you go, anywhere you just find yourself Islam is Islam, but I don't understand your word, I don't understand you by saying imported Islamic teachings.

KN51 [5987-8522]

Is it ah in northern Nigeria, I can tell you there is no anything that is imported teaching, nothing like this. What is happening is this. Most of the Islamic schools are abandoned. Anything that is Islamic is being undermined. Now the Muslims youth who cling with teachings or to the Islamic teachings, they think they have to understand as they want to understand Islam properly and they don't know, they don't, they have nowhere, they have nowhere to go and understand it properly. So most of them we send to neighboring countries for example ahm Saudi Arabia, Niger, ahm Ghana, Libya and other places to learn because there they would be able to maybe understand more than they understand here because a number of them they don't understand English and government is not making any effort towards integrating those teachings, properly integrated, into our educational system because of that, most of the people who we believe to be militant ahm come from that, I think, ah aspects. But for anybody to say their particular teachings that this children or this people bring from outside I doubt very very much, I doubt very very much. Most of the teachings are here most of the ulama are here in Nigeria, yes. They don't even go to any country, any any, any abroad, any country abroad, they don't. They are living here, they learnt everything here but our problem is that they don't understand it as it should be understood because the government under the tutelage of western power is heedless about anything that is Islamic education, is heedless about anything that is Islamic morality, is heedless about anything that is Qur'an and Sunna because of that people now want to understand Islam the way it should be understood or the way they think they understand it. That is the reason, but there is no, no teaching. I have been challenging people to tell us where from do we get anything, any strange teaching, any teaching that is still strange to us, that is foreign to us not, nothing like this. Most of those who incite children to fight they are here. Most of those who now employ this militancy against people they are here. They don't even now go to anywhere. So to begin to think that people are bringing, is just like thinking people who go to America to learn, who go U.K to learn, who go to France to learn, they are bringing foreign ideas to us, they are bringing trouble into this country, things since like that which I believe is not so. So every trouble is being are created here not brought from outside.

KN52 [2724-3371]

Really I still do not understand what you mean by imported Islamic teachings because there are people who argue that even the idea of Islam is itself is foreign is imported. But once Islam was introduced to this part of the world, Northern Nigeria, of course you have other types ideas that were still coming in like this sectarian ideological believes; Tijjaniyya, Qadiriyya, Ahmadiyya, Shi'a all this are strands of Islam that came from other parts of the world. But I do not really think that there is something we can call imported Islamic teaching that is contributing to the rise of Islamic militancy in northern Nigeria, I don't think so.

KN53 [3213-3599]

Actually I can say imbibing other cultural ethics from the Asian countries can also cause this because I could remember a friend of mine that travelled to, what is it called, Libya so he went there to study this Islamic religious knowledge then when he came back I can see what he was trying to teach people here is not really along exactly what we are expected so I can agree that yes

KN54 [1123-1153]

In Islam nothing is imported.

KN55 [1930-1933]

No

KN56 [2178-2181]

No

KN57 [2618-3096]

You see there are many ways. Some they use money to influence the people, to sponsor them in doing, for example, just like I here I am sitting jobless without doing anything somebody would come and call me to toward his way of life or toward his system. Once he try to make me financially sound, I would branch his system. Take for example Shi'ites, take for example this so called boko haram. All these are some of the examples that you can refer to in the Nigerian context.

KN58 [6367-7051]

Of course, I just mentioned one, the teachings of the Shaihi. That is completely alien to us. It all began with the division of Islam into sects, the so called Tijjaniyya, Malikiyya, Wahabiyya, and the rest where Muslims are now pointing accusing fingers to other Muslims that they are not doing the right thing or those sects are saying that if you are not following their sects they now level you as Kafir. With the coming of the Wahabi teachings or what you refer to as the Izala when they were vibrant and militant those that are so militant among the Izala sects equally leveled other Muslims that are not following the Izala sects as Christians. All these where Alien to us.

KN59 [4022-5377]

Actually the imported of Islam teaching to me, really influence the northerners because like we in the north if, take for instance, you went abroad and studied there is this prestige or this thing attached to you that you are more superior to them irrespective of what you learnt from outside, there is that perception that this person is an Ustaz he studied in Sudan, he studied in Iran, you understand while they have their own ideology there which might not go in line with the teachings of Islam, which might not go in line with the Sunna, which might not go in line with the Qur'an, so when the person just come in the initial stage he would not reveal that Akida to you, you understand, he will not reveal it to you, when he has already capture you people then he would now say gaskiya, he will now be telling you the hidden agenda in what he has learnt in the outside world. Most northerners are being carried away with such teachings and such Imam that be went outside to learn, but not all. Because the knowledge of Islam has already gone wide in the north, we have our own Imam locally that you know teach us right from our traditional age and alhamdulillah gaskiya the impact or the influence is not all that harmful to the northerners but it has played not a significant role but a minimal role, to my own understanding.

KN60 [3780-5696]

Ok you see, to me, I don't agree that there are imported Islamic teachings because Islam is one universally. The books, the text, the teachings, the practice you find in Saudi Arabia is the same practice you would find here in Nigeria. It is still the same practice you find in China. So anywhere you go, the source of these Islamic teachings are well known they are three as we know, some people might add the fourth one. The first one is Qur'an and what it preaches, and then the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) that is his actions, what he says and what he saw and then he gave his nod to it. And the third thing is the ijma that is where the scholars come together and agree on certain rules and regulations upon certain injunctions, probably the fourth one is the qiyas that is you could not find what you are looking for in Quran probably your knowledge has not reached that level and then probably you did not get it from the hadith of the prophet maybe because it is a new invention and what have you and also you could not derive the guidance or the rule guiding the particular things you want to talk about in the ijma of ulama then the leader is allowed to use what we call qiyas. So these four sources of sharia in Islam anywhere you go you find that they are the same thing. How I pray here in Nigeria, it is the same why the Imam of Mecca or a person in America or another one in China prays. The prayer is the same, the teaching is the same. So maybe if you are talking of imported ideology I can agree to that and such ideologies, to me, they are un-Islamic actually, they are un-Islamic, because a situation whereby you tell our followers, ok any non-Muslim you see just take your weapon and kill him, automatically that is un-Islamic. So we cannot categorize it as imported Islamic teachings, but rather imported ideologies that are un-Islamic that is my understanding of this issue actually.

KN61 [1462-1482]

There is none, no.

KN62 [5026-5950]

Hmm mm, well imported Islamic teaching, I underline that very expression, well, well ah imported I don't believe that there is any imported ah practice in Islam. Only that some are damaged or distorted, but there is, you know, Islam is like a kind of a closed system. Nobody can add anything into it and whatever you add is easily understood and recognized ah by scholars. So I don't believe that there is any imported Islamic teachings so, so, so what we may say maybe ahh, ah Shi'ism, you understand, and boko haram beliefs, if you like, are the things maybe this question is trying to ah address. I don't believe that we have any imported Islamic teachings beside this two and it is generally ah accepted and believed that Shi'ism and boko haram insurgency ahh with boko haram beliefs, you understand, are not Islamic teachings, are not Islamic ahh let's say, movement or Islamic teaching yah they are not, yah.

KN63 [5962-7067]

It has influenced them a lot, it has influenced the northerners a lot. You know in Islam, everything, the way of life completely, if you are the type that has the adequate knowledge of Islam, everything is there. So for those that have the adequate knowledge of Islam, you know, it is going to mold their way of life, dressing, talking, in eating, in behaving, everything in Islam, Islam teaches. And you know, if you look at the northern part of Nigeria, you know, we have those good Islamic scholars that maybe even right from, before they even start this primary education of a thing, they, they, they, maybe their children is ahh being put into Islam schools and right from there they learn all this values. So it has influenced that a lot, you know, if you talk about maybe their mode of life, and even trading, if you look at the way they trade huh in trading, you know, it has influence them in trading, it has influenced them in dressing, it has influenced them in, in learning, you know, and many other things like that, you know. Islam has influenced them a lot, there is no doubt about that.

KN64 [3447-4169]

Ah yes, imported Islamic teaching from outside country ko? Yes all this is not what happen in Nigeria, some, if you recall, it is not the problem, the origin is not in Nigeria, so it is from outside Nigeria. Therefore I agree there are some people who are coming into Nigeria with their views and their bad opinion and import it to the people of Nigeria. Even if you see what happened in Nigeria now, you can understand that the problem, the problem started from the, started may be five years or six years ago ahh past five years or six years back. It is not-it happened in some countries, years before they come to Nigeria. This will eh make you to understand that this problem is imported into Nigeria from outside.

KN65 [4405-5237]

Yes uhm ah imported language ah teaching, right, as in one way or the other able to shape the life of an average northern Nigerian in the sense that it influences it positively, because in those days Islamic teachings are very, very minimal, in the sense that you have to travel a thousand miles, before you are able to learn how to recite Qur'anic, you understand, but with the emergence of this ah ah important ah teaching which was ah initiated in Nigeria, by the ah Sunna sect, then it was being referred as Izalatul bidi'a wa ikamatul sunna. I think they bring in those ah imported knowledge or teaching into our ah educational system, and it has helped a lot in ah shaping Nigerian behavior by embracing the life of a true Muslim, so we can say that the imported Islamic teachings has influenced our behavior positively, yes.

KN66 [1569-1945]

Ahh, Islamic, Islam, the teachings of Islam what I believe is ah general thing, it is one thing, you can say ah Islamic teaching is being imported or is not imported because Qur'an, Muslims abide by the Qur'an and Qur'an is one Qur'an. You can't get two Qur'an, so anywhere over the world you go, you will find out that the teaching of Islam is one. So I don't believe that.

KN67 [1603-1743]

Eh, actually here, I don't think to my understanding there is anything imported in Islam, so I don't think there is any teaching imported.

KN68 [1184-1237]

No. There is nothing like imported Islamic teaching.

KN69 [3876-4109]

Islamic teachings is imported to Muslim to all aspect of their life in so far as that Muslim will strictly adhere to the principles of Islam as it is taught by their scholars because Islam covers all aspect of life, of human being.

KN70 [4860-5176]

New way of thinking, new method of ah I mean you see, let us be frank and very sincere as I told you previously that Islam itself is foreign, it is not indigenous to the history of ah, I mean to the original history of Hausa people, but yes, when you mean ahm, there were people who go, who go out of the country...

KN70 [5575-6449]

When you say negative influence, it simply means ah some ah some ah, ah imported Islam ahm original Islam was really imported technically speaking ahm but in one sense if you say, if you mean in certain teaching that are not originally found in some of our Islamic teaching in the northern part of the country that I will say yes, certain teachings are negative, certain teachings are positive. They are negative because they are most probably ehm ehm they are instrumental in instigating some certain or unrest, disorder like the case we have of Boko haram. Positive there are certain importation that are positive in eh like the new challenges we have now, the horizon of knowledge has been widened. People are now ahm learning certain jurisprudence that they are not used to. So it all depends on what exactly we want to discuss about, importation, Islamic importation.

KN71 [6463-7577]

In many ways, in many ways. One you can see that, let me take you back to the years around 1978 to date when there was this strong movement of ah Izalatul bidi'a wa ikamatul Sunna on the other part we have the brotherhood movement on the other part we have the Qadiriyya, Tijjaniyya sects. All the four parties were not living in peace with one another, as you can see that there were clashes that when this, especially the mid 1990s students started coming back home, you can see now, it is condensing even the ... is created and so many issues are now brought to the table to discuss and iron out things, maybe recently about the issue that has happened in Kano, you can hear these scholars of belonging to Izala, belonging to Darika belonging to Tijjaniyya coming together to air program with the view of let us understand ourselves, let us know what is actually Islam, let us know this and that, so it impacted a lot on one: in the area of unity; Two: in the area of understanding Islam itself; Three: in the area of peace: Four in the area of mobilizing the younger generations to go up looking for education.

KN72 [5907-6482]

The imported Islamic teachings influence the behavior of Muslims in Nigeria or in northern Nigeria in so many sense because before the advent of such imported teachings, most of the northern Nigerians ignore Islamic, the purity of Islamics because they were mixed the practice of Islam with their traditions and this cause them to misinterpret much of the or most of the rules and regulations governing the code of conduct of Islamic, but with the advent of this foreigners, they contributed to what I can say socialize, the behavior of the Muslim Umma in northern Nigeria.

KN73 [4220-4285]

Really, I don't even know if there is imported Islamic teaching

KN73 [4567-4980]

But that to me is not an imported. If we say imported, it means that we don't have it, and it's not part of Islamic teaching. But if it is an Islamic teaching, it has been for all wherever you are in the world. It is not imported, it is yours if you are in Nigeria, and it is yours if you are in America. Yes It is not imported and then I don't know any type of imported Islamic teaching because I don't know it. [

KN74 [11398-11929]

I think there is no any imported Islamic teaching influencing the behavior of Muslim in northern Nigeria. There is no such kind of things because if you can remember the Islamic has reach our people since many years back ah in those days that Islamic reach us is the same thing that we have been practicing still now. Therefore, there is nothing we can consider as a imported Islamic teaching. We don't have, we don't have such kind of an importing Islamic teaching that influence the behavior of our Muslims in northern Nigeria.

KN75 [12111-12960]

Yah Islamic teaching, thank you for your clearly understanding, Islamic teaching Islam that came from the Arabia Peninsula down to the west, ehh North Africa to the west Africa in Nigeria in particular have influenced a lot of people in Nigeria even me in particular, because going back to the history how Islam came to Nigeria through Maghrib you find that a lot of paganism and other type of worshipping that our forefather practices that led to a lot of magic and witchcraft in the society have been eradicated to have a belief of natural being, to have a supernatural being belief, now a lot of people in Nigeria have such, have no such belief in their mind again. You find that the importation of Islam have influenced the teaching or the behavior of a common man in Nigeria by true preachers, Muslim preachers, Muslims scholars and the like.

KN76 [7276-7898]

Actually there are none. I can't say that there are any imported because Muslim society as a whole ah is one, is only that there are different views, different school of thoughts and I can say that in the northern Nigeria actually before the colonial period, we are purely Maliks and after independence there was a introduction of ahh Sunni ah actually other schools of thought. And that came about as a result of interaction between the northern Muslims and other Muslims in the other part of the world. So as a result of that exchange of opinions and views is what resulted to having so many other views about Islam.

KN78 [6425-7901]

Well I think ehh it would be a very difficult question to answer right away because I don't want to fall into that trickish barb wire meaning, as I said earlier, because essentially or ahh technically when you say foreign or imported, I think Islam itself is not indigenous to Hausa history, in other words the Maguzawas who are the original Hausa people have their own religious belief. So Islam itself is an importation. They must have in themselves importations, so I would begin to wonder what, specifically, do we mean by importation, ahh imported Islamic teaching. It would be very difficult for me to give one straight answer to that. But if you mean may be ahh traditionally in the Hausa here, in the Hausa land where we had ahh when Islam came into contact with the Hausa people I think in somewhere in the past ahh we had practices that were here for more than centuries, but in this modern centuries, they were other teachings that were not part of that teaching, the past ahh in the history of the Hausa land, like for instance the Izala, the Wahabis, the Shi'ites, I think when you talk about, when you are referring to this, I would say yes, it is an importation way because the indigenous Muslims never had an experience, never knew certain teachings not until ahh in the 70's and then of course in the early 80's. If you mean by that importation, yes they are. Like the Wahabis as they say or Salafi brand of the Islam or the Shi'a brand of Islam.

KN79 [2994-3211]

Yes, of course. Imported Islam influenced Muslim to engage in religious conflicts especially this Arab jihad, but some imported teaching does not influence us to engage in violence. I also report to these teachings.

KN79 [3408-3525]

I am referring to the imported Islamic teaching that does not that didn't cause violence in Nigeria, hmm of course.

KN80 [5875-6775]

Yes of course both are happening because if we look that the current position and state of our Muslims in northern Nigeria. So Muslims are more concern on ideology than the real Islamic knowledge. So if you look at some of this ideologies come from outside foreign Islamic ahh countries and the concern which Muslims are always showing on such ideologies are becoming more greater than the concern of learning ahh ahh primary resources or secondary resource of the Qur'an, but if to say northern Nigeria Muslims devoted their lives to the teaching, pure teaching of Islam because Islam, the knowledge of Islam superseded any other practices which is against, which is not contained in the sources of ahh Islam. But what is happening nowadays is that ideology supersede the real teaching of the ahh of Islam, ah he real teaching of Islam and people can defend their ideology and live religion alone.

KN81 [3530-3693]

Yes ahh Islam itself is imported it was not originated from Muslim north. So Islam influenced us from all angles and we refer to this teaching as we are Muslims.

KN82 [4274-4582]

There re many ways that the teaching of Islam influence the behavior of Muslim in Nigeria even though it is a long history, but the impact of colonialism has greatly influenced this teachings that is to say the western ideology, existence of different ideologies which the western world has been preaching.

KN82 [4869-5483]

Yes that was the root, it traced its origin from the western ideology because of the stiff opposition or their perception that Islam is solely behind or against their ideology. That is why they try to introduce, to induce something which is quite new or divisive in nature in order to make Muslims ignore the real content of Islam that was the genesis. So as a result of that where where wrong insertions, things that are inserted in the holy Qur'an, in the Hadith simply to divert attention of the Muslims, to divert their attention to hold on something that is not real Islam in order to achieve their purpose.

KN83 [2867-3080]

Hmm imported Islamic teaching influence the behavior of Muslims in northern Nigeria both in negative and positive ways. Example, in negative ways and non jihadist ideologies influence our people in positive ways

KN84 [4090-4187]

I don't understand this imported Islamic teaching, please can you just move to the next question.

KN85 [2316-2664]

Yes ahh some of the activities of militant Islamic groups in the Middle East and the North Africa have actually influence the thinking and activities of Muslims in northern Nigeria and most particularly they misinterpretation of the concept of jihad. This has particularly led so many people to partake in militant activities in northern Nigeria.

ZA1 [3151-3831]

So if you are talking the influence, are we talking about the positive or the negative? You have to specify. If you are talking about the positive influence that teaching of Islam, surely Islam, if you go back the real word of Islam, Islam is a religion that can teach and bring good morality to a Muslim. If you are talking about this, but maybe you as a researcher you are talking about bad activity that happened. If this is the case, has nothing, has no any connectivity between this their activities and the teaching of Islam. Islam has given no any other way that Islam has influenced Muslim to go and indulge, to engage in bad activities. It has nothing to do with Islam.

ZA3 [5099-5479]

I don't understand what is imported Islamic teaching because Islamic religion has fundamental laws and the laws are universal and there have been completed and sealed some 1400 years ago. So it is either one is aware of a section of such laws or not. So it is universal, so there is nothing new of what is happening today that has not happened before in terms of religious laws.

ZA4 [12656-14116]

Yes Alhamdulillah if you want to get good morality and also in terms of your behavior, the way you behave, it has to start with your parents at home. First of all the parents have to be very sensitive about their children, they have to know the kind of Islamic school they will take him to, they also have to teach them good behaviors in the house, so this are all the basic aspects how you can get a good child starting from the parents. The parents should show good concern and to monitor every behavior of their children and they should also know the kind of scholars or any school they will take them to because that is how they can get their ideology and start the problem. Number two, they have to, the person has to engage themselves in good knowledge of Islam. We have good scholars that if you are listening to their cassette and also you read their books, Islamic books, you will get good morality, good behavior that will motivate you to have integrity that you should take your child to, scholars like Ja'afar, scholars who have, different types of scholars that have good teaching, good morality, good behavior, how you talk, be a very good person of this world and hereafter. So this should be influenced by the parents, influenced by the scholars, and also influenced by the reading of the Sunna of prophet Muhammad (SAW) and also negating yourself from bad ideologies that this type of evil thing you separate yourself from this type of evil.

ZA5 [5161-6099]

When you say imported, is something that is brought into Islam, if I may understand your statement. There is some, so many things that are imported into Islam, like if you look at the issue of boko haram, look at what is boko haram? They say boko haram, who said boko is haram? Ehn western education is haram, for what? If you look at, that is what emm that is Yusufiyya people are doing. They imported something that this boko is haram, which is not, you understand. They imported that which is not ehn before Shi'a was doing the same thing, but at long run they have to put it aside. They have to go back to school now ehnn because Islam was not in support, Islam is in support of modernism as in everything that comes with time, we have to modernize it and continue like that ehnn because Islam is a very peaceful religion that really preach peace, is just some of the people that just brought something that is innovation into Islam.

ZA6 [6848-8039]

Hmm okay if I should understand the question now an imported Islamic teaching that is you are not teaching what is really in the Qur'an ahh? So like I have said, of course it has influenced the behavior of Muslims in northern Nigeria in a great deal. Look at the boko haram issue now and okay you say I should set an example, okay, for example, now telling a Muslim, a fellow Muslim that if you kill someone, if you go to bomb a place, you bomb people, you kill people that that is jihad and after doing that, you will be among those that will enter heaven, the heaven hmmm and you will be giving the wives promised to those that will enter that will make it to heaven. So it is an imported teaching, hmmm. The Qur'an made it vividly clear that if you hurt any human, if you hurt any human you have sinned against him and against God. You cannot hurt a fellow human, a Muslim, a non-Muslim or whatever, it is haram for you to hurt any human not to mention killing. Even when, you only kill someone when he commits the crime of murder and then he has been taken to Islamic court, a murder for murder and that is the work of the sharia, the court now not you in person. So it is part of context.

ZA7 [3896-4417]

Well from the word imported it has to do with teachings probably from outside Nigeria, maybe scholars coming to Nigeria from outside Nigeria and, you know, one thing about any other country is our cultures defer. The way an Arab man's culture is definitely different from a black man's culture. So even in the religion I think there was a particular period in Islamic that the Arabs thought, had this believes that Islam is theirs. So I think it has effect on us and yes it has had big influence in our Islam in Nigeria.

ZA8 [3387-4139]

Yes there are some of some sects in Islam that I think their origin is not from here, like, for instance, this Tijjaniyya sect of Islam, I think the actual root of that Tijjaniyya is from Senegal. There was a man there at that time they use to call him Shehu, I don't know his name actually, Shehu something Nyass or whatsoever. So I think those ones too are also a factor and like, for instance, like this Shi'a too, Shi'a sect of Islam all those people don't have in-depth, am not criticizing them, but I will say they innovate, there are some things they brought into the religion that was not actually there and was not actually practiced by the prophet Muhammad (SAW). So I will say yes some of them also contribute to all these things happening.

ZA9 [3976-4389]

I believe they are getting, they are getting some things wrong in those teachings because even if ahm your religion states some rules if they state some rules, they have their limitations. Those limitation are what I think northern Nigerians are trying to just to shy away from, they just want to go straight according to the teaching without applying their own their own emm their own personal reasoning to it.

ZA10 [4560-4974]

Yes. Islamic teaching has actually ahh has actually positively influenced some northern Nigerians positively because it is the teaching that we know is on a believe on a particular scripture which is the Qur'an and as we know Quran is the word of God and also from hadith and the Sunna of the prophet (SAW) which those teachings and preaching's have actually influenced most of the northern Nigerians positively.

ZA11 [4488-5214]

Well, actually I, if I could get you correctly, the only aspect I could raise in for now is base on the sects we have, Islamic sects, even within the religion itself they conflict each other. So with that I guess those teachings they have from the sects make one or two misinterpretations. Like let's give that of the sects of the Qadiriyyas and the rest, so when you see some will believe that the way you worship is not suppose to be that way, so for that some don't believe in the book, maybe because you do some Dua, they say no you don't do the Dua you doing that so and ahh I don't know. When you study well the beliefs in those sects, I think is one the reasons why we have one or two misinterpretations or there about.

ZA12 [2634-2918]

Yes. It does because most of the groups in northern Nigeria, they are being grouped to so many groups as in group, subgroup, we have the Izala, the Shi'ite, then the Tijjaniyya which is brought from I think the west African side that is Senegal, then, so I think it influenced a lot.

ZA12 [2957-3237]

Positive or negative, I think is based on how they understand it, they understand it to their own understanding is positive to them and if they don't, I think is negative, that is the other group will take it as negative just like the problem between Izalas and the Tijjaniyyas.

ZA13 [2809-3190]

Particular teaching I can refer you to, yes quite right I can refer you to the Tijjaniyya, this is imported from Senegal and if you talk of Shi'a today as we know what its been doing, are being imported from Iran and those are I think the basic two I can and if we look at the Sunni that we look, these are the most basic from Saudi Arabia, so the teaching come from Saudi Arabia.

ZA14 [2125-2357]

Yes, you know we are in the northern Nigeria and if you look at people in the northern Nigeria majority of them are Muslims because most northerners believe that Islam is their birth right and nobody can go against that, thank you.

ZA15 [4653-5123]

Uhhh definitely because as you can see we have different sects particularly in Nigeria and also in the world and even within the Muslims, if you notice, you will see that there is no unity, because they share the same, the Shi'ites will say this one is a Shi'ite, the Dharika will say this one is Dharika, he is allowed, this one will say he is allowed. So people believe even, you say are there particular teachings, no there is no particular teachings to be sincere,

ZA16 [2564-2810]

Yah, the, in the ways that these imported Islamic teachings influenced the behavior of Muslims in the northern Nigeria is that, you see, when, is just all about forgetting the teachings of the prophet, yah forgetting the teachings of the prophet.

ZA18 [2962-2987]

I have no comment on this

ZA19 [4192-4544]

Well actually based on my own view, I don't think there is any part of Islamic teaching that is imported, because Islamic teaching is a divinely revealed religion from Allah (SBUH), so Islamic knowledge is not imported knowledge. It has been there and it has been authenticated and enshrined in both Christian Bibles and Islamic Qur'an that is Qur'an.

ZA20 [2210-2504]

The Islamic teaching that has influenced most of the youths in Nigeria is a different sect in the Islam we have. The Izala sect, the Darika sect, the Shiite sect and all other sects we are having. And every one of the sects, you know, they are actively educating their young men and women there

ZA21 [1955-2289]

Well I can say imported Islam as you said here, yes changed the behavior of many people. Islamic culture from either Saudi Arabia or elsewhere in so many parts of the world try to change the behavior of people of northern Nigeria particularly the Muslims. But that I told you these has not been existence since time immemorial.

ZA22 [2041-2851]

Yah, Muslims in northern Nigeria were living in darkness before about 35 to 45 years ago. But nowadays wherever you go you must see that sign of Islamic teaching within them. And what really actually I know brought this is the call or the da'wa by the late Sheikh Muhammadu Abubakar Gumi (founder of Izala Sect). The man has really tried and he has inculcated values particularly the ways of the rasul (SAW) that is sunna into the life of many Nigerians. For instance, before no woman even bothers to cover her body, but nowadays wherever you go in cities and villages you see people covering their bodies. People pray anyhow in the masjids they don't they don't join their feet during Safur but based on that call from Mallam Gumi (May Allah have mercy upon him) people are now getting more sensitized.

ZA23 [3275-3491]

I don't even know the imported Islamic teaching. All I know the teaching of Islam is contained in the holy Qur'an and the sunna of the holy prophet (SAW). Any other thing imported Islamic teaching I don't know it.

ZA24 [4512-4955]

To (Hausa expression) to my own observation if you look at the northern area, poverty is everywhere and majority of people they want to cause problems in order to get money to sustain themselves. So my own advice is that there is no particular teaching, the only thing is that all the preachers should preach peace. Let every Muslim know that Islam is a religion of peace. So they should stop hate preaching or conflict preaching that is it.

ZA25 [5078-5612]

what I don't understand here is that concept of imported Islamic teachings. Yes Islam is a worldwide, is a global religion so everybody is free to learn from any part of the world, any new thing that is found that it is authentic in Islam every Muslim is allowed is at liberty to take such an opinion and practice it, but has to be very very careful about it. Eh as regards this issue of militancy, you know especially bad times are very infectious. May be one of such is the rise of the so-called Boko haram group in Nigeria.

ZA26 [2431-2562]

Let me tell you one thing, those perpetrators of these conflicts most of them are illiterates. They are not knowledgeable people.

ZA28 [6283-7383]

Well I would like to say a little about this, an Islamic teaching per se amm there are set of teachings that guides the life of a Muslim and amm it is important for each and every Muslim to rise and search for this knowledge without this knowledge there is no way you will know what this religion is all about, you will even know how to address issues regarding to your religion thereby ironing issues that that does not even belong to your religion. So here in northern Nigeria we I can say that in the whole of Nigeria I think northern Nigeria are really trying their possible best in terms of Islamic knowledge, not the negative aspect of it. There are some people that use Islam, they use Islam for their selfish interest and use it to blackmail Islam, and there are a lot of issues arising like the issues of insurgency we have in this country, it is I can say it is basically because of the low understanding of the teachings of Islam people find themselves being influenced I can say

ZA29 [9551-11203]

Well in this case when you talk of Islam to my own knowledge being said the imported Islamic teaching, you don't talk of imported, that word I would underline it because Islam there is nothing being imported into Islam rather unless if you do not have the ability or the chance to lay your hand on the books that have been there for centuries before they born our forefathers. So the religion is like I said and I reveal and I quote the verse al-yawma aqamalta lakum di lakum. So the religion is completed there is nothing that is to be imported. When you import anything into the religion we call this what, what do you call it, we call it bida'a –innovation. When you bring something that is not part of the religion it is an innovation and it is told already that anything you bring that is not part of the religion, that thing will be kept for you in the hereafter and it will be taken back to you. So when you say imported to me I have not actually seen anything being imported into my own religion, the one I practice and if there is I have not laid my hand because if you bring anything to me I would ask you to tell me, refer me, give me reference, tell me the book where you read it from. But like I said some people they will tell you that this is the religion and they will ask you to do it, and you because you are not opportuned to lay your hands on the most important books, you will think that yes they are right because they think they know better than you. And ... those things that they say are not in the book actually they are being imported. To me I don't consider anything imported in my religion because my religion is complete.

ZA30 [5843-6678]

Hmmmm, I don't think there is importation, you know in any situation, we usually go back to our book, the Holy Qur'an, Allah (SBUH) is saying (he recites a verse of the Qur'an), everything is inside it, nothing like out, everything that Muslim is doing is doing ibadat unless if he is doing it out of sharia. So, when Muslims remain under the boundary of their religion, meaning they remain under the boundary of sharia, actual Islamic teaching depends on the Quran in whatever that is not in the Quran then they should go to hadith, after hadith, ijma all those divisions of sharia. So, when they remain, they involve themselves fully with the actual teachings, remove all, anything that is not even in accordance with Islam, take it away. So, they will be in peace. That's staying with the Qur'an and the Sunnah of the Rasul (SAW).

ZA31 [3125-3293]

Yah, there are some teachings, many teachings I believe our, our Ulama, or our religious leaders, they were trying by conveying the truth, the true teaching of Islam.

ZA32 [6229-6902]

So if we say imported, something that is import from outside. Am I right? From outside to Nigeria, from outside the country to Nigeria, we can say there are some teachings that influences the northern Nigerian Muslims especially or I can say for example, the issue of marriage, there are some imported cultures or behavior, am I right, that influences the culture of northern Nigerian Muslims. Example when the Muslims, when the Islam arrived, the issue of marriage, there are many customs which are contrary to Islam and that behavior, Islamic attitude, Islamic way of making the contracts greatly influenced the traditional way of northern Nigerian Muslims. That is all.

ZA33 [2710-3046]

Yes the influence of Islamic teachings on the behavior of Muslims in northern, one particular example is the extremist preachings of Mallam Muhammad Yusuf which led many of our youth Muslims to follow him and behave abnormally and such it contributes to conflicts in the, which influence the behavior of the youths in northern Nigeria.

ZA34 [5088-6880]

Well yes. In fact like those scholars that are going for abroad that is other countries to study may be Islam and other education of life that means science, technology and others, some if they went to such countries they try to bring to their countries that is after their studies, they try to bring some new may be method of teaching or may be method of ideas to especially the youths. And virtually we have several of branches or several ideologies in Islam and even within the Muslims. And even within the schools of thought that is school of law sorry school of law, the madhabs we have the Hannafiyya, Shafi'iyya, Hanbaliyya and Malikiyya. The people of may be far East of the world, may be they are Hannafiyya, the people of may be Arabs, may be jaziratul Arab, may be they are Hanbaliyya or something like that while those in the Maghrib that is we in the West Africa and part of north Africa we are Malikiyya. So some if they went to the far East or central Arab they try to bring their own teaching back to our, which sometimes the ideas are conflicting with one another. So this is one of the factors and one of the ideas. For example, most of the Malikiyya teachings here presently, during our forefathers our this thing being explained and taught by our ulamas that is local ulamas now some of the youths that came back they tried to may be deviate, contradict from such whereas they have their bases either from the teaching of the Qur'an, from the Sunna or from the teaching of the great scholars like Malik and others while they try to contradict such with other madhahibs, not even madhahibs even scholars of thought like the other sects of thoughts they try to bring it to our own locality, which also may be ignites some conflict between the youths and other people.

ZA35 [2131-2330]

Yes like in ahm teaching, like MSS for the student, MSS gathering for the student opening seminars and the rest, public lectures for the people, for the Muslim brothers and sisters by the preachers.

ZA36 [3695-4173]

Ahmm I can give our mode of dressing as an example. The way we use the Hijab now because I can say in those days, for example, in those days when we were in secondary school, we don't know what Hijab is. There is nothing like hijab, we just put on our uniforms and go to school. But these days you see that hijab has become part of the uniform and even the way we ourselves dress it is far more better than the way we dress in those days. We are even more comfortable in hijab.

ZA36 [4479-4827]

Yes because ahm decent dressing matters a lot in our lives, if you dress decently it tells more about you, it tells more of who you are. If you are a responsible person, the way you dress matters, so if you dress good people would look at you as a responsible person and that would earn more respect from them. So I think the way we dress matters.

ZA37 [2710-3580]

This imported Islamic teaching is the one I am asking because Islam is, there is no any imported Islamic teaching. Islamic teaching is all in the holy Qur'an and Hadith of the Holy prophet Muhammad (SAW) and this Qur'an and the hadith of the holy prophet Muhammad (SAW) is all the world where Muslim Umma are there. So this statement imported Islamic teaching, from where? This issue of hijab is also there in the Holy Qur'an, there is one verse in suratu l Nuh and there is another one in suratul Ahazab, saying that (he recites the verse) meaning that they should wear their hijab up to what, up to down their foot, so saying imported teaching that is what I am even arguing about this imported Islamic teaching because if you say this is an imported something that is to say something that comes from an area or from somewhere to somewhere and Islam is everywhere.

ZA38 [6707-9106]

Yah basically, as I said earlier, the most of our students that left for Arabian countries and other Middle East for Islamic knowledge have come along with new sectarianism, and we are saying the issue of Shiites, there was no Shiites in Nigeria for up to more than five decades ago or four decades, nothing like Shiites, you understand, even the Sunni, the Sunni you are hearing today, then more than five or six decades, seventy years ago, there was nothing like that, it is only the Tijjaniyya brotherhood or the Qadiriyya, the one the Usman Danfodio, the reformer came along with it, it is what we have being using all this while, yah but when this people start coming around, they started looking that they or they felt that they are reformers, the Tijjaniyya brotherhood and the Qadiriyya brotherhood have not been doing enough to put Islam in a better shape. That is why when they went, people that went to Saudi Arabia because Saudi Arabia are practicing the Wahabiyya Sunni and this Wahabiyya Sunni, what they feel that, they feel that they, their hands are too clean, they don't want anything, they so much believe that it is only the teaching of the religion and the teaching of the Holy prophet Muhammad (SAW) that you must do, you must not do any other thing that is new to the religion. That is why you see when you come around basically I want to bring an example, far back thirty years ago, our mothers have not been wearing this hijab, you see what they use, they use the veil, this gele to cover their head, you understand, but because of the result of our people traveling, in the 90's, it became compulsory that if you are going to Islamic school, you must put on a hijab, but I tell you formally more than 20 or 30years ago there is nothing like hijab in Nigeria, but with the travelling of these people, going to Sudan, going to Saudi Arabia, the Sunni brotherhood, putting of Hijab became compulsory in our society. Hijab is one of the major things they brought into the society, they are many O! Ahm talking about the aspect of the Hijab, you understand, the wearing of hijab, then they cover their, not that they, they cover themselves O! But they have not been wearing Hijab not that they expose their selves out, but the coming of the Hijab is just something of the early 90's, just now we are using, just two decades now we have been using this Hijab of a thing.

ZA39 [6344-8090]

Ahm actually foreign, you call it foreign Islamic teachings, I am I correct? Imported Islamic teaching, actually, you know, Islam is a religion that trace, that is practicing, that is being practiced by Muslims, as I said before earlier, ahm the religion is safe when you look that origin background of Nigeria, came about 46years after the Hijra that is the migration of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) from Mecca to Medina. So under the leadership of one of his companion called Ukba bin Idinafi led certain his entourage into the area called Kanem which is presently now in Chad Republic, but later it spread to, he came with the people with this religion Islam, they spread it to the people, inhabitants and that is how Islam came into Nigeria, so Islam itself you cannot call it just how imported. Islam itself was introduced into Nigeria, it was not, the practice did not emanate from Nigeria. So therefore to my understanding there is nothing like imported Islamic teaching, but rather corrupt Islamic teaching, if we may use this word, I think it is better, but to call that imported Islamic teaching, actually Islam came to Nigeria as a foreign religion. So there is no way you can say that how it impacts, if you say how it impacted, I can simply say it impacted into converting so many people millions of people to become Muslims. That is how I understand it because it is not a Nigerian religion itself, it is a global religion which later found its way to Nigeria, like I told you by this companion of the prophet. So in totality I can simply say Islam is self-introduced or imported, if I may use your word, into Nigeria. So its impact is that it converted so many people to become to embrace Islam. That is the impact I can say.

Th 5.2: Proliferation of Islamic Teachers and Teaching as Source of Religious Fundamentalism and Interreligious Conflicts

FG1 [13929-14698]

Yes for me I may say there is a relationship because for me I don't think there is any fact that someone can lay to me that someone can give me that all these problems we are facing in northern Nigeria and even all developing countries are not sponsored by the Europeans. For me I don't think there is any fact that can convince me that the Europeans are not responsible for this problem because personally I believe that they are the ones sponsoring all this. So all those teachings our scholars are going there to acquire, they came here sponsored our scholars there and our scholars are there to learn they will impact that knowledge on them and they will come here to deliver the knowledge on us and we the masses we have nothing but to follow. So that is what I...

FG1[14702-14872]

Yah that is that major problem even on the political side. (a rowdy exchange)That is the problem of brain drain. Send our people there to train them and bring them back

FG1 Interview [14874-15408]

That is the case that happened to the leader the initial leader of Boko Haram Muhammad Yusuf, they said that Muhammad Yusuf committed a crime in Nigeria and the Nigerian law enforcement agents wanted to arrest him and in all the airports there was security agents that wanted to arrest Muhammad Yusuf. Muhammad Yusuf was in Saudia on his way coming back, when Muhammad Yusuf came back before they realized Muhammad Yusuf came to Nigeria peacefully with the security agents and went down to Maiduguri and started doing his activities.

FG2 [10314-10505]

Yes of course sir because if I could remember the origin of Boko Haram really of course it is through one of Tariqa they have really brought the issue of disunity actually into the country.

FG2 [10507-11233]

(F) Yes, you see in northern Nigeria especially Islam as a case study, we have so many sects with different beliefs. Like the case of the Shiites I could remember an incidence that took place in Zaria long time ago when some Shiites came out to do one of their religious practice and there was an exchange of bullets between them and some soldiers was it that there was really an exchange or something really happened that they rose up to take the law into their hands. So you see they believe that yes they are perfect and their own practice is supreme compared to other sects in Islam so they could take the laws into their hands and with such kind of things you know there will be proliferation of crisis and so on.

FG2 [11234-11659]

(F) Yes in addition to that I could remember also the present incidence of Boko Haram what happened in Maiduguri was that, due to the increase of those preachings I don't know or whatever it gave rise that most of the youths that got enrolled into system that is Boko Haram it was as a result of constant preachings by those scholars and that is what influenced them and it gave rise to the problems and whatever whatever.

FG2 [11661-11848]

I do not concur with what my friends have said. With regards to her point of the constant teachings of scholars which led to the members of Boko Haram joining Boko Haram.

FG2 [11850-12299]

(She interjects) sorry it is not the constant teachings as in the number of teachings constantly, it is different from proliferation of teachers because I could remember during that time most of the youths, like 70% of them were carried away by the preaching of the so called Boko Haram leader, initially it wasn't Boko Haram. So they were carried away by his preachings so like ahh we won't go for western education. That was what influenced it.

FG2 [12301-13282]

You see what influenced that is more than the constant of preachers or the niyya of Boko Haram or the then Boko Haram leader. It emanated more from poverty. I see it from the poverty angle. It has nothing to do with the scholars. You see most of the youths in northern Nigeria are left handicapped, if I would say, having nothing to do with their minds almost dead. So that emptiness that is in them, it is just like a cup, a glass cup that you leave, whatever you pour inside is what it will hold. It has nothing to do with the glorification of the ahhhh, it is just that that was what came at that particular time to them that was why they accepted the government was neglecting them and this people came, called them and gave them money. Most of them that were arrested that were interrogated you realize that it has something to do with money, I was given fifty thousand naira to go and explode this place. So it is more confined to poverty than the proliferation of teachers.

FG3 [22081-23914]

Yes it is very possible. You know I can remember this present president, am sorry to deviate from the point am just trying to make a reference, he said Nigeria is not corrupt it is Nigerians that are corrupt. And there is a system put in place if that system is followed accordingly no problem will come to Nigeria and everybody will be happy. So this thing, what am saying, what I will like to point here is control. That is all we need. If there is control there is hope. The proliferation will be put really and those that think they are mallams or whatever so they call themselves by just memorizing a verse or so whatever and start preaching around, preaching wrongs things around and those that think they are mallams and believe in them and pick up what they hear from them and think that it is a religion, definitely if there is control which I believe last two years ago or last year it happened in Katsina state, the governor but a control that nobody should stand in the mosque and preach unless he gets a clearance from the government house. When he started people thought that what he was doing is wrong-meaning you are putting restriction to religion the thing was escalated beyond what you expect before you know some people looked into it very well and they found that what he was doing was right because there some people that, if now I have personal grudges me and Mohammed, and I stand in the mosque and preach Mohammed will just go one side and wait for one mistake, and you know that we are not perfect, and he will wait for one mistake and if I make one mistake he will pick and emphasize on that very mistake not passing the message but condemning my own preaching to make himself known all over. So what I think here, the only way to do it, to me, is control. When there is control definitely there is hope.

KD1 [9289-10627]

As I have said earlier, the relationship is actually on the increase because if you look at it, there are two things involved. Before we have little preachers, we also had problems because some people were practices of fetish beliefs, some people were killing twins, some people were bearing of female children and several other fetish beliefs. They even cut human part to make different things. So no preacher, no real kind preacher will preach such things. But when something goes and there is substitution, sometimes substitution might be worse or be better. So I would think what I just say is the un-exposure, inadequate exposure of the preachers. I think that's what actually causes the problem because if you actually encounter as in get to have a conversation with some of them and put your point to some of them as some of the beliefs are having are on the wrong side. You see some of them are actually of the objective and open minded to accept, but how many of them can you actually reach out too and give them some of the ideas that actually cause them to change some of the ideas that are actually causing problem in the society. But the relationship actually on the direct proportional actually the more of the inexperienced and unexposed preachers, the more we are having such instances of conflicts arising in the society.

KD2 [4154-4861]

Religious conflict is not as a result of the proliferation of Islamic teachers alone, but rather it is just as a result of sentiments from a particular sect or a particular group of people or a particular group of Muslims, not only Muslims, but religions, even from the Christians. Some are too harsh, some are bias in the way they teach their followers while some are not. And those that are being bias or those that are being harsh or being strict in the way they confer knowledge to their followers, that way they become very extreme or very harsh in their doings. So there is nothing between, there is no any link between proliferation of Islamic teachers and the, and the cause of religious conflicts.

KD3 [3127-3486]

Yes, the relationship by will establish between the proliferation of Islamic teachers and the teachings in the current rise in religion conflicts are mostly political because, politicians usually use this division in various sects to cause conflict because of different understanding and different ways of view between each of the scholars of different sect.

KD4 [3931-4627]

Yah! I think it has a, the current religion conflict that is happening especially in the current crisis that is happening which I can classify as the most violent ever witnessed in Nigeria that is the boko haram. It has a proliferation of Islamic preachers in it. Taking for instance the genesis of it, which is start from the, the genesis, the propounder of this which is Yusuf, he brought it trying to preach it with his own in ideology proliferating the din with his own ideology which is what is even the rise of the conflict. So I will say that it helped, proliferation of Islamic preachers have influence with this conflict that is presently happening in the northern Nigeria particularly.

KD5 [2909-3284]

I think that the proliferation of Islamic preachers and the teaching may have contributed towards the growing conflicts, in the northern part of the country because the high growth in the rate of Islamic preachers and the recent understanding by the new preachers has contributed towards the conflict. I will also refer to Mohammed Yusuf, Abubakar Shekau and co. That's it.

KD6 [4174-4672]

Yah, I can say it depends; it's the lack of knowledge, lack of understandings. In Qur'an, sometimes Allah will say this, but the prophet is the one to practice, practicalize it for us. But our problem is, we don't follow the teachings of the prophet and our Ulama after the prophet know when and where and do and don't of Islam and the time in Islam. So, you have to wait for your leaders still, am still referring to the leader. We don't have leaders, if we have it all these won't be happening.

KD7 [4395-4410]

Yes, yes, yes.

KD8 [12190-13534]

Well to a certain degree, I may refer to like the issue of the boko haram, it is a movement that was seen to be exogenously motivated, you understand, it is an instrument or it is a platform that is used in order to destabilize Islam and it is perceived also to be an instrument that is used in order to cause problem not only in Nigeria, but African sub-region because neighboring countries, the countries that are bordering Nigeria, they are Muslim countries, most of them. So, it is an instrument of trying to use them in order to create problem so that Muslims will be stereotyped globally. That is my own understanding. They could be stereotyped globally and be hated. That is the way I look at it, but they are not, they are not having any link to any serious Islamic movement or any Islamic movement that is going in accordance with Islamic injunction. Some people will link it to Al-Qaeda, to ISIS and all that. We perceive this to be the creation of the West in order to attack Islam, we don't see Al-Qaeda, ISIS and whatever as Islamic movement. Of course certain Muslims can be used within them, you understand, plus other people, they can be used in order to perpetuate certain atrocities and link it to Islam. It has been happening like that, it happened in Egypt, it happened in Algeria, it is the machination of the West I may say.

KD9 [5905-6007]

I don't quite get the question. I don't know whether it will pass. May be you can ask something else.

KD10 [3354-3515]

Well if those are imported teachings, if they are good and sound ones, you see people use to follow it. Whereas there are some imported teaching like violence.

KD11 [7641-7704]

Well! I don't think I can establish any relationship on that.

KD12 [7064-7817]

Hmm in fact there is no much ah difference, the proliferation of Islamic teachings in both eh lower level of eh education and the upper level of institution too, see we know it is going because of the awareness that is coming that Nigeria is increasing in population every day so far that we are increasing in our population we want to compete with eh we are being called developing countries. See, as Islam has said we want to be among the developed countries of the whole world too. So the proliferation of mallams and deans of Islamic teachings does not bring any havoc, does not bring any things that we may say that is bringing problems to people is only people when they don't eh really follow what is being thought is where we have problems.

KD13 [2395-2398]

No

KD14 [2971-2981]

I can't

KD15 [2958-3356]

Ah actually it has a link because you see brothers of devil they preach, even though they preach normal preaching but at least they introduce their own selfish interest because and you know brothers of Shaytan, brothers of devil they always have followers. So I think it takes part, if we have good Mallams or good pastors or good religious leaders, I think everything will be in peace that is it.

KD16 [2182-2632]

Ah truly the teaching in the present isn't it? That is in the cotemporary time isn't it? Today people have more awareness, but one thing about them or we can say people today are more religious, but there are not godly unlike the people in the past, they are godly even though they didn't have as much knowledge as we have today and it is not they cannot acquire such knowledge but the resources was the problem then.. So this is the way I see it.

KD17 [5262-6215]

Just like I said earlier about the proliferation of Islam scholars you see, I don't even like to called them scholars because they are not scholars, but maybe you just... people will say a scholar. What are they teaching? They are misguiding people telling them what is not, telling them what the Qur'an doesn't teach, you understand, twisting the teachings, the Sunna, the hadith of the prophet (SAW) just to suit your own inner most believe even though you know this is it not the way the early predecessor, you understand, I mean the Sahabas and so you understand, these are not the way they explained this facts. These are not the way the early predecessors explained these verses, but you just use it just because of your own inner most believe, what you feel it ought to be you understand, you just use it to twist people and start teaching them what is not known to them, making them to raise arms against people. I think that is just the issue.

KD18 [4245-4633]

I don't think there is any problem, and I did not think there is any conflicts between the Islamic men between the Islamic eh proliferation of Islam teachers and the teaching in the current rise in religious in the sense that I think they are able to understand each other in that part, so there is no any conflicts and there is nothing there is no any problem pertaining to that.

KD19 [4808-5652]

Yes ah like I rightly told you, in one of your questions, in the olden days, you discover that a whole village or a whole town has fewer number of worshipping centres, fewer number of eh religious training centres, so in such aspect you discover that there are fewer teachers teaching a whole community virtually all aspects of the religion, but these days, there are too many teachers, too many teachers, everybody teach passing across his own believe or his own set of values. So that tends to create more problems for the society unlike in those days. In those days even if there is a problem, you know who to attack, but these days, somebody will just come up with his own believe and would want to impose it on other people, not minding the fact that those people do not share the same believe with you. So that tends to create a problem.

KD20 [2469-3093]

I think there is no any relationship among them because even though within the Muslim themselves, there are some group we called Tarika, Tijjaniyya and that are some group we call the eh shi'a there are some group that we called eh Ahlula Sunna, there is some hadith that contradict each other, they used to find this among themselves not to talk of other religion so if there is a tolerance and understanding I think there can be peace, but since there is no tolerance and understanding, there is going to be a misunderstanding and this is going really cause conflicts between the religions, those religions yes.

KD21 [2983-3104]

Yes I will still go back to my previous answer. The Maitatsine and co, the Mohammed Yusuf of the recent boko haram sect.

KD23 [3868-3925]

No, I cannot eh establish any relationship between that.

KD25 [16079-17436]

Yes, to some extent eh that proliferation of ah Islamic knowledge has ah really ah add has added to the conflicts that is ah you know ah going on eh especially from the northern part of Nigeria because if you look at ah most of the actors in these conflicts from the, you will find out that they are youths and I will not and I will never until I die accept this or compromise this ah statement that ah Islam is terrorism and the Muslims are terrorists, that is not. That is really a total and perfect misconception of Islam in its entirety, so eh eh just as one of our ah worldwide ah known scholar Dr. Zakin Naic, there is no, there's no part of the globe that he has not gone, been to and preach Islam and anywhere he went and preached you will find out that before he finish or finishes you will find out that many people both males and females coming trooping to embrace Islam. That is because it means those that have been you know ah ah telling them different things in Islam, they have now come know that all what they have been hearing before is not true, so that is they only life of the scholars is to tell people the truth, to manifest and make obvious what religion of Islam is really all about, not just for us to continue you know swallowing things ah within us and trying to in the name of wanting to have the materials of his world.

KD26 [4706-5033]

as I earlier said, what we are being taught because of lack of broadened knowledge of what the din teaches, it influences us and then okay by the time a preacher comes and tells us we Muslims are being oppressed, we have to take up arms and destroy our enemies and everything and we use it, most of the time it is being used.

KD27 [3898-4321]

Yes basically it is the same thing I am saying. Most of these preachers preach not-they don't preach for the benefit of the people, for the benefit of the masses, for the benefit of the umma. Most of them preach for their own benefits, what they look at is the followership that they will be able to get by preaching what they feel the youth or the people or the Masses want to hear but not what they are suppose to hear.

KD28 [6592-7338]

Well the way I look at it is that you know like Islam as it is, is a comprehensive, is very comprehensive as it is because it encompasses all aspect of life as far as it is and we Muslims or our Islamic scholars of nowadays whatever, I will have to put it like that way, tends too, if we do not focus at a particular aspect of Islam and people don't really know how to come together and really know the basics of Islam, what Islam really means in totality, if you are to basic aspect in totality of the Islam, then by then you can know what can you do that Islamic teachings, but like Islam as it is now it encompasses all aspect of Life and if you are to take it from any sector then you will be very careful on whatever area you are going to.

KD29 [3454-3725]

Well when you relate the two, you will understand that ah the rate, the rate within which these Islamic preachings is coming up and everyone is jostling to be a preacher so definitely it somehow sometimes do conflict with the teachings based on my shallow understanding.

KD30 [4497-5288]

Ah I think the ah these ah the proliferation of Islamic teachers and the teaching in the current rise in religious conflicts ah I think the, I think these proliferation I think goes with the population boost, if you look at the population now and you look the population before you will see that the number is not that much if you compare the total number of the population and you see religion is what brings ah good ethics and ah and ah responsibility, sense of responsibility within the people itself. If you look at Nigerian population and you try to take away religion then you can imagine when people with such diversity can be able to live in one place I think the proliferation is going to an advantage, is an advantage to the society right now rather than to the person elsewhere.

KD32 [4098-4673]

Ah definitely the only relationship I can say about the conflict and the teachings of the Islamic preachers is all I know the Islamic preachers are preaching nothing but peace, like all the time peace and tolerance as what the prophet did. So there may be some other bad eggs, so we can't judge all, but there may be some people are preaching some things against these which is against the teaching of the prophet. So what the prophet preachers, he teachers peace and tolerance with other religions and I'm very sure this is what most preachers are preaching in the mosques.

KD33 [4120-4194]

No, no, no as I can as I said it earlier that doesn't make any difference

KD35 [5173-5952]

Yes really ehm Islam there is no any other thing that is not said in Islam, there is no any other new thing that would be added, whatever you going to teach, whatever you going to say should be in accordance with the teachings of prophet Muhammad (SAW) ahh if you are preaching about jihad, you know what is jihad first. If you are preaching about qisas you know what is qisas first. If you are preaching about whatever in Islam know it first before you preach against that thing, but the moment you preach ignorantly, you don't know what you are doing, you have not gone and learn how to preach, you don't know the words in Arabic, they are being translated, you don't know anything you just decided in order to make money to preach, so this is where the trouble comes from.

KN1 [8964-10002]

To some extent I will say yes there is because a times I want to believe that most of those a times that are claiming to be Muslims or Christians are not, because probably they are bearing the name, they are having the sort of dress that are dressed by the Muslims or Christians but deep down in their hearts they are not believers of the religion or are not practicing it. So actually some, most of the times some other people are using these things to achieve their aims to collide the Muslims and the Christians against each other a times, and equally as I told you the misled ones whose percentage is quite low, and even among the Muslims they are fighting the wrong ideas or the evil idea, most of the Muslims are against that one, because actually if you are talking about jihad there is a criteria for jihad even in Islam, there is criteria. So now if you want to actually weigh whether they are on the right way or they are doing the right thing you have to know this criteria and compare it with their ideologies and practice.

KN1 [10312-10326]

Yes there is.

KN2 [7320-7702]

Definitely there are. There are. The issues of this militancy attacks, the issues of this suicides are very very unlike black men. If you study suicide, you will know that black men are not used to committing suicide. It is indoctrination of a foreign idea that makes them to commit suicide thinking that they are on the right path. But suicide is nowhere in Islam being preached.

KN3 [13522-16381]

In the first place, during the colonial days we had different religions but of course we are under a foreign master, but we lived peacefully together. Even after independence in the first republic as I said earlier, when we had different political leaders, they were leaders who understood the teachings of their religions and practice them we lived peacefully with one another. I will give you a specific example, in the northern part of the country in the first republic we were able to unite all the different tribes and religions coming from different parts of northern Nigeria and we became one. In those days people did not refer to themselves to their tribal or religious, cultural backgrounds. We were all "yan arewa" (northerners). Now this happened because we had leaders, leaders who understood their religions, leaders who practiced the teachings of their religions. Leaders who refused to bring religion into politics believing that after all the teachings of all the religions are basically the same. We had in the north two leaders who built the northern unity and who made northern Nigeria one, the late Sardauna of Sokoto of blessed memory. He was a Muslim. He was a descendant of Shehu Usman Danfodio the reformer and when he was premier he was also vice president of the world Muslim congress. The king of Saudi Arabia was the president. But in spite of that his best friend among the traditional rulers of the north was the chief of Kagoro Gwamna Awang, a Christian coming from a minority tribe in Southern Zaria. Gwamna Awang could be said to be the spiritual leader of the Christians in the north. And yet he was cooperating with the spiritual leader of the Muslims and they built the north, and we lived happily and peacefully together. Yes we understood the teaching of our religion, our leaders. Now people take a cue from their leaders. We have a saying in Hausa if any congregational prayer goes wrong it is the imam leading it that spoils it. Our leaders did not spoil our prayers, they led us well. I had never heard any of our leaders in those days in the first republic going to the mosque or the church preaching politics or discussing politics. If they went to the church or to the mosque, they went there to pray. Of course they will pray for the country, but not bring political ideas into the church or into the mosque. Today we are doing it and that is why we are having problems. We are having problems and that is the entire society. Every aspect of our society has now been affected as a result of this introduction of religion into politics or politics into religion. Even the family, you sleep happily within the family, in Yoruba land for example in a family, the same parents living in the same compound some are Christians, some are Muslims they live happily together even intermarry and there is no problem.

KN4 [6613-7846]

It has in some ways and because you can't differentiate between the jealousy and happiness is part of human being, the ecstasy and joy all is part of the human being. You can't differentiate between flesh and blood because they are going together. So, if I can say there is a much of of of increase of teachers, it is also affecting the teaching in the northern part of the country that is why I umm before the the the first question I answered most people are are of the Sunni sect and they have more teachers and they are, they are using modern tools and modern techniques toward the expansion of Islam in the northern part of the of the country and also yah teaching because they have, they are more influential so it is affecting the teaching of the religion in the northern part of the country. Ah in the is affecting and what am seeing in the teaching also does not cause the conflict, the cause of the conflict is that of the political struggle to see that am being in power that is it to control the economy to control the political and social activities of the of the the the immediate people of your region. I think that is also affect ,yes

KN5 [2621-2943]

Yes we say if this people are not God fearing they would be doing what the government is asking them to do not what the Islam is asking them do. So the proliferation is actually leading to the conflicts we are seeing in northern ehn ehn Nigeria as they are all terrorism not jihad in any way. So they are political based.

KN6 [2627-2656]

I can't do this relationship

KN7 [4002-4019]

Ehm, no I can't.

KN8 [2513-3133]

Yes, the proliferation of Islamic preachers is contributing to the rise of the conflict presently especially in the northern Nigeria because most of the preaching of this people, majority of the people listening to them and in one way or the other is limiting and affecting the doing of the populace. So as a result of this, it affects the action of the people which at the end of the day brings about a negative or positive result towards the economic development. So, in short, the conflict, the growing conflict in the northern Nigeria is also can be linked or related to the preaching of the words of the religions.

KN9 [3056-3226]

Well, I would want to believe there is a relationship but ah as at this time, I cannot say this is the relationship, but there is a relationship. I cannot establish any.

KN10 [2831-3085]

Hmm, like I told you ahm, the -most of the preachers are not teaching based on the Islamic or based on the teaching of the companions. They are just teaching based on their opinions so this may definitely cause confusion ah within the Muslims like that.

KN11 [4418-4469]

But as I say, I disagree with this to some extent.

KN13 [3745-4526]

Yeah, there is a kind of relation between it because of the Islamic preachers are actually being-they serve as spiritual leaders in the society whereby now they are the people that come up in line by most-at family level they are actually the ones the people look up to for spiritual guidance. Now in terms of conflict resolutions whereby conflicts normally arise, these are people that actually to come out to address issues, to sit down with the conflicting partners that this is how we are going to handle it. But there are some instances whereby they don't normally sit down. That is why I said earlier, that there is communication barrier whereby they don't normally sit down. So it is actually these leaders that serve as the figurehead to solve the main conflicting issues.

KN14 [2819-3071]

Yes, as I told you, ah the Islam is mixed with other things that are not Islam, so those things actually influence out youths today, more especially in northern Nigerian which contribute to many factors such as ah ah conflicts ah ah with other religion

KN15 [4665-4856]

Uhm, yes between proliferation of Islamic teaching and teaching in teh current rise in the religious conflicts yes sometimes they use to have different opinions, so this is my this thing.

KN16 [2138-2293]

The proliferation of Islam preachers is contributing towards current religious conflicts because when people listen to them it can affect them negatively.

KN17 [3122-3169]

Hmm, I don't think there is any proliferation.

KN17 [3391-4243]

Yah its-the teaching in Islamic eh eh Islamic principle, let me say, Islamic perspective actually increase because of some major factors, it is far back as ah let me say ah few years back, most children, we normally know children normally ah ah normally before children normally memorise Qur'an at the age of 6, 9, 8, 10, 15 years but it is very, very difficult for you to find it at this age to find someone they normally call as the hafizi that memorises the whole Qur'an and this has actually led to most especially in the northern eh part of the country as made a lotof people to come out and to devote their time into teaching this Islamic perspective because they believe uhm by teaching the new, the upcoming generation is another way of passing that tradition of Islamic principle to the upcoming eh to the next generation that is growing up.

KN18 [5154-5720]

Well we could not say so because what we are saying that the people now engaging in these Islamic conflicts are not truly educated in Islam, they don't even have the true knowledge of Islam. Proliferation of these teachers, if are teachers that are teaching Islamic ah Islam very well, then they will not be because Islam itself does not preach eh conflict and violence. It does not promote, it promotes peace, it promotes ah culture, so proliferation of these preachers then it will it should result to something, different from this conflicts, Islamic conflicts.

KN19 [4775-5397]

Okay actually, there is a very great linkage between the two concepts. There is a great linkage because in one way or the other the proliferation of the Islamic scholars, you understand, their words and their teachings their guidance is a great factor militating and regulating the current rise of conflicts in the northern region in which their actions or probably their own conclusion their position majority of people will listen to it, it might be a base of reacting over any issue on ground which might result into conflict of disagreement between two or more people

KN20 [3406-3836]

Yeah you see the proliferation of the Islamic teachers bring more awareness to people about the religion of Islam, people get to know the dos and don'ts, people get to understand more about Islam. This made people reason, think about their social happening. So most of them tend to like react to what they are not happy about maybe that is what is causing the...

The current rise...

KN21 [2154-2226]

A lot of relationship especially the radical nature of their teachings

KN22 [4305-4346]

Yes, there is a significant relationship

KN23 [3820-3932]

Yah, indeed there is contribution that this teaching is impacting on individuals, to be specific, young people

KN24 [3134-3197]

Yes, as I said, there is a very large this thing between them.

KN25 [4298-4721]

Well the basic relationship here is that just as I have mentioned earlier, there is centralization of authority on Islamic teachers. So the teaching of conflicts presently has to do with; the relationship here could be seen in the fact that these people preach nothing other than radicalism, you understand, so with radicalism comes conflicts. So the relationship here is basically the teachers promulgate the conflicts.

KN26 [3352-3886]

Well you see the problem with Nigeria is that we, since you are talking about imported Islam, we don't look at things from the contextual point of view. If you see somebody probably in the media largely the media you know in the middle east or other countries that have had years and years of ingrained conflicts in them and then and we see them doing some things and ah we tend to blindly just import those that without looking at what is our own specific and try to adopt, largely this is responsible for a lot of conflicts really.

KN27 [3489-3728]

Well there is this, the correlation between the Islamic teachers and teachings, it is so, I wouldn't say it is insignificant because these teachings, Islamic scholars are one of the basic factors that is influencing militancy in general.

KN28 [2635-2848]

The proliferation of Islamic teachers and teaching in the current rise in religious conflicts has really been a step forward towards the development of the existing sets of rules and regulations of Islam itself.

KN28 [2873-2909]

Yah it does influence to some extent

KN28 [2928-2957]

Yah negatively sure it does

KN30 [2052-2608]

I don't think so. The only think is what I told you earlier on is there are people that come. There was a video I watched and I read about some issues like that. There was a guy from Bauchi, he was a Christian, he was a pastor, I can't recall his name. But ah what he explained is they were taking to Saudi Arabia to those Arabic countries to learn Arabic, to learn Islamic teachings and for them to come back here and be influencing Muslims. May be putting them in a wrong direction, teaching them something that may look like Islam but it is not Islam.

KN32 [1271-1274]

No

KN33 [1596-1640]

ah they push people in militant activities.

KN34 [1495-1498]

No

KN35. [3126-3642]

Hmm actually if we are to look at this question critically we can see that there is a relationship from what these teachers are taking and their teaching. For instance, I like we mentioned the Shi'a if it can be taking as an example as the popular dominant in the northern part of Nigeria. We can't say how the ideology emerged, so through this we can say even their teaching being relevant despite the fact they are ready to do what they wanted to do, so based on their own ideology and they still stand on it.

KN36 [2526-2728]

Yes because there are some people that are teaching Islam now, they are not teaching the word that it wants, so those that know what they are doing and those that are not teaching the way it is supposed

KN37. [2281-2296]

No not at all.

KN38 [1422-1459]

I believe there are no connections.

KN39 [1814-1827]

No actually.

KN40 [3208-3228]

No idea about that.

KN41 [1880-1889]

No idea.

KN42 [2982-3447]

Proliferation of Islam has not actually helped in reducing Islamic conflict not even fueling it because when there are more people that are learned and ready to tell people this is what is supposed to be and this is what is not supposed to be. This is violence and this is, this is right and this is wrong, then the violence is reduced. There is no relation instead the proliferation of Islam has actually helped to reduce conflicts not increase or fuel conflicts.

KN43 [5498-5508]

Hmm, mm no

KN44 [2967-3131]

Proliferation of Islamic teachers ko? I think that is what you say, ehh, and proliferation of Islamic teachers and teaching, no I don't, I don't subscribe to that.

KN45 [2550-2581]

I don't have any idea on this.

KN46 [4280-4623]

Yah, because some of this preachers or teachers ah their aim is to get more followers because more followers means more control of resources, even the resources of their followers, they can exercise some control over them. So this makes these teachers competing against one another which leads to ahh lead them to be intolerant of each other.

KN47 [5617-6378]

Yes, there are of course since there are less checks and balances ahh for the issue, you know, there is no proper screening of the ulama or the teachers. So now as there is no proper ah checking, there is no proper ah screening, of course we can say that proliferation of the teachers also bring the problem because you know anybody can have a kind of ah ah, what do you call it, ah anybody can have a hay day, you understand, to come and preach whatever ideology he just wants to, you understand, there is no check; so if somebody can do it and scale through, then this will trigger another person to also do it and this is proliferation.

Some person also in other places will copy and the process will continue. So this would bring multiple problems of that.

KN48 [2566-2826]

Yah ehh actually I can say yes, I can say yes to it like I said earlier if you unfortunately find yourself in gathering whereby they are giving wrong information, so it means those people giving that wrong information, they are creating a kind of conflict so.

KN49 [3404-3725]

I think aammh right now; the situation is not really about proliferation of ideas and what not, I think it's, if we take a holistic approach to our scenario, I think our home situation, I think it is all about people reacting to the present dynamics, existing within the country I think that's what is really happening.

KN50 [2518-2522]

No

KN51 [8669-11215]

You see that is why there is any conflict. In my opinion most of the religious conflicts in this country is because of the attack of non-Muslims against the teaching of Islam. If you see any Muslim now trying to fight back, it is because of this problem. But if there is no such problem you wouldn't see anything that is religious conflict that is number one. Number two, ahm we believe the way we teach people in our mosques is not the same way Christians teach their people in their churches. We don't instill hatred, we don't teach antagonism, we don't teach that one we don't teach kill Muslims like they say, we don't, we don't teach kill Christians, no ok. So you see if one is asked to establish any relationship between proliferation of Islamic teachers and teachings in the current rise in religious conflicts, what one should say is this, such proliferation, if it is at least so, it will only prevent religious conflicts because by teaching people proper Islamic teaching, by teaching people the ways that they should conduct themselves from the Islamic perspective, there should be no, there would be no religious conflicts at all. But unfortunately even if the Muslims are distancing themselves from anything that would bring conflict, non-Muslims would do it. I have been saying it over and over again it is only when you respect my father, you respect my mother, then you respect me. In a situation where I respect your father, I respect I, I consider your father to be my father, your mother to be my mother, but you continue to consider my father and my mother to be foreigners to you, you can even abuse them, you can attack them, you are inviting conflict, you are inviting conflict. So this is what is happening between Muslims and Christians in this country. Muslims, as far as Islamic is concerned, they are prohibited from belittling anything Christianity. On the other hand the Christianity or the Christians are not prohibited from doing this. They do it not even in this country, all over the world, all over the world. Look at what is happening in places like ah France, in places like ah what do you call it, Denmark and other places. They must belittle the teaching of Islam, they must attack them Prophet (SAW), they, so this is ah our own main problem. I want you to know this, to tell everybody this, the proliferation of Islamic teachers and Islamic teaching will only prevent conflicts if now Christians are to observe the teaching of Christianity as it should be observed. That is my comment on this.

KN52 [3650-3754]

Proliferation of Islamic teachers, I don't understand what you mean by proliferation of Islamic teachers

KN53 [3742-3909]

Well I don't think I have any idea deeply, but I believe maybe they were just trying to reorient ate people, to get along with exactly what they are supposed to know.

KN54 [1304-1307]

No

KN55 [2083-2211]

Islam preaches harmony and peace and does not preaches conflict and all kind of things, violence and things that are not good.

KN56 [2330-2335]

No

KN57 [3239-3386]

Yes. They all claim that they are preaching toward the revival of their religions, this is a very good and flourishing relationship between them.

KN58 [7196-7636]

Yes there is. Take a look at what happened recently where someone came and leveled himself God (Wa iyazu billah), it was blaspheming. Most of them that teach this Islamic religion, some of them even blaspheme against the prophet Muhammad (SAW). You can imagine a situation whereby somebody is telling you that if you don't have Shaihi you don't have peace or salvation that salvation only comes through Shaihi. Who is Shaihi, is he God?

KN59 [5594-6446]

Actually I can say yes, I can say no, it all depends on my answer. Take for instance now an Imam that is teaching his followers something related to Islam and maybe this Imam has already won the hearts of his followers whenever he says you should do this, you see virtually all his followers will agree to what he says and they would follow him, you understand. Take, for instance, like this El-Zak Zaky, when he gives an instruction that his followers should do this, you would see all his followers would abide by what he said and they would react to whatever he said. if he said maybe they should wage a war against a particular sect definitely they would do it because he is their Imam, he is their teacher, he is the person that passes religious teachings them. So to me I can say yes it can, it has a link to this religious conflicts.

KN60 [5839-6931]

Of course, of course that is why at the initial stage I said to some degrees I can agree and to certain extent I disagree depending upon the school of taught maybe depending upon the ideology of the preacher. Actually some people do preach violence that is what they are preaching. So automatically a situation whereby you find a scholar preaching violence there is no way you can prevent his followers to indulge themselves in the act of this violent activities you are seeing: killing people, maiming people, doing this, doing that, abducting women and children taking them to become hostages and what have you. All this are some of the kind of violent activities that some people are posing and it is a threat actually to even how people are living anywhere you find such kind of violent activities being imbedded among the people. Actually it does contribute immensely to the rise of this may be religious fanaticism and then the end result of it is as I have said, what we are seeing now people carrying arms, killing other people, killing both the Muslims and the non-Muslims alike.

KN61 [1629-1997]

There is relationship maybe in terms of maybe ah particular when we are saying maybe a kind of in terms of books, in terms of ah maybe I can call it in terms of ah understanding also that is the only relationship that can occur when there is understanding, depending on the book because there are some book people understand this book better than the other book, yes.

KN62 [6227-6736]

No, I don't think there is any relationship between the two. Islamic preachers, Islamic teachers are guiding people, enlightening people to the righteous path. That is what I believe. But for this, what do you, what do you call it ah kind of ah insurgency, religious conflicts that we see here and there yah, it is something that has nothing to do with the teachings of our Islamic scholars. It has nothing to do with it. In fact it is going against the teachings of the scholars, yah that is what I believe.

KN63 [7204-8000]

You know, you know it is still the same, you know you have a good Islamic scholar, huh, a good Islamic scholar will never preach wrong, will never preach wrong values to their, into their students. You know, Islamic teachings, I don't really think it has, in fact it is even trying to bring it down, you know, all this violence, all these violence of a thing or whatever you can talk of, it is even trying to, you know, bring it down, now trying to kill it, you know, to sort of because if you bring, if you preach the wrong eh, they preach the right ideas into the your followers, they will not have the thinking of maybe attacking, you know, killing other people. So it is even, is even enhancing, trying to stop it, for those that are involved, they are having the wrong ideas about Islam.

KN64 [4313-4320]

Yes,

KN65 [5384-6421]

Yes there is a direct relationship between the teachings and the religious conflicts that is happening today. Why do I say so is this, most of our scholars, when ever given their sermon or lectures, they try as much as possible to condemn any government policy or any decision being taken which is contrary to their own understanding, being that they understand the implication or ah they do not understand, they always condemn it, you understand. And by the time they condemn those policies or decision, it will now have a multiplying effect on the followers, which have become the major, whatever crisis that happen in Nigeria today, if you trace it back to the root, you will see that emanated from one of the Imam or Pastors, you understand, because they fail to really understand the difference between ah teachings and being part of the leadership, you understand. So whatever that comes is contrary to their own understanding, so it is condemnable, and this has, had a great effect on ah on those conflicts we are having in Nigeria

KN66 [2093-2235]

As from the above answer I give already self, it is clear that Islamic teachers don't have anything to do with the rise in Islamic conflicts.

KN67 [2067-2104]

I can't establish any relationship.

KN68 [1389-1393]

No

KN69 [4269-4887]

As I told you earlier the issue of proliferation of Islam is something that is fundamental but the problem lies in a situation whereby if scholars preach to people but it may happen that people misinterpret the interpretation of Qur'an and Sunna which could lead them to this problems we are having nowadays. But in so far as Muslims will understand to make sure that the interpretation given by the scholars of the Qur'an and Sunna is according with the Sunna and they will follow that interpretation, definitely we will not find ourselves in this kind of problem, we will not find ourselves in this kind of problem.

KN69 [4939-5125]

We can say that there is a relationship, the relationship, the relationship resulted as a result of misinterpretations of the Qur'an and the Sunna of the prophet as it has been revealed

KN70 [6620-7067]

Well I think if you will give a ratio of scholars that preaches violence or instigate trouble with those ones that advocated for peace, and harmony in the society, you discover the ratio of those calling for violence is relatively insignificant. So to be very faithful to this discussion I think ah, ah, what applies really is that you have more numbers of preachers who preach peace, who preach order than number of preachers who goes contrary.

KN71 [8447-9285]

Even if there is relationship it is that of being apart because a true Islamic teacher who actually teaches the true teachings of Islam teaches peace, teaches embracement of one another because it is common knowledge, common saying, common declaration anywhere la iqra ha fid din and it is common knowledge from the teaching of the prophet, from the practice of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) that Islam means peace or embrace peace and more than any other thing. So the teaching did not in any way impact or imflame this Islamic conflict or what you call it, did not impact it in any way, but rather subsidize it and maybe let me take you back to the years around 1986 to somewhere around 2001 even to about 2003 and 2004, the crisis around those years were so immense than today. So even if there is a relationship is such of being apart. Yes

KN72 [6643-6913]

Yes there is a relationship between this two because the teachers they were miss the techniques of the preachings since from the ground. So they are doing it based on their opinions, so they can easily influence the people to involve in such occurrences, so that is it.

KN73 [5377-6117]

Yah, the relationship is that Islamic teaching and Islamic teachers. There is different relationship. Islamic teachers as I've said before. Some Muslims or some people are claiming that they are scholars or Islamic scholars while they are not Islamic scholars. In fact they don't even know Islam and they don't even know where or how Islam came into being. Because they don't read about Islam and they can't even speak Arabic and those who can't speak Arabic we can't call them Islamic scholars. You get me? So from there on you will find some claim he is an Islam teacher. By his teaching or by his practice you will they are totally different. His teaching or his sayings are on the other side while his activities are on the other side.

KN74 [12312-12643]

I can't esta, okay if you, if you can look at our people now, you say that, you are asking for the relationship between the propagations of Islamic teachers and the teaching in the current rise in the religious conflict, okay therefore I think there is no any relationship between them, there is no any relationship between them.

KN75 [13906-15442]

Yah, it is influence, a lot of Islamic scholars are contributing to the conflict that are arising in Nigeria. Look, let me tell you, Islamic teaching has its own methodology. The problem we are facing in Islam today is regulation of our Islamic scholars from our Ulama's, we allow anybody any person to come out and preach in the name of he is a Mallam. It is not everybody that can preach. There difference between a preacher and Mallam. It is not everybody that can preach, is not everybody because this preaching has it's own methodology. This methodology need to be taught by some scholars if not we lead to end up ourselves making some utterance that will arose conflict in the society. A lot of scholars, quite alright, they have contributed, when they have something is going on in Afghanistan, they will use it as a reference to be preaching to their Muslim ehh followers, follower that this is what is going on in Afghanistan, this is what is going on in Iraq, so we should need to wake up, all those kind of things which is not supposed. Is it the footstep the prophet took? Is it the footstep the ehh Esari took? Is it the footstep Wathabina took? This is not the footstep. Gaskiya they need a regulation between the Muslim scholar to know the method of preaching or methodology of preaching.

KN76 [8143-8917]

Well to establish the relationship between the proliferation of Islamic teachers and teaching in the current rise of ahh, actually there is and ahh we can see it in such a way that some people are indoctrinated with certain ideology, with a certain view or they come to identify themselves with a given school of thought within the Islamic ahh religion and as a result when they identify themselves with that they preach and you can see that all around in every mosque, in every gathering even when you are discussing even among your friends you may find certain people given certain opinions and taken authoritative positions in subject matters you know little about.

KN78 [8189-9787]

Well I think the case of Boko haram is a very, very good example of a serious conflict ahh which ahh of course there is a relationship between proliferation of Islamic teachers, ahh we had, although let me very, very frank with this, I want to be very, very honest. I think in ahh when you have, when you have those few examples to cite, we have to be very honest, few examples are not sufficient enough to really buttress or to support the point sometimes. You have to make sure you have substantial number of examples to cite to really give a very coherent, a very consistent reason why we feel ahh there is a relationship between ahh certain things that has happened. But in a way if I would if I am right, am I stand to be corrected actually, but ahh with question they said, I mean establishing a relationship between proliferation of Islamic teachers and the teachings in the current rise in the religious ahh conflict, well, you see first and foremost, I think ahh if not quite recent during the emergence of this ahh Boko-haram phenomenon, we have proliferation of quite a number of Islamic teachers, everyone preaching ahh what he felt is the best way of looking at Islam. We never had a conflict in terms of using weapons or eliminating people, ahh but then we do have some limited ahh conflicts in the sense that I disagree with you, you disagree with me, ahh I have an opposing view, you have an opposing view, ooh yes. If that is the case, then we say ahh the more the numbers of Muslims who have different views, the higher the number of conflicts you will tend to have, that I agree.

KN79 [3815-4019]

Of course there are teachings generating conflicts, but I mean Islamic preachers that misinterpret Islam and Islamic teaching and in another way non-Muslim preachers fueling conflict in northern Nigeria.

KN80 [6920-7803]

Yes we can say because not all people are educated islamically. The issue is this, most of the preachers are not educated enough islamically, so also the people that are preaching. So if to say the scholars are learned in the principles of Islam, the fundamental basis of Islamic knowledge and also the people that are preaching also have the idea of Islam, so they may all comprehend, they may not blindly follow what the preachers say without comprehending it and see as to whether it is in the consonant of the real teaching of Islam or not. So if you look at there is what is called Taqlid most of the people ah Muslim northern Nigerians are receiving Islamic injunction in a form of Taqlid, they are just applying it the way the preacher said it or the way they see the scholars are doing it without critically looking isz sources from the ahh ahh real teaching of the Islam.

KN81 [4047-4175]

Well I think ahh it facilitated especially in many parts in northern Nigeria such as Kaduna Kaduna state, Yobe, Borno and Jos.

KN81 [4554-4864]

Yah well now am getting you so you have to avoid saying Islamic preachers because those categories of preachers that facilitate conflicts in northern Nigeria are not pure Islamic preachers at all. They only preach their interest not Islam, so if you refer to such preachers of course there is no relationship

KN81 [4921-4981]

There is a relationship, sorry, there is ahh relationship.

KN82 [5627-5936]

Yes. This proliferation of course has significantly influenced and affects the way and manner Muslims think on what religion is all about. You can clearly observe that Muslims nowadays have different thinking of use concerning Islam. So this ahh development has actually made the Muslims to think otherwise.

KN83 [3370-3611]

Yes. There is a relationship because most of the contemporary Islamic preachers do not preach in accordance to the ways and manner of Islamic preaching and they only preach their ideologies not Islam, but I don't say all, but most of them.

KN84 [4335-4639]

Yes I do agree with you ah there is relationship between some Islamic teachers, they only preach violence and unrest situation among Muslims and non-Muslims. Take for instance, in the northern militant of Borno Yobe and Adamawa, their militant activities are related to what their teachers teaches them.

KN85 [2804-3123]

Amm you see there is emm actually there is proliferation of Islamic teachers. Almost everybody tries to teach Islam ahh through different doctrines, different sects. This has actually led to different kind of teachings, some inconsistent to the Islamic principles. This has actually led people into these activities.

ZA1 [3975-4475]

My friend, Islam if you are talking about those who are preaching, so now who has the responsibility to control the conflict? It is the government. Let them come and establish a ministry to screen those who will preach. Now there are some certain cases in north east were non-Muslims have been caught with bomb trying to bomb a church, but had it been they succeeded in doing such, now they are going to say, they are going to blackmail Islam and say this is the teaching of Islam while it is not.

ZA2 [2095-2322]

The relationship there rather I don't think it will be having much things to say rather than they are all preaching towards peace, toward peace and I think when we talk of peace that is mainly what the Islam is talking about.

ZA3 [5622-5932]

Hmm I don't know what you mean by proliferation because it is encouraged that for every believer you should spread the knowledge of Islam even if it is only one aya. So it is encouraged and it is incumbent on all of the people professing Islamic faith to extend the knowledge of their religion to others.

ZA4 [14317-14356]

Yes ehm according to my understanding...

ZA5 [6370-6799]

Yes if you look at it there is, proliferation, what is really proliferation? Is something that they just brought into Islam now, you understand, and which is not there, we have the Qur'an and hadith of the Prophet Muhammad (SAW),shey you understand. Then you don't have any other thing to follow than to follow the Qur'an and hadith of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) and other people are preaching other things that which is not so.

ZA6 [8182-8483]

Okay amm as in the current rise in religious, the teachings in the current rise in religious conflict, is it in the sense that the real teachers, Islamic teachers preaching what is in the Qur'an in contrast to those that that teach imported ahh that imports, you know, innovate things into the Qur'an

ZA6 [9591-10386]

Yes, yes of course, in fact the, what do you call it? The proliferation of Islamic teachers, their teachings is what is leading to the Islamic rise now. So that, of course there is relationship. The adulterated teaching is what is leading to the Islamic rise because they come to teach the youth what is not in the Qur'an and they motivate the youths to do it boldly and fearlessly, to kill and murder, now they make the youths become very violent and when you become violent and they tell you the only way to relieve yourself is to now is to go and kill, they make you become violent and they tell you the only way to relieve yourself, to make yourself to be at peace now, the only way to be at peace is for you to go and kill, for you to go and bomb. So there is definitely a relationship.

ZA7 [4687-4872]

Well I want say yes because this proliferation, sorry this teachings by (Sorry don Allah let me see) Sorry I want to say yes because this teachings by proliferation, it is proliferation

ZA7 [4925-5235]

I think is I better use ulama, people that don't have the extensive knowledge of Islamic doctrines have emm have been bad influence in the rise of religious conflict because there are teachings and I think this is the cause of problems of boko haram we are presently facing in Nigeria, in northern Nigeria.

ZA8 [4343-4936]

Yah is because of all these teachers and whatsoever they call themselves. There are some of them they are only teaching, they are not even teachers to begin with. They only teach, they only incite some group of people just to cause riot. They are not actually teachers of Islam because a very good teacher of Islam will never, will never insight people to go against anybody no matter, in fact in Islam you are not allowed to kill a non-Muslim, you understand. So any teacher that you see preaching saying this and that, we should kill them whatsoever, I don't think that is an Islamic teacher

ZA9 [4561-5131]

Like I said before, the evil ones among them are the ones perpetrating, they are the ones hiding behind this religion because I think I have read like five or six different articles by different scholars of Islam all of them have been condemning this act. Islam does not support on just killing of humans, you can only kill when you are push to the wall that you don't have any other option apart from striking the person. I don't think you should force people to like embrace your own your own belief. I think that is the main problem we are facing in Nigeria today.

ZA10 [5116-5774]

Yes, up till date we, our Islamic teachers are still (the Islamic teachers we know) because they are still going by the constitution that is using the Qur'an and the hadith and the Sunna, so but you know when we talk about religious teachings we are talking about faith and it has to do with also policy and your understanding, but the fact still remains nothing have been changed from teaching of the Qur'an and the Sunna as it has been right from the time Islam came to Nigeria, but recently the innovation of some Mallams because of maybe possibly their sects they belong to has actually affected some of their teachings in some parts, but not generally.

ZA11 [5394-5416]

Well, ahh not really.

ZA12 [3426-3460]

I don't have any idea about that.

ZA13 [3331-3543]

Yes I think there is a relationship between these two in the sense that both of them are tilting towards peace and when we say peace, we all know peace brings unity, but each of them has a different view of it.

ZA14 [2503-2750]

Yes, if you look at it, look at the issue of Boko Haram in the northern Nigeria most especially between Maiduguri, Yobe, look at their teachings of that particular place, they also affect the teaching of Islam which is the real teaching of Islam.

ZA15 [5272-5850]

Uhhh yes as per se if you look at particularly, since you are talking about Nigeria itself, we have some particular teachers, I will say those teachers are not, will is say they are too extremist, I will use the word extremist in such a way that they don't take things gently, they over do things and ehm we also have some that take things gently and those ones that are extremists is such a way that they take things or they over do things, if they try to preach to people, you will see that they will ginger people or they lure people into doing things that is not right.

ZA16 [2956-3519]

Yes, ahm the relationship between these two terms is that when somebody feels that he is now morally educated or he is now educated, he feels like ok it is now time for him to establish his own school or his own, to start ehhh teaching students not having a certified, certified, let me call it, a certified certificate, let me call like that way, from his teacher because he needs to taught and he needs mentored by another person before and that person needs to give him, graduate him, he needs to graduate him before he went on to establish his own teaching.

ZA17 [1869-1899]

I do not have idea about it.

ZA18 [3144-3282]

yes it does, it does actually, as I was saying before, if you allow each and everybody to preach whatever gaskiya there will be problem.

ZA19 [4686-4835]

Well I cannot actually establish any relationship between proliferation of Islamic teachers and teaching in the current rise in religious conflicts.

ZA20 [2655-2709]

Well honestly I have to reserve my comments on this.

ZA21 [2433-2751]

Well I can say there is a very good relationship between the two. Why because most of our teachers these days, Islamic teachers or preachers so to say, learn from the west or as well from the Arab countries. They don't tend to see our old teachers here in Nigeria as somebody that can be a force to be reckoned with.

ZA22 [2999-3116]

No. I don't think Muslim teachers may have contributed positively towards this militancy. I am strongly against it.

ZA23 [3634-3786]

To (a Hausa expression) as I have said, that imported Islamic teaching I don't know it. So for me to bring any link or relationship will be difficult.

ZA24 [5099-5688]

There is no relationship between proliferation of Islamic teachers and teaching in the current conflicts. If you look at those that are knowledgeable in Islam hardly will you see them fighting. For instance look that those that are in Ahli sunna wal Jama'a they are always encouraging people – those are preaching conflict they always say that if you go to school it is haram all those boko haram whatever, so they don't want people to be knowledgeable in western education. Therefore there is no relationship between those that are preaching peace and those that are preaching conflict.

ZA25 [5756-6253]

Yes. Ah it is observed that this so-called boko haram, for example, boko haram group, whose name is jama'atul ...jihad, their head then who is Mallam Yusuf, he reneged, he broke away from some of the well organized respected scholars in the north such as Mallam Ja'afar and the rest. That is when his teachings tended to be far from the way and manner ehh the sunnatic way of preaching in Islam. So, it think that is where the whole thing began from and it has become difficult to quench for now.

ZA26 [2706-3057]

I told you it is a political issue it is not Islam, Islam forbids violence because from the name Islam-peace. Islam forbids it. if you catch those who are making all these things, I told you they are not the ones that are strong in faith or are knowledgeable than. Most of the people that are knowledgeable they don't involve themselves in fighting.

ZA27 [1766-1771]

No

ZA28 [7534-7826]

Well this is a very difficult question because any question that says relate this to this it needs to be definite and actually the relationship between the proliferation of Islamic teachers and teaching in the current rise in the religious conflicts, but I can't say much about this honestly

ZA29 [11539-12326]

Well the teachings in the current rise of religious conflicts if you look at it very well, our scholars are trying hard to see that yes knowledge is imparted and the teachings of Islam is imparted in our own heads let me say and the teaching of Islam is imparted so that the conflict or the current conflicts should be cropped or put to an end. Well what is happening actually in the proliferation as you said the word to me, the way I understand it is like the propagation, if I may say that is how I understand the word proliferation whether any definition apart from that to me as being used here like the propagation of the preachers today and the contribution towards the Muslim being influenced in Islam, to me actually I have no much to say there actually. I have no much to say.

ZA30 [6831-8053]

The establishment I already mentioned in the first question that Muslims should stay calmly to the book and this thing cannot happen in this our region unless may be when government intervenes because we were divided already. In the last question, I talked about Islam and Muslims, politicians divide people, they use politics to divide Muslims and Christians. Also within Islam, there are different divisions. So, some people were bad, they were, they will just were born, they were born and under that kind of, let me say division and they also got their reasons and support of some verses, but if to say the government will intervene, they will call all those groups, call some people to make them a judges may be invite particular Ulama from Arab countries, let me say like Saudi Arabia, so that they come and be the judges. So, that whatsoever those people are mention, they would be asking them one by one, what are your reasons for what you are doing, they should just stop between the Qur'an and Sunnah. Anything doing outside Qur'an, outside Sunnah, they should just cancel that issue and they should just and let people should to be on the right path, the actual teaching of Islam because Islam teaches peace.`

ZA31 [3525-3803]

Yes, I can. You know we have to, we have to tell our, we have to go into preaching, telling the truth of the religion, telling which is not true, telling the, as in, telling as in making information about the true religion and making information about the non-Islamic teachings

ZA32 [7048-9295]

Yes. I can say that there is a relationship though the relationship is little, somehow little, but since there is existence we have to say it, we have to verbalize it out, we have to speak it out. Ahh the relationship can be like or can be as follows; there are some, some preachers in northern Nigeria, who are not trust, who misunderstand Islam, who do not understand the proper teaching of Islam. So, you see someone else is not guided, how can he, how can you expect him to guide other people and that influence, that contributes, that or that can be a relationship between the rising conflicts between Muslims or non-[Muslims in Nigeria or in northern Nigeria because the conflict, for example we have like boko haram in northern Nigeria and this sect claims to be Islamic sect while it is far away from the real teaching and real principles of Islam. They follow not, they do not follow the right teachings of Islamic. They claim to be Muslim and they claim to have been undertaken jihad and that is very wrong. It is not an Islam, the jihad that they are just fighting or something else, but not for Islam because in Islamic provision, no reason why you can go, you have no any facts, you have no any base to go and kill people and you have no any base to say that all people in general, even the Muslims self are not Muslims because they are doing something that is wrong or something that contradicts the teachings of Islam in one way or the other. You can't call them as an infidel. But you see those are calling people in general, the general Umma infidel starting from the masses up to the leaders including Muslims and non-Muslims and they claim to be what, to be mujahidun, to be strivers, to be strugglers and to be jihadists, let me say jihadist, they claim to be that while they are not really. And that can be a relationship because in Nigeria almost everyone has a right, almost everybody has a right to preach most especially Islam, we have no any ahh committee or organization that stand for the verification or I can say ah given a chance for people to preach. The one that understand Islam can preach as well as the one that does not even understand what Islam is all about. I can say this is, this can be a relationship.

ZA33 [3190-3576]

Yes the proliferation of Islamic teachers and teachings in the current rise in religious conflicts? Yes because of the intensity of the way they preach and teach the religion which is not in accordance with the teaching of Prophet (SAW) so that triggered the religious conflicts to arise not even to arise between Muslims and non-Muslims but rather even within the Muslims themselves.

ZA34 [7011-7978]

Hmmmm well yes I can. One of this is the idea that some of the teachers that are teaching now as I said some of them are half baked teachers. Before you engage yourself in teaching, there must be some basic knowledge that you need to acquire before you are called a mallam (teacher). During our forefathers, our great ulamas, before somebody engage in teaching, he must undergo some screening by his teacher to know that yes he has acquired the basic knowledge that he can teach. Like during Shehu Usman ibn Fodio before he engaged in teaching his great mallam Sheikh Jibrila had to test him, scrutinize him before he was given the license to go out teaching likewise his brother Abdallah and others. So but presently some ulamas are half baked. They only know Arabic. They don't know the basic teaching of may be the Hadith, the Qur'an and others, but yet they engage in teaching and preaching to others, which at the end they deviate people, they cause conflicts.

ZA35 [2471-2481]

No Idea

ZA36 [4971-5900]

Humm the way I see it, there are more and more people are trying to go into Islamic studies deeply because they are trying to understand more about their religion especially on this sects. So more and more people are trying to go into Islamic studies because even those, the people we know before, our former mallams, when we are eh, you know in those days we have this makarantun allo Islamiyya because our modern Islamiyya is a mixture, they also teach them in English, but in those days we use slates ehen, so the way I look at it eh even those our Mallams in those days who are, who lack modern education, western education as in you know in those days it is purely Arabic, so these days they are trying to go back to school so that they would have a bit of western education into the Arabic they know and then that would make them study Islam more widely. I think that is why they are going in to study Islamic studies.

ZA36 [5951-6758]

Hmmm I think that can be, because the more you know, you know more about your religion, you get to understand the differences between the sects, so you yourself you would be able to choose which one is more comfortable, which one you believe more or in the one that you agree with. So by doing that you see people would start diverting, maybe this set of people would say that the Shi'a is more preferable because of their attitude or the way they dress and some would say Ahlul Sunna is the best because their rulings and everything they do is purely according to the life of the prophet (SAW). So by doing that it would bring conflict, yes because this side would see as if they are more superior than this side and the other side would see as if theirs is more superior, so that would bring conflict.

ZA37 [3724-4899]

Yes there is a relationship between it. This relationship is that this Islamic teachers or Islamic preachers always preach towards the development of Islam, towards to the, most especially to the hearts of youths most especially. They should be motivated about the teachings of Islam, so the only relationship here is that on this things, some of the youths seem to misunderstand some of the aspects of the Islamic teachings as usually because youths wherever they are, they have some, their sort of understanding and maybe some their mental, what can I say, they have some mentality at that very stage. So misunderstanding of some of these teachings may lead this one because something that one can be able to afford if he is mature enough, a youth cannot afford it. So to me this is the only relationship I can say. And also another relationship is that this increment of these Islamic preachers also contributes towards the understanding of these youths, the actual teaching and meaning of this Islam and it reduces this conflict. That is why I already stated earlier that most of these conflicts use to happen where the non-Muslims are the dominant and not the Muslims.

ZA38 [9248-10168]

Yah actually, as I said earlier, I mentioned the boko haram aspect, isn't it? The founder Mohammed Yusuf, they say they are Yusufiyya, you understand and the idea is that people say that they said the secularism is a sin, you understand, I don't know how come, I don't know how he got his own from, he got his own doctrine or would I call it a dogma, I didn't know where he got it from. With this thing, it will lead to conflict why because the people in the environment they met cannot buy this idea very cheaply, you understand, basically it triggers conflict even though our government did not manage the conflict well, but we still call it a conflict, because conflict is still a conflict. This is how the preaching and the present conflict we are witnessing, is as a result of Islamic sorry as a result of the proliferation from the preachers, this is what leads to the conflict we are facing today in our society.

ZA39 [8232-9336]

Well actually, like we said earlier, that when you say proliferation of Islamic teachers. Islamic teachers, it depends on who is teaching what. It is not associated only in Islam, it is associated in everything, every aspect of this world, be it in religious activities or economic activities or whatever it is. I can simply say or divide it into two. There are people that propagate Islam, they call themselves, they promote Islam through their teachings, they promote what is the true picture of the religion and I would not deny the fact that there are other people who promote violence and hide under the banner of religion or rather Islam to have so that to have a bad picture of the religion. So if you can take the second group, category of this people, I can say that they have made a negative, they have contributed or they have impacted negatively into the Nigerian society particularly Muslims by teaching the false and fabricated actual meaning of Islam and hiding, by teaching the fabricated one and hiding the actual teachings with the view to promote violence and conflict in the country.

Sub-Research Question 1.2

Th 6: Knowledge about Maududi

Th 6.1: Heard of Maududi

FG1 [32011-32039]

- We have never heard of him

FG2 [57384-57411]

Yes the Pakistani Scholar

FG3 [48643-48685]

Abul Ala Maududi. I have heard about him

FG3 [48687-48838]

Mmmmm his name is no more pronounced as Sayyid Qutb and Hassan al-Banna but I think maybe they have the same kind of ammmm, they are all from Egypt ko?

FG3 [48842-48878]

No Ala Maududi is a British Indian

FG3 [48879-48901]

He is Pakistani now

KD1 [35617-35911]

Yes, I have actually heard about, I think I have come across that name in Saturday column of Bala Mohammed of Daily Trust, but actually I have done little research, just sparingly I have heard about, I have heard that name of something like renaissance like that is it in Egypt or thereabout.

KD2 [13439-13475]

Hmm I have never heard of that one.

KD3 [11023-11027]

No.

KD4 [19955-21083]

Abul Ala al-Maududi as he is called, I have heard about him, but it is unfortunate I did not take time to study any of his scripture. Only I read a little bit of his write up. What will I say about Abul Ala al-Maududi? I think he is a scholar that portrays the meaning of jihad to be the carrying of sword and a violent means. Though I don't think if you are dwelling on only the perspective of Abul Ala al-Maududi, you will be able to understand the true meaning of jihad because Abul Ala al-Maududi, as a scholar, portrayed the use of force to achieve any Islamic state or even using the sword to achieve the truly Islamic state which I totally disagree with him and I think if you can go into the scripture itself, there are a lot of scholarly views not only Abul Ala Maududi talk about jihad. So you cannot take only Abul Ala Maududi's perspective and build on it. You have to look at other scholars too so you can understand and merge them together to understand the true meaning of what the Islam is. But if you take a particular section, you can never understand the religion, if you truly want to know the religion

KD5 [12144-12166]

No, I don't think so.

KD6 [24861-24947]

Abul Ala Maududi. I have not heard about him. May be you can tell me more about him.

KD10 [15293-15556]

Yes have heard about him. I heard about him but Ulama, Ulama ah Abul Ala al-Maududi is not alhlul Sunna,lima analkalima. You get me right? He is not alhlul Sunna because he had some doctrines, creed that are not in conformity with the sharia. Are you getting me.

KD11 [20405-20426]

He was a revivalist.

KD12 [23658-24213]

As a scholar I heard of him, Abul Ala al-Maududi in Pakistan or in Egypt hmm see he has done a lot, he has done a lot. What Abul Ala al-Maududi has done is the colonialism they know themselves that they want to impose their customs on people law and then so far that we have strong balance, so he has to combine some people that you see, people should revolt because where people say they want to disobey what almighty Allah has put down see no Muslim should sleep and look at them without responding so Abul Ala al-Maududi has done good in what I know.

KD13 [8337-8341]

No.

KD14 [9869-9873]

No

KD15 [16544-16548]

No.

KD16 [7977-8003]

I haven't heard about him

KD17 [27487-27500]

Not at all

KD18 [14203-14217]

No, I've not.

KD19 [18219-18223]

No.

KD20 [13796-13819]

I've not heard of it.

KD21 [12184-12209]

I have not heard of him.

KD23 [11859-12019]

Eh yes I know some little about him, so all what I know about him is that Abul Ala al-Maududi is an Indian ah died in 1974 ah is journalist and a philosopher.

KD24 [45427-45431]

No

KD25 [59323-59343]

Hmm to some extent.

KD26 [14714-14730]

No. I haven't

KD27 [16631-16636]

Yes

KD28 [20730-20772]

I have heard of him, I have heard of him

KD29 [11940-11975]

Ah I never, I never heard of that.

KD30 [20718-20782]

Yes I have once come across him once, I think a number of times.

KD31 [13208-13255]

No no no no I've not heard about him for once.

KD32 [19157-19161]

No

KD33 [15243-15292]

Yes I have heard about him have heard about him

KD34 [16504-16567]

No oh, I have never heard of that, I have never heard of him.

KD35 [17361-17365]

No

KN1 [11481-11490]

Yah I do

KN2 [22364-22368]

Yes

KN3 [28464-28469]

Yes
 KN4 [37089-37091]
 No
 KN5 [15697-15724]
 No. actually I have never
 KN6 [16484-16503]
 I never heard him.
 KN7 [17230-17235]
 No.
 KN8 [14010-14250]
 Hmm, actually I have read about him when I was in Arabic school, but I have not done much research about him, but I know he is a great Islamic scholar and he has contributed to the aspect of fiqh, you understand, and Islamic development.
 KN9 [14676-14806]
 Of course, of course have heard about him. He is a great scholar; he devoted his life to revival of Islam during his period, yes.
 KN10 [11530-11562]
 No, no I never heard about him.
 KN11 [16515-16639]
 Abul Ala Maududi was renown scholars, but I don't have much about him, but I know was a renown scholar, an Islamic scholar.
 KN13 [16622-16807]
 Yah, I have heard about him. He is an Islamic scholar that has written a lot em or a lot classic about Islamic philosophy definitely and even a contemporary-how Islam society should be.
 KN14 [12925-12928]
 No
 KN15 [14497-14527]
 No I've never heard about him.
 KN16 [7407-7413]
 No.
 KN17 [16590-16696]
 I think I have heard of the name. The name is very, very familiar but I am trying to decode the meaning.
 KN18 [27328-27361]
 Abul Ala Maududi? Yes of course.
 KN19 [17820-17885]
 Uh, I have heard about him sometimes like that but I can't really
 KN20 [10848-10882]
 Yah, yah, yah, I've heard of him.
 KN21 [6896-6902]
 Yah.
 KN22 [13738-13764]
 Yes Abul Ala Maududi, yes.
 KN23 [11357-11394]
 No. I haven't heard about him before
 KN24 [11174-11184]
 Yes I have
 KN25 [12833-12879]
 Yes I have come across the name once or twice.
 KN26 [14276-14313]
 Ok yes, yes I have heard, I've heard
 KN27 [13224-13226]
 No
 KN28 [10138-10149]
 Not at all
 KN30 [12720-12757]
 I have heard of him a long time ago
 KN31 [14407-14560]
 I have really heard of and read about him but it has been long. I don't think I have anything to say about him but I think he is an Islamic scholar too.
 KN32 [6161-6173]
 Yes I have.
 KN33 [5444-5475]
 Yes I have ever heard the name
 KN34 [7811-7821]
 I didn't.
 KN35. [10396-10400]
 Yes
 KN36 [10225-10255]
 Yes he is an Islamic scholar.
 KN37. [8661-8695]
 I think I have read about him yah
 KN38 [5962-5974]
 Yes I have
 KN39 [9998-10021]
 Yes of course I heard.
 KN40 [11424-11434]
 No idea.
 KN41 [8335-8341]

Yes
 KN42 [14918-14923]
 Yes.
 KN43 [15935-15983]
 Yah I have been hearing about Abul Ala Maududi.
 KN44 [11118-11142]
 I have heard about him.
 KN45 [11957-11991]
 Yes, I have heard Abul Ala Maududi
 KN46 [23230-23336]
 Yes I did, I still do, Abul Ala Maududi the Indian or if you like Parkistani scholar of the twenty-century
 KN47 [27134-27156]
 No, I haven't heard.
 KN48 [8855-8858]
 No
 KN49 [15480-15553]
 Of course I have, he is an Islamic scholar ahh one of the, one of the ehm
 KN50 [8001-8004]
 No
 KN52 [20483-20569]
 Abul Ala Maududi yes but I can't say much about his scholarship, Yah I do about it yah
 KN53 [10264-10281]
 No idea of that.
 KN54 [4896-4911]
 Yes of course
 KN55 [6380-6384]
 Yes
 KN56 [9662-9689]
 Yes I have heard about him
 KN57 [10238-10254]
 Yes of course.
 KN58 [22819-22846]
 Yes, I even have his book.
 KN59 [18737-18739]
 No
 KN60 [19920-19944]
 I have not actually.
 KN61 [8540-8557]
 No, no I didn't.
 KN62 [30524-30547]
 No, I don't know him.
 KN64 [13826-13830]
 Yes
 KN65 [16870-16948]
 Okay Abul Ala Maududi, yes I have heard of him he is a political philosopher.
 KN66 [10197-10215]
 Huhh, I have not.
 KN67 [10584-10607]
 Yes I heard about him.
 KN68 [5418-5421]
 No
 KN69 [20838-20842]
 No
 KN71 [34139-34217]
 I have heard of him, I have heard of him and I think I read so many articles.
 KN72 [18677-18702]
 Yes, I heard about him.
 KN73 [18248-18293]
 Yes really of course I have heard about him.
 KN74 [30189-30227]
 Yes, yes I have heard about him, yes.
 KN75 [31822-31827]
 Yah.
 KN76 [21402-21406]
 No.
 KN78 [29704-29738]
 Of course, of course, of course
 KN79 [15651-15668]
 Yes, of course.
 KN80 [27487-27506]
 Yes I heard about
 KN82 [17584-17598]
 Yes of course
 KN83 [11665-11687]
 Yes I heard his name

KN84 [13254-13278]
 Yes I do heard about him
 KN85 [13955-14001]
 Yes I know about Sayyid Abul Alah al-Maududi
 ZA2 [15989-16153]
 That is a sect, Islamic sect? It should be a sect, but I don't know I, don't know, I don't even see this closer here, but by the name
 I think it should be a sects
 ZA4 [32017-32022]
 No
 ZA5 [18692-18766]
 Okay yes am I heard about him, but not much I don't have too much about it
 ZA6 [46697-46734]
 Kai I have never heard of the name.
 ZA7 [17080-17110]
 I have not heard about him.
 ZA8 [38644-38675]
 No. I have not heard about him
 ZA9 [19085-19089]
 No.
 ZA10 [22156-22161]
 No.
 ZA11 [16243-16252]
 No sir.
 ZA12 [9072-9076]
 No.
 ZA13 [10151-10190]
 Ala Maududi I have not heard of that.
 ZA14 [9931-10026]
 Yes I have learnt about Abul Ala Maududi and I have a little knowledge about Abul Ala Maududi.
 ZA15 [16021-16025]
 No.
 ZA16 [9683-9687]
 No.
 ZA17 [9510-9538]
 No, I have never had of it.
 ZA18 [13236-13267]
 I have never come across that.
 ZA19 [17928-17959]
 I have never heard about him.
 ZA20 [10191-10236]
 I learnt the depths of knowledge about him
 ZA21 [14870-14909]
 Well I have not heard about him before
 ZA22 [12740-12761]
 Abul Ala Maududi yes
 ZA23 [18194-18234]
 Yes I came across even one of his books
 ZA24 [24568-24627]
 No. I don't even know such person. I have not heard of him
 ZA25 [21355-21365]
 Yes I have
 ZA26 [10431-10441]
 No I don't
 ZA27 [8870-8873]
 No
 ZA28 [21031-21222]
 Well certainly I have heard of the name but not all, I know of Abul but this complete name I don't know whether he is the person
 I am not really sure? So really I will say I have not heard.
 ZA29 [29354-29367]
 No actually
 ZA30 [40179-40250]
 Gaskiya I have never come across such a name because me am Ahlul-Sunna
 ZA31 [13864-13931]
 I heard but I don't have total knowledge about his, his preaching.
 ZA32 [35852-37394]
 Yes, Al-Maududi, I have heard about al-Maududi but a little, I heard but not too much about him. I know that al-Maududi was born in Orangabat, Orangabat Heidrabad state in India, currently in Maharastrat state. He died in September, 1979 at the age of 75. He was known as Sheikh al-Hadith Maududi, he was a South Asian scholar. His father was Ahmad Hassan, a lawyer by profession. Maududi received home education and he received religious nature in the hands of his father. Importance of, al-Maududi also is an important early twentieth century figure in the Islamic revival in India. He is, he was trained as a lawyer, he chose a profession of journalist, of journalism and wrote about contemporary issues and most importantly wrote about Islam and Islamic law. He wrote, he wrote about Islam, I mean he wrote about Islam and Islamic law. Maududi founded Jama'ati Islami party in 1941 and he remained its leader until 1972. He extremely influenced, his extremely influential books translated into many languages. They were written in Urdu, Urdu language, translated into English, Arabic, Hindi, Bengali, Tamil, Burmese, this are some, this are the some languages into which his Urdu written books were translated. Al-Maududi believes that everything is the universe; in the universe is Muslim for it obeys God by submission to his laws. Maududi also believes that Muslim, Muslim society could not be Islamic without sharia and Islam required the establishment of what, establishment of Islamic state. That is all I know about Maududi, yes.

ZA33 [10112-10140]

No I have not heard of him

ZA34 [21951-21961]

I was

ZA35 [10612-10615]

No

ZA36 [16302-16502]

As if I heard the name, but I don't know anything, I can't say I know anything on it, but as if I have heard this name Maududi, as if I have heard the name, but I can't say anything concerning him.

ZA37 [19052-19083]

I have never heard about him.

ZA38 [25784-25816]

No I have never heard about him

ZA39 [35541-35554]

Yes I have.

Th 6.2: Information Known about Maududi

FG2 [57447-57551]

I think he is a scholar who propagated the institution of an Islamic state in Pakistan or is it India?

FG3 [48957-49264]

mmmm As a matter of fact many scholars they did not really reckon with him with all he did because most of the claims, when he was alive, he was like encouraging crisis. That is all that I know about the man and he himself is a jihadist, so most of the scholars they don't agree with some of his doctrine.

KD1 [35956-36338]

Actually the only thing I, I think Islamically you say yaku ma banna because we don't know, when you don't know some things you shouldn't say (he recites in Arabic) You shouldn't say what you don't know. Actually, I don't, I actually know little of him, but what, I don't think what, the context he was brought, it was not in the positive context. So I don't know much about him.

KD11 [20467-20660]

Ah Abul Ala Maududi Ah was a revivalist, those were the scholars who of 19th century who tried for the revival of Islamic teachings in a period which was characterized by lethargy and inertia.

KD23 [12057-12149]

Yes I only just know little about him as a man that ah that ah struggled for his religion.

KD25 [59411-59942]

Well this Maududi kind of a person is well, I would not deny that he is a scholar, but ah to some extent he has, he has derailed. He has derailed from the right path. Most of his speeches are violent, they are violent speeches and physically pushing statements that instigate the Muslims to engage in jihad because most of his words are always jihad that jihad is the only way the people, the Muslims should come out physically to fight for their freedom and that is not what the Qur'an says. That is not what the hadith said.

KD27 [16677-16707]

He was an Islamic revivalist

KD28 [20812-20885]

Well I heard of him but I have not known much to know much about him so.

KD30 [20822-21255]

Ahm I think ah Al-Maududi is ahm I think is an Asian scholar who believed in living under and ahm taking ah going to a lot of length in order to achieve an Islamic state and beauty about it is if I am saying the right thing about him is he believes ah in a more intellectual process of ah Islamic state before an having Islamic state where I think he once ah propagate ah forming an Islamic party in order to achieve what they want.

KD33 [15332-15461]

I know of his preaching, the teachings of Islamic emm practice, I know of his ah golden prize from Faisal in the Saudi Arabia

KN1 [11530-11600]

I don't know much about him actually, but I read some of his books.

KN1 [11648-11703]

Yah they are in the market freely, they are on the net

KN2 [22405-22447]

I have read some few of his publications.

KN3 [28528-28822]

He spoke about this jihad too, and said jihad is defensive and not offensive and I think he went further to say that even the slaves captured during the jihad were prisoners of war and not real slaves. After the jihad they can be released according to his opinion. And there are so many tings...

KN8 [14294-15160]

As I have said initially, he is a renowned Islamic scholar, a classical one to be precise because it has been long and most of his documentation, you understand, are guidelines for Islamic history development, you understand, as well as how Islamic society could be restored. There was a book that was written by him, you understand Al-fara Izzal Ghazalla, you understand, that is the process through which the society can maintain its teaching, how you can give recommendation to leaders, you understand, so through this, through this his book I have noted about al-Maududi that he has much put of his work on how to society could be restored with Islamic discipline, Islamic tenet, teaching of the Qur'an and the word of the holy prophet (SAW), you understand, he is a classical Islamic scholar that is has contributed immensely towards the development of Islam.

KN13 [16849-17020]

I know a bit about him but because I just come across him about through listening to him or through some readings. I know he is a very well known, renown Islamic scholar.

KN17 [16938-17003]

Yeah I think I now remember now, I think he is ah he is a scholar

KN18 [27412-27932]

Maudud, Maududi is one of the scholars that have written extensively about Islamic revivalism okay, he has contributed a lot in Islamic revivalism and his revivalism is carrying both political, social and economic revivalism of Islam making Islam, and in his course I mean in his work provide many mechanism for which you could carry that ah Islamic revivalism which he said jihad and his own jihad and his own interpretation of jihad may not necessarily be carrying arms just against the non-Muslims and other things.

KN19 [17920-17958]

I just know he is an Islamic scholar.

KN20 [10924-11011]

Ah he's an ah one of these three most influential scholars Indo-Pak ah scholars

KN21 [6940-7121]

Maududi was a journalist, a theologian, Muslim revivalist leader, political philosopher and a controversial twentieth century Islamic thinker, in British India and later Pakistan.

KN22 [13803-13958]

Maududi is a revivalist, is an Islamic scholar, Islamic philosopher, a reformist that tried to promote the doctrine of Islam from political point of view.[

KN24 [11223-11327]

He is a revolutionary and an Islamic scholar. He contributed a lot to Islam through spreading of Islam.

KN25 [12914-13027]

I know he is a contemporary Islamic revivalist and his works have gone a long way in reviving Islam at his time.

KN26 [14357-14474]

Mmm not too well but I see some of his followers and how they practice the religion that is all I can say about him.

KN32 [6208-6233]

He is an Islamic scholar

KN33 [5514-5593]

He is an Islamic scholar from either Pakistan or India, either one of the two.

KN35. [10434-10461]

He is a Muslim revivalist.

KN36 [10293-10392]

He is an Islamic scholar who struggled for the revival of Islam in the part of India and Pakistan.

KN37. [8734-8783]

He is one of the three Indo-Pak Islamic scholars

KN38 [6011-6064]

I know that he is an Islamic scholar from Pakistan.

KN39 [10059-10162]

Maududi is an Islamic preacher and his effort actually led to the establishment or nation of Pakistan.

KN41 [8379-8499]

Although I don't really know much about Maududi all I know is Maududi is a philosopher and a political Islamic thinker.

KN42 [14963-15649]

This is one of the prominent ehm, what is it called, scholars of our time, he is from the East and he is one of the most religious, one of the most learned scholar because he wrote a lot, he wrote about democracy, he wrote about people, western people actually see us as a people that don't have democracy because we only believe that, we only believe in divine representation, but Maududi has actually written about the fact that you can mix democracy with Islam to bring about Islamic democracy. He is a scholar that believes that this western, this ehm, some of the western ideas can actually be infused into Islamic rule and citizens allowed to vote and actually remove the leader.

KN43 [16023-16057]

I know very little, very little.

KN44 [11182-11386]

Maududi, I believe is a renowned Muslim scholar that is well known globally. That is the little I know about him and I think he should be from Pakistan. I am not too sure but I think he is from Pakistan.

KN45 [12033-12384]

Yes, I think ehh his writing has influenced ehh the Ikhwan of Egypt, the Muslim brothers ehh brotherhood of Egypt, yah and ah I also know that he wrote a Tafsir a Tafsir book Tafhīm al-Qur'an that is the name of the Tafsir in Arabic. In English it means in the shade of the Qur'an. I know him as a scholar and I know him as a good English writer too.

KN46 [23376-23641]

Ahh, I read some of his books, I read some of his books and ahh I can say that Maududi is a, was a Muslim scholar who tended to be a little bit leaning towards extremism. I would not describe him as extremist but certain fatwas of his a leaning towards extremism.

KN49 [15593-15783]

I think Maududi was one of the early Islamic thinkers who contributed in forming, reforming and framing of the Islamic political thought. He was instrumental to so many great things.

KN52 [20610-20646]

I cannot talk about his scholarship

KN54 [4951-4964]

His writings

KN55 [6424-6441]

Their writings

KN56 [9729-9853]

I know that Maududi is an Islamist revivalist who was trying to revive and bring back the old Glory of Islam and Muslims.

KN57 [10294-10324]

Through his writing of books

KN58 [22886-22970]

Maududi is a renowned Islamic scholar of our own time, a true Islamic revivalist.

- KN64 [13870-13958]
I know he is the person or scholar who tried to call people to the right path of Islam.
- KN65 [16990-17106]
Hmm, not much ah, he is just an author, a writer and ah an activist also. So that is just the few I know about him.
- KN67 [10642-10760]
I know he is a scholar, Islamic scholar and ahh he wrote many books mostly in politics and the issue of ah ehn jihad.
- KN71 [34346-34669]
If you mean a particular text, I cannot really say I read this or that but I believe that because, you know, being an MSS member in so many stages, we use to have series of lectures that will tell us may be about his writings, about his principles, about his views of Islamic politics and what have you, That is what I know
- KN72 [18751-18887]
Maududi was an Islamic reformist, but he himself at times misleads the Islamism because he mixes his activity ehh with non-Muslims ideas
- KN73 [18331-18404]
I know a lot; an Islamic scholar, the very precious scholar, that's all.
- KN74 [30189-30227]
Yes, yes I have heard about him, yes.
- KN74 [30276-30341]
Yes, Abu Ala Maududi is an Islamic Scholar, and his preacher yes
- KN75 [31872-32155]
Abul Ala Maududi, what I know is an India Islamic scholar who nationalize in the Europe and then Pakistan, who have a lot of contribution in saying of the prophet and the Qur'an, you understand, he contributed a lot especially in the jurisprudence area, Islamic jurisprudence area.
- KN78 [29778-30026]
Well I know him, he is in this century, one of the few Islamic scholars who are calling for the reviving, for the revival, for the restoration of an ideal Islamic society that is guarded by the Qur'an and the Sunna of the Prophet Muhammad (SAW).
- KN79 [15743-15897]
Maududi is a good person or is a person that has a good heart in ahh over Islam, but there is some ahh part of his teaching that I didn't agree with it.
- KN80 [27545-27685]
So the little I know about al- Maududi I come across his contribution on Tafsir that is translation of the holy Qur'an and the commentary.
- KN82 [17657-17823]
Abul Ala al-Maududi I knew that he is a great scholar and a researcher, a knowledgeable person that work tirelessly to see that he revived Islam during his lifetime.
- KN83 [11734-11767]
I don't know anything about him
- KN84 [13320-13381]
His just an Islamic preacher, an Islamic political thinker
- KN85 [14037-14382]
Maududi is a revivalist ahh in the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent who fought for the establishment of the Islamic state in Pakistan after the partitioning of India into India and Pakistan. He also established the Jama'ati-e-Islam which contested for election in Pakistan and at one time establish a government in Pakistan. He has tried very well.
- ZA5 [18815-18855]
I don't know much about it, thank you
- ZA14 [10066-10220]
Yes I know about Abul Ala Maududi. Abul Ala Maududi is an Islamic scholar, he is a philosopher, he is a journalist and also he is a 21st century scholar.
- ZA22 [12801-13204]
Maududi is a good writer. I think I read one of his books ahh is it True Islam I forgot the title of the book. I read it. Yah he is a struggler, he has so many things but he as one ... that they call ash'a'ir, Ash'ari people that kind of use to misinterpret some of the attributes of Allah. But he is a good writer he has many good things. I use to hear him from many scholars when they are preaching
- ZA23 [18274-18395]
I know him to be an Islamic scholar who has some literatures that guides Muslims towards understanding their religions.
- ZA25 [21406-21494]
In fact I am sorry as of now my hands are tied, I know almost nothing about him for now.
- ZA34 [21998-22221]
I know him by my reading of his books and his ideology. Actually he is a scholar, a contemporary scholar, he has so many ideas. Some of the ideas I am abide by it but I do contradict some of his ideas. That is my own.
- ZA39 [35594-35668]
Maududi I know him as an Author of a book, Islamic book about Sharia law.

Th 6.3: Contact with Maududi's Works

- FG2 [57592-57618]
Any of his writings, no
- KD11 [20734-20747]
Of course not
- KD23 [12217-12273]
No. I have not come across anything about his writing.
- KD25 [60031-60340]
Well to some extent because I'm not interested in that only that in some of the books that I read they used to sight his statements in them, so I don't, I'm not even interested in some of his works. But I know that ah most of what he said were quoted in Islamic books, in Islamic magazines and what have you.
- KD27 [16778-16900]

Ahh I think, if am not mistaken, Abul Ala Maududi was the writer of Milestones when I was in secondary school back then.

KD28 [20956-20971]

No, I have not

KD30 [21328-21430]

I think I read his biography then few of his and few of his I think some quotations of his articles.

KD33 [15522-15566]

No I have I have not read any of his books

KN1 [11804-11877]

I cannot remember them but really I have read a lot of things about him

KN1 [11921-12004]

Yes I do, the title, I cannot

KN2 [22491-22646]

There is one I cannot really recall the title. There is one he wrote on women rights in Islam. There is one on du'a. I read about four or five of them.

KN9 [14881-15020]

Of course I have read a lot of Maududi's writings eh only that I can't really say the names, but I have gone through most of his literature

KN13 [17095-17595]

No, I have not come across any one of his writing, but I have seen some of his quotations, which they normally use some of his quotation normally in eh social gathering they say according to the Maududi, normally they make use of his reference for that-making you to know that definitely- although I have come across other scholars writing like Ghazali, al-Mawardi, so definitely Maududi, I have not come across his writing, ibn Khaldun, so definitely I have not come across Abul Maududi's writing.

KN17 [17111-17159]

Uh I have never come across any of his writings

KN18 [28074-28127]

I read part of his work on revivalism, I cannot reca

KN19 [17999-18036]

I have not read any of his writings

KN20 [11198-11287]

Yah I've heard of some of them but I've not really laid my hands on any of the copies.

KN21 [7219-7324]

The likes of ah towards understanding the Qur'an, anti-Islamic, let us be Muslim, etcetera, a lot of them

KN22 [14017-14057]

No, I have not read any of his writing

KN24 [11380-11517]

Yes I have. Yah it has been long I read it and I can try and get it right now for you from my own library.

KN25 [13080-13206]

Yes I have read. Yah I have read numerous books of Abul Ala Maududi most of which I can't recall the titles.

KN32 [6330-6373]

Yes. I cannot remember

KN33 [5660-5694]

No. I never read any of his books.

KN35. [10515-10566]

Yes. Quite long time I cannot remember.

KN36 [10444-10472]

Yes but I cannot remember.

KN37. [8835-8871]

I think I have read two or three

KN37. [8889-8933]

I can't really remember which ones exactly.

KN38 [6118-6130]

No I haven't

KN39 [10216-10229]

No actually.

KN41 [8568-8676]

Yes I have read like two of his write-ups which is the Interpretation of Sovereignty and Islamic Democracy.

KN42 [15719-16305]

Yah, I read about eh Maududi's writing on theodocracy where he mixed the concept of western democracy with that of Islam, whereby he is talking about us embracing, us having due representation, people actually voting, electing, selecting their leaders, without being appointed, the leaders should be selected directly from the people and there are doctrines, there are principles that determines whether a leader should be selected, he has to have certain qualities and then when he fails in the qualities, has given the power, power to the people, people are allowed to remove him.

KN43 [16112-16115]

No

KN44 [11454-11466]

I haven't.

KN45 [12454-12640]

Yes I think I have, I haven't read his works directly but I know something about his biography and some of his writings, like I gave you example but I have never read his book entirely.

KN46 [23711-24174]

Yes, I read some of them, just like I said, like Towards Understanding Islam, I read this one ah and ahh also I read his book about hijab ehh that is the veil which Muslim woman should wear and also I read some of his ahh interpretation of the Qur'an. At least I can recall and also I read some of his writings about sharia implementation which were articles written at different times, they were put together in form of a book, I read some of this ahh articles.

- KN49 [15854-16045]
No, actually I cannot place a finger on any of his writings I have come across, but as a whole, I think I know a bit of his biography and his contribution to early Islamic political thought.
- KN54 [5034-5064]
Islamic Law and constitution
- KN55 [6511-6559]
Yes I have read Islamic laws and constitution.
- KN56 [9921-10013]
Yah I have read but actually I forget the name of, I have read many and I forget the names.
- KN57 [10395-10448]
There is what we call Islamic law and constitution.
- KN58 [23041-23428]
I read one and I have one even not that I even read. I have one of his books called The meaning of Islam by Abul Ala Maududi where he elaborated the true meaning of Islam, as I said earlier. In fact it was his definition that I gave of Islam, total submission to the wills of Allah he equally divided the state into these various institutions political, social, economic and the sharia
- KN64 [14019-14061]
No, I only read, read his biography only
- KN65 [17155-17184]
Hmm, not really, not really
- KN67 [10802-10832]
None I can refer to for now.
- KN71 [34751-34843]
I cannot remember the exact book, as I said, but I know I read many other things about him
- KN72 [18972-19020]
Yes, I read ehh (he mentions the Arabic title)
- KN73 [18479-18510]
Yes I have read Islamic state.
- KN73 [18538-18584]
Yes there is one of his books Islamic state.
- KN74 [30410-30476]
Yes, I have, I have read his book that the is Islamic Way of Life
- KN75 [32254-32348]
Ai, I can't remember because I know that ehh I read some of I think ehh I can't remember now.
- KN78 [30100-30293]
I think I have read quite a number of his books ahh like for instances, I have ahh Towards the Understanding of Islam is one of his most popular pieces, yah Towards the Understanding of Islam.
- KN79 [15988-16043]
Yes, I read one of his book, titled Islamic Way of Life
- KN80 [27737-27833]
Yes I just one time went through is biography and his contribution but not on critical basis.
- KN80 [27898-27968]
So I told you earlier I just came across an abstract which contains his...
- KN80 [29167-29440]
Yes not only I alone almost the popular scholars in Nigeria and all at large do make reference with his books, yes especially in area of Tafsir and ahh hadith as well. So that is why I often hear scholars greatest Islamic scholars making reference with his works.
- KN82 [17892-17973]
I was able to lay my hand on his book Islamic Way of life, Islamic Way of life.
- KN84 [13450-13529]
Yes I do. I do read ehh one of his book which is called State and Government.
- KN85 [14444-14568]
Yes I have read two of his writings. One, is the Islamic law and Constitution, the other one is the Human Rights in Islam.
- ZA14 [10286-10479]
Yes, there is so much of his work. One of his works I think is ahh because I can really say that there is this work of Sayyid Qutb that he reviewed. I can't really remember the name of the book
- ZA22 [13283-13320]
Yes I think I read Let us be Muslims
- ZA23 [18466-18511]
Eh I know of his Qur'anic translation. Yes.
- ZA25 [21568-21706]
As I said many years ago I was opportuned to read some of his writings, but both the contents and the titles I cannot remember now.
- ZA32 [37620-37666]
No, I never read any of his books and the what
- ZA34 [22292-22584]
Yes I read. I read this his birth control Ta hadidun nasal, one of his books. And there is this book of ehhh-he was asked about suicide bombing and he gave a fatwa in that suicide bombing. To my own I disagreed with his fatwa actually because I have so many other fatwas from other scholars.
- ZA39 [35736-35911]
Actually I read maududi's writing, but I cannot recall, I think I read about the principles of sharia law if I may be correct, but I cannot actually recall it, but I read it.

Th 6.4: Things Remembered about Maududi
FG2 57849-57975]

I think he also propagated that in an Islamic state there could be peaceful coexistence between Christians and non-Muslims.

KD23 [12351-12452]

I can't remember everything about anything about him because ah I did not come across his teachings

KD25 [60437-60898]

Well the striking thing I can I can say about Maududi and his eh ah teaching is that ah he is not, he is the type that is very rigid, not flexible very, very rigid to the extent that he never compromise, he never compromise to any affair that is mild. He would, he would instead want to compromise on affairs that is very violent. He is likes, he loves violent situations and conditions of which from the Islamic perspective it isn't supposed to be like that.

KD27 [16980-17373]

I really felt if I remember correctly the Milestones some of the things he tried to put across is that there is the need for Muslims to go back to our roots. There is the need for Islamic revival, there was the need for us to do things in accordance with the Sunna of the prophet (SAW) and that there was need for us to look back to our past and see where we have gone or taken a wrong turn.

KD30 [21512-22082]

I think the striking thing I will say about him is he his devotion to Islam, how at an early age he have managed to achieve and done a lot in order to eh make Muslims see what is mandatory to them and then to bring the issue of sharia which is ah important to all Muslims and be able to say that ah Muslims, this is what you want and there are ways to achieve it, you don't have to carry ammunition if you go to politics, form a political party and you can have what you want. So I think he has he has done a lot of work in enlightening Muslims and fighting for Islam.

KN1 [12138-12363]

Well I don't think, what I read about him is not very much more about mu'amalat , its more about ibadat, about worship and the rest. So equally I can say that he is a good writer, he can express himself. That one I can say.

KN2 [22715-22891]

The ones I came across he was trying to give a kind of moral teaching. Moral teaching, moral encouragement for Muslims to be good citizens that is actually what I can recall.

KN9 [15107-15648]

Well, the striking thing I remember about Maududi and his teachings is that despite the controversies of his time, despite the harsh, the harsh condition and despite the continuous and enormous pressure by the westerners, he stood firm in his quest of the revival of the religion of Islam. He did a lot of good work by preaching and reviving his community into the service of Islam and the service of Allah. He reminded, he always reminded his people of the need eh to rely on the Allah (SBUH) alone. So I think he did a very wonderful job.

KN17 [17348-17626]

Yeah I think its philosophical in you know in its classical sense and definitely its very very good if more Muslims read it and even they can make it mandatory in schools whereby people can they can people can actually be using it ah in their in their Islamic religious courses.

KN18 [27978-28060]

Yes, I could not recall exactly the name of his work

KN18 [28238-28746]

Maududi is trying to, is trying to justify a kind of Islamic revivalism in the world of Muslim itself. And that his teaching his teaching ah include ah ah ah in many stages trying to show that this thing could be at individual level whereby you are transforming yourself, educating yourself giving yourself ah ah all the necessary all ah as in changing yourself in your own set, then changing the society, putting the society on the course of Allah, Qur'an and Sunna as the guiding principle that is what he

KN19 [18121-18183]

Maudidi I know he is a great Islamic scholar and a jihadist.

KN20 [11654-11769]

I think he is ah Islamic, he is conceptual Islamic ah, ah jihad and ah Islamic revivalism something like that

KN21 [7408-7519]

He was one of the first Muslims to equate religious devotion with political obedience through jama'atul Islami.

KN22 [14135-14272]

Yes, Maududi said that there should be an Islamic community, an Islamic community that adhere to Sunna, Qur'an and Sunna of the prophet.

KN24 [11676-11711]

His radical work of reviving Islam

KN25 [13289-13675]

Well the most striking thing I remember about Maududi and his teaching were the -his time was the time when Islam was faced with many treats especially from the west but despite all this contradictions and turbulences, he struggled, he managed to preach the religion of Islam and he managed to, he strived to bring his people together in other to establish the true religion of Islam.

KN32 [6448-6458]

Revivalism

KN33 [5772-5829]

Since I don't know much about him, I cannot say exactly.

KN35. [10644-10876]

Actually what I remember about his teaching is his ability to enlighten, I mean, to wake up the Muslim Umma to let them realize that they have their own civilization and their own civilization is the best for the mankind to follow.

KN36 [10550-10583]

Unity and the Iman in the Islam

KN37 [9011-9138]

You see Maududi is that Islamic scholar who is characterized by the kind of to a considerable extent he is a radical Islamist.

KN38 [6210-6246]

His politicization on Islamic state

KN39 [10307-10408]

Actually Maududi has the habit of inculcating Islamic zeal in the mind of Muslims and non sometimes.

KN41 [8755-9073]

I could remember his criticism of western concept of sovereignty that man or people do not have the quality or characteristic of being sovereign. And he also said the foundation of western democracy is the sovereignty of the people, so they have misplaced sovereignty because it is only God that can be sovereign.

KN42 [16385-17104]

I remember the fact that Maududi wasn't about us being backward. He did not say Islam is a backward thing. He said Islam should be about sovereignty. Sovereignty with the sense that sovereignty should not, should also lie with Allah. It should lie with the people, so as Allah should be the one that we will go back to, but when he talks about sovereignty of Allah, he talk about the sovereignty of the people. Sovereignty of Allah is we should follow Allah in everything he is saying and sovereignty to the people is people is the fact that they form of check and balance for their leaders. When he is being a tyrant or ruling in a tyrant way, they are allowed to remove him and it was really very insightful for me.

KN45 [12719-12939]

Ehh, I think the striking thing can I remember, can I remember something about him, kai, I don't think there is any striking thing that I can remember except maybe his mastery of the English language at early age, yes.

KN46 [24253-24466]

Ahh it is, he strived to establish sharia, his clamoring for establishment of Islamic state. So all, like it is said, now political Islam; this is very, very evident in all or most of what I read in his writing.

KN49 [16125-16274]

Ah, actually he was ah, he was influential during his time and his teachings still go on and people still take his concepts. I think that is what I

KN54 [5145-5166]

Islamic revivalism

KN55 [6640-6660]

Islamic revivalism

KN56 [10093-10163]

Islamic resurgence and the right of non-Muslims in an Islamic state

KN57 [10529-10702]

You see there is one thing that I do remember all the time is that why Muslims want Islamic state. This is a quotation made by Abul Ala Maududi and he comment fully on it.

KN58 [23509-23928]

The most striking thing about Maududi is he teaches or he now made me realize that Islam is one of the best religions in the world. Not only, that Maududi even reminded me of my own position as a Muslim. Maududi equally taught me the true meaning of what we called Umma and the position of the Umma in Islam. These are the most striking things I remembered about him.

There are many, but these are some that I remember

KN64 [14142-14295]

Maududi, like I said to you, I know, like I read in his ehh biography; the person who tried to make Muslims to perform their Muslim effectively ehn ehn.

KN71 [34932-35050]

If I can remember anything is the issue of Muslims coming together to understand their Islam and to defend the state.

KN72 [19115-19239]

Yes I can remember that he is always emphasize the declaration of words in jihadis as very important according to him, yes.

KN73 [18661-18837]

He really taught that how will Muslim if he found himself, behave like in an Islamic or non-Islamic state? Uhm how will you be able to revive the Islamic concept in non-Muslim

KN74 [30560-30900]

Yes, the only thing, the most thing, the things that I used to remember in his teaching is that, he always even in the from the name of this book that I have mentioned now that is his book always guides the Muslim, the true Muslim the right way to project himself and to live in accordance to prophet, to the way of prophet Muhammad (SAW).

KN75 [32549-32949]

Yes, I can remember Al-Maududi concerning jihad, especially concerning jihad when he said that what does jihad means? He define jihad by saying Muslim today can meet many things by jihad, the jurist welfare bounded by a specific condition then he referred to Ibn Taymiyya torevolt against an impulse ruler, the Sufi moral self the improvement or the modernist notion of political and social reform

KN78 [30482-30863]

Well one of the striking thing is trying to re-awaken the Muslims by not accepting everything that the colonial masters came with. In fact, what he quite interestingly, ah what he advocated for is like is directly restoring the political identity of Muslims. Let Muslims be conscious of the fact that they have an identity which is different from the colonial or western identity. Hmm, well Maududi is a good person as I say.

KN79 [16591-17073]

Well there is one word or there is a statement that Maududi said, I usually remember this statement, Maududi said that a state, a Muslim state should not be an Islamic state, why Islamic state, ahh a Muslim state should be, should not be an Islamic state unless until if this until the constitution or the law of the state are directly Qur'an and sharia while Muslim state or Islamic state is a Muslim state they are colonized according to his own perception and I agree with this.

KN80 [28081-28260]

So what made me remember him and his contribution was is works on the translation of the holy Qur'an, is a wonderful worked conducted into volumes and it is attractive and precise

KN82 [18056-18263]

I remember that Maududi was a knowledgeable and pious scholar that strived tirelessly to see that he revamped the Muslim Umma from the incarceration and the oppression they suffered from the western world.

KN84 [13607-13715]

Ehnn he motivate Muslims to revive some of the Islamic values and other fighting to create Islamic state.

KN85 [14646-14890]

Well one of the thing that fascinated me about Maududi is his philosophy on the Islamic state. He had tried to present a model of an Islamic state in which Muslims and non-Muslims coexist together in which Islam is practiced in best way, yes.

ZA14 [10565-10734]

Yes Maududi's teaching is all about philosophy, bringing people to order, and teaching people moral and way of life according to the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW)

ZA22 [13400-13570]

Maududi I think he is among those that want-the revivers of Islam. They want Islam to be practiced the way it was practiced by the first generation of this great umma.

ZA23 [18592-18843]

Eh I did not come across his life history only that book I read it the translation of the holy Qur'an, which sometime even if I am to deliver a lecture where I will be forced to use English in Islam to some verses, I use to refer to his translation.

ZA25 [21787-22026]

Ah the only things I can vaguely remember for now has to do with Islamic revival. Revival –that eh Muslims are going astray they are leaving the true practice of the religion and they need to be called back to the true path of Islam.

ZA32 [37860-37918]

I can't remember, all I mention is what I know about him.

ZA34 [22664-23119]

Actually one of the this thing is that Maududi use to encourage more especially the learners, the scholars to also go about engaging themselves in seeking for more knowledge. I really appreciate and I agree with his idea because by living with only one segment of knowledge without acquiring the other part of knowledge it seems that you are left behind, so he use to encourage to maybe move about seeking for more knowledge before you become a scholar.

ZA39 [35992-36410]

Actually Maududi, the striking thing I remember is that he tried to simplify the understanding of Islam into English that is he wrote a book in English language and this writing promotes the cause of religion to non-Arabic speaking people that is any person who can read and understand English can simply read and understand the concept of Islam or concept of sharia. This is one of the striking thing I can recall.

Th 6.5: Agreement or Disagreement with Maududi

KD23 [12518-12604]

I am not agreeing ah with his teachings and I am not disagreeing with his teachings.

KD25 [60978-61453]

Hmm to some extent well in the, in the, when it comes to worshipping, he goes, he stands by the truth. He's always, he's only, he's only being extremist when it comes to anything practical eh like ah trying to strive to maintain our status or whatever, he would instigating the Muslims to go, not to having the least hesitation that they will go, he will be instigating them to engage in such violence. But in the case of the, in the case of worshipping, he is with us.

KD27 [17442-17927]

Well I think that Abul Ala Maududi's views on the situation of Muslims as at the turn of the 19th Century, the 20th Century I think was really- it portrayed a true feeling of being oppressed of helplessness and the need for us as Muslims to stand up and take back our heritage which is Islam. I think that is what he and we could do it within the present system although within a system that allows both Islamic, you know, that makes provision for both Islamic and western education.

KD30 [22157-22501]

I agree with a lot of ah I can hardly disagree with what he said or perhaps I have not come across with anything he has said that is contrary to what I believe in. I think so far I can say about him is he is a very, very ah very, very ah important cleric that has done a lot to Islam and so far I don't have anything that ah have problem with.

KN1 [12509-12847]

if I am to be fair to him really I didn't read much about his ideas, I read more about something that is already established by the religion because you know the religion there are some things that are already established by the religion and you cannot change it, but concerning his opinion or his ideologies I don't know much about it.

KN2 [22965-23111]

I agree with the ones I have read, the ones I have come across. Preaching, praying, wearing hijab, rights of women in Islam, I agree with them.

KN3 [28873-28893]

I agree with some

KN8 [15235-15829]

Actually as I have said initially, if I would visit on this Al-fara zal Ghzala, you understand, I accepted with all what he has said in the book because he has preached on how Islamic state could be restored, how people can be controlled, how they can be an orderly society, you understand. So, tracing from the angle of this book I have read, about him, I can say I agree with his perception, but there might be other perception of things he has said that I didn't know then probably I might be able to dis-concur, but with the little I have read about him, he is a good Islamic scholar.

KN9 [15720-15828]

Well I basically think all of his literatures as I have gone through and studied, I agree with all of them.

KN18 [28815-29357]

I agree that there is no, there is no viable okay solution to problems with arms, carrying arms, if Maududi and his work is interpreted by anyone in that I disagree but to my own interpretation I do not even accept that physical force he use I mean physical, physical jihad he use the work physical jihad he used in his work, I don't take I don't take it and interpret it as meaning ah forceful jihad or a jihad using arms, but a jihad that could be that could be in a form of ah total transformation and it could carry many dimensions.

KN19 [18247-18403]

Uh actually by uh not let me by retrospecting from his-to his concept and his teaching that I have learnt in Arabic school, it has been long, 9 or 10 years.

KN20 [11923-11983]

Ah I okay I really disagree with his own definition of jihad

KN21 [7595-7673]

Ah transforming society through education and spreading of Islamic teachings.

KN22 [14325-14500]

I agree with this particular aspect that he saying of that one must not carry arms in order to reform Islam. But through character molding of individuals Islam may be reform.

KN24 [11764-11855]

One aspect of his teaching I agree with is that teaching of Islam that he got himself into

KN25 [13740-13902]

All his teachings primarily went in line with the teaching of the holy Quran so I will say all his literature I went through, I agree with basically all of them.

KN32 [6521-6554]

I agree with all of his writing.

KN33 [5894-5921]

Yes as an Islamic scholar

KN35 [10942-11040]

In his political... That Muslims and non-Muslims can coexist in a state. So I agree with that aspect.

KN36 [10648-10774]

I agree on the aspect of how Islamic state can be institutionalized for the Muslims and how Muslims can manage Islamic state.

KN37 [9204-9325]

His conception of the Islamic state, and how Muslims and non-Muslims could live together in harmony in an Islamic state.

KN38 [6313-6414]

Yah Maududi I think created a nexus whereby Muslims and non-Muslims can coexist in an Islamic state.

KN39 [10474-10642]

The aspect of his teaching? Really one aspect of his teaching that I believe in is that really Maududi is a socialist and a religious person and contributor to Islam.

KN41 [9138-9533]

I agree with his Theo-democracy I mean his theodemocracy. He believes that people should actively participate in election because it gives them the right to choose and change leaders and public opinion. Therefore, he borrowed western democratic concept of election and party system arguing that such mechanism were practiced by the rightly guided Caliphs and therefore is part of Islamic system.

KN42 [17172-17336]

I agree about the fact that there should be democracy in Islam but too much infusion of what is it called, of the western ideas into Islam can be really dangerous.

KN45 [13005-13094]

Since I don't read eh I have never read any of his books, so I can't say specifically.

KN46 [24533-24709]

Ahh, I most of his teachings are right and I agree with them, but some of them definitely I have my reservations and sometimes I totally disagree with some of what he preaches[

KN49 [16341-16415]

I think I do not have any reservations or any eh favorite as regards that

KN54 [5234-5239]

None

KN55 [6725-6730]

None

KN56 [10230-10297]

Actually I agree virtually with all of his teaching and writings.

KN57 [10770-10849]

I agree with him with what he calls right of non-Muslims in an Islamic state.

KN58 [23994-24122]

I agree with all his teachings. There is no any aspect of Maududi that I disagree with because it is in accordance with Suuna.

KN64 [14369-14509]

I agree with aspect of teaching of making or calling that state and Islam they are not separated. They must be the same, I agree with this.

KN71 [35123-35617]

I believe in his teaching that we all must come together to understand the religion and to fight in the cause of Allah that is to establish a state, but of course being man or being human as he is and as any other person, he may have certain, what do I call them? May be do I say discrepancies, no not the right word, but I may say that of course we have one thing or the other that we differ and that is normal with human beings, but that one is very insignificant that I cannot remember now

KN72 [19305-19502]

I agree with his teachings eh based on Sunna and I disagree him on mixing that is personal opinions, yes, there is much of personal opinions over the Sunna opinions or to say prophetic traditions

KN73 [18917-18993]

No I don't really agree, I don't really disagree with any of his teachings.

KN74 [30974-31065]

There is nothing that I did not agree, disagree with him, I agree with all his teachings.

KN75 [33030-33147]

Some of the criticism of Al-Maududi is what I disagree with. There is a lot of criticism among the Muslims themselves

KN78 [30945-31777]

Well I think ah for every Muslim will agree to the fact that every Muslim, every Muslim is enjoined to live by the etiquettes by the standard of Islamic teaching, very Muslim in the world in all spheres of human endeavors. If Maududi ah- one of the teachings of Maududi calls to that which I agree with. Then of course my disagreement sometimes ah is on the fact that ahmm ah certain ah certain ... about ah the implementation is not, the goal, sorry, of the teaching that is the problem, but the methodology that is implored, he lives in quite a different world that we live today. If his teaching is implemented in a secular, predominantly secular society, multi-ethnic groups in Nigeria, I think it is an area I would disagree that those teachings, that method of implementing those teachings in Nigeria is not realistic.

KN79 [17149-17442]

What I just said is what I agree with, I agree that Muslim state, ah Muslim state should not be an Islamic state, Muslim state should ... ah Muslim state is an Islamic state and the Muslim state should not be an Islamic state unless or until their constitution is based on Qur'an and sharia.

KN79 [17905-18125]

Well, every human being are a human being we have lapses, of course even Maududi have some area that [You are quarrelling with him?] of course, of course, what he say about violence, I disagree with many of his statement

KN80 [28497-28723]

Yes I ever even ahh my hand laid, my hand was laid on his ahh works on the translation of Qur'an, but all other but the other contributions he made I just ahh I just know them in a form of reading as part of his contribution.

KN82 [18333-18729]

I agree with his idea on Islamic state. He proposed that Islamic state or theodemocracy will be the best system for mankind. I accept that because it was the system established or implemented in the city of Medina during the life time of prophet Muhammad (SAW) and we have seen in many places how democratic rule asserted or contribute toward disharmony, killings and disorder around the world.

KN84 [13781-13827]

Yes I do agree with some while ignoring others

KN85 [14955-15338]

Hmm actually I do agree with him most particularly on his concept of ahh ahh Tauhid ahh which was the guiding principle on his political sovereignty. He says sovereignty belongs to Allah and Allah alone. That is very striking if you look at it, it is very crucial to the establishment of an Islamic state is fascinating. Actually is ahh I see it as very good contribution in Islam.

ZA14 [10801-11211]

There are some of his aspects that I disagree with because, quite alright we can't say that he is too extremist because he is influenced by Sayyid Qutb, he read more of Sayyid Qutb book because is always his guide and there are some things that you don't need to take them, you need to take them politely but they are taking it more, they are not taking it polite with people, they don't do it democratically. [

ZA22 [13638-13887]

Like all those aspects where he calls Muslims to have a kind of reformation in their attitudes and their behaviors to be really good Muslims, yah I strongly agree with that, but some of the things like those definition of jihad, I disagree with that mmm as I said I didn't read much about him or his teachings. The only thing I know because of that book the translation of the holy Qur'an and some explanation I just believe he is a Muslim and a scholar. But I didn't read anything about his ah teachings.

ZA23 [18912-19169]

ZA25 [22094-22385]

Ah to a large extent Al-Maududi if I can remember eh he was very clear about ah yes as in serious and immediate upliftment of Islamic knowledge among Muslims that there are some so-called Muslim scholars that they are just scholars by name. They know very little about Islamic jurisprudence.

ZA32 [37988-38144]

To say there is one definition Maududi gave to what, to jihad and that ahhh definition appears to be ahhh incomplete, and I disagree wwith him in that area.

ZA34 [23185-23545]

I agree as I said with first the way he use to motivate and encourage ulamas to seek for more knowledge, but I disagree with some of his fatwas because some of his fatwa it seems its maybe contradicting some of the basics of our Maliki school of law. We are Malikiyya School of law so some of his fatwa are against our Malikiyya School of law. That is my own.

ZA39 [36478-36755]

Actually I did not come across the aspect of his teaching that I do not share the same opinion with him. So in a nut shell I agree with his teaching because all what I saw is just a mere translation of some writings or some books that were written in English I mean in Arabic.

Th6.6: Recommending Maududi's Teachings

KD10 [15624-15828]

I will never recommend, I cannot recommend any of his books to any person because its going to lead them to violence, they read his book and if care is no taken its going to lead the Muslims to violence.

KD12 [24290-25004]

Ah yes actually, I read it, in part of what he has read is that he said that, before I read it, one of our Mallam has said that the provision of... is not Limited to human being and then what the white collar, the white people have called, have brought to everybody it wants to limit people to their, relying on their salary, he said that whoever is employed into governmental system must have even in front of him a tray of selling bread or biscuit so that extra income that is being provided by Allah should come in, so it is a principle that he said that almighty Allah's provision is not limited to a static wage, so Muslims should find ways of ah incurring other incomes that almighty Allah has provided for him.

KD23 [12660-12783]

No. I will not recommend his teachings to other Muslims because I did not, I'm not, because I did not read more about him.

KD25 [61524-62087]

Well for those who have, for those whose knowledge is up to, is up to standard of course I will advise they should read because is not that ah reading a book of even the Christians or is not Islam, no, no, no, there are some things you will find useful, so but ah is not everybody that can just read it. Aha so those that have the knowledge, whose standard is up, whose standard is high, of course I even suggest, I even advice that they should have a look so that when a debate is being held on Maududi's work or something, they will have something to say.

KD27 [17985-17993]

I would.

KD30 [22561-23071]

Of course I will, of course I will. I think lack of awareness, I think Muslims need to know about people like this intellectual Muslims like this who have done a lot of work, who have understood the teaching of Islam and have never have never taken ah have never fail to step up for Islam and to find a way to improve Islam and to take Islam forward without violence. I think Al Maududi is a person I will always recommend people to learn more about him. I am even looking forward to learn more from this man.

KN1 [12923-13030]

Yes those concerning ibadat, but concerning other writings I don't even read so I cannot judge those ones.

KN2 [23172-23265]

The ones I have read I will recommend them to Muslims to read them and non-Muslims as well.

KN18 [29433-29465]

Sosai, I agree, I recommend it.

KN8 [15891-15955]

Yes, from the basis of what I have read, you understand, I can.

KN9 [15891-16153]

Of course I would implore other Muslims to go with ah Abul Ala Mududi's ah, Islamic teachings as he was not being biased, he was ah he did his best to be just and he only wanted what was fair for his community and the general Muslims in the world at large, yah.

KN19 [18482-18532]

Some part of his writings especially about jihad.

KN21 [7737-7759]

Oh yes of course yah.

KN22 [14634-14662]

Definitely I will do that.

KN24 [11968-11972]

Yes

KN25 [14014-14071]

Yah I will recommend his writing to every other student.

KN26 [14582-14586]

No

KN32 [6619-6633]

Yes of course

KN35. [11102-11106]

Yes

KN36 [10830-10836]

Yes

KN37. [9382-9454]

I will but it should be guided by a scholar who is not as radical as him

KN38 [6471-6599]

I have not read any of his writings but based on some of his teachings I came across, I think other Muslims can learn from him.

KN39 [10699-10790]

Yes of course I will recommend particularly in the present situation that we find ourselves

KN41 [9595-9618]

Yes of course, I will.

KN42 [17394-17754]

Yah actually, because if you follow this principles that he has given for good leaders, we would not have problems of leadership in Nigeria today. We would have where our leaders would actually they don't have this, what is it called, this ehm attribute, they have not selected it in the first place and when they fall short, they are removed from the office

KN45 [13152-13294]

Yah, I would recommend any writing eh any writing of any scholar to Muslims if they have the time to read, at least knowledge is not wastage.

KN46 [24773-25838]

Yah, why not, I would say they should read, but they should also understand that ah yes he is a powerful writer and ah he easily influences his readers but notwithstanding I would of course ah recommend his books for Muslims to read, but they should be ah very careful about certain opinion of his. If they come across anything that they are not comfortable with I would advise them to get to their teachers and discuss such opinion with them so that ah such opinion would be clarified, maybe this opinions are the ones that are not in tandem with the the ahh the the true representation of Islam because, just like I said, he is a scholar, he can do things, he can do right, he can do wrong, but I think ah most of his ahh what he did are right. Definitely there are wrong ones which I personally ask Allah (SBUH) to forgive him because I do not think he did them ahh I mean he did not want to to misrepresent Islam. He did try to his best of to the best of his ability to represent Islam but sometimes he failed in representing Islam in a true and ahh ah good way

KN49 [16475-16541]

Of course I will because it is a way of enhancing your knowledge.

KN54 [5297-5307]

Of course

KN55 [6788-6792]

Yes

KN56 [10356-10445]

Yes and I can even recommend it to you, you should go and read more about his writings.

KN57 [10980-11028]

Yes of course. If time permits I would do that.

KN58 [24180-24277]

All Muslims are supposed to have, not even read, are supposed to have a copy of Maududi's books.

KN64 [14567-14572]

Yes.

KN67 [10965-11041]

Well I did not read much and I can't recall, so for now I cannot recommend.

KN71 [35687-35715]

Yes, I will, I can do that

KN72 [19577-19641]

No I can't, I cannot recommend him, yes I cannot recommend him.

KN73 [19047-19062]

Of course yes.

KN74 [31129-31143]

Yes, yes, yes

KN75 [33256-33267]

Partially

KN78 [31851-32293]

Well for the sake of intellectual ahh for the sake of ahh, you know, intellectual contribution yes I recommend that for quite a number of Muslims, and I recommend that for generation of Muslims who ah might aspire to icons in this modern Islamic history ahh to appreciate that there were Muslims in some part of the country, in this part of the world that, at least for anything, contributed immensely in the process of change in this world.

KN79 [17541-17546]

Yes.

KN79 [17577-17658]

Hmm, his writing is very, most of his writing is very interesting and very good.

KN80 [29167-29440]

Yes not only I alone almost the popular scholars in Nigeria and all at large do make reference with his books, yes especially in area of Tafsir and ahh hadith as well. So that is why I often hear scholars, greatest Islamic scholars making reference with his works.

KN82 [18788-18941]

I recommend that fighting should be done when necessary and during his life time fighting was necessary because of lack of freedom by the British rule.

KN82 [19015-19423]

But now the position has changed, the position has changed. Before it was a colonial government, but now many states are independent, most of the states are independent states.

So you have choice if you want to practice sharia or what have you as we have seen in some state in northern Nigeria here, there are states that practice Islamic sharia and no one oppose them or try to prevent them by all means.

KN84 [13890-13905]

Yes I do okay

KN85 [15392-15562]

Yes of course as a revivalist who had struggled very hard, very well, actually his writings can be recommend to anyone wish to study and understand Islamic revivalism.

ZA14 [11274-11345]

Yes I will recommend the writing for some Muslims, but not all Muslims.

ZA14 [11431-11893]

Yes I said I will recommend his book for some Muslims, but I have to look at you very well to know your ideology and the way you take things because we have some people that they always behave like extremist because once you are extremist, you read the book of Abu Ala Maududi, he will influence you and because you have to be rational in reading his book because of that I have to look at the level of your knowledge before I recommend Abul Ala Maududi for you.

ZA22 [13954-13989]

Yah I will recommend with caution.

ZA23 [19229-19284]

More especially the translation of the holy Qur'an yes

ZA25 [22446-22459]

Yes I will.

ZA32 [38204-38710]

Yes, it is good to read his, ahhhh other Muslims because he is a revival, revivalist. Though as far as humam being is concerned, Maududi as far as human being is concerned, we know human being is imperfect and imperfection is part of human quality and the ahhh no matter how learned and how good you are, you must have your short comings, yes we believe in that. So Maududi I can call him he is right in many aspects while in some aspect, he is not right and he is right. That is all I can say about him.

ZA34 [23603-23611]

Not all

ZA39 [36818-36996]

Of course I would recommend his writing to other Muslims because it would give them a true picture of the Islamic values. They can easily understand so many things about Islam.

Th7: Views on Maududi's Interpretation of Jihad

Th7.1: Understanding of Jihad fi Sabilillah

FG1 [25113-25144]

Striving in the cause of Allah

FG1 [25146-25189]

Striving and struggle in the cause of Allah

FG1 [25192-25251]

Striving not in your interest but in the interest of Allah

FG3 [4217-6572]

Yes sir actually the light I want to add on here is about, I heard the brother there saying as in like putting jihad as holy war. What I want to say here is actually jihad is an Arabic word and jihad does not in any way, it means jahada- strive. It does not mean in anyway, not any book or in any place you will find that jihad means holy war. Some people think that when you say you are doing jihad – meaning you are fetching your sword and fight for your religion. That is how the thing looks today. But what I am trying to say here is what the people mean is Qital. Qital means to kill, jihad means to strive. Jihad is not only misconceived today by the non-Muslims, it is also misconceived by the Muslims themselves. They don't really know the meaning of jihad. When I say jihad, if a student, a student in school that is trying to pass his exams , if he strive hard, read well to pass that very exam he is doing jihad because he is striving hard for the purpose of that very exam to pass it very well. When you are striving hard to fulfill the purpose of your religion you are doing jihad. That is the definition of jihad. People misuse jihad. So anywhere you see jihad today not only the non-Muslims even the Muslims if you ask them those that do not know they will tell you jihad is fighting a holy war. You understand, that is the light I have to put so I want from today please to put in place the reference to please stop using the word, it is actually escalating reaching to the level that even we will go outside and you will be ashamed of calling yourself in some places a Muslim because if you say you are a Muslim, can you do jihad you say yes , when you say yes it will scare people around you because when you say yes you can do jihad they will think that you can put bomb around your neck and explode them. That is how it looks. So I want to put for reference please if you hear jihad, if anybody use the word jihad means holy war, call his attention and be confident to tell him that if he has any book anywhere that made jihad holy war he should show it to you. I will prove wrong the book, Jihad is an Arabic word –jahada and Qital is what means kill. And nobody nowhere in the Qur'an that say you fetch your sword or whatever kind of weapon and fight somebody, none. To kill self I can remember sorry I put or we put it to killing.

FG3 [33576-33652]

Fighting in the Cause of Allah (and a chorus of agreement followed)

KD1 [24568-25108]

Jihad fi sabilillah it actually means struggle in the cause of Allah and that's why I have said earlier that you can struggle in cause of Allah in several ways. You can struggle because of Allah by making donations to Islam societies, you can struggle because of Allah by building mosques, masjids, you can struggle by building schools and Islamiyya, you can do that by empowering people economically, you can do that by empowering people in several ways and of course not excluding the fighting in the cause of Allah when the need arise.

KD2 [9545-9885]

Jihad fi sabilillah means jihad, fighting, jihad in the cause of Allah. It simply means if you do, if you do it, you do it purposely with the intention that only God will pay you back not that you benefit from it physically or something otherwise. Is only God that will pay you back if you do it in the sake of Allah. That's fi sabilillah.

KD3 [7815-7908]

Jihad fi sabilillah its meaning is striving for the cause of Allah or for the sake of Allah.

KD4 [12146-12320]

To me, jihad fi sabilillah, I will tell you jihad fi sabilillah is striving on the right path, the path of almighty Allah. That is what I will tell you about jihad fi sabilillah.

KD5 [7340-7424]

Jihad fi sabilillah is to do for the sake of Allah or strive for the sake of Allah.

KD6 [18695-19389]

I think it's still the same question we are just talking about. Jihad fi sabilillah literary meaning of jihad that people know we understand it, some people know is about killing people in the cause of Allah, which I don't put it that way. I made jihad a literary meaning of English is strive in the cause of Allah, to strive, to do your best, to help the people, to come about to protect Islam. You can't protect Islam, Muhammad has already protected Islam, what you will just do you do your own bit. What did Islam gain from you? You gaining much from Islam, but what have you, what does Islam even gain from you? You have brother in Islam, what has he gain from you? So to me, it's a jihad.

KD7 [10876-11451]

As I said before, Jihad means a submission to the will of Allah. What should, if you say jihad fi sabilillah, you will see your neighbor's child misbehaving outside, you correct him with his friends, for me that is jihad. You see something that is going to harm the society, you try to take care of it with your mouth, with your lips, with your hands, with your energy, if you have something more you can even put into it, that is jihad fi sabilillah, you are doing it for God not because somebody will see you and reward or he will praise you, no. You are doing it for God.

KD8 [23225-23768]

Jihad fi sabilillah is to propagate Islam. Jihad is, it can be, literally is striving in the cause of Allah, but when you expand it, it is talking about helping to propagate Islam, preaching Islam, building mosques, building Islamic schools, you understand ahm having education, you understand, trying to preach it and see that people are living by the teachings of Islam even if they are non-Muslims, they will see the good behavior and meet, I mean the good behavior of Muslims and emulate it. That is jihad, striving in the cause of Allah.

KD9 [14332-15384]

Jihad fi sabilillah is fighting in the cause of Allah, for the sake of Allah. You are not doing it for anybody to praise you. Now it starts with jihadin nafs, you purify yourself that you are going away from those things that Allah has forbidden for you and accepting to do those things that Allah wants you to do that is to start with. And then when it goes further to jihad al-qital you fight for the sake of Allah not for anybody to praise you and then there are limits, you follow the rules, you want to kill women, you want to kill children, you don't kill one that is helpless that is not fighting you and you don't fight, you know, they call it zangazanga in this area, it is not jihad for goodness sake. Jihad is organized in such a way that you go behind the town, outside, outskirts and then you face the enemy and you fight. But this one that you go from house to house, burn houses, burn churches, burn, in fact when you have non-Muslims, let's say Christians going into their church for safety, you leave them you don't call that jihad.

KD10 [8553-8990]

You know, jihad it means to fight in the cause of Allah, to fight in the cause of Allah so that Islam is going to prevail other religions. This is the meaning of jihad and this jihad is going to be until the day of Kiyama. It is not going to come to an end, jihad is going to be up the day of Kiyama, but any jihad that is going to be fought, it must be in conformity with the rules and regulations laid down by the scholars of sharia.

KD11 [14174-14558]

Jihad fi sabilillah means striving in the cause of Allah not like the abuse usage when somebody is begging for arms he says fi sabilillah, no. It is fi sabilil in his pocket. You can't ask for, you can't, there is just no way you attribute something personal to fi sabilillah. It has to be something that will benefit the totality of the totality of the umma, a region or community.

KD12 [15587-15896]

Ah jihad fi sabilillah means to me, what it means to me is that whatever the capacity, the wealth, everything almighty Allah might have given to me, I have to use it without looking right or left or facing Allah and then I must also encourage people to use their own strength and wealth to propagate Islam.

KD13 [5570-5733]

Jihad fi sabilillah means ability to will for yourself that for the sake of the love you have for Allah you wish others also know the true God you are worshiping.

KD14 [7395-7453]

Jihad fi sabilillah means striving for the sake of Allah

KD15 [10338-10412]

Ah jihad fi sabilillah means fighting in the cause of Allah ah that is it

KD16 [5270-5400]

Jihad fi sabilillah that is to strive in the path of Allah (SBUH) or for the sake of Allah with iklas every sense of sincerity

KD17 [18072-18275]

As I said, jihad fi sabilillah means to struggle for the cause of Allah, to struggle, jihad to struggle fi sabilillah for the purpose as in to struggle for the purpose of Allah, to struggle for Allah.

KD18 [9970-10153]

Okay jihad fi sabilillah simply means to obey the commandment of Allah, to do something because of Allah, so that you are going to meet with, you are going to meet Allah with peace.

KD19 [13423-13669]

Jihad f sabilillah means striving in the cause of Allah that is whatever you want to do, do it only for Allah because if you do it only for Allah, you have the reward, but if you do it for any other purpose, there is no reward, it is not accepted.

KD20 [7677-7742]

I think jihad fi sabilillah means to do something because of God

KD21 [7905-7952]

Is the jihad you fight for the cause of Allah.

KD23 [7985-8048]

Okay jihad fi sabilillah means struggle for the cause of Allah

KD24 [30256-31141]

Jihad fi sabilillah in English ah in Arabic, in English is fighting in the cause of Allah meaning don't allow someone to use you just to come and gather you inside mosque or inside hall, preach to you, tell you lies, things like that that they are cheating you, they are so, so things, they are killing you, they are setting bombs, no, without him waiting to follow things step by step, make sure that you have proofs, quality proofs that what you are saying is right and even though if someone is attacking you and you find out that yes I'm sure he is the one, this bomb or this bomb that has been used to be killing people, the person that did this, you are not supposed to take action in your hands, you will report him to the government, even though you are not in the system of Islam, but you have to report because that is how it is, you will not take action on your own hands.

KD25 [43939-46120]

Jihad fi sabilillah not even to me, but to the from the perspective of Islam is striving in the cause of Allah. Anything that a Muslim will do to see to the upliftment and elevation of Islamic structures that is jihad fi sabilillah. For instance, if you just decide to, since Allah has given you wealth, why don't you build a Muslim hospital so the Muslims will be going there to be treated, have the female section and the male section ah as we presently don't have it, if your wife wants to deliver she, it will end up, she might end up ah manifesting her nakedness in front of a non-Muslim or something like that and then you decide to build, to use your money to build the hospital or to build a mosque or to plant a tree or do dig a well for everybody whether Muslim whether non-Muslim to come and drink or to come and rest from the tree and have some shelter or what have you. That, all these are acts of striving in the cause of Allah. That is fi sabilillah. That is the meaning of fisabilila, jihad fi sabilillah striving in the cause of Allah, for the sake of Allah, not for the sake of any other person. It does not mean that carrying sword, no, no, no, and Allah again, like spending in the cause of Allah is fi sabilillah. Allah even said (he recites in Arabic) Allah said the parable or the example or the similitude of those that spend their wealth in the cause of Allah is just like, is just like a seed of, like a seed or a grain right, when it was implanted in the soil it now comes out and brings forth seven years and in every seventh year is contained hundred seeds, so when you say hundred times a hundred, that is the least reward Allah will give to anybody who spend his wealth in the cause of Allah (SBUH) like building a mosque, like in building an orphanage, like in building a hospital or like going to the hospital playing the philanthropic role of assisting those whether Muslims or non-Muslims, those who are really suffering and there is no money for the drugs or they lack money to buy food and what, helping them in as much as you are in your mind, you have established your din sake of Allah that is the jihad fi sabilillah and a host of the other

KD26 [10236-10393]

It is strive, it is struggle to achieve an objective for the sake of Allah not for our sakes or for the sake of somebody, but for the sake of Allah (SBUH).

KD27 [9150-9602]

Well Jihad-struggle right? fi sabilillah- for the sake of Allah right? Now like I said from the very beginning in which jihad is enjoined upon ourselves first and if you struggle and you are able to suppress your nafs-soul in such a way that it adheres, it follows the Sunna of the prophet (SAW) and the injunctions of the Qur'an now that is the greatest jihad. As long as, if you do that then you eliminate a lot of room for conflict and violence.

KD28 [14795-15102]

Well jihad fi sabilillah to me is you are doing whatever you are doing for the sake of God not for any personal interest because you must do it according to the injunction from the Qur'an, from the Sunna of the prophet Muhammad (SAW) then once you are able to that these are the jihad to do fi sabilillah.

KD29 [8156-8318]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to me ah is a way of extending the teachings, Islamic conduct, the teachings through preaching through Islamic conducts, good conducts.

KD30 [13629-13737]

Ah that should be ah that is to help ah to bring people or to help the religion of God for the sake of God.

KD31 [10585-10746]

Jihad fi sabilillah only means you should do you should carry out jihad according to the teachings, according to the teachings of the holy Qur'an and the Sunna.

KD32 [11817-12121]

That is to strive for the sake of Allah even if there is contribution to build a mosque so when you bring your own wealth to spend it for the sake of building that mosque, that is jihad fi sabilillah, you spend it for the sake of Allah to build a masjid, to build a mosque for the worshipping of Allah.

KD33 [10546-10636]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to strive, to improve yourself, personally for the sake of God.

KD34 [10529-10695]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to me is that to struggle for the sake of Allah. What kind of a struggle? By doing a good deeds and good deeds comprise of a lot of things

KN1 [27183-28178]

Jihad in Islam means a lot to me. It means for me to struggle to be knowledgeable, it means struggle for me to provide for the needy ones, it means to struggle for me to enlighten the people to know about the religion, the correct stand of the religion, it means for me if it warrants to take physical arms and defend my religion, my faith, my integrity, the integrity of my people and myself, which in every state, in every state that one is warranted. Let's go back to Nicola Machiavelli he has the same view concerning a state, so the state craft is an issue that is quite confusing to most, and Islam has a way of explaining how to run a state that is the fundamental issue and why this confusion is occurring in this, most religions they consider their religion as a worshipping aspect of the something they don't take it as something that will guide their daily living, how they conduct themselves. That is the confusing issue that is why most other religions are not understanding Islam.

KN2 [17427-18415]

In my understanding not in my opinion, jihad is of two types or of two stages. The first stage is for Muslims to preach Islam, to advertise Islam through preaching and through practice, to show non-Muslims how life is sweet when you are a Muslim and practicing Islam, to show non-Muslims how they can get solutions when they are Muslims, to tolerate non-Muslims, to give them chance, to give them opportunities, to call them to Islam and to maintain those that are Muslim within Islam. To show them that Islam means peace and they will get peace when they get into Islam. If on the contrary they did not accept that it is fine and ok. If they accept Islam it is now fine and ok that they are now Muslims. If they don't accept that then they should have it their own way. Then the second stage only happens when Muslims are attacked. That attack can be morally, can be intellectual and can be physical. Then Muslims have no option but to protect themselves through the means of jihad.

KN4 [23428-24064]

Jihad fi sabilillah it means doing between you and your God, assisting somebody, supporting the society, supporting the individual without their knowing, paying their hospital bill, build schools, build roads, in fact supply electricity for them without their knowing, without their consent and you did it you and your God without allowing anybody to know that is jihad fi sabilillah, that is one of the its meaning and also you can do it, people they can also observe you and you did it with good mind neither a Christian or a Muslim, you did it as a community, as a human being for the sympathy on them, that is Jihad fi sabilillah

KN5 [10176-10573]

When you say jihad fi sabilillah as we have been talking of jihad previously you would see some people are doing jihad, they are fighting for the cause of something but fi sabilillah should be in the cause of Allah you are not doing it because of anything but in the cause of Allah under its guidance, it has some guides that one has to follow those guidelines in order to do jihad fi sabilillah.

KN6 [9833-10471]

The jihad fi sabilillah it has different step by step. The first one means maybe ah even to call your opposite sex ah your opposition into in order to convert into religion is jihad, even maybe to go and get a job is part of jihad. All this are part of jihad. Jihad can be interpreted, sorry jihad has different step by step like I said whenever –if you want to fully understand the meaning, you should go back to the history of Islam, you should see, for example, the history of prophet Mohammed (SAW) will enlighten you the meaning of jihad. So you should go and read the history of Prophet Mohammed (SAW). This is the only solution.

KN7 [10187-10394]

Jihad fi sabilillah in the literal, the literal meaning of fi sabilillah is doing things because of Allah and Allah alone. So if you are doing jihad, it should just be because of Allah and Allah alone, yes.

KN8 [8577-8882]

From the Arabic context when you say jihad fi sabilillah, the word fi sabilillah simply means doing things in accordance to the willingness of God just for the willingness of God. While the word jihad means an act of you putting the best of your effort, towards ensuring the development of your religion.

KN9 [9542-9633]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means war in the name of Allah, war in the cause of Allah, yah.

KN10 [7857-7893]

It means fighting to defend Islam

KN11 [11529-12060]

Jihad fi sabilillah is to make sure that you call some people upon the religious of Allah (SBUH) that is to worship none but Allah, that is the true meaning of jihad, to call upon people to know the true God, to know the true God. So jihad fi sabilillah means to call upon people to worship their true God, to avoid all fake gods, some people worship Jesus Christ, some people worship stars, moon, and other like this. So jihad fi sabilillah means to call on people to worship the only one true God. That is the mean of jihad.

KN13 [10377-10586]

Jihad fi sabilillah means- is a spiritual war whereby it is actually cleaning moral decadence in the society, trying to make things in line with the Islamic traditions and teachings of prophet Mohammed (SAW).

KN14 [8918-9058]

Jihad fi sabilillah means ah fight to seek for your ah ah ah freedom for the sake of Allah, seeking for your freedom for the sake of Allah.

KN15 [9970-10069]

Jihad fi sabilillah it means to struggle and strive for the cause of Allah and only Allah alone.

KN16 [5208-5282]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to struggle in the cause of Allah's authority.

KN17 [10946-11074]

Its just like ah a spiritual fight, fighting, fighting an holy fight or a spiritual fight against something that is un-Islamic.

KN18 [18140-18608]

To me, doing things in the cause of Allah, helping people okay, constructing ah ah ah maybe providing pipe borne water where necessary, helping the needy, okay helping the malnourished, this are jihad fi sabilillah. You are building mosques, helping people okay, the needy in the society with health care facility, kai donation of blood is a jihad fi sabilillah. Jihad fi sabilillah in this context does not mean that you should carry arms against the non-believers.

KN19 [13895-14168]

Jihad fi sabilillah let me trace it from the Arabic context of this word, when you say jihad, is an act of making effort towards the will of Allah, you understand, while fi sabilillah is ah doing this thing not because of anybody but in the cause of Allah, you understand.

KN20 [6654-6700]

Yah to carry out jihad solely because of God

KN21 [4645-4689]

Jihad-fighting in the cause of Allah (SBUH)

KN22 [9286-9507]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to me the giving of alms to the less privileged, the construction of roads for the citizen, the adhering to the yearning and aspirations of the people. That is what the true jihad entails to me.

KN23 [7637-7708]

Jihad fi sabilillah means something that you do for the sake of Allah.

KN24 [7498-7559]

Jihad fi sabilillah means the believing in oneness of Allah

KN25 [9275-9331]

Jihad in the name of Allah or War in the name of Allah

KN26 [8641-8917]

Being a Muslim to me I think I will be a laissar faire at that level, persuasion, good deeds, I think these are the most sensible things in the twenty first century that can really actually lure a non-Muslim to Muslim but not violence for instance, not violence of any sort.

KN27 [9183-9256]

Jihad fi sabilillah in one word just means fighting in cause of Allah.

KN28 [6857-7026]

Jihad actually from my own view is about you willing to go not just say to the extreme but to some certain stage whereby you can do some part in the survival of Islam.

KN30 [8990-9050]

Jihad fi sabilillah is doing the jihad in the sake of Allah

KN31 [9793-9908]

Ah when we say jihad fi sabilillah, when we say fi sabilillah, it is anything you are doing in the cause of Allah.

KN32 [3232-3320]

Ah we can say jihad fi sabilillah can be easily seen as doing things for the sake of God

KN33 [3551-3592]

To me is to struggle in the way of Allah

KN34 [4549-4905]

Jihad simply means to, when you look at the-to me the definition of jihad is to fight, not only to fight, maybe verbally, you can either fight verbally not physical fisticuffs but you can fight, you can, through democratic principles. You can achieve, to achieve what you want to achieve through democratic principles in Islamic state is also jihad to me.

KN35. [6681-6745]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to strive hard in the cause of Allah.

KN36 [6285-6396]

To struggle to make sure that Islam is being practiced the way that it supposed to be practiced in the society.

KN37 [5966-6065]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means the act of carrying out God's wishes just for the purpose of God.

KN38 [3994-4080]

Jihad fi sabilillah means strive doing something that is right for the sake of Allah.

KN39 [4637-4799]

When we say jihad fi sabilillah, it refers to a situation whereby a person or group of persons will call those non-Muslims through a peaceful way into the Islam.

KN40 [7864-8162]

When we say jihad fi sabilillah, in my own understanding, means to volunteer yourself in some activities through the jihad in one way or the other even if you cannot participate in the activities, having one or two things which you can even use to assist people who are participating in the jihad.

KN41 [5187-5253]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means fighting for the cause of Allah.

KN42 [8093-8189]

Jihad fi sabilillah means jihad in the sake of-jihad that is ah struggle for the sake of Allah.

KN42 [54857-56165]

for people that actually believe jihad is a bad thing, it is not. It is a way and it is a way for all of us. There might, there might be jihad in Christianity but it is according to the way they follow the Bibles and the teachings. We've been told that even a Bible is part of the things which we should learn as part of Muslims. We have been told also that all these books are actually books for us to also know about. So tolerance is the most important key for people to tolerate one another, for them to have shared believes, have shared goals. I might actually be from the same faith, but I might be from your own side of the country, we are multi-ethnic, multi-linguist, and everything. So we should when we know that this is my brother even if he is still of different faith then why can't I, I have to tolerate him because we come from the same place. It is not like in the Middle East whereby you have you find Muslims are the majority and the common, and the minority non-Muslims are differentiated. Here we are actually one. We know ourselves even if we are not from the same religion, there should this there should that be the sense of accommodation we have for one another that people don't, people across the countries, we are Africans for God sake and who can accommodate us like us, nobody.

KN43 [12116-12333]

It means someone to purify himself according to the Islamic teachings, not because he can see God but because he believes God exist and that he is the one that ask him to, you know, ah engage in jihad fi sabilillah.

KN44 [7239-7405]

That is to strive in the cause of Allah that is what it means. Jihad fi sabilillah is to strive in the cause of Allah. That is what is meant by jihad fi sabilillah

KN45 [7569-7756]

Jihad fi sabilillah in the real literal sense it means to fight ehh in the faith of God, in the faith of Allah or to fight because of Allah. That is the literal meaning of the word, yah.

KN46 [10815-11712]

Jihad fi sabilillah means what I already said that to strive financially, to use your own money, to use your physical power to improve the life of others, maybe from, maybe from bad to good or from good to a better one that is what jihad fi sabilillah means to me. But I am not unaware of the misconception people have about what jihad means. Generally if you tell people jihad they always ah misrepresent jihad as just like I told you as fighting, engaging in military activities, so which is not true. I don't know where did they, where they got this understanding from, because even in Qur'an, most of the times and in fact all the verses when they call Muslims to military activities, the Qur'anic term does not usually use the word jihad. It uses qatilu, qatilu means to fight while jihad is an encompassing term which may ah give to fighting and it may give to, may not give to fighting.

KN47 [17380-18024]

So, well this is just a combination of Arabic, you know, what and English word. It said do jihad for the sake of Allah. So there are, here I can simply say that there are many other words of jihad, you know, if you just read from the text of some prominent Islamic religion ah of course you can simply say that there are some hadiths in which jihad is referred to other activities other than fighting people. If you beat your wife, for example, you do sadaka and then sometimes they say you do jihad, you understand, and then if you do something good to help somebody then you do jihad. So a lot of interpretations of jihad are there in Islam.

KN48 [5760-5851]

Jihad Fi sabilillah it means giving alms without expecting anything from anyone but Allah.

KN49 [10117-10416]

It simply means you do, you wage war or you fight jihad ahh just to gain the trust of God or not for worldly possessions, not for booty, not for looting, not for other worldly gains. You just fight jihad simply because you feel it is a way to please Allah (SBUH) and also to propagate the religion.

KN50 [5394-5507]

Jihad fi sabilillah means ah means striving in the cause of Allah ah to do what is good and forbid what is bad.

KN51 [38130-40462]

Jihad fi sabilillah, like I have told you earlier, I spoke a bit of this issue, I said jihad fi sabilillah means doing anything that would benefit humanity, anything good. Whether it is teaching in the classroom, whether it is teaching other people ah some of the professions, whether it is farming, whether it is whatever, trading, and whatever it is. Whatever now a vocation, whatever you carry out fi sabilillah with a view to promoting, to bringing benefits to people, whether they are Muslims, whether they are non-Muslims let's not talk of even human beings, even if you now benefit animals ok and other birds, what have you, you are making it fi sabilillah. So the concept of fi sabilillah, jihad fi sabilillah is a very, very broad concept; very, very broad concept, but unfortunately today, they are confining themselves to only one concept, because of fighting. Is wrong, very very wrong with this we must understand. Early in the morning a strong young man came and passed the prophet (SAW) and his companion, when they saw him, he was walking with all interest, they said ooh if this man who was walking this way, was going this way fi sabilillah, it would have been better for him, the prophet said look, if he was going to earn his livelihood, that is fi sabilillah, if he was going to earn something with which to feed his family that is fi sabilillah, if he is going to earn something with which to take care of his parent, that is fi sabilillah. You see so al-jihad fi sabilillah according to the prophet (SAW), according to the Qur'an has so many, many, many, not only, like I told earlier on, if Allah wants to, Muslims to prevent themselves he would not use the word jihad, qita, qatilu fight (he recites a verse) permission granted to those who are being fought by aggression that they should fight back (he recites) that is that. (He recites a verse of the Qur'an) fight those who are fighting you because you are in the way of Allah, fight them back. So in such a situation, Allah will tell you fight, fight because it is defensive ok, it is defensive, it is not aggressive fighting, but for jihad, al-jihadu fi sabilillah which has a broader meaning, Allah will-in most of the Qur'an jahidu fi sabilillah, jahidu fi sabilillah because it has so many, many, is not only fighting. That is jihad fi sabilillah.

KN52 [11348-11609]

Jihad fi sabilillah for me, means striving in the cause of Allah, for the sake of Allah without any anticipation or expectation for material gains or any other mundane expectation. That is the expectation for worldly gain for the sake of Allah fi sabilillah.

KN53 [7651-7714]

Striving in the cause of Allah that is just the simple answer

KN54 [3059-3102]

Well it is championing the cause of Allah.

KN55 [4427-4499]

Jihad fi sabilillah means striving or championing for the sake of Allah

KN56 [5891-5958]

Striving, trying, championing and campaigning the cause of Allah.

KN57 [6722-6782]

Jihad fi sabilillah is a Holy war undertaken by Muslims.

KN58 [17216-17246]

Giving for the sake of Allah

KN59 [11536-11815]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to fight for the cause of Allah that is what it means to me that's what I understand by jihad fi sabilillah, to fight without any doubt in mind, to fight because of Allah, to fight without any doubt or selfish interest, you understand. I feel that is

KN60 [15560-15945]

Jihad fi sabilillah means doing thing for the sake of Allah (SAW) that is the meaning of jihad fi sabilillah, you do thinks for the sake of Allah, even if you are fighting, you fight for the sake of Allah. If you are giving out alms (Sadaka), you give out your Sadaka for the sake of Allah, you preach for the sake of Allah, you teach the knowledge you possess for the sake of Allah.

KN61 [5530-5594]

Ahh try to be with Allah, try to devote to your religion, 100%.

KN62 [20708-21077]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to be angry and to take measures whenever somebody does something blasphemous or whenever something disrespect God or the noble prophet and ah ah it means taking sword, if it means taking sword against anybody who wrongs you, not you who wrongs the religion, who wrongs God, actually that is what I believe, that is jihad fi sabilillah yeah.

KN63 [21066-21665]

Jihad fi sabilillah, jihad for the sake of Allah. That is what we are talking about, for the sake of Allah, and it doesn't involve maybe taking arms. Taking arms has to be the last resort. Fighting or striving or jihad fi sabilillah, striving between you and your lord, between you and your creator, you know what you are striving for ehn. For you to worship Allah, you have to strive for it because there, you know, there are many bad things that go for in your mind that are being bad influence that may come to you, but you know striving for you to worship Allah is jihad, something like that.

KN64 [8707-8797]

I make this clear, to make effort to protect the Islam and to spread it to other peoples.

KN65 [12440-12516]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means doing what is lawful for the sake of Allah

KN66 [5815-5892]

Jihad fi sabilillah in short is just fighting for the will of Allah (SUBH).

KN67 [6819-6958]

That is fighting for the sake of Allah, that is you do it with your heart, not because of any gain or anything that you are going to earn.

KN68 [3239-3271]

Striving in the cause of Allah

KN69 [13818-13944]

Jihad fi sabilillah means struggle in the cause of Allah with sole mind that you are doing it with ikhlas because of Allah.

KN71 [21576-21617]

It means striving in the cause of Allah.

KN72 [13136-13223]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to strength or to strength the will of God in practice, yes.

KN73 [13313-13732]

To me is that when you find yourself or when a Muslim finds a situation that warranted for a Muslim to do jihad that will be jihad fi sabilillah and jihad fi sabilillah means to me, you are going to fight for an anti-Islamic practice in where you are. This will be done by your mouth, by your hands and if you can't do all this and you can implement it and you can even fight it in your mind, it is fi sabilillah.

KN74 [22313-22851]

Yah jihad fi sabilillah, to me, I think it is necessary especially there is a lot of way of ehh jihad, is necessary because Prophet Muhammad (SAW) says that (he recites a verse of the hadith). This all this are part of the jihad, if you look into this hadith you find out that ehh is a command that Prophet Muhammad (SAW) gave to his people. Therefore, there is different time or different type of jihad. Whatever kind of jihad you find yourself that is provided that the conditions are satisfied, then it is necessary, it is compulsory.

KN75 [23410-23473]

You fight for the sake of Allah that is jihad fi sabilillah.

KN76 [15162-15230]

Well jihad fi sabilillah it means doing things in the cause of Allah

KN78 [19275-19337]

Jihad, fighting jihad in the cause of Allah, for Allah alone

KN79 [10157-10272]

In a simple and short form, jihad fi sabilillah means putting effort towards the cause of Allah, in a short form.

KN80 [17804-18009]

So jihad fi sabilillah, so as far as my opinion is concerned means to devote yourself for promoting the Islam fi sabilillah in the name of Allah by God's grace. So without attracting a worldly glitters.

KN81 [10825-10902]

Well jihad fi sabilillah means to fight for the sake of Allah, you understand

KN82 [13382-13728]

Jihad fi Sabilillah means strive in the way of Allah. This strive may take many form which may involve physical fighting, but the most popular interpretation of Islamic scholars is talking about effort of one's mind to try to respect the provisions of Qur'an and Sunna of the holy prophet (SAW) which might not necessary mean physical fighting

KN83 [8203-8233]

Jihad for the cause of Allah

KN84 [9461-9530]

Yes is just to striving, is just to strive for the cause of Allah.

KN85 [8356-8539]

Jihad fi sabilillah means is to strive, to struggle in the way of Allah to help the religion, to establish the religion and, therefore, jihad is simply striving in the way of Allah.

ZA1 [11501-12204]

Now if you are talking about jihad fi sabilillah now as a researcher I think you ought to ask what does that word, what does that word jihad mean? In Arabic if you are talking about jihad, the real origin of jihad means ajjuhudu, to try in the cause of Allah (SBUH) to make the religion spread, this is mean by jihad. But people are misunderstanding the word jihad, they are going, the mean that taking sword, gun and fight each other, no it is not like that. Jihad in Islam, we have many types of jihad: to teach, to assist poor men, needy, this is jihad, but the last one, if you have been wronged, you have been cheated, that is when you can retaliate, you can try to safe your, as a self defense.

ZA2 [8815-9310]

Yes jihad fi sabilillah you should do it in the sake of your lord, not doing it because anybody, do it because of God. If they say this is bad, if you say this thing is bad, make sure you are saying is bad because God say is bad. If you want to help, help him because God says you should help, you are doing it fi sabilillah you are not doing it because of your own selfish interest, not because you want something from that person ehen, you are doing it in sake of God that is fi sabilillah.

ZA3 [10736-10792]

Jihad fi sabilillah is to strive in the path of Allah.

ZA4 [24910-25575]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to strive in the cause of Allah is not good to fight alone. You have to first of all strive by yourself, you have good faith, you are not corrupt, you don't tell lies, you don't steal, you don't cheat people. So this is jihad, as long as you don't commit zina, you don't commit fornication, you are a womanizer that you looking at my wife and you tell me that you are doing jihad, fighting no, no, no jihad has to start from yourself. So is a self-striving, you discipline yourself. Jihad means discipline yourself and do the right thing. So it starts from yourself, not to kill people, you understand, that is the meaning of jihad.

ZA5 [13777-13845]

Jihad fi sabilillah is something that you do for the sake of Allah.

ZA6 [30269-30737]

Fi sabilillah means for the sake of God that is why what am saying, you do things for the sake of Allah, you do things for the sake, fi sabilillah is an Islamic word for eh sake of God hmm, if I explain the word jihad is, so you do things and I told you earlier, you have to be charitable, you have to be just, just for the sake of God not to make someone happy, no. You make someone happy for the sake of God because God says you should do that hmm, you understand.

ZA7 [11166-11495]

From the word fi sabilillah, it has to do with something you give to Allah without expecting any reward, without expecting any physical reward in this life but expecting reward from him maybe in the hereafter. So and jihad is just anything good that you do without expecting anybody to comment or to give you praise or anything.

ZA8 [20032-20181]

Jihad fi sabilillah means fighting or is not actual physical fighting, it means striving or struggle in the cause of Allah. That is what it means.

ZA9 [11569-11615]

Jihad means fighting for the cause of Islam.

ZA10 [14657-15012]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means striving the cause of Allah without weapon, no shading of blood, and it's not forceful and it's not like you are doing it for a benefit of worldly things. It's for the sake of Allah, you disseminate the word of Allah, you tell people how beautiful the religion is and what Islam is all about, that is jihad fi sabilillah.

ZA11 [11881-11919]

Is the strive in the cause of Allah.

ZA12 [6849-6871]

Correcting ones path

ZA13 [6520-6559]

It means struggling because of Allah,

ZA14 [5833-6069]

Jihad fi sabilillah, even by taking off a stone from the road for somebody not to hit his leg is jihad fi sabilillah. We have so many ways of doing jihad f isabilillah. I think that even this one I'm doing, am doing jihad fi sabilillah

ZA15 [11900-11960]

That is when you strive for the sake of the almighty Allah.

ZA16 [6856-6910]

Jihad fi sabilillah is to help the religion of Allah.

ZA17 [5870-6236]

Jihad fi sabilillah it means when there is a problem of you cannot perform your ibadat that is you cannot perform may be the hajj, salat, you cannot perform this regular things in Islam, you cannot perform them, then that is where if there is a leader that you do mubaya'at to, the issue of jihad will come, without that leader actually there is no any, any jihad.

ZA18 [9143-9679]

Jihad fi sabilillah, you see, ah jihad, let us get the real meaning of jihad. Jihad is anything that you will do according to the tenets of your religion that will promote the religion not only fighting, as we said, fighting is the final alternative, you understand, so ah in those days, even now, your good conduct, the way you interact with people, the way you help people, the way you assist them and what have you, is also part of jihad too, so that one too will help a lot of things to move well in the Islamic state and whatever.

ZA19 [12327-12551]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means to fight for the cause of Allah that is what I mean, that is what I understand by jihad fi sabilillah or in other words jihad fi sabilillah could simply mean to strive in the cause of Allah.

ZA20 [6588-6660]

The act of calling people in the name of Allah, in the cause of Allah

ZA21 [9346-9556]

Jihad fi sabilillah means you should do something for the cause of Allah, in the cause of Allah. Do something right at the point of that ok this you doing, you are doing only for God to reward you that is all.

ZA22 [8057-8524]

Jihad simply means stressing the ways of Allah making Islamic religion to be above all others through good teaching, good interpersonal relationship with Muslims intellectually and the rest. And if it means to fight for instance some people want to interfere, I keep stressing this, they want to interfere with your activities, they want to deny you the freedom of worship and the rest then you have to defend yourself. If they fight you, you fight them back.

ZA23 [12279-12459]

To my understanding jihad fi sabilillah is for one to be doing what Allah subahana wa ta'allah ordain on him. Not to go against the teaching of Islam that is jihad fi sabilillah.

ZA24 [16058-16448]

jihad fi sabilillah is to do your quota, your effort in the progress of Islam fi sabilillah that is for God's sake not for somebody's sake. So I won't say because somebody is not my tribe, he is not a Muslim so I deal with him. You are doing for God's sake. So fi sabilillah means whether somebody is seeing you or not God is there. It is only God who will reward you. That is true jihad.

ZA25 [13484-13963]

It still revolves round what I have repeated that al-jihad fi sabilillah, you know jihad has to do with eh -the scope of jihad is concerned with eh fighting for the sake of Allah starting from making sure you know what Islam is all about. What scholars have said about the concept of Islam and exemplary prophet of Islam. So as I have said physical fighting is the last resort. So it is not the beginning of eh it is not the only aspect of jihad as far as Islam is concerned.

ZA26 [7054-7287]

Jihad fi sabilillah if you see someone are assisting you do jihad fi sabilillah, if you restrain yourself from corruption you do jihad fi sabilillah, if you see a building collapsing you protect it, it is still jihad fi sabilillah.

ZA27 [5206-5277]

Jihad fi sabilillah means submission to God and the teaching of Qur'an

ZA28 [14298-14435]

Jihad fi sabilillah, the word fi sabilillah is because of Allah. And you see if Jihad fi sabilillah it is jihad for the sake of Allah.

ZA29 [22788-22866]

Well when you say jihad fi sabilillah means you strive for the sake of Allah.

ZA30 [33566-34164]

Jihad fi sabilillah, I already mentioned it before. I already mentioned it before, I said that the main jihad is jihadin nafs and I am not the one that said it, it is Rasul (SAW) he said what, if you read the holy books of may be this ehmm, this ehmm Bukhari and Muslim, you will see hadith there. I can't remember the actual number of hadith, but it is there and is Sahih, it is not (speaks Arabic), that is the authentic hadith that jihad, that the main jihad is jihadin nafs, but when, maybe I strongly believe that we can, in fact Islam can achieve through other means that I mentioned before.

ZA31 [9265-9431]

Jihad fi sabilillah means to convey the message of Allah fi sabilillah without collecting dime from the, from the people that you are guiding through the word of God.

ZA32 [21906-25034]

Jihad fi sabilillah, that fi sabilillah I can say means to struggle, yes or strive against idolatry and anything that is goes contrary to Islamic philosophy of life, and jihad fi sabilillah is carried in various ways and both Qur'an and the Hadith gives, gives an ample explanation to its nature and its significance. For example in the Qur'an, Allah said, all who believes may I, I mean in Qur'an 6, in Qur'an 61, Allah said, all those who believe, may I direct you to a mission, that is capable of saving you from a terrible chastisement, believe in Allah, his messenger or struggle in the way of Allah with your wealth, with your lives that is better for you if you know. He will forgive you, forgive you your sins and bring you into paradise underneath of which rivers flow, rivers flow and pleasant dwelling in gardens of Eden that is the super triumph and Allah will give you. Allah will give you blessings which you will love, help from Allah and pleasant victory. And also in other part, the most high says, those who believe in Allah migrate and struggle in the way of Allah with their wealth and their lives are much more greater worth in the sight of Allah. In the sight of the Allah and they are the most prosperous and they are the prosperous. And Islamic, and jihad is a religious duty geared towards enhancing the word of Allah, geared towards enhancing the word of Allah and suppressing acts of corruption. It can be principally divided into two broad, we have self purification and ah what, which include and also, no jihad can be, can be divided into two broadly and what, and four fine categories. We have purification, self purification which is the greatest jihad, verbal jihad and that is the preaching and ah the third category of jihad is destruction of anything that is dangerous and the injurious to health of the people such as drugs, alcohol, intoxicants, all places where criminal activities are organized or carried out and the fourth category is jihad, the physical combat designed and conducted in the name of Allah that is the jihad fi sabilillah, in the name of Allah not motivated by desire or territorial expansion or wealth acquisition or capturing political power, but only in self defense with a view of making the word of Allah superior and that of the oppressors, tyrants and Satan to ah, to. I say it is a way, it is carried out with the view of what, making the words of Allah superior to that of the what, oppressors. Yes, tyrant and Satan, yes and ah that is jihad fi sabilillah. And the fighting in the way of Allah is also fight you do not begin hostility. More so, the prophet (SAW) was reported to have asked about who, which fighting is fi sabilillah in one hadith. He asked between the two people, one of them fight, fought to show his bravery, to show that he is brave and other one fought to make his tribe to be superior, which one of them is fi sabilillah? Prophet (SAW) said what, only the one that fight to make the word of Allah superior and what, and the word of Satan to be inferior only, that is the only one who fought fi sabilillah that is jihad fi sabilillah.

ZA33 [7459-7655]

Jihad fi sabilillah mean to do jihad, fi sabilillah means to do jihad with yourself, with your wealth even with your mouth as well as with your physical ability for the sake of God almighty Allah.

ZA34 [18788-18854]

Jihad fi sabilillah to me-simple and in precise word is struggle

ZA35 [6912-6970]

Jihad fi sabilillah means fighting for the sake of Allah.

ZA36 [12613-12795]

Jihad fi sabilillah means fighting for the cause of Allah, fighting for Islam for the cause of Allah that is fighting for safe guarding the religion of Islam for the sake of Allah.

ZA37 [12287-12827]

Fi sabilillah means to put your own effort maybe with your knowledge of Islam, maybe your knowledge of Holy Qur'an and Hadith because jihad is based on these two things. You can use your wealth; you can use your words. Jihad fi sabilillah means towards the development of Islam. Islam can develop; it is the first stage the prophet (SAW) spent thirteen years in Mecca preaching not any issue of jihad, and the whole life of prophet Muhammad (SAW) as a prophet is 23 year so you can see that more than half of the years are just preaching.

ZA38 [19031-19278]

They say jihad fi sabilillah is jihad in the cause of God. It is a jihad for the cause of God. Anything you do, make sure you do it for the cause of God, don't do it for any worldly gain. Do it for the cause of God. That is jihad fi sabilillah.

ZA39 [26095-27196]

Jihad fi sabilillah simply means to strive, to do something in the cause, for the sake of Allah that is whatever you are doing you should do it for the sake of Allah, for the sake of Allah simply means you expect your reward in the hereafter. Let's emphasize more on this. If I try to feed you for the sake of Allah this is jihad that is jihad fi sabilillah. Fi sabilillah simply means for the sake of Allah, whatever you call it fi sabilillah for the sake of Allah. Jihad for the sake of Allah, doing something, striving hard to achieve, to strive hard to do good with the hope to be rewarded. What is doing good? Doing good, if I give you money, you are hungry I give you money, I am doing good to you. If you need shelter, I provide shelter for you, I am doing good to you. If I do it in the name of Allah, it is jihad fi sabilillah. If somebody attacks me and in order to protect myself, I engage in fighting against him, I am doing jihad, physical jihad that is fighting, physical fight in the name of Allah, in the name of Allah simply means in the way Allah permits it. That is the meaning.

Th7.2: Physical fight for Islam: The true Jihad for all Muslims

FG1 [16787-17552]

Yes, I agree with that. It is not even the saying of a scholar, it is the saying of the prophet, but one thing we need to understand here is that what is the meaning of the word jihad? Jihad, it doesn't mean revolution, conflict. In a peaceful manner you can do your jihad, knowledge, preaching, there are so many simple preaching all these SMS-Islamic political class today if you are free you are invited, go today at IGR they organize Muslims and non-Muslims together, they will preach to them deliver to them a lecture that is a jihad. So jihad does not necessarily mean that you should go and fight people with weapon because even in Islam, Islam says that anything that you will do as a Muslim that will cause trouble to your religion you should not do it.

FG1 [17609-17639]

Yes we agree let him continue

FG1 [17641-17951]

so if you say that every true Muslim will fight to the extent that you said that he fight for or whatever now you said you want to fight if you remove a knife or a gun and go and kill Christians are you doing jihad or you a just finding trouble? And the will cause trouble. That will destroy the whole country.

FG1 [17955-18250]

I think the question here says every Muslims will have to fight physically and in bracket they say that is jihad. I don't think that is the definition of jihad because for me jihad simply means striving, to strive hard towards something or to achieve something. That is what I think is jihad.

FG3 [27912-27945]

I disagree with him. (Laughter)

FG3 [27947-28757]

I think any time I hear the word jihad what comes into my mind is a war with one's self without bloodshed. So for the word jihad itself, it is a very tough word, but the interpretation is simple. When you wake up in the morning, you say your prayers –jihad. When you pray in the afternoon by two o'clock-jihad. When you pray by four o'clock is still jihad. By six or seven it is jihad. And then the last prayer of the day it is still jihad and then when you wake up in the middle of the night to say a voluntary prayer, it is jihad. So jihad itself has to do with your life entirely. How you live with your life, how you fight those inner feelings those inner evils you have in yourself and those things that will make you think wrongly, it is jihad. And when you tell somebody what is rightful, it is jihad.

FG3 [28759-28778]

I agree with him.

FG3 [28832-29523]

No, no me I agree with him I also disagree with him. The reason is that it says all Muslims, can you help me revise the question again... (Question repeated). It might happen that maybe the persons or the persons speaking the sentence or the expression, it depends on maybe where he finds himself. It might happen that he finds himself in Bama, or he finds himself in Israel or Palestine. It might happen that he has to, all Muslims there they have to, they are not even allowed to stay alive like those people staying in Bama now, but for somebody staying in maybe Saudi Arabia or Nigeria here , we can't take his own interpretation, but it depends on the location where somebody is.

FG3 [29525-29639]

In such a situation Islam does not say you should not defend yourself. That one is a kind of defense in general.

FG3 [29641-31464]

Now I want to elaborate more on what he said. You see jihad first of all you know is something that has stages. I hope you are getting me. That for instance jihad now starts from you as an individual just as I have said before; the way you do your things, and you worship Allah and then the way you carry out your daily activities. You know, But specifically on what he said that jihad also depends on where find yourself, well in Islam, it is a religion of peace and whatsoever will make you to retaliate it must have taken you to a degree at which you felt you cannot return without reward or without retaliation, meaning that, let me cite a reference of Israel where the Palestine and Israel are having a conflict or disagreement or dispute about land or whatsoever. You see in Islam in those particular situation once you analyze it entirely probably it must have started from dialogue and then they couldn't arrive at a solution and then it end up at the end of the day after the Palestinians started fighting Israel or the Israelites started fighting the Palestinians. But which I believe in the normal practice of Islam if the Israelites should have struck the Palestinians the Palestinians are not expected to have immediate retaliation because it also has to go with you people you are not supposed to act this way. If they do it again, you people are not supposed to act this way. So all those things you are doing and all those messages you are sending to them is jihad. But the moment it has gotten to some length that you felt that oh they are finishing my people and what do I have to do? Well I have to retaliate. But even if you are retaliating it should not get to some certain length that you guys could no longer come back to the table and settle and that is what is happening in Israel and Palestine.

FG3 [31556-31836]

Let me make things quite simple. Anything you do in life for the sake of Allah is jihad because in jihad we have many categories or types of jihad. Even this sitting that we are doing here is a jihad because we are enlightening something to or we are trying to achieve something.

KD1 [12627-14246]

I don't want to; I think I will, on this case, I think I will actually stand on defense. I will stand in defense because you may say so in the event that I agree with, am of the opinion that you need to fight when the leader actually calls for a fight. If for example, am in the, I happen to live during the time of the prophet (SAW) and a call for jihad is made, I don't have a choice than to succumb, than to go for the jihad. If for example, presently, we have a solitary Islamic ruler and he calls for a jihad, I don't have choice than to succumb, but presently there is no such thing. So nobody can lure me into just calling for jihad, jihad in what sense? In what capacity are you calling for jihad for? Who are you to call me for jihad, in what capacity? So I am of the opinion that jihad is something that actually, just like Qur'an says that (recites the Qur'an), so I think there are a lot of ways you can do jihad and not necessarily physically taking weapon and the like. You can do jihad by responding, by being responsible, by spreading Islam without even the sword. You can do jihad by even fighting jhadin nafs, by fighting your own inner self, by fighting your own internal itibawul hawa, you own internal wishes. You can do jihad by actually spreading the cause of Islam by educating people, you can do jihad by actually making charity, giving people, making people see life worthy of living and actually emulating your attitude and loving Islam better, but not necessarily in carrying the sword. This religion we have was spread more by the pen than by the sword and that is my own opinion on this.

KD2 [5031-5508]

No, no, no, no, physically fight for Islam? You can't just see a Christian or person from another religion or someone who doesn't have a religion or someone who claims he doesn't even have a religion and start fighting him or harassing him just because he is not a Muslim. That is not Jihad. There is jhadin nafs at least with that, that is a form of jihad. But you just can't attack people physically and say that is jihad, that is not jihad actually. I disagree with that.

KD3 [3943-4260]

Yes, the scholar is right, but the emphasis there that said all true Muslims must physically fight for Islamic jihad. Jihad on its own is divided. There is jhadin nafs that is physical jihad and that of the battle field even that of the battle field has its own point, when to fight, who to fight, and how to fight.

KD4 [5325-5964]

Ah! Alhamdulillah when you talk of jihad, jihad has a very wide meaning. There is jhadin nafs, there is jhadin Amal those are jihad. Jhadin nafs is jihad that you have to fight even within you yourself. The way you act, the way you react, the way you do things, those are jihad. The truthful way, putting yourself, depriving yourself from what is unlawful, and then doing lawful things at the right time, all those are jihad. So every Muslim is obligatory to observe those actions, to behave lawfully in the way of Islam, to behave according to the teachings of Islam. So I will say that yes, every Muslim has to partake in that jihad.

KD5 [4060-4260]

I should disagree because fighting in jihad is not a must depending on the situation. It was only must during the time of jihad, that fighting during the time of jihad will be compulsory. That's it.

KD6 [5513-7872]

